behold, the fear of the Lord, that [is] wisdom; by which is meant, not a fear of his wrath, and of eternal damnation, but an affection for God with reverence of him; such as is peculiar to children, a godly filial fear; and which is consistent with strong faith, great joy, and true courage; is opposite to pride and self-confidence, and takes in the whole worship of God both external and internal: and it is called the fear of the Lord, because he is the object and author of it; it is not from nature, or in men naturally, but comes from the grace of God, and is a gift of it; it is wrought in conversion, and is increased by the discoveries of the love and goodness of and is that wisdom which God makes his people know, in the hidden part; no man is wise till he fears the Lord; and when that grace is put into him, he begins to be wise, for this is the beginning of wisdom, (<200107>Proverbs 1:7 9:10); and is a principal part of it, and very profitable to men, both for this life, and for that to come; and therefore it is their highest wisdom to be concerned for it: the heart of God is towards them that fear him; his eye is upon them; his hand communicates to them; his secret with them; he sets a guard of angels about them; causes the sun of righteousness to arise on them, and he has laid up much for them, for time and eternity:

and to depart from evil [is] understanding; this is the fruit and effect of the fear of the Lord, through which men have an hatred of sin, and an aversion to it, and are careful not to commit it; through it they depart from evil, and abstain from all appearance of it; (see <200813>Proverbs 8:13 16:6); and it puts them upon a regard to God and his commandments, and to all that is good, and which is an evidence and proof of a good understanding, (<19B110>Psalm 111:10). Now Job suggests by this, that his friends should be solicitous about, and satisfied with, such wisdom and understanding as this, and not pry into the secrets of Providence, and the wisdom of that, which are not to be found out; and so cease to charge him with being an hypocrite, and a wicked man, because of the dealings of God with him, which were not to be accounted for: and by this Job appears to be a good man, and had an experience what he here expresses; that he was one that feared God and eschewed evil, according to the testimony given of him, (<180101>Job 1:1,8); and this he gave proof of his former life and conversation; of which an account is given in the following chapter.

CHAPTER 29

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 29

In this chapter Job gives an account of his former and wishes it was with him now as then; and which he describes with respect to his own person, and the favours he personally enjoyed, whether temporal or spiritual, (<182901>Job 29:1-4); with respect to his family and domestic affairs, (<182905>Job 29:5,6); with regard to the esteem he had from men of every age and station, (<182907>Job 29:7-11); the reasons of which were the mercy and compassion he showed to the poor, the fatherless, and the widow, and the justice he administered in the execution of his office as a magistrate, (<182912>Job 29:12-17); in which honour and prosperity he expected to have lived and died, (<182918>Job 29:18-20); and which he further describes by the respect he had among men, and the power and authority he exercised over them, (<182921>Job 29:21-25).

Ver. 1. Moreover, Job continued his parable, etc.] Or “added to take [it] up” [f1023], that is, he took it up again, and went on with his discourse; he made a pause for awhile, waiting to observe whether any of his three friends would return an answer to what he had said; but perceiving they were not inclined to make any reply, he began again, and gave an account of his former life, in order to show that he was far from being the wicked man, or being so accounted by others, as his friends had represented him:

and said; as follows.

Ver. 2. Oh that I were as [in] months past, etc.] Which is either an earnest wish for restoration to his former state of outward prosperity; which he might desire, not through impatience and discontent under his present circumstances, or from a carnal and worldly spirit; but either that the present reproach he lay under from his friends might be taken off, he observing that they accounted him a wicked man and an hypocrite, because of his afflictions; wherefore he judged, if these were removed, and he was in as prosperous a condition and in as good circumstances as before, they would entertain a different opinion of him; or, that his words might be better attended to, as they were by men, both young and old, and even princes and nobles before, it being a common case, that what a poor and distressed man says is not regarded; or that he might be in a capacity of doing good to the poor and fatherless, the widow and the oppressed, as he had formerly; or, this wish is only made to introduce the account of his former life, by which it would appear, that he was not the man his friends had represented him to be, from the favour he was in with God, and from the respect shown him by men, and the many good things done by him: but since, by various expressions, which before had dropped from his lips, it appears, that he had no hope nor expectation of ever being restored to his former outward happiness; this may be considered as a wish for the return of spiritual prosperity, wishing he was in as good frames of soul, and as much in the exercise of grace, and was as holy, as humble, as spiritual, and heavenly minded, as he was when he had so much of the world about him; and that he had but the like communion with God, and his gracious presence with him, as he had then. The state of the Lord’s people, God-ward, is always the same; his election of them stands sure; the covenant of grace with them is unalterable; their interest in a living Redeemer always continues; grace in them is a principle, permanent and perpetual; but there may be, and often is, an alteration in their frames, and in the exercise of their graces, and in the open regard of God unto them; their graces may be low in exercise; there may be a decay of the life and power of godliness; their frames may change, and the presence of God may be withdrawn from them, and they may have no view of interest in salvation, at least not have the joys of it; wherefore, when sensible of all this, may be desirous it might be with them as it was before; that God would turn them again, and cause his face to shine upon them, that they might be comfortable; the particulars of Job’s former case follow, which he desires a renewal of:

as [in] the days [when] God preserved me; either in a temporal sense; God having set an hedge of special providence about him, whereby he and his, his family and substance, were remarkably preserved; but now this was plucked up, and all were exposed to ravage and ruin; or in a spiritual sense, as he was both secretly and openly preserved, and as all the Lord’s people are, in Christ, and in his hands, and by his power, spirit, and grace: the Lord preserves their souls from the evil of their own hearts, sin that dwells in them, that it shall not have the dominion over them; from the evil that is in the world, that they shall not be overcome by it, and carried away with if; and from the temptations of Satan, so as not to be devoured and destroyed by him, and from a final and total falling away; he preserves them in his own ways, safe to his kingdom and glory; but sometimes all this does not appear so evident unto them, as it might not to Job at this time; who observed the workings of his corruption, and the breaking out of them, in passionate words, wishes, and curses, and the temptations of Satan, who was busy with him to go further lengths, even to blaspheme and curse God; so that he might fear that God his defence was departed from him, the return of which he was desirous of; (see <234914>Isaiah 49:14-16).

Ver. 3. When his candle shined upon my head, etc.] Which may be understood either of outward prosperity, sometimes signified by a candle, (<181805>Job 18:5,6 21:17); and may be called the candle of the Lord, because it is from him, it is of his lighting and setting up; and its shining on his head may denote the large measure and degree of it possessed by him, in allusion to torches carried on high to light with; or lamps, or candles, set up in the higher part of the house to give the more light; or to the sun in the firmament, and especially when in its meridian, and shines clearest right over our heads, and casts no shadow: or else it may be understood of light in a figurative sense, not of the light of nature in men, which, though called the candle of the Lord, (<202027>Proverbs 20:27); yet, in man’s fallen state, shines not clearly; and with respect to this there was no difference in Job than heretofore; but rather it is the light of grace, the true light, which had shone upon him and in him, but now not so clearly as formerly, and as he could wish for; or else the word of God, which is a light unto the feet, and a lamp to the path; or it may be, best of all, the favour of God, the light of his countenance he had before enjoyed, having had a comfortable display of his love, a clear view of interest in it, and had the blessings of it bestowed upon him, and enjoyed by him; and nothing was more desirable by him, as is by every good man, than the return of the light of God’s countenance; and that he might be remembered with his special favour, as his people are, and as he had been in times past:

[and when] by his light I walked [through] darkness; that is, either by the light of outward prosperity he had escaped those calamities, distresses, and dangers, and got over those difficulties which attended others, though now surrounded with them; or by the light of divine grace, or of the word of God, and especially by and in the light of God’s countenance, he walked cheerfully and comfortably, without any fear of the darkness of affliction and calamities, or of the dark valley of the shadow of death, or of the prince of darkness, or of the darkness of hell and damnation; but now clouds of darkness being about him, and he without the light of God’s countenance, could not see the way in which he walked and therefore wished that that again might be lifted up upon him.

Ver. 4. As I was in the days of my youth, etc.] Either taken literally, he being one like Obadiah, that feared God from his youth upward, (<111803>1 Kings 18:3,12); or figuratively, for his former state of prosperity, when he was like a tree in autumn laden with ripe and rich fruit, and in great abundance; and so some render the words “in the days of my autumn”, or “autumnity” [f1024]; though it may respect the time of his first conversion, the infancy and youth of his spiritual state, who, when first regenerated, was as a newborn babe, and then became a young man, and now a father in Christ, his living Redeemer: and Job wishes it was with him as in his youth, or in the early days of his conversion, at which season, generally speaking, there are great zeal and fervency of spirit, a flow of love and affection to God and the best things; large discoveries of his love, much sensible communion with him, and enjoyment of his presence; wherefore such returning seasons are desirable; (see <240202>Jeremiah 2:2,3);

when the secret of God [was] upon my tabernacle; either the secret power and providence of God, which was upon his house and family, and all that belonged to him; or the secret of his love, which was manifested to him, and is from everlasting to everlasting on them that fear the Lord, as Job did; who had secret communion with God, his fellowship was with him; he dwelt in the secret place of the Almighty, and was taken into his secret chambers, where he had the greatest familiarity with him, (see <192514>Psalm 25:14). Some observe the word for “secret” is used for an “assembly” [f1025], and take the sense to be, that the assembly of the saints and people of God was in his tabernacle or house; there they met together for religious worship, and where Job had often a comfortable opportunity, and wishes for the same again, (see <194201>Psalm 42:1-4).

Ver. 5. When the Almighty [was] yet with me, etc.] Not merely by his powerful and providential presence, as he is with all men; but in a special manner by his gracious presence, which is a wonderful and distinguishing favour; but sometimes the people of God are without it, at least they think so, and which was now Job’s case, (see <182302>Job 23:2,3,8,9); and therefore he desires he would return to him, and show him his face and favour:

[when] my children [were] about me; as olive plants about his table, in their youth; when he looked at them with great delight and pleasure, as his growing hopes; and, when grown up, and were not far from him, but were round about him, and lay near his heart, and whose welfare, temporal and spiritual, he was solicitous for; but now they were all taken away from him, and were no more: the word for “children” signifies also “servants”[f1026], and may take in them, of whom he had many to do his work and business; to attend upon him, to wait his orders, and execute them, and guard his person; but now many of them were slain by the Sabeans and Chaldeans, and by fire from heaven; and those he had were very disrespectful to him, (see <181915>Job 19:15,16).

Ver. 6. When I washed my steps with butter, etc.] Not the steps of his house or palace; for to have done this, or his servants by his orders, as it would have been a very great impropriety, so a piece of great prodigality, which Job could never have been guilty of; but either his footsteps, the prints of his feet; and the sense be, that his cattle produced such a vast quantity of milk, that when his servants brought it from the fields to the dairy, their milk pails ran over in such abundance, that Job could not step out of his house, and take a walk in his fields, but he stepped into puddles of milk, of which butter was made: this is an exaggerated phrase, like that by which the land of Canaan is described as “flowing with milk and honey”; or rather this is to be understood of the washing of his feet, which are the instruments of stepping or walking. It was usual in those times, in the eastern countries, to wash their feet upon travelling, or at festivals; but then this was commonly done with water, not with butter, (see <011804>Genesis 18:4 19:2 <420744>Luke 7:44); and the meaning can only be, that Job had such abundance of milk, or butter made of it, that he could, if he would, have washed his feet in it; indeed, they had used to anoint the feet with ointment; but whether cream or butter was any ingredient in it, and so the part is put for the whole, is not certain, (see <420738>Luke 7:38) (<181203>Job 12:3); besides, that would have been more properly expressed by anointing than washing; it seems to be an hyperbole, an expression like that of Zophar, in (<182017>Job 20:17); signifying the vast abundance of the increase and produce of Job’s kine; who is said to wash his feet in milk or butter, as Asher is said to dip his feet in oil, because of the great plenty of it, (<053324>Deuteronomy 33:24); the spiritual meditation upon the words may be this; the feet of the best of saints need washing, there being many failings and infirmities in their walk and conversation; in which they gather much pollution and faith daily; the proper wash for this is the blood of Christ, of which the layer in the tabernacle and temple was a type, at which the priests washed their hands and feet; but the word of God, called the sincere milk of the word, is the instrument or means of washing, or of directing souls to the fountain opened to wash in; so that with respect to that, the feet of saints, as the eyes of Christ, may be said to be washed with milk:

and the rock poured me out rivers of oil; another hyperbolical expression, like that in (<053213>Deuteronomy 32:13), where honey is said to be sucked out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock; as honey may be got out of a rock, because bees may make their nests and hives there, where it is laid up by them; so oil, in like manner, may be had from the flinty rock, olive trees growing on hills, mountains, and rocks, which yield oil in great abundance; near Jerusalem was a mount called Olivet, from thence: the land of Edom, or Idumea, where Job lived, abounded with cragged mountains and rocks; and there might be in Job's estate such on which olive trees grew in great plenty, as to produce vast quantities of oil: it is a very fanciful thought of Bolducius, that this rock was no other than a stone vessel, in which was oil, somewhat like the alabaster box in (<402607>Matthew 26:7); and which was plentifully poured on Job, when he was anointed high priest; and another learned man[f1027], though he rejects the notion of its being a vessel for sacred use, yet is willing to allow it was an oil vessel for common use: as to the spiritual sense, it may be observed, that a rock in Scripture often signifies a divine Person, (<461004>1 Corinthians 10:4); it is an emblem of Christ, as oil also is of the Spirit of God and his grace, (<402503>Matthew 25:3,4); and which flows from Christ, who is full thereof, and that in such great abundance, as to be expressed by rivers; (see <430114>John 1:14,16 7:38).

Ver. 7. When I went out to the, gate through the city, etc.] Job having described his former state of happiness by the personal favours he enjoyed, and by the prosperity of his family, and his abundance of plenty at home, proceeds to give an account of the honour and respect he had from men of every age and rank abroad: though he had an affluence of the things of this world, he did not indulge himself at home in ease and sloth; but went abroad to take care of the public welfare, maintain public peace, and administer public justice among his neighbours; performing the office of a civil magistrate, which is often expressed in Scripture by going in and out before the people: Job went out from his own house to the gate of the city, where a court of judicature was kept, as it was usual in those times and countries to hold them in the gates of the city; (see <380816>Zechariah 8:16); and to which he passed through the city, very probably, in great pomp and splendour, suitable to his office and character, which drew the eyes and attention of the people to him; by which it should seem that his house was on one side of the city, and the gate where justice was administered was on the other; though it may be rendered, “over the city”[f1028], and the sense be, that he passed along as he that was over the city, the chief man in it, and president of the court of justice, (see <121005>2 Kings 10:5);

[when] I prepared my seat in the street; where he sat, not as a teacher, though he was an instructor, not only of his family, but of his neighbours, as Eliphaz himself testifies, (<180403>Job 4:3,4); and it was usual for such to have seats to sit upon, as those had who succeeded Moses, and are said to sit in his chair; and it was usual to call to men and instruct them in open public places; hence Wisdom is said to utter her voice in the streets, in the opening of the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors, (<200120>Proverbs 1:20,21 8:3); but Job here speaks of himself as a civil magistrate, as a judge upon the bench, who had a seat or throne erected for him to sit upon, while he was hearing and trying causes; and this was set up in the street under the open air, before the gate of the city, where the whole city might be convened together, and hear and see justice done to their neighbours; in such a street, before the gate of the city, Ezra read the law to Israel; and in such an one Hezekiah got the people of Israel together, and spoke comfortably to them when invaded by Sennacherib; (see <160802>Nehemiah 8:2,3 <143206>2 Chronicles 32:6); and the Arabs, to this day, hold their courts of justice in an open place under the heavens, as in a field, or in a market place[f1029]; and it is right that courts of justice should be open and accessible to all.

Ver. 8. The young men saw me, and hid themselves, etc.] Through a veneration of him; which was much, since young men, through a vain conceit and opinion of themselves, are apt to treat their superiors in age with slight, neglect, and contempt; or through fear, lest he should spy them, and call them to him, and examine them closely concerning their conduct and behaviour, and reprove them for their youthful follies he might have knowledge of:

and the aged arose [and] stood up; as he passed by them, to show their respect unto him; or when he came into court, they rose up, and continued standing until he had took his seat; and even then kept the same posture, attending to his counsel and instruction, to his definitive sentence and decision of matters in debate; though they were venerable persons themselves, and such as before whom young men were to arise, (<031932>Leviticus 19:32); and were also men of wisdom and prudence, (<181212>Job 12:12); yet these men rose and stood up, paying a deference to Job's superior sense and judgment.

Ver. 9. The princes refrained talking, etc.] Who were in court before Job came in, and were either talking with one another about indifferent matters, or were giving their opinion in a case before them; but no sooner did Job make his appearance, but they left off talking, and would not proceed any further; they laid a restraint upon their words, and curbed themselves from speaking any more till they had heard his opinion:

and laid [their] hand on their mouth; as a token of silence, (<071819>Judges 18:19).

Ver. 10. The nobles held their peace, etc.] These may be in some respects inferior to the others; not princes of the blood, or sons of kings, who were properly princes, and yet great personages, of a noble extraction, and of considerable families: some think the leaders and generals of armies are meant, commanders and captains, and such like military officers, those sons of Mars, who are generally bold and daring, boisterous and blustering, and full of talk; and yet even these held their peace in the presence of Job:, or their "voice [was] hid" [f1030]; it could not be heard:

and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth; so that they had no use of it, and it was as if they had none, (see <260326>Ezekiel 3:26). Here are various expressions made use of, signifying the profound silence of great personages while Job was present; and this silence was owing either to a consciousness of their own weakness, and lest they should, by speaking before him, betray it, and he should expose them; or to the desire they had of hearing Job's opinion first, which was as an oracle to them, and usually determined matters in debate before them; such high sentiments did they entertain of Job's good sense and abilities.

Ver. 11. When the ear heard [me], then it blessed me, etc.] The ear of the common people assembled together to hear causes tried, and how they would go; when they heard Job give his opinion in court, or the definitive sentence passed by him as a judge, they all applauded his wisdom and justice; they highly praised and commended him; in which sense the word "blessed" is used, (<203128>Proverbs 31:28); or they wished a blessing on him; they prayed for his welfare, as it becomes people to do for those that are in authority, especially wise and faithful magistrates; or they accounted him a blessed man, and called him so, (<420148>Luke 1:48); as he was, both in a temporal sense, being blessed with a great plenty of earthly things, and also blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ, with an abundance of grace, and with a title to eternal glory; as well as he was blessed as a magistrate, with great wisdom, and with great integrity and uprightness in the discharge of his office:

and when the eye saw [me], it gave witness to me: of his gracefulness and gravity, of his honesty and faithfulness, of his good behaviour among his neighbours, and of his wise conduct in the courts of judicature.

Ver. 12. Because I delivered the poor that cried, etc.] This honour and esteem he had not because of his grandeur and riches, because of his worldly wealth and substance, but because of the goodness of his disposition, and because of the good he did to men, his acts of pity and compassion to the poor, and of the justice he did to all men; the poor and the afflicted, when they cried to him for help, he delivered them out of the hands of their oppressors:

and the fatherless; the care and defence of which belongs to judges and civil magistrates, (see <198201>Psalm 82:1-4);

[and him that] had none to help him; as the poor and fatherless seldom have; there is power on the side of the oppressors of them, but they have few or none to take their parts, and to be their comforters, (<210401>Ecclesiastes 4:1); in these instances Job imitated God, and was a follower of him, as a dear child of his; who, when this and the other poor man cries unto him, he hears, saves, and delivers out of all their troubles; he is the helper, yea, the father of the fatherless, and the judge of the widow; and, when there is no help from men, he is a present help in times of need.

Ver. 13. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, etc.] That were ready to perish through the oppression of others, or through want of the necessaries of life, or through false charges brought, and through false witness bore against them, and so liable to a sentence of condemnation to death, or having it passed upon them; but Job taking their part, and searching thoroughly into their cause, not only respited them from destruction, but cleared them from the charges laid against them, and which brought the blessing of those persons on him; who blessed God for him, and blessed him, wished a blessing on him in their prayers to God, who had been such a happy instrument of their deliverance from ruin and destruction; (see <202411>Proverbs 24:11,12 31:5,6); and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy; by relieving her wants, defending her cause, and punishing those that oppressed her; which is the reverse of the character Eliphaz gives of Job, (<182209>Job 22:9).

Ver. 14. I put on righteousness, and it clothed me, etc.] Not the righteousness of his living Redeemer, the robe of righteousness and garment of salvation he had from him; though he had put on that by faith, and it was his clothing in the sight of God, which covered his person, and covered all his sins from the avenging eye of divine justice; and in which he was presented before God unblamable and irreprovable in his sight, and with which he was adorned and beautified, being made perfectly comely through it, and completely justified by it; but legal righteousness in the administration of his office as a magistrate; he put it on, that is, he exercised it, and he exercised it constantly from morning tonight, and day after day; as a man puts on his clothes in a morning, and keeps them on all the day, and which he is always repeating; and it was as visible in him, and to be seen and observed by all, as the clothes on his back; and it covered him all over as a garment does; no blemish was to be seen in him, or blame to be cast upon him, throughout the whole course of his administration; and this was a fence unto him against all calumny and reproach, as garments are against the inclemency of the weather; (see <091203>1 Samuel 12:3-5); so a godly conversation in the exercise of graces and virtues, and in the performance of duties both to God and man, is sometimes expressed by a putting them on, as garments are put on; (see <490424>Ephesians 4:24 <510310>Colossians 3:10,12,14); and these are an outward clothing to appear in before men, and should be shown forth with meekness and wisdom, so as to be beheld by men; and should be continually exercised and constantly performed; and then they are a covering with respect to men, and they appear harmless, blameless, and without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation; and thus, by well doing, put to silence the ignorance of foolish men, and such to the blush, those who falsely accuse their good conversation: and this in every sense was Job's case:

my judgment [was] as a robe and diadem; such as the high priest among the Jews wore in the execution of his office, which made him look grand and majestic; and it was usual in Job's time, as it is in ours, and has been the custom in all ages and countries, for judges and civil magistrates to be clothed in a different manner from others, as it is proper they should, to command an awe and reverence of them among the common people, and make them respectable to them: but Job did not so much regard his purple robe he was clad in, or the distinguishing turban he wore on his head, or whatever it was, and which might bear some resemblance to a mitre or a diadem; as it was his great concern to administer justice, which he reckoned his greatest honour, and was more ornamental to him than all the showy ensigns of his office; and it was this which gave him honour and esteem among all sorts of men, high and low: and his regard to the poor, before observed, did not arise from a foolish commiseration of them as poor men, and in order to get himself a name for his pity to them, but proceeded upon a principle of justice and equity, which he made the rule of his administration; he did not countenance the poor in his cause right or wrong; not the quality of the person, but the righteousness of his cause, was what he attended to; and he took his part not merely because he was a poor man, but seeing his cause was just.

Ver. 15. I was eyes to the blind, etc.] Either in a literal sense: there was a law in Israel against putting a stumbling block before the blind, and a curse pronounced on those that caused them to wander out of the way; which implied that they ought to remove all impediments out of their way, and should lead, guide, and direct them in the right way; and this Job might do, if not in his own person, yet by his servants, and so was as eyes unto them, and especially by taking care of and providing for persons in such circumstances: or rather in a civil sense; such who were in perplexity and distress, oppressed by their neighbours, but did not know how to get justice done them, what steps to take, or methods to pursue, to obtain their right or secure it; these Job instructed with his good advice and counsel, and put them into a way of proceeding whereby they could be extricated out of their difficulties, and peaceably enjoy their own, (see <04103>Numbers 10:31), and it might be true of him in a spiritual sense; that he was eyes to his blind Heathen neighbours among whom he dwelt; who were ignorant of God, and of the living Redeemer, and of the way of life and salvation by him, and of their miserable and lost estate, and of their need of a Saviour; not being acquainted with the nature of sin, and the sad consequences of it, and with the way of atonement for it, nor with the mind and will of God, and the worship of him; all which he might be a means of enlightening their minds with: Eliphaz owns he instructed many, (<18043>Job 4:3); thus ministers of the Gospel are eyes to the blind; for though they cannot give eyes, or spiritual sight to men, which is only from the Lord, yet they may be instruments of opening blind eyes, and of turning men from darkness to light, as the word preached by them is a means of “enlightening the eyes”, and feet [was] I to the lame; either in a literal sense, as David was to Mephibosheth, when he sent for and maintained him at his own table, so that he had no occasion to seek for his bread elsewhere, (<100913>2 Samuel 9:13); and Job might make a provision in some way or another for such sort of persons: or rather in a civil sense, such who were engaged in law suits, and had justice on their side, but for want of friends or money, or both, could not carry them on; these Job supported and supplied, and carried them through their suits, and got their cause for them.

(<442618>Acts 26:18 <191908>Psalm 19:8); whereby men come to see their lost estate, and the way of salvation by Christ:

Ver. 16. I [was] a father to the poor, etc.] Not in a literal sense; for his children were rich as well as himself, while he had them; but in a civil sense, he was the patron of the poor; he was an advocate for them, he took their part, he pleaded their cause, defended their persons, and secured the little property they had; he had the pity and compassion of a father for them, and supplied their wants; he fed them and clothed them; he did not eat his morsel alone, but gave them part of it, and warmed them with the fleece of his flock:

and the cause [which] I knew not I searched out; any cause that was brought before him, he knew thing of before, and which, upon the opening of it, did not appear plain and easy, but had its difficulties; this he closely examined, and searched thoroughly into the merits of, till it appeared plain to him on which side the truth and justice of it lay; he did not hurry it over, and pass sentence, having only in a superficial manner considered it, as is too often the case; but after a long examination of the contending parties, and of the witnesses on both sides, to whom he gave an impartial hearing, he pronounced the decisive sentence; (see <202502>Proverbs 25:2 29:7). Some think this refers to his diligent search and inquiry after causes that were not brought before him; he did, not wait for application to be made to him, but hearing of, or upon inquiry finding, that there were persons oppressed and distressed by cruel men, he of himself voluntarily offered his assistance, searched into their cause, made himself master of it, and freed them from their distresses; so different were his behaviour and character from that of the unjust judge, (<421801>Luke 18:1-7); though others, choose to render the words, “the cause of him that I knew not”, etc.[f1031]; of a stranger, of one that he had never seen before, of one that was most unknown to him in the world; the cause of such an one he took as, much pains with to get the true knowledge of, and do justice to, as of the dearest relation, the nearest neighbour, and the most intimate friend and acquaintance that he had.

Ver. 17. And I brake the jaws of the wicked, etc.] Their jaw teeth, or grinders, alluding to beasts of prey, who have such teeth, very large; the meaning may be, that Job confuted the arguments which wicked men made use of in their own defence, and against the poor, exposed the weakness of them, and made them ineffectual to answer their purposes; disabled tyrants and cruel oppressors from doing any further hurt and damage to the fatherless and helpless; was an instrument in the hand of God of breaking the power, and weakening the hands of such persons, and hindering them from doing the mischief they otherwise would; (see <203014>Proverbs 30:14 <190307>Psalm 3:7 58:6); and plucked the spoil out of his teeth; as David took the lamb out of the mouth of the bear and lion that came into his father's flock, and carried it off: thus Job delivered the poor out of the hands of such monsters in nature, comparable to beasts of prey, and saved them from being utterly ruined by them, and obliged them to restore unto them what they had in an unrighteous manner taken from them.

Ver. 18. Then I said, I shall die in my nest, etc.] Job, amidst all his prosperity, knew he should die, death and the grave being appointed for all men; and he often thought of it, and of the manner of it; but he concluded that death was as yet some distance from him, as appears from the following clause; and that, when the time was come, he should not die on the ground, but in the city in which he lived[f1032], in his house, and on his bed; that he should die with all his children about him, like a bird in its nest full of young; whereas now he was stripped of them all, and likely to die childless; that he should die amidst all his outward enjoyments, in an affluence of good things, in honour, credit, and esteem among men; whereas now he was deprived of all his substance, and had in contempt by friends and foes; and that he should die in great tranquillity of mind and peace of soul, in the enjoyment of the divine Presence, and under rich discoveries of his love and grace; whereas now God had hid himself from him, and the arrows of the Almighty stuck fast in him. Job now had dropped his former confidence, and yet after all he did die in all the circumstances he believed he should; (see <184210>Job 42:10-17); and this confidence might rise not from any mercenary spirit in him, as if this would be the fruit and reward of his integrity and uprightness, justice and faithfulness, and as due to him on that account; but from the promises of God, which to the patriarchs were usually of temporal blessings, as types of spiritual ones; though it may be there was in this somewhat of the infirmity of the flesh, as in David, (<19307>Psalm 30:7); and an inattention to the uncertainty of all temporal enjoyments; nor might he then be so well acquainted with the doctrine of the cross he now had an experience of:

and I shall multiply [my] days as the sand; which is not to be numbered; an hyperbolical expression, to denote the long life he expected to enjoy, and which was promised to good men; and which Job, notwithstanding his present despair of it, was favoured and satisfied with, (<19916>Psalm 91:16 <184216>Job 42:16,17). Some versions render it, “as the phoenix”[f1033], a bird of that name, spoken of by many writers as a very long lived one; some say it lived five hundred years[f1034], others five hundred forty[f1035], others six hundred sixty[f1036]; yea, some, and so the Jewish writers, as Jarchi and others[f1037], make it to live a thousand years, and some say[f1038] more; and it is reported of it, though not with sufficient evidence, that there is never but one of the kind at a time; which, perceiving its end drawing near, it makes a nest of cassia, frankincense, and other spices, and sets fire to it, and burns itself in it, and that out of its ashes comes forth an egg, which produces another; and some of the ancient writers, as Tertullian[f1039] particularly, have made use of this as an emblem of the resurrection; and to which some think Job has here respect; that he should live long like this bird, and then die and rise again; but inasmuch as this seems to be a fabulous bird, and that there is not, nor ever was, any such in being, it cannot well be thought that Job should allude unto it; though his making mention of his nest, in the former clause, may seem to favour it, and which has induced some to give into it[f1040]: others render it, “as the palm tree”[f1041]; between which and the phoenix there is thought to be some likeness on account of duration[f1042], and both in the Greek tongue have the same name; the palm tree is an evergreen, and endures a long time; Pliny[f1043] speaks of a palm tree in his time at Delos, said to have been there from the days of Apollo, which is supposed to be 1400 years; and it is observed[f1044] that this tree does continue two or three hundred years; and this version may seem to be countenanced and confirmed by what follows: but since the Hebrew word here used is never used but of sand, it is best so to understand it here, seeing it as fully answers Job’s purpose; which was to express his confidence of a very long life. Sand is frequently used in Scripture for what is innumerable; so θαμμοκοσια in Aristophanes[f1045], for what cannot be numbered, and are equal to a mountain of sand.

Ver. 19. My root [was] spread out by the waters, etc.] According to our version and others, Job here, and in the following verses, gives the reasons of his hope and confidence of his long life, and quiet and comfortable death amidst all his prosperity and happiness; which were founded upon his flourishing circumstances, and the great respect that was shown him among men; and this is the sense, if we read the words in the past tense, as we and many others do; or in the present tense, "my root is spread", etc. as others; but there are some interpreters, both Jewish and Christian[f1046], that render them in the future tense, here and to the end of the chapter; and so they are a continuation of Job's hope and trust, in the times of his prosperity, that things would always continue as they were with him, and much more abundantly; and indeed all is true of Job, in every sense, and all may be taken into the account; and that these words, and the following, as they describe what had been, and at the then present time, when he concluded the above in his mind, was his case, so they may also declare what he believed would be always his case to the end of his days. Here he compares himself to a tree well rooted and happily situated by plenty of water, and which may be expressive both of his temporal and spiritual prosperity: his outward prosperity seemed to him to have been well settled and established, being like a tree that had taken root, and was like to continue, being watered with the favour and blessing of God, which maketh rich; and as to his spiritual estate, he was like a tree planted by a river of water, to which good men are often compared in Scripture, (<190103>Psalm 1:3 <234404>Isaiah 44:4 <241707>Jeremiah 17:7,8); they are in general called trees of righteousness, and are sometimes likened to particular trees, as to olives, cedars, and palm trees; and some think, as Pineda, that it is to the latter Job here has respect; the last clause of (<182918>Job 29:18) being in the Latin Vulgate version so rendered as to countenance this sense; and it may be observed that this tree having thick long leaves, and fruit full of juice, and its wood spongy, requires much water; and, as Pliny[f1047] says, delights in watery places; nor is it content with rain, but is better satisfied with waters flowing about it; hence it is often found necessary to dig about it, and lay its roots open, that the waters may more easily come at them, and flow about them[f1048] and so the words here in the original text are, "my root" was, is, or shall be "open to the waters"[f1049]: good men, as they are rooted in the love of God, and in the person of Christ, so they have, as Job had, the root of the matter in them, the truth of grace, or a principle of grace; which is watered, and kept alive and flourishing, by the love and favour of God shed abroad in the heart; by fresh supplies of grace out of the fulness of Christ, who is the fountain of gardens, and well of living waters; and by the means of grace, the word and ordinances, the still waters to which saints are led, and by which they are made to lie down, and where they are watered, refreshed, and comforted:

and the dew lay all night upon my branch; so that the water being at his root below, and the dew on his branch above, he must be in a fruitful and flourishing condition: the dew is a great blessing to the earth, to trees, herbs, and plants, and the cause of great fertility; and this may respect Job’s temporal happiness, in the health and prosperity of his children, who were to him what branches are to a tree; and in the affluence of worldly good things, with which through the blessing of God, as dew upon him, he abounded; and may also have regard to his spiritual affairs: believers in Christ are branches in him, as Job was one; and the dew of divine grace and favour lies upon them continually, even in the darkest seasons; which revives and refreshes their souls, and makes them fruitful in the exercise of grace, and performance of good works; (see <201912>Proverbs 19:12 <281405>Hosea 14:5-7); the dew falls in the night, and the sooner it fails the longer it lies, and is most useful: some render the words “upon my harvest”, or “mowing”[f1050]; the dew is of great use in harvest time; mowers and reapers choose the morning to work in, when the stalks are moistened by the dew; and which is of use to keep the ears of corn from shedding by swelling the fibres, and so retaining the grains in their proper places[f1051]; (see <231804>Isaiah 18:4).

Ver. 20. My glory [was], etc.] “Is” or “shall be”;

fresh in me; or “new”[f1052]; renewed day by day, having fresh additions made unto it; which was true of Job’s temporal honour from among men; as a prince and civil magistrate, he had the honour given him that was due unto him, and this was continually increasing; and also of his spiritual glory, which lay, as every good man’s glory does, in the grace of God wrought in him, and in the righteousness of Christ put upon him, (<194509>Psalm 45:9,13); which grace is renewed and increased in them by the Holy Spirit, and is therefore called the renewing of the Holy Ghost; and which righteousness is revealed “from faith to faith”, (<450117>Romans 1:17), from a lesser degree of it to a greater:

and my bow was renewed in my hand; “is” or “shall be”; meaning either his authority as a civil magistrate, increasing daily to the terror of evildoers, and to the praise, profit, and defence of them that did well; or his strength, as Gersom interprets it, his spiritual strength, as in (<234031>Isaiah 40:31); where the same word is used as here; so that he grew stronger and stronger in faith and other graces, and went from strength to strength; the bow was a warlike instrument, and required strength to draw it, and is put for it; (see <014822>Genesis 48:22 49:24).

Ver. 21. Unto me [men] gave ear, etc.] Or give ear, or shall give ear, being all ear; all attention to him, listening to what he said with the utmost diligence and earnestness; even all sorts of men, high and low, rich and poor, princes, nobles, and common people; this they had done, and Job concluded they still would do the same; (see <182909>Job 29:9,10); and waited; patiently, without any weariness, with pleasure and delight, without giving any interruption, or wishing his discourse was ended; and though continuing ever so long, were not impatient until it was finished:

and kept silence at my counsel; which was the thing waited for, and which when given, it was to the highest satisfaction; they acquiesced in it, and showed their approbation of it by their silence, not having anything to object to it, any alteration to be made in it, or any thing to be added to it; but being so complete and full, they were ready to take it at once, and act according to it; Job’s counsel being like that of Ahithophel, which was as the oracle of God, (<101623>2 Samuel 16:23).

Ver. 22. After my words they spake not again, etc.] Did not or would not make any reply to them; they did not attempt to change and alter them, to add unto them, or take from them, or in any wise to correct them, and much less to contradict them, and treat them with contempt; or “differed not”, as Mr. Broughton renders it; differed not from them, but agreed to them; and differed not among themselves, but united in what Job said, as being full to the purpose, after which nothing more could be said; (see <210212>Ecclesiastes 2:12); and my speech dropped upon them; his prophecy, as Jarchi, prophesying being expressed by dropping, (<300716>Amos 7:16); his doctrine dropped from his lips like the honeycomb, and was sweet, grateful, and delightful to his hearers, as the church’s lips, (<220411>Song of Solomon 4:11); or rather like the rain, as in (<053202>Deuteronomy 32:2), when it falls and drops gently and easily, and so penetrates and soaks into the earth, and abides and does good: in like manner, when good and sound doctrine drops upon the hearers, so as to enter into their hearts, and work effectually in them, it does them good, and they rejoice at it, and are far from having anything to say against it.

Ver. 23. And they waited for me as for the rain, etc.] The former rain, as appears by the following clause, which fell in autumn, about October, after seedtime, in order to nourish and cherish it, and bring it up; now as the husbandman waited for this, was in daily expectation of it, and greatly desired it, and longed for it; (see <590507>James 5:7); so the people waited for Job, for his coming into their public assemblies, whether civil or religious, and longed to hear him speak, for their counsel and instruction, for their comfort and direction in all things they stood in need of:

and they opened their mouth wide [as] for the latter rain; which fell in the spring about March, in the time of harvest, which was of use to fatten the kernals of grain, and make them fuller, and the flour finer; now Job’s hearers opened their mouths, as the dry and parched earth gapes for rain; or the husbandman, or the gardener, as the Targum, opens his mouth, and asks and prays for rain; or as a hungry and thirsty man opens his mouth to take in refreshment, or expresses thereby his desire of it; or as persons somewhat deaf open their mouths to hear the better, there being a way through the mouth to the internal ear, as anatomists[f1053] observe; which lies through the Eustachian tube, out of the palate, to the internal cavity of the ear, called the “concha”; wherefore such persons naturally open their mouths when they would hear attentively; all which expresses the eager desire of Job’s hearers after his doctrine, which, like the rain, would be useful, profitable, and edifying to them; their view was not to indulge their curiosity, to please their ears, but to affect their hearts, and instruct their minds.

Ver. 24. [If] I laughed on them, they believed [it] not, etc.] Not that he at any time laughed at them, by way of derision; but when in a cheerful frame of mind, or in a merry mood, he used freedom and familiarity, and jested with them; but they could not believe that he did jest, or was in jest, he being a man always of such gravity and seriousness, that they concluded the smile on his countenance, and the pleasant turn of his expression, had a serious meaning in them; or such familiarity with them was so pleasing to them, that they could scarcely for joy believe that he did condescend to indulge such an air of pleasantry: or as Mr. Broughton renders it, and so some others to the same sense, “they would not be bold”[f1054]; familiarity with them did not breed contempt, as it sometimes does; they did not presume upon it, and grow bold and insolent, and make him their equal, and jest with him again; but still there was an awe upon them, and they behaved with reverence to him; and to show how great it was is the design of the expression:

and the light of my countenance they cast not down; they did not ruffle his mind, or disturb the serenity of it; or cause him to change his countenance, through any bold and indecent behaviour towards him, encouraged by the freedom and pleasantry he used with them; they did not put him to shame, or provoke him to anger and displeasure by any unbecoming deportment; they kept their distance, they did not detract from his authority and majesty, or in the least lessen that, but behaved with the same reverence and regard to him they ever did; (see <010406>Genesis 4:6).

Ver. 25. I chose out their way, etc.] When his friends and neighbours came to him for advice in things civil, he marked out their way for them, directed what steps to take, what methods to pursue for their good; they desired him to choose for them, preferring his judgment to theirs, and were determined to abide by his choice of ways and means, and to follow his counsel; and in religious matters, he instructed them in their duty, both towards God and men, and proposed unto them what was most eligible, both with respect to doctrine and practice; and sat chief; in all their public assemblies; he presided in their councils and courts of judicature; and when met together for religious worship, he sat in the chair of the teacher, and instructed them; he was chief speaker, as the Heathens said of the Apostle Paul, (<441412>Acts 14:12);

and dwelt as a king in the army, or “troop”[f1055]. Mr. Broughton renders it with a garrison; Job was surrounded with multitudes of persons, that waited upon him on one account or another, who were ready to receive his words, and be obedient to them, as a king or general in the midst of an army, surrounded by his general officers, and the whole army encamped about him, doing him honour, and ready to obey whatever commands or instructions he should give them; some conclude from hence that Job was really a king, as being not a note of similitude, but of truth and reality, as in (<401402>Matthew 14:2); and so he might be; for in those times and countries every city almost had its king; though this is not necessarily supposed here; for the phrase seems only to denote the authority and influence Job had over men by his advice and instruction, which were as much regarded as from a king; and the majesty he appeared in, and the reverence in which he was had:

as one [that] comforteth the mourners: which some restrain to the king in his army, and connect them therewith thus, "when he comforteth the mourners"[f1056]; the soldiers mourning for some loss sustained, and slaughter made among them; whose minds the king or general by a set speech endeavours to cheer, and comfort, and allay their fears, and animate them to intrepidity and fortitude, when all eyes are upon him and attentive to him; and so attentive were Job's hearers to him. Bar Tzemach observes, that the copulative W, or "and", is wanting, and so is a clause by itself, and expresses something distinct from the forager, and may be supplied, "and I was as one that comforteth the mourners"; as a wise man that comforteth them, as Aben Ezra explains it; like one that made it his business to visit mourners in affliction, on account of the death of a relation, and the like: (see <181119>Job 11:19); and speaks comfortable words to them, to support them under their sorrow; when such an one used to speak alone, and all stood silent before him, and attentive to him; and in a like position was Job, when he gave his instructions to those about him; and he was, no doubt, a comforter of mourners himself, being either in temporal afflictions, or in spiritual troubles; comforted those that were cast down in either sense, and was a type of Christ, who was appointed to comfort all that mourn in Zion.

CHAPTER 30

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 30

Job in this chapter sets forth his then unhappy state and condition, in contrast with his former state of prosperity described in the preceding chapter: things had taken a strange turn, and were just the reverse of what they were before; he that was before in such high esteem and credit with all sorts of men, young and old, high and low, rich and poor, now is had in derision by the meanest and basest of men, whose characters are described, (<18301>Job 30:1-8); and the instances of their contempt of him by words and gestures are given, (<18309>Job 30:9-14); he who enjoyed so much ease of mind, and health of body, is now filled with distresses of soul, and bodily diseases, (<18315>Job 30:15-19); and he who enjoyed so much of the presence of God, and communion with him, and of his love and favour, was now disregarded, and, as he thought, cruelly used by him, who not only had destroyed his substance, but was about to bring him to the grave, (<18320>Job 30:20-24); all which came upon him, though he had a sympathizing heart with the poor, and them that were in trouble, and when he expected better things, (<18325>Job 30:25-28); and he close the chapter, lamenting his sad and sorrowful circumstances, (<18329>Job 30:29-31).

Ver. 1. But now [they that are] younger than I have me in derision, etc.] Meaning not his three friends, who were men in years, and were not, at least all of them, younger than he, (see <181510>Job 15:10 32:6,7); nor were they of such a mean extraction, and such low-lived creatures, and of such characters as here described; with such Job would never have held a correspondence in the time of his prosperity; both they and their fathers, in all appearance, were both great and good; but these were a set of profligate and abandoned wretches, who, as soon as Job’s troubles came upon him, derided him, mocked and jeered at him, both by words and gestures; and which they might do even before his three friends came to him, and during their seven days’ silence with him, and while this debate was carrying on between them, encouraged unto it by their behaviour towards him; to be derided by any is disagreeable to flesh and blood, though it is the common lot of good men, especially in poor and afflicted circumstances, and to be bore patiently; but to be so used by junior and inferior persons is an aggravation of it; as Job was, even by young children, as was also the prophet Elisha, (<120223>2 Kings 2:23); (see <181918>Job 19:18);

whose fathers I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock; either to have compared them with the dogs that kept his flock from the wolves, having some good qualities in them which they had not; for what more loving or faithful to their masters, or more vigilant and watchful of their affairs? or to set them at meat with the dogs of his flock; they were unworthy of it, though they would have been glad of the food his dogs ate of, they living better than they, whose meat were mallows and juniper roots, (<183004>Job 30:4); and would have jumped at it; as the prodigal in want and famine, as those men were, would fain have filled his belly with husks that swine did eat; but as no man gave them to him, so Job disdained to give the meat of his dogs to such as those; or to set them “over”[f1057] the dogs of his flock, to be the keepers of them, to be at the head of his dogs, and to have the command of them; see the phrase in (<100308>2 Samuel 3:8); or else to join them with his dogs, to keep his flock with them; they were such worthless faithless wretches, that they were not to be trusted with the care of his flock along with his dogs. It was usual in ancient times, as well as in ours, for dogs to be made use of in keeping flocks of sheep from beasts of prey, as appears from Orpheus[f1058], Homer[f1059], Theocritus[f1060], and other writers: and if the fathers of those that derided Job were such mean, base, worthless creatures, what must their sons be, inferior to them in age and honour, if any degree of honour belonged to them?

Ver. 2. Yea, whereto [might] the strength of their hands [profit] me, etc.] For though they were strong, lusty, hale men, able to do business, yet their strength was to sit still and fold their hands in their bosoms, so that their strength was of no profit or avail to themselves or others; they were so slothful and lazy, that Job could not employ them in any business of his to any advantage to himself; and this may be one reason, among others, why he disdained to set them with the dogs of his flock to keep it; for the fathers seem to be intended all along to (<183008>Job 30:8); though it matters not much to which of them the words are applied, since they were like father like son:

in whom old age was perished? who did not arrive to old age, but were soon consumed by their lusts, or cut off for their sins; and so the strength and labour of their hands, had they been employed, would have been of little worth; because the time of their continuance in service would have been short, especially being idle and slothful: some understand it of a lively and vigorous old age, such as was in Moses; but this being not in them, they were unfit for business, (see <180526>Job 5:26); or they had not the endowments of old age, the experience, wisdom, and prudence of ancient persons, to contrive, conduct, and manage affairs, or direct in the management of them, which would make up for lack of strength and labour. Ben Gersom, Bar Tzemach, and others, interpret the word of time, or the time of life, that was perished or lost in them; their whole course of life, being spent in sloth and idleness, was all lost time.

Ver. 3. For want and famine [they were] solitary, etc.] The Targum interprets it, without children; but then this cannot be understood of the fathers; rather through famine and want they were reduced to the utmost extremity, and were as destitute of food as a rock, or hard flint, from whence nothing is to be had, as the word signifies, (see <180307>Job 3:7); fleeing into the wilderness in former time desolate and waste: to search and try what they could get there for their sustenance and relief, fleeing through fear of being taken up for some crimes committed, or through shame, on account of their miserable condition, not caring to be seen by men, and therefore fled into the wilderness to get what they could there: but since men in want and famine usually make to cities, and places of resort, where provision may be expected; this may be interpreted not of their flying into the wilderness, though of their being there, perhaps banished thither, (see <183005>Job 30:5); but of their "gnawing"[f1061], or biting the dry and barren wilderness, and what they could find there; where having short commons, and hunger bitten, they bit close; which, though extremely desolate, they were glad to feed upon what they could light on there; such miserable beggarly creatures were they: and with this agrees what follows.

Ver. 4. Who cut up mallows by the bushes, etc.] Which with the Troglodytes were of a vast size[f1062]; or rather "upon the bush"[f1063] or "tree"; and therefore cannot mean what we call mallows, which are herbs on the ground, and grow not on trees or bushes; and, besides, are not for food, but rather for medicine: though Plutarch[f1064] says they, were the food of the meaner sort of people; so Horace[f1065] speaks of them as such; and the word in the original is near in sound to a mallow; but it signifies something salt, wherefore Mr. Broughton renders it "salt herbs"; so

Grotius, such as might grow by the seaside, or in salt marshes; and in Edom, or Idumea, where Job lived, was a valley of salt, (see <121407>2 Kings 14:7). Jarchi says it is the same with what the Syrians in their language call “kakuli”, which with them is a kind of pulse; but what the Turks at this day call “kakuli” is a kind of salt herb, like to “alcali”, which is the food of camels[f1066] the Septuagint render the word by “alima”; and, by several modern learned men, what is intended is thought to be the “halimus” of Dioscorides, Galen, and Avicenna; which is like unto a bramble, and grows in hedges and maritime places; the tops of which, when young and tender, are eaten, and the leaves boiled for food, and are eaten by poor people, being what soon filled the belly, and satisfied; and seem to be the same the Moors call “mallochia”, and cry about the streets, as food for the poor to buy[f1067]: however it appears upon the whole to be the tops or leaves of some sort of shrub, which Idumean people used to gather and live upon. The following story is reported in the Talmud[f1068] concerning King Jannai, who > “went to Cochalith in the wilderness, and there subdued sixty fortified towns; and, upon his return, he greatly rejoiced, and called all the wise men of Israel, and said unto them, our fathers ate “malluchim” (the word used in this text of Job) at the time they were employed in building the sanctuary; so we will eat “malluchim” on remembrance of our fathers; and they set “malluchim” on tables of gold, and they ate;”

which the gloss interprets herbs; the name of which, in the Syriac language, is “kakuli”; the Targum is, who plucks up thorns instead of eatable herbs. Some[f1069] render the word “nettles”, (see <183007>Job 30:7); juniper roots [for] their meat, or “bread”[f1070]; with the roots of which the poor were fed in time of want, as Schindler[f1071] observes: that bread may be, and has been made out of roots, is certain, as with the West Indians, out of the roots of “ages” and “jucca”[f1072]; and in particular juniper roots in the northern countries have been used for bread[f1073]; and there were a people in Ethiopia above Egypt, who lived upon roots of reeds prepared, and were called “rhisophagi”[f1074], “root eaters”: some render the words, “or juniper roots to heat”, or “warm with”[f1075], as the word is used in (<234714>Isaiah 47:14); and coals of juniper have in them a very great and vehement heat, (see <19C003>Psalm 120:3,4); but if any part of the juniper tree was taken for this purpose, to warm with when cold, one should think the branches, or the body of the tree, should be cut down, rather than the roots dug up: another sense is given by some[f1076], that meat or bread is to be understood of the livelihood these persons got by digging up juniper roots, and selling them: there are others that think, that not the roots of juniper, but of “broom”[f1077], are meant, whose rape, or navew, or excrescence from the roots of it, seem to be more fit food. All this agrees with the Troglodytes, whom Pliny[f1078] represents as thieves and robbers, and, when pressed with famine, dig up herbs and roots: cutters of roots are reckoned among the worst of men by Manetho[f1079].

Ver. 5. They were driven from among [men], etc.] From towns and cities, and all civil society, as unfit to be among them; not for any good, it may be observed, but for crimes that they had done, like our felons, and transported persons:

they cried after them as [after] a thief; as they were driven and run along, the people called after them, saying, there goes a thief; which they said by way of abhorrence of them, and for the shame of them, and that all might be warned and cautioned against them; and, generally speaking, such as are idle and slothful, and thereby become miserable, are pilferers and thieves.

Ver. 6. To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys, etc.] Or “brooks”[f1080], in such hollow places as were made by floods and streams of waters:

[in] caves of the earth, and [in] the rocks; where they betook themselves for fear of men, and through shame, being naked and miserable not fit to be seen: Job has respect to the Horites and Troglodytes, his neighbours, who dwelt in such places chiefly.

Ver. 7. Among the bushes they brayed, etc.] Like wild asses; so Sephorno, to which wicked men are fitly compared, (<181112>Job 11:12); or they “cried”, or “groaned”[f1081], and “moaned” among the bushes, where they lay lurking; either they groaned through cold, or want of food; for the wild ass brays not but when in want, (<180605>Job 6:5);

under the nettles they were gathered together; or “under thistles”[f1082], as some, or “under thorns”, as[f1083] others; under thorn hedges, where they lay either for shelter, or to hide themselves, or to seize upon a prey that might pass by; and so were such sort of persons as in the parable in (<421423>Luke 14:23); it not being usual for nettles to grow so high as to cover persons, at least they are not a proper shelter, and much less an eligible one; though some render the words, they were “pricked”[f1084], blistered and wounded, a word derived from this being used for the scab of leprosy, (<031306>Leviticus 13:6-8); and so pustules and blisters are raised by the sting of nettles: the Targum is, under thorn hedges, as before observed; and if the juniper tree is meant in (<183004>Job 30:4), they might be said to be gathered under thorns when under that; since, as Pliny [f1085] says, it has thorns instead of leaves; and the shadow of it, according to the poet [f1086], is very noxious and disagreeable.

> “under thorns they were associated together;”

Ver. 8. [They were] children of fools, etc.] Their parents were fools, or they themselves were such; foolish children, or foolish men, were they that derided Job; and their derision of him was a proof of it: the meaning is not that they were idiots, or quite destitute of reason and natural knowledge, but that they were men of slender capacities; they were “Nabal like”, which is the word here used of them; and, indeed, it may easily be concluded, they could not have much knowledge of men and things, from their pedigree, education, and manner of living before described; though rather this may signify their being wicked men, or children of such, which is the sense of the word “fool” frequently in the Psalms of David, and in the Proverbs of Solomon; and men may be fools in this sense, as having no understanding of divine and spiritual things, who yet have wit enough to do evil, though to do good they have no knowledge:

yea, children of base men, or “men without a name” [f1087]; a kind without fame, Mr. Broughton renders it; an infamous generation of men, famous for nothing; had no name for blood, birth, and breeding; for families, for power and authority among men, having no title of honour or of office; nor for wealth, wisdom, nor strength, for which some have a name; but these men had no name but an ill one, for their folly and wickedness; had no good name, were of no credit and reputation with men; and perhaps, strictly and literally speaking, were without a name, being a spurious and bastardly breed; or living solitary in woods and deserts, in cliffs and caves; they belonged not to any tribe or nation, and so bore no name:

they are viler than the earth; on which they trod, and who are unworthy to tread upon it; and out of which their vile bodies were made, and yet were viler than that which is the basest of the elements, being most distant from heaven, the throne of God [f1088]; they were not so valuable as some parts of the earth, the gold and silver, but were as vile as the dross of the earth, and viler than that; they were crushed and bruised, and “broken” more than the earth, as the word[f1089] signifies; they were as small and as contemptible as the dust of the earth and the mire of the streets, and more so; or than the men of the earth, as Aben Ezra observes, than the meanest and worst, and vilest of men: Mr. Broughton renders it, “banished from the earth”; smitten, stricken, and driven out of the land where they had dwelt, (<183005>Job 30:5); whipped out of it, as some translate the word[f1090], as vagabonds; as a lazy, idle, pilfering set of people, not fit to be in human society; and by such base, mean, lowly people, were Christ and his apostles ill treated; (see <402333>Matthew 23:33 27:27,39,44 <441705>Acts 17:5).

Ver. 9. And now am I their song, etc.] The subject of their song, of whom they sung ballads about the streets, in public places, and at their festivals and merriments, as Christ the antitype of Job was the song of the drunkard, (<196912>Psalm 69:12); (see <250314>Lamentations 3:14); or the meaning may be, they rejoiced in his afflictions and calamities, and made themselves merry with them, which was cruel and inhuman, as David’s enemies did in his, and those abject, mean, base people, like those that derided Job: and so the Edomites rejoiced over the children of Judah, in the day of their destruction, and as the inhabitants of Popish countries will rejoice over the witnesses when slain, and make merry, (<193515>Psalm 35:15,16 Obidiah 1:12 <661109>Revelation 11:9,10);

yea, I am their byword: all their talk was about him continually, and at every turn would use his name proverbially for an hypocrite, or a wicked man; and thus Christ, of whom Job was a type, became a proverb in the mouth of the Jews, (<196911>Psalm 69:11); and as the Jews themselves now are with others, (<242409>Jeremiah 24:9).

Ver. 10. They abhor me, etc.] As it is no wonder they should, since his inward and most intimate friends did, (<181919>Job 19:19); they abhorred him, not for any evil in him; Job was ready enough to abhor that himself, and himself for it, as he did when sensible of it, (<184206>Job 42:6); but for the good that was in him, spoken or done by him; which carried in it a reproof to them they could not bear; (see <300510>Amos 5:10); they abhorred him also because of his present meanness and poverty, and because of his afflictions and distresses; and particularly the diseases of his body; so Christ was abhorred by the Scribes, Pharisees and elders of the people, the three shepherds his soul loathed, and their soul abhorred him for his meanness and for his ministry: and even by the whole nation of the Jews, by the body of the people, particularly when they preferred Barabbas, a thief and a murderer, to him, (<411507>Mark 15:7,11); (see <381108>Zechariah 11:8 <234907>Isaiah 49:7);

they flee from me; as from some hideous monster, or infectious person, as if he had the plague on him, or some nauseous disease, the stench of which they could not bear; so Christ his antitype was used by: his people; when they saw him in his afflictions they hid their faces from him, did not care to look at him, or come nigh him, (<235303>Isaiah 53:3); and spare not to spit in my face; not in his presence only, as some think, which is too low a sense, but literally and properly in his face, when they vouchsafed to come near him; in this opprobrious way they used him, than which nothing was a greater indignity and affront; and we need not scruple to interpret it in this sense of Job, since our Lord, whose type he was in this and other things, was so treated, (<235006>Isaiah 50:6 <402667>Matthew 26:67 27:20).

Ver. 11. Because he hath loosed my cord, etc.] Not his silver cord, for then he must have died immediately, (<211206>Ecclesiastes 12:6); though it may be understood of the loosening of his nerves through the force of his disease, and the afflictions he endured from God and man, (see <183017>Job 30:17); or rather of the shattered state and condition of his family and substance; which, while he enjoyed, he had respect and reverence from men; but now all being loosed, scattered, and destroyed, he was treated with derision and scorn; or, better still, of his power and authority as a civil magistrate, by which, as with a cord, he bound many to subjection and obedience to him, and which commanded reverence of him; but this being now loosed and removed from him, persons of the baser sort behaved in an insolent manner towards him; there is a “Keri”, or a marginal reading of this clause, which we follow; but the “Cetib”, or written text, is “his cord”; and so Mr. Broughton renders it, “he hath loosed his string”; which he explains of the string or rein of his government, that holdeth base men from striving with the mighty, and which comes to the same sense; for the power and authority Job had as a governor were of God, and which he had now loosened; the allusion may be to the string of a bow, which being loosed, it cannot cast out the arrow; and respect may be had to what Job had said, (<182920>Job 29:20), “my bow was renewed in my hand”; it then abode in strength, and its strength was renewed; but now he had lost his power and strength, at least it was greatly weakened, that he could not defend himself, nor punish the wicked:

and afflicted me; that is, God, who is also understood in the preceding clause, though not expressed. Job’s afflictions were many, and there were second causes of them, who were the movers, instruments, and means of them, as Satan, the Sabeans and Chaldeans, yet they were of God, as the appointer, orderer, and sender of them; and so Job understood them, and always as here ascribed them to him; wherefore there was a just cause for them, and an end to be answered by them, and it became Job patiently to bear them, and to wait the issue of them: now, on this account, the above persons were emboldened and encouraged to use Job in the ill manner they did:

they have also let loose the bridle before me; the restraints that were upon them when Job was in his prosperity, and had the reins of government in his hand; these they now cast off, and showed no manner of reverence of him, nor respect for him; and the bridle that was upon their mouths, which kept them from speaking evil of him while he was in power, now they slipped it from them, and gave themselves an unbounded liberty in deriding, reproaching, and reviling him; (see <193901>Psalm 39:1); and this they did before him, in his presence and to his face, who before were mute and silent.

Ver. 12. Upon [my] right [hand] rise the youth, etc.] “Springeth”, as Mr. Broughton translates the word; such as were just sprung into being, as it were; the word [f1091] seems to have the signification of young birds that are not fledged; have not got their feathers on them, but are just got out of the shell, as it were; and such were these young men: some render the word the “flower” [f1092]; as if the flower of men, the chief and principal of them, were meant, such as were Job’s three friends, who are here distinguished from the mean and baser sort before spoken of; but the word even in this sense signifies young men, who are like buds and flowers just sprung out, or who are beardless boys, or whose beards are just springing out; so the young priests are in the Misnah [f1093] called “the flowers of the priesthood”: now such as these rose up, not in reverence to Job, as the aged before did, but in an hostile way, to oppose, resist, reproach, and deride him; they rose up on his right hand, took the right hand of him, as if they were his superiors and betters; or they stood at his right hand, took the right hand to accuse him, as Satan did at Joshua’s; (see <19A906>Psalm 109:6 <380301>Zechariah 3:1);

they push away my feet; they brought heavy charges and violent accusations against him, in order to cast him down, and trample upon him; nor would they suffer him to stand and answer for himself; he could have no justice done him, and so there was no standing for him. If this was to be understood literally, of their pushing at him to throw him down to the ground, or of an attempt trip up his heels, so that his feet were almost gone, and his steps had well nigh slipped, it was very rude and indecent treatment of him indeed:

and they raise up against me the ways of their destruction; as, in besieging a town, mounts, forts, and batteries are raised to destroy it, so those persons made use of all ways and means to destroy Job; or they trod upon him, and made him as a path or causeway to walk upon, in order utterly to destroy him. Mr. Broughton renders the words, “they cast upon me the causes of their woe”, imputed all their calamities and miseries to him, reproached him on that account, and now were resolved to revenge themselves on him.

Ver. 13. They mar my path, etc.] Hindered him in the exercise of religious duties; would not suffer him to attend the ways and worship of God, or to walk in the paths of holiness and righteousness; or they reproached his holy walk and conversation, and treated it with contempt, and triumphed over religion and godliness:

they set forward my calamity; added affliction to affliction, increased his troubles by their reproaches and calumnies, and were pleased with it, as if it was profitable as well as pleasurable to them, (see <380115>Zechariah 1:15);

they have no helper; either no person of note to join them, and, to abet, assist, and encourage them; or they needed none, being forward enough of themselves to give him all the distress and disturbance they could, and he being so weak and unable to resist them; nor there is “no helper against them”[f1094]; none to take Job’s part against them, and deliver him out of their hands, (see <210401>Ecclesiastes 4:1).

Ver. 14. They came [upon me] as a wide breaking in [of waters], etc.] As when a wide breach is made in the banks of a river, or of the sea, the waters rush through in great abundance, with great rapidity and swiftness; and with a force irresistible; and in like manner did Job’s enemies rush in upon him in great numbers, overwhelming him in an instant, and he not able to oppose them; or as, when a wide breach is made in the wall of a city besieged, the besiegers pour themselves in, and bear down all before them: and thus Job in a like violent manner was run upon, and bore down by the persons before described:

in the desolation they rolled themselves [upon me]; as when a breach is made in a bank of a river, or of the sea, the waters roll themselves, one wave and flood over another; or, as when a breach is made in a wall, "in the broken place they tumble"; as Mr. Broughton renders it; the soldiers tumble one over another in haste, to get possession and seize the plunder: in such like manner did Job's enemies roll themselves on him, in order to crush and destroy him; and it may be rendered, "because of the desolation" [f1095], because of bringing calamity on him in order to make him desolate; they came pouring in upon him with all their numbers, force, and strength, to bear him down, and crush him to the earth, as grass may be rolled upon, and beaten down by heavy bodies.

Ver. 15. Terrors are turned upon me, etc.] Not the terrors of a guilty conscience, for Job had a clear one, and held fast his integrity; nor the terrors of a cursing and condemning law, for he knew he was justified by his living Redeemer, and his sins forgiven for his sake; nor the terrors of death, for that he had made familiar to him, and greatly desired it; nor the terrors of a future judgment, for there was nothing he was more solicitous for than to appear before the judgment seat of God, and take his trial there; but the afflictions that were upon him from the hand of God that was turned on him, who now hid his face from him, and withheld the influences of his grace and layout, and appeared as an enemy, and as a cruel one to him; the reason of all which he knew not, and this threw him into consternation of mind, and filled him with terror. Some [f1096] read the words instead of being in the honour and glory, prosperity and happiness, he had been in, he was now possessed of terrors and distresses of various kinds: others render the words, "he is turned against me, as terrors", or "into terrors", or "with [them]" [f1097]; God cannot be turned or changed in his nature, in his will, counsel, purposes, and decrees, nor in his love and affection to his people; but he may turn in the outward dispensations of his providence according to his unchangeable will, as from evil to good, (Jon 3:9); so from doing good to evil, (<236310>Isaiah 63:10); this is complained of by the church, (<250303>Lamentations 3:3); and deprecated by Jeremiah, (<241717>Jeremiah 17:17); or there is “a turn, terrors are upon me”; there was a very visible turn in Job’s affairs in many respects, in his health, substance, and family, and particularly in this; while he was in his office as a civil magistrate, and in all the glory of it, he was a terror to evil doers; and young men, when he appeared, hid themselves for fear of him; but now those impudently rise up against him, and are terrors to him: or there is an “overthrow” [f1098], an overturning of things, as of his civil and temporal affairs, so of his spiritual ones; instead of that peace, serenity, and tranquillity of mind he had enjoyed; now nothing but terror and distress of mind on account of his afflictions and troubles:

> "my glory is turned into terrors;"

they pursue my soul as the wind; terrors one after another; they pursued him closely, with great swiftness, and with a force irresistible, like the wind; they pursued his soul, his life, and threatened the taking away of it: the word for soul is not the usual word for it; it signifies “my principal one”, as in the margin, as the soul is the principal part of man, the immortal breath of God, the inhabitant in the tenement of the body, the jewel in the cabinet, immaterial and immortal, and of more worth than the whole world; or “my princely one”, being of a princely original, is from God, the Father of spirits, of a noble extract: Mr. Broughton renders it my “nobility”, having princely rule and government in the body; that using the members of the body as its instruments; and especially it may be said to have such rule, when grace is implanted in it, as a ruling governing principle; and the Targum is, my principality or government: it may be rendered, “my free” [f1099], liberal, ingenuous, and munificent one: Job had such a generous and beneficent soul; but now all means of exercising generosity and liberality were cut off from him; and particularly he had find a free ingenuous one, as he was actuated by the free spirit of God, (<195112>Psalm 51:12), where this word is used; but now terrors pursuing him, a spirit of bondage unto fear was brought upon him: some [f1100] consider it as an apostrophe to God, “thou pursues, my soul, O God”, etc. but rather the meaning is, a distress or affliction pursued it, or everyone of the above terrors:

and my welfare passeth away as a cloud; or “my salvation” [f1101]; not spiritual and eternal salvation, that was firm and stable, being fixed by the unalterable decree of God, secured in the covenant of grace, and engaged for to be wrought out by his living. Redeemer, and of which he had an application by the Spirit of God, and was possessed of the blessings of it; and though the joys and comforts of it, and views of interest in it, may go off for a while, yet Job seems to have had a strong faith of interest in it, and a lively and well grounded hope of its being his, (<181315>Job 13:15,16 19:25); but his temporal salvation, health, and happiness, were gone suddenly, swiftly, utterly, entirely, totally, as a cloud dissolved into rain, or dissipated by the rays of the sun, or driven away with the wind, so as to be seen no more; nor had he any hope of its being restored to him: some understand this, as Sephorno, of the salvation with which he had saved others; but it was no more in the power of his hands, and the remembrance of it was gone from those who shared in it; (see <280604>Hosea 6:4 13:3 <234422>Isaiah 44:22).

Ver. 16. And now my soul is poured out upon me, etc.] Either in prayer to God for help and deliverance; or rather he was dissolved as it were in floods of tears, because of his distress and anguish; or his spirits were sunk, his strength and courage failed, and his heart melted, and was poured out like water; yea, his soul was pouring out unto death, and he was, as he apprehended, near unto it; his body was so weakened and broken by diseases, that it was like a vessel full of holes, out of which the liquor runs away apace; so his life and soul were going away from him, his vital spirits were almost exhausted:

the days of affliction have taken hold upon me; afflictions seize on good men as well as others, and on them more than others; and there are certain times and seasons for them, appointed and ordered by the Lord; and there is a limited time, they are not to continue always, only for some days, for a time, and but a little time, and then they will have an end; but till that time comes, there can be no deliverance from them; being sent they come, coming they seized on Job, they laid hold on him, they “caught” him, as Mr. Broughton renders it, and held him fast, and would not let him go; nor could he get clear of them till God delivered him, who only can and does deliver out of them in his own time and way.

Ver. 17. My bones are pierced in me in the night season, etc.] Such was the force of his disease, that it pierced and penetrated even into his bones, and the marrow of them; and such the pain that he endured in the muscles and tendons about them, and especially in the joints of them, that it was as if all his bones were piercing and breaking to pieces; he was in a like condition the sick man is described in (<183319>Job 33:19); and as David and Hezekiah were, (<190602>Psalm 6:2 38:13); and what aggravated his case was, that this was “in the night season”, when he should have got some sleep and rest, but could not for his pain: some render the words by supplying them thus; God, or the disease, or the pain, pierced my bones in the night season; or "the night pierced my bones from me"; so Mr. Broughton; but rather they may be rendered, and the sense be, his flesh was almost wasted and consumed, through the boil and ulcers on him, and he was reduced to a mere skeleton; and when he laid himself down on his bed, these pierced through his skin, and stuck out, and gave him exquisite pain:

> "in the night season everyone of my bones pierce "the flesh" that is upon me:"

and my sinews take no rest; being contracted; or his nerves, as the word in the Arabic language signifies, as is observed by Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Donesh, and others; which were loosened, and the animal spirits were sunk, and he so low and dispirited, that he could get no rest: or the pulsatile veins and arteries, as Ben Gersom and Elias Levita[f1102], in which the pulse beats, and which beats with less strength when persons are asleep than when awake; but such was the force of Job's disease, that it beat even in the night, when on his bed, so strongly, that he could take no rest for it; the pulse beats, as physicians say[f1103], sixty times in a minute, and double the number in a burning fever, and which might be Job's case. Some take the word in the sense of fleeing or gnawing[f1104], as it is used (<183003>Job 30:3); and interpret it either of his enemies, who pursued after him, and had no rest in their beds, but went out in the night to inquire and hear what they could learn concerning him and his illness, whether it was become greater[f1105]; or who devoured him by their calumnies and detractions, and could not sleep unless they did mischief to him; (see <200416>Proverbs 4:16,17); or of the worms with which his body was covered, and which were continually gnawing, never rested, nor suffered him to take any rest; the Targum is, they that gnash at me rest not.

Ver. 18. By the great force [of my disease] is my garment changed, etc.] Either the colour of it, through the purulent matter from his ulcers running down upon it, or penetrating through it; or by reason of it he was obliged to shift himself, and to have a change of raiment very frequently; or the supplement, "of my disease", may be left out, and the sense be, with great force, through main strength, and with much difficulty, his garment was changed, was got off from him, sticking so close to him, and another put on:

it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat; his disease encompassed him about on all sides as the collar or edge of his coat encompassed his neck, and cleaved as close, and was as tight unto him as that, and threatened him perhaps with a suffocation or strangling; (see <180715>Job 7:15); the allusion is to garments used in the eastern countries, which were only open at top and bottom; at the top there was a hole to put the head through when put on, and a binding about it, and a button to it, or some such thing, which kept it tight about the neck; (see <022832>Exodus 28:32).

Ver. 19. He hath cast me into the mire, etc.] As Jeremiah was literally; here it is to be understood in a figurative sense; not of the mire of sin, into which God casts none, men fall into it of themselves, but of the mire of affliction and calamity; (see <194002>Psalm 40:2 69:2); and which Job here ascribes to God; and whereby he was in as mean, abject, and contemptible a condition, as if he had been thrown into a kennel, and rolled in it; and he speaks of it as an act of God, done with contempt of him, and indignation at him, as he apprehended it. Some Jewish writers [f1106] interpret it, “he taught me in the mire”, or “it taught me”; his disease, his ulcers taught him to sit down in the mire, or in the midst of ashes, (<180208>Job 2:8); but though this reading might admit of a good sense, as that Job was taught, as every good man is, many useful lessons in and by afflictions; yet it seems to be a sense foreign from the words:

and I am become like dust and ashes; a phrase by which Abraham expresses his vileness, meanness, and unworthiness in the sight of God, (<011827>Genesis 18:27); Job, through the force of his disease, looked like a corpse, or one half dead, and was crumbling and dropping into the dust of death and the grave, and looked livid and ash coloured; and even in a literal sense was covered with dust and ashes, when he sat among them, (<180208>Job 2:8); though here it chiefly respects the miserable, forlorn, and contemptible condition in which he was.

Ver. 20. I cry unto thee, and thou dost not hear me, etc.] Which added greatly to his affliction, that though he cried to the Lord for help and deliverance, yet he turned a deaf ear to him; and though he heard him, as undoubtedly he did, he did not answer him immediately; at least not in the way in which he desired and expected he would: crying is expressive of prayer, and supposes distress, and denotes vehemence of spirit:

> I stand up; in prayer, standing being a prayer gesture, as many observe from (<241501>Jeremiah 15:1); (see Gill on “<400605>Matthew 6:5”); > or he persisted in it, he continued praying, was incessant in it, and yet could obtain no answer; or this signifies silence, as some[f1107] interpret it; he cried, and then ceased, waiting for an answer; but whether he prayed, or whether he was silent, it was the same thing:

and thou regardest me [not]; the word “not” is not in this clause, but is repeated from the preceding, as it is by Ben Gersom and others; but some read it without it, and give the sense either thus, thou considerest me whether it is fit to receive my prayer or not, so Sephorno; or to renew my strokes, to add new afflictions to me, as Jarchi and Bar Tzemach; or thou lookest upon me as one pleased with the sight of me in such a miserable condition, so far from helping me; wherefore it follows.

Ver. 21. Thou art become cruel to me, etc.] Or “turned”, or “changed”[f1108], to be cruel to me. Job suggests that God had been kind and gracious to him, both in a way of providence, and in showing special love and favour to him, in a very distinguishing manner; but now he intimates his affections were changed and altered, and these were alienated from him, and his love was turned into an hatred of him; this is one of the unbecoming expressions which dropped from his lips concerning God; for the love of God to his people is never changed; it remains invariable and unalterable, in all dispensations, in every state and condition into which they come; there may be some of God’s dispensations towards them, which may have the appearance of severity in them; and he may make use of instruments to chastise them, which may use them cruelly; but even then his heart yearns towards them, and, being full of compassion, delivers out of their hands, and saves them, (<243014>Jeremiah 30:14 31:20 <281108>Hosea 11:8,9); with thy strong hand thou opposest thyself against me; God has a strong hand and arm, and none like him, and sometimes he puts forth the strength of it, and exerts his mighty power in afflicting his people, and his hand presses them sore, and they can scarcely stand up under it; and then it becomes them to humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and patiently bear it; and sometimes they take him to be their adversary, an enemy unto them, and filled with hatred of them, indignation against them, setting himself with all his might and main to ruin and destroy them; and this is a sad case indeed, to have such apprehensions of God, though unjust ones; for, as if God be for us, who shall be against us? so if he be against us, it signifies little who is for us; for there is no contending with him, (<180903>Job 9:3,4).

Ver. 22. Thou liftest me up to the wind, etc.] Of affliction and adversity, to be carried up with it, and tossed about by it, as chaff or stubble, or a dry leaf, being no more able to stand up against it than such things are to oppose the wind; though some interpret this of God's lifting him up in his state of prosperity, in which he was very visible and conspicuous to all, and enjoyed much light and comfort; but then he raised him to such an estate, with a view to cast him down, and that his fall and ruin might be the greater; and so this is observed as a proof of his being become cruel to him:

thou causest me to ride [upon it]; seemingly in great pomp and state, but in great uncertainty and danger, being at best in a slippery place, in very fickle circumstances, as the event showed; or rather the sense is, that he was swiftly carried into destruction, as if he rode on the wings of the wind to it, and was hurried thither at once, as soon as he was taken up with the tempest of adversity:

and dissolvest my substance; his outward substance, his wealth and riches, his family, and the health of his body, all which as it were melted away, or were carried away as with a flood; and so as the metaphor of a tempestuous wind is used in the former clause, here that of an overflowing flood, which removed from him what seemed to be the most solid and substantial: the word is sometimes used for wisdom, and even sound wisdom, (<200207>Proverbs 2:7 <330609>Micah 6:9); wherefore some have interpreted it of his being at his wits' end, of losing his reason and understanding, and which were at least disturbed and confounded by his afflictions; but his discourses and speeches show the contrary, and he himself denies that wisdom was driven from him, (<180613>Job 6:13).

Ver. 23. For I know [that] thou wilt bring me [to] death, etc.] Quickly and by the present affliction upon him; he was assured, as he thought, that this was the view and design of God in this providence, under which he was to bring him to death and the grave; that he would never take off his hand till he had brought him to the dust of death, to that lifeless dust from whence he had his original; otherwise, that he would he brought thither, sooner or later, was no great masterpiece of knowledge; every man knows this will be the case with him as with all; death is become necessary by sin, which brought it into the world, and the sentence of it on all men in it, and by the decree and appointment of God, by which it is fixed and settled that all should die; and this is confirmed by all experience in all ages, a very few excepted, only two persons, Enoch and Elijah, (<010524>Genesis 5:24 <581105>Hebrews 11:5 <120211>2 Kings 2:11): sometimes the death of persons is made known to them by divine revelation, as to Aaron and Moses, (<042012>Numbers 20:12,24 33:38 <053249>Deuteronomy 32:49,50); and sometimes it may be gathered to be nigh from the symptoms of it on the body; from growing diseases, and the infirmities of old age; but Job concluded it from the manner of God’s dealing with him, as he thought in wrath and indignation, determining to make an utter end of him:

and [to] the house appointed for all living; the grave, which is the house for the body when dead to be brought unto and lodged in; as the “house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens”, (<470501>2 Corinthians 5:1), is for the soul in its separate state, until the resurrection morn; which house or grave is man’s “long home”, (<211205>Ecclesiastes 12:5); and this is prepared and appointed for all men living, since all must die; and all that die have a house or grave, though that is sometimes a watery, and not an earthy one; however the dust of everybody has a receptacle provided for it, where it is reserved until the time of the resurrection, and then it is brought forth, (<662013>Revelation 20:13); and this is by divine appointment; the word used signifies both an appointed time and place, and is often used of the Jewish solemnities, which were fixed with respect to both; and also of the people or congregation that attended them; the grave is the general rendezvous of mankind, and both the time when and the place where the dead are gathered and brought unto it are fixed by the determinate will and counsel of God.

Ver. 24. Howbeit he will not stretch out [his] hand to the grave, etc.] Or, “verily”[f1109], truly he will not, etc. I am well assured he never will, meaning either he never would stretch out his hand to shut up the grave; or rather keep it shut, and prevent Job from going down into it; or to open it, and fetch him out of it when in it: God is indeed able to do either of these, and has done it; sometimes, when persons are brought as it were to the gates of death and the grave, he says to them, Return; yea, when they are brought to the dust of death, he prevents them going into the grave, by restoring them to life before carried thither, as the Shunammite’s son, (<120432>2 Kings 4:32-37); Jairus’s daughter, (<410541>Mark 5:41,42); and the widow’s son of Nain, even when he was carrying to his grave, (<420712>Luke 7:12-15); some have been laid in the grave, and God has stretched out his hand, and raised them up again; as the man that was laid in Elisha’s grave, (<121321>2 Kings 13:21), and Lazarus after he had lain in the grave some days, (<431139>John 11:39-44); but such things are not usually done; in common, when a man dies, and is laid in the grave, he rises not again, till the heavens be no more; and this Job was persuaded would be his case:

though they cry in his destruction; that is, though the friends and relations of the sick person, or the poor that he has been kind and bountiful unto, should cry unto God, while he is destroying him by the diseases upon him, and which threaten him with destruction, that he would spare his useful and valuable life; yet he is inexorable, and will not hear, but go on with what he intends to do, and takes him off by death, and lays him in the grave, “the pit of destruction”, (<195523>Psalm 55:23), so called because it wastes and consumes bodies laid in it; and when once laid there, all cries for a restoration to life again are vain and fruitless. Some take these words as expressed in a way of solace, as if Job comforted himself with this thought under his present afflictions, that, when once he was brought to death and the grave, there would be an end of all his sorrow; the hand of the Lord, that was now stretched out on him in a terrible way, would be no longer stretched out on him; he would then cease to afflict him, and he should be where the weary are at rest; and so the last clause is read with an interrogation, “is there any cry”, or “do any cry, in his destruction?” [f1110]; no, when death has done its office, and the body is laid in the grave, there is no more pain nor sorrow, nor crying; all tears are wiped away, and there is no more sense of afflictions and sufferings; they are all at an end. Mr. Broughton renders these words as to the sense the same, and as in connection with the following ones, “and prayed I not when plague was sent? when hurt came to any, thereupon cried I not?” and so do some others [f1111].

Ver. 25. Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? etc.] In outward trouble, whether personal in his own body, or in his family, or in his worldly affairs, or from wicked men, the men of the world; or in inward trouble, in soul trouble, on account of indwelling sin, the breakings forth of it, the lowness of grace, as to exercise, the hidings of God’s face, and the temptations of Satan: or “for him that is hard of day” [f1112]; with whom times are hard, the days are evil, with respect either to things temporal or spiritual; now Job had a sympathizing heart with such persons; he wept with them that wept; his bowels yearned towards them; he felt their sufferings and their sorrows, which is a Godlike frame of soul; for God, in all the afflictions of his people, is afflicted; a disposition of mind like that of the living Redeemer, who cannot but be touched with the feeling of the infirmities of saints, having been in all points tempted as they; and is a fruit of the Spirit of God, and very becoming the relation the saints stand in to one another, being members of the same body, and of each other; and therefore, when one member suffers, all the rest should sympathize with it, and, being brethren, should be loving, pitiful, and courteous to each other; and should consider that they also are in the body, and liable to the same distresses, whether outward or inward:

was [not] my soul grieved for the poor? in general, and especially for the Lord's poor, for such in all ages have been chosen and called by him; for these Job was grieved at heart, when he saw their distress through poverty; and he not only expressed his concern for them by tears and words, but by distributing liberally to their necessities, (<183117>Job 31:17-20); and by which he showed his grief was real, hearty, and sincere, as here expressed; his soul was grieved, and he was sorry at his very heart for them: some render the words, "was not my soul like a pool of water?"[f1113] not only his head and his eyes, as Jeremiah's on another account, but his soul melted, and flowed like water with grief for them; and others, as Mr. Broughton, "did not my soul burn for the poor?" with sorrow for them, and an ardent desire to relieve them; (see <470912>2 Corinthians 9:12); now this was the frame of Job's mind in the time of his prosperity, very different from that in (<300604>Amos 6:4-6); and was certain and well known; he could appeal to all that knew him for the truth of it, it being what, none could deny that had any knowledge of him; yea, he could appeal to an omniscient God, he was now speaking to, for the truth of it; nay, it is delivered in the form of an oath, "if I did not weep", etc.[f1114], as in (<183116>Job 31:16-22).

Ver. 26. When I looked for good, etc.] As he thought he might reasonably expect it, since he had shown such a sympathizing spirit to persons in trouble, and such pity and mercy to the poor: in the time of his prosperity, he looked for a continuance of the good things he enjoyed, and expected to have had them for many years to come, and to have died in the possession of them, (<182918>Job 29:18); and even in his adversity, though he had received evil things at the hand of God, which he took patiently; yet at first he did not think they would always continue, but that there would be a turn of affairs, and he should again receive good at his hands; and he had been looking for it, as good men have reason to expect it; since God is good and does good, and especially to his own people, and has laid up goodness for them that fear him, and such an one Job was; and has promised good things unto them, both temporal and spiritual; for godliness and godly men have the promise of this life, and of that which is to come: but Job was disappointed in his expectation; for, says he, then evil came [unto me], the evil of affliction, one upon the back of another, even when in the height of his prosperity; and since repeated evil, new afflictions, came upon him by the appointment, order, and direction of God:

and when I waited for light; for the light of outward prosperity, such as he had formerly enjoyed; and for the light of God’s countenance, which he most earnestly sought after, and longed for, and was in a waiting posture for it, as good men have reason to be; since light is sown for them in the purposes and decrees of God, in his counsel and covenant, in his Gospel, and the promises of it; and therefore should wait for the springing of it up, as the husbandman does for the springing up of the corn sown in the earth, and lying under the clods; and seeing that to the upright there arises light in darkness; and though God hides his face from them, for a moment, he will have mercy on them, and therefore should wait his time to be gracious to them; but Job had waited long, and, as he thought, to no purpose: for there came darkness; the darkness of adversity, still thicker and darker, and no appearance of spiritual light and favour, or any discoveries of the love of God to him, or enjoyment of his presence; (see <240815>Jeremiah 8:15 <235909>Isaiah 59:9).

Ver. 27. My bowels boiled, and rested not, etc.] All contained within him, his heart, lungs, and liver, in a literal sense, through a violent fever burning within him; or figuratively, being under great distress and trouble, by reason of his afflictions, outward and inward, (see <240419>Jeremiah 4:19 <250120>Lamentations 1:20);

the days of affliction prevented me; came sooner upon him than he thought; he did not expect the evil days to come, and the years draw nigh in which he should have no pleasure, until he was more advanced in years, and the time of his dissolution was at hand; they came at once, and unawares, upon him, when he looked not for them: some render the word “met me” [f1115], unexpectedly; or rather, they “rushed upon me” [f1116], in an hostile way; came in troops, and invaded and surrounded him, (see <181912>Job 19:12).

Ver. 28. I went mourning without the sun, etc.] So overwhelmed with grief, that he refused to have any comfort from, or any advantage by the sun; hence Mr. Broughton renders it, “out of the sun”; he did not choose to walk in the sunshine, but out of it, to indulge his grief and sorrow the more; or he went in black attire, and wrapped and covered himself with it, that he might not see the sun, or receive any relief by it: or “I go black, [but] not by the sun” [f1117]; his face and his skin were black, but not through the sun looking upon him and discolouring him, as in (<220106>Song of Solomon 1:6); but through the force of his disease, which had changed his complexion, and made him as black as a Kedarene, or those that dwell in the tents of Kedar, (<220105>Song of Solomon 1:5); and he also walked without the sun of righteousness arising on him, with healing in his wings, which was worst of all:

I stood up, [and] I cried in the congregation: either in the congregation of the saints met together for religious worship, where he cried unto God for help and deliverance, and for the light of his countenance, (<183020>Job 30:20); or such was the extreme anguish of his soul, that when a multitude of people got about him to see him in his distressed condition, he could not contain himself, but burst out before them in crying and tears, though he knew it was unbecoming a man of his age and character; or he could not content himself to stay within doors and soothe his grief, but must go abroad and in public, and there expressed with strong cries and tears his miserable condition.

Ver. 29. I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls.] Or ostriches, as the Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic versions; either he was obliged to dwell with such persons as were comparable to these creatures for their devouring words, hissing noise, and venomous speeches, or for want of compassion, and for their cruelty, as David is said to be among lions, (<195704>Psalm 57:4); or also, he was like unto them, being solitary and alone, all his friends and acquaintance standing at a distance from him, as these creatures love lonesome and desolate places; or because of the wailing and howling noise they make, to which his mournful notes bore some resemblance, (see Gill on “<330101>Micah 1:8”); or because, when these creatures cry and howl, and make a noise, no mercy is shown to them, none pities or regards them; and so it was with him; though he stood and cried in ever so public a manner, none had any compassion on him.

Ver. 30. My skin is black upon me, etc.] Either through deep melancholy, as may be observed in persons of such a disposition, through grief and trouble; or rather through the force of his disease, the burning ulcers and black scabs with which he was covered, as the Jews were through famine, in their captivity, (<250408>Lamentations 4:8 5:10); and my bones are burnt with heat; with the heat of a burning fever; which not only made his inwards boil, but reached to his bones, and dried up the marrow of them. Galen says [f1118] that bones may become so dry as to be crumbled into sand: the Syriac version is such as were common in the eastern countries, which killed men at once, and they became as black as a coal [f1119].

> “my bones are burnt as his who is in a hot wind;”

Ver. 31. My harp also is [turned] to mourning, etc.] Which he used, as David, either in religious worship, expressing praise to God thereby, or for his recreation in an innocent way; but now it was laid aside, and, instead of it, nothing was heard from him, or in his house, but the voice of mourning:

and my organ into the voice of them that weep; another instrument of music, which had its name from the pleasantness of its sound, and was of early use, being first invented by Jubal, (<010421>Genesis 4:21); but not that we now so call, which is of late invention: those instruments which Job might have and use, both in a civil and in a religious way, were now, through afflictions, become useless to him, and neglected by him; or these expressions in general may signify, that, instead of mirth and joy he was wont to have, there were nothing now to be heard but lamentation and woe; (see <250515>Lamentations 5:15 <300810>Amos 8:10).

CHAPTER 31

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 31

In this chapter Job gives an account of himself in private life, of the integrity and uprightness of his life, and his holy walk and conversation, with this view, that it might be thought that the afflictions which were upon him were not on account of a vicious course of life he had indulged unto, as was suggested; and he clears himself from various crimes which it might be insinuated he was guilty of, as from unchastity; and he observes the method he took to prevent his falling into it, and the reasons that dissuaded him from it, (<183101>Job 31:1-4); from injustice in his dealings with men, (<183105>Job 31:5-8); from the sin of adultery, (<183109>Job 31:9-12); from ill usage of his servants, (<183113>Job 31:13-15); from unkindness to the poor, which he enlarges upon, and gives many instances of his charity to them, (<183116>Job 31:16-23); from covetousness, and a vain confidence in wealth, (<183124>Job 31:24,25); from idolatry, the worship of the sun and moon, (<183126>Job 31:26-28); from a revengeful spirit, (<183129>Job 31:29-31); and from inhospitality to strangers, (<183132>Job 31:32); from covering his sin, (<183133>Job 31:33); and fear of men, (<183134>Job 31:34); and then wishes his cause might be heard before God, (<183135>Job 31:35-37); and the chapter is closed with an imprecation on his head if guilty of any injustice, (<183138>Job 31:38-40).

Ver. 1. I made a covenant with mine eyes, etc.] Not to look upon a woman, and wantonly gaze at her beauty, lest his heart should be drawn thereby to lust after her; for the eyes are inlets to many sins, and particularly to uncleanness, of which there have been instances, both in bad men and good men, (<013402>Genesis 34:2 <101102>2 Samuel 11:2); so the poet [f1120] represents the eye as the way through which the beauty of a woman passes swifter than an arrow into the hearts of men, and makes impressions there; (see <610214>2 Peter 2:14); hence Zaleucus ordered adulterers to be punished, by plucking out the eyes of the adulterer [f1121]; wherefore Job, to prevent this, entered into a solemn engagement with himself, laid himself under a strong obligation, as if he had bound himself by a covenant, made a resolution in the strength of divine grace, not to employ his eyes in looking on objects that might ensnare his heart, and lead him to the commission of sin; he made use of all ways and means, and took every precaution to guard against it; and particularly this, to shut or turn his eyes from beholding what might be alluring and enticing to him: it is said[f1122] of Democritus, that he put out his eyes because he could not look upon a woman without lusting after her:

why then should I think upon a maid; of corrupting and defiling her, since he had made a covenant with his eyes, and this would be a breach of that covenant: and therefore, besides the sin of lusting after her, or of corrupting her, he would be a covenant breaker, and so his sin would be an aggravated one: or he made a covenant with his eyes, to prevent any impure thoughts, desires, and inclinations in him; for the eye affects the heart, and stirs up lust in it, and excites unclean thoughts and unchaste desires: this shows that the thought of sin is sin; that fornication was reckoned a sin before the law of Moses; and that Job better understood the spirituality of the law than the Pharisees did in the time of Christ, and had the same notion of lust in the heart being fornication and adultery as he had; and that good men are not without temptation to sin, both from within and from without; and therefore should carefully shun all appearances of evil, and whatsoever leads unto it, and take every necessary precaution to guard against it.

Ver. 2. For what portion of God [is there] from above? etc.] What good portion, as the Targum paraphrases it, can impure persons expect from God? such who indulge themselves, and live in the sin of uncleanness, cannot hope to have any part in God, or a portion of good things from him; he is above, and in the highest heavens, and every good thing comes from thence, and from him there; and particularly the spiritual blessings, wherewith he blesses his people, are in heavenly places in Christ, and from thence come to them; and here a special respect may be had to God himself, who is the portion of his people, both in life and at death, and to all eternity; but men that live a vicious course of life cannot conclude they have any part in God and Christ, nor in the grace of God, and the blessings of it, nor enjoy communion with him:

and [what] inheritance of the Almighty from on high? heaven is an inheritance which belongs to the children of God, and he, as their heavenly Father, has bequeathed it unto then; this is from the almighty God, God all sufficient; he has chosen this inheritance for them, and appointed them unto it; this is laid up by him and reserved in heaven for them; and he gives both a right unto it, and a meetness for it, and will put them into the possession of it: but then impure persons, as fornicators and adulterers, have no inheritance in the kingdom of God and of Christ, (<490505>Ephesians 5:5); and this was a reason with Job, and what had an influence on him, to be careful to avoid the sin of uncleanness. Some understand the words as a question concerning what would be the portion and heritage of a wicked man, a corrupter of virgins; the answer to which is given in the next verse, destruction and a strange punishment; this is their portion from God, and the heritage appointed to them by him; (see <182029>Job 20:29).

Ver. 3. [Is] not destruction to the wicked? etc.] It is even to such wicked men, who live in the sin of fornication, and make it their business to ensnare and corrupt virgins; and which is another reason why Job was careful to avoid that sin; wickedness of every sort is the cause of destruction, destruction and misery are in the ways of wicked men, and their wicked ways lead unto it, and issue in it, even destruction of soul and body in hell, which is swift and sudden, and will be everlasting: this is laid up for wicked men among the treasures of God’s wrath, and they are reserved that, and there is no way of deliverance from it but by Christ:

and a strange [punishment] to the workers of iniquity; the iniquity of fornication and whoredom, (<203020>Proverbs 30:20); who make it their business to commit it, and live in a continued course of uncleanness and other sins; a punishment, something strange, unusual, and uncommon, as the filthy venereal disease in this world, and everlasting burnings in another; or “alienation”[f1123], a state of estrangement and banishment from the presence of God and Christ, and from the society of the saints, to all eternity; (see <402546>Matthew 25:46 <530109>2 Thessalonians 1:9 <421626>Luke 16:26).

Ver. 4. Doth not he see my ways, and count all my steps?] That is, God, who is above, and the Almighty that dwells on high; he looks down from heaven, and beholds all the ways and works, the steps and motions, of the children of men; there is no darkness where the workers of iniquity can hide themselves; the fornicator and adulterer choose the night season for the commission of their sin, fancying no eye sees them; but they cannot escape the eye of God, who is omniscient; he observes the ways they walk in, the methods they take to compass their designs; he marks and counts every step taken by them, as he does indeed take notice of and reckons up every action of men, good and bad; and the consideration of this was another argument with Job to avoid the sin of uncleanness; for however privately he might commit it, so as not to be seen by men, it could not be hidden from the all seeing eye of God. Some take these words to be an obtestation, or appeal to God for the truth of what he had said; that he made a covenant with his eyes, and took every precaution to prevent his failing into the sin of uncleanness; and he whose eyes were upon his ways, knew how holily and unblamably he had walked; or else, as if the sense was, that had he given in to such an impure course of life, he might expect the omniscient God, that is above, and dwells on high, would bring upon him destruction, and a strange punishment, since he is the avenger of all such; others connect the words with the following, doth he not see my ways and steps, whether I have walked with vanity, etc. or not?

Ver. 5. If I have walked with vanity, etc.] Or with vain men, as Bar Tzemach interprets it, keeping company and having fellowship with them in their vain and sinful practices; or in the vanity of his mind, indulging himself in impurity of heart and life; or rather using deceitful methods to cheat and defraud others; for this seems to be another vice Job clears himself of, acting unjustly in his dealings with men, or dealing falsely with them:

or if my foot hath hasted to deceit; to cheat men in buying and selling, being ready and swift to do it, and in haste to become rich, which puts men oftentimes on evil ways and methods to attain it; (see <202820>Proverbs 28:20).

Ver. 6. Let me be weighed in an even balance, etc.] Or “in balances of righteousness” [f1124], even in the balance or strict justice, the justice of God; he was so conscious to himself that he had done no injustice to any man in his dealings with them, that, if weight of righteousness, which was to be, and was the rule of his conduct between man and man, was put into one scale, and his actions into another, the balance would be even, there would be nothing wanting, or, however, that would require any severe censure:

that God may know mine integrity; God did knew his integrity, and bore a testimony to it, and to his retaining it, (<180203>Job 2:3); but his meaning is, that should God strictly inquire into his life and conduct with respect to his dealings with men, as it would appear that he had lived in all good conscience to that day, so he doubted not but he would find his integrity such, that he would own and acknowledge it, approve of it, and commend it, and make it known to his friends and others, whereby he would be cleared of all those calumnies that were cast upon him. Some connect these words with the following, reading them affirmatively, “God knows mine integrity”; he knows that my step has not turned out of the way of truth and righteousness; that my heart has not walked after mine eye, in lustful thoughts and desires; and that there is no spoil, nor rapine, nor violence in my hand, that I should deserve such a punishment as to sow, and another eat: thus Sephorno.

Ver. 7. If my step hath turned out of the way, etc.] The way of God, the way of his commandments, the good and right way, the way of truth and righteousness, so far as Job had knowledge of it: for, besides the law and light of nature the Gentiles had in common, good men had some revelation, and notions of the mind and will of God unto them, both before and after the flood, previous to the Mosaic dispensation; which in some measure directed them what way to walk in, with respect to worship and duty; and from this way Job swerved not; not that he walked so perfectly in it as to be free from sin, and never commit any; or that he never took a step out of the way, or stepped awry; but he did not knowingly, wittingly, and purposely turn out of the way; and when, through infirmity of the flesh, the temptations of Satan, and snares of the world, he was drawn aside, he did not obstinately and finally persist therein; though this may have respect not to sin in general, but to the particular sin he is clearing himself from, namely, dealing falsely and deceitfully with men, in whatsoever he had to do with them, in matters of “meum” and “tuum”; or with regard to the rules of justice and equity between man and man, he was not conscious to himself he had departed from them; a like expression to those in (<190703>Psalm 7:3-5 44:18), where some particular sin is referred unto:

and mine heart walked after mine eyes; meaning not in the lust of uncleanness, of which he had spoken before, as such do whose eyes are full of adultery; but in the sin of covetousness, so Achan’s heart walked after his eyes, (<060720>Joshua 7:20,21); and this is one of the three things the world is full of, and the men of it indulge themselves in, the lust of the eyes, (<620216>1 John 2:16); the sense is, that when he saw the riches and wealth of others, he did not covet them, nor take any illicit methods to get them out of their hands; or, when he saw the goods they were possessed of, and had with them to dispose of, he did not take the advantage of their ignorance, or use any evil ways and means to cheat and beguile them of them: it is pleasing to the flesh for the heart to walk after the eye, or to indulge to that which it is taken with; but it is very vain and foolish, as well as very dangerous so to do, (<210210>Ecclesiastes 2:10 11:9); a good man chooses a better guide than his eyes; even to be a follower of God, to tread in the steps of his living and if any blot cleaved to my hands; any spot, stain, or blemish, as all sin is of a defiling nature, particularly the hands may be blotted by shedding innocent blood, by taking bribes to pervert judgment; which the Septuagint version directs to here; and by getting, holding, and retaining mammon of unrighteousness, or ill gotten goods; which is what is chiefly if not solely intended here; for it may be rendered, “if any thing hath cleaved”, etc. so Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom; for the word signifies both a “blot” and “anything”: and the Targum takes in both senses: the meaning seems to be, that there was not anything of another man’s in his hands, which he had taken from him by force and violence, or find obtained by any deceitful methods, and which he held fast, and it stuck with him as pitch to the hands, and he did not care to part with it, or restore it, whereby his hands were defiled; otherwise Job had no such opinion of the cleanness of his hands and actions, as if he thought there was no spot of sin in them, or only such as he could wash out himself; he clearly speaks the contrary, (<180930>Job 9:30,31); which is the sense of every good man, who, conscious of his spots and blemishes, washes his hands, his actions, his conversation garments, and makes them white in the blood of the Lamb; and such, and such only, have clean hands.

Redeemer, to walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, and according to the law and will of God:

Ver. 8. [Then] let me sow, and another eat, etc.] If what he had before said was not true; but he had turned out of the way of righteousness, and walked after the sight of his eyes, and the mammon of unrighteousness cleaved to his hands; then he wishes might sow his fields, and another enjoy the increase of them, which is one of God’s judgments threatened unto the wicked and disobedient, (<032616>Leviticus 26:16) (<052833>Deuteronomy 28:33);

let my offspring be rooted out; but Job had no offspring or children at this time to be rooted out or destroyed; they were all destroyed already; some think therefore that this imprecation was made by him in the time of his prosperity, though here repeated as it was then, he made a covenant with his eyes; but then this might have been improved against him and retorted on him, that so it was according to his wish; and therefore he must have been guilty of the sin he would have purged himself from; others suppose that he refers to the future, and to the offspring he hoped to have hereafter; and when he should have them, wishes they may be rooted out, if he had done what he denies he had; but it does not appear that Job had any hope at all of being restored to his former state of prosperity, and of being possessed of a family and substance again, but the reverse. Gussetius [f1125] will have it, that he means his grandchildren; those indeed are sometimes called a man’s children, and may propriety be said to be his offspring, they springing frown him; and it is possible, that, as his sons were settled from him, they were married and had children; but this is not certain, or, if they had any, that these were not destroyed with them; wherefore it is best to take the word [f1126] in its first and literal sense, for what springs out of the earth, herbs, plants, and trees, as in (<234205>Isaiah 42:5); so Ben Gersom and Bar Tzemach, and which best agrees with the phrase of being “rooted out”, and with what goes before; that as he had wished that which was sown in his fields might be eaten up by another, so what was planted and grew up in his gardens, orchards, vineyards, and olive yards, and the like, might be quite rooted out and destroyed; if he was not the man he declared himself to be, or had wronged any of their goods and property, then this would have been a just retaliation of him.

Ver. 9. If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, etc.] By another man’s wife, by wantonly looking at her beauty, and so lusting after her; and so, not through any blame or fault of hers, or by any artful methods made use of by her, to allure and ensnare; such as were practised by the harlot, (<200701>Proverbs 7:1-27); but by neither was the heart of Job deceived, and drawn into the sin of uncleanness; for he had made a covenant with his eyes, as not to look at a virgin, so much less at another man’s wife, to prevent his lusting after her; and whatever temptations and solicitations he might have been attended with, through the grace of God, as Joseph was, he was enabled to withstand them; though as wise a man, and the wisest of men, had his heart deceived and drawn aside thereby, (<210726>Ecclesiastes 7:26); or [if] I have laid wait at my neighbour’s door: to meet with his wife there, and carry on an intrigue with her; or to take the opportunity of going in when opened, in order to solicit her to his embraces, knowing her husband to be away from home; (see <200508>Proverbs 5:8 7:8,19).

Ver. 10. [Then] let my wife grind unto another, etc.] Which some understand literally, of her being put to the worst of drudgery and slavery, to work at a mill, and grind corn for the service of a stranger, and be exposed to the company of the meanest of persons, and to their insults and abuses; as we find such as were taken captives and made prisoners by an enemy were put unto, as Samson, (<071621>Judges 16:21); and it may be observed, that to grind in a mill was also the work of women, (<021105>Exodus 11:5 <402441>Matthew 24:41); as it was in early times; Homer [f1127] speaks of it as in times before him; but others take the words in a figurative sense, as if he imprecated that she lie with another man, and be defiled by him, as the Targum, Aben Ezra, and others [f1128]; (see <234701>Isaiah 47:1,2); and in like manner the following clause:

and let others bow down upon her; both which phrases are euphemisms, or clean and decent expressions, signifying what otherwise is not to be named; the Scriptures hereby directing, as to avoid unchaste thoughts, inclinations, and desires, and impure actions, so obscene words and filthy talking, as becometh saints: but there is some difficulty in Job's imprecating or wishing such a thing might befall his wife; it could not be lawful, if he had sinned, to wish his wife might sin also; or, if he was an adulterer, that she should be an adulteress; the sense is not, that Job really wished such a thing; but he uses such a way of speaking, to show how remote he was from the sin of uncleanness, there being nothing more disagreeable to a man than for his wife to defile his bed; it is the last thing he would wish for: and moreover Job suggests hereby, that had he been guilty of this sin, he must own and acknowledge that he would be righteously served, and it would be a just retaliation upon him, should his wife use him, or she be used, in such a manner; likewise, though a man may not wish nor commit a sin for the punishment of another; yet God sometimes punishes sin with sin, and even with the same kind of sin, and with this; so David's sin with Bathsheba was punished with Absalom lying with his wives and concubines before the sun, (<101211>2 Samuel 12:11); (see <052830>Deuteronomy 28:30).

Ver. 11. For this [is] an heinous crime, etc.] Adultery; it is contrary to the light of nature, and is condemned by it as a great sin, (<012009>Genesis 20:9 26:10); as well as contrary to the express will and law of God, (<022014>Exodus 20:14); and, though all sin is a transgression of the law of God, and deserving of death; yet there are some sins greater and more heinous than others, being attended with aggravating circumstances; and such is this sin, it is a breach of the marriage contract and covenant between man and wife; it is doing injury to a man's property, and to that which is the nearest and dearest to him, and is what introduces confusion into families, kingdoms, and states; and therefore it follows:

yea, it [is] an iniquity [to he punished by] the judges; who might take cognizance of it, examine into it, and pass sentence for it, and execute it; and, if they neglect do their duty, God, the Judge of all the earth, will punish for it in the world to come, unless repented of: “for whoremongers and adulterers God will judge”, (<581304>Hebrews 13:4); the punishment of adultery was death by the law of God, and that by stoning, as appears from (<032010>Leviticus 20:10 <052221>Deuteronomy 22:21 <430804>John 8:4,5); and it is remarkable, that the Heathens, who were ignorant of this law, enjoined the same punishment for it; so Homer[f1129] introduces Hector reproving Paris for this sin, and suggests to him, that if he had his deserved punishment, he would have been clothed with a “stone coat”, as he beautifully expresses it; which Suidas[f1130] explains, by being overwhelmed with stones, or stoned; as Eustathius[f1131].

Ver. 12. For it [is] a fire [that] consumeth to destruction, etc.] Referring either to the nature of the sin of uncleanness; it is inflammatory, a burning lust, a fire burning in the breast; (see <460709>1 Corinthians 7:9); or to the effect of it, either the rage of jealousy in the injured person, which is exceeding fierce, furious, and cruel, like devouring fire, not to be appeased or mitigated, (<200634>Proverbs 6:34,35 <220806>Song of Solomon 8:6); or else it may respect the punishment of this sin in the times of Job, and which we find was practised among the Gentiles, as the Canaanites, Job’s neighbours, burning such delinquents with fire; (see <013824>Genesis 38:24) (<242922>Jeremiah 29:22,23); or rather the wrath of God for it, which is poured forth as fire, and burns to the lowest hell, and into which lake of fire all such impure persons will be cast, unless the grace of God prevents; and which will be a fire that will consume and destroy both soul and body, and so be an utter and everlasting destruction, (<662108>Revelation 21:8); and would root out all my increase; even in this world; adultery is a sin that not only ruins a man’s character, fixes an indelible blot upon him, a reproach that shall not be wiped off, and consumes a man’s body, and destroys the health of it, but his substance also, the increase of his fields, and of his fruits, and by means of it a man is brought to a piece of bread, to beg it, and to be glad of it, (<200626>Proverbs 6:26,33 5:10).

Ver. 13. If I did despise the cause of my manservant, or of my maidservant, etc.] Whether it was a cause that related to any controversy or quarrel among themselves when it was brought before him, he did not reject it, because of the meanness of the contending parties, and the state of servitude they were in; but he received it and searched into it, heard patiently what each had to say, examined them thoroughly, entered into the merits of the cause, and either reconciled them, or passed a righteous sentence, punished the delinquent, and protected the innocent; or, if it was a cause relating to himself, any complaint of their work, or wages, or food, or clothing, as it seems to be from what follows:

when they contended with me; had anything to complain of, or to object to him on the above account, or any other, where there was any show or colour of foundation for it; otherwise it cannot be thought he would indulge a saucy, impudent, and contradicting behaviour in them towards him: masters in those times and countries had an unlimited, and exercised a despotic power over their servants, and used them with great rigour, and refused to do them justice upon complaints; but Job behaved as if he had had the rules of the apostle before him to act by in his conduct towards his servants, (<490609>Ephesians 6:9 <510401>Colossians 4:1); and even condescended to submit the cause between him and his servants to other judges or arbitrators, or rather took cognizance of it himself, heard patiently and carefully what they had to allege, and did them justice.

Ver. 14. What then shall I do when God riseth up? etc.] That is, if he had despised and rejected the cause of his servants, or had neglected, or refused to do them justice; he signifies he should be at the utmost loss to know what to do, what excuse to make, or what to say in his own defence, when God should rise up to defend the cause of the injured; either in a way of Providence in this life, or at the great day of judgment in the world to come, when everything will be brought to account, and masters and servants must stand alike before the judgment seat of God, to receive for the things they have done, whether good or evil:

and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him? when he makes a visitation among men, either in this world, even in a fatherly way, visits transgressions, and reproves and corrects for them; had he been guilty of ill usage of his servants, he must have silently submitted to such visitations and chastisements, having nothing to say for himself why he should not be thus dealt with; or in the world to come, in the great day of visitation, when God shall make inquisition for sin, and seek it out, and call to an account for it; and should this be produced against him, even contempt of the cause of his servants, he was sensible he could not answer him for it, nor for anyone sin of a thousand, as no man will be able to do; but must be speechless, unless he has a better righteousness than his own to answer for him in that time to come. This is Job’s first reason which deterred him from using his servants ill; another follows.

Ver. 15. Did not he that made me in the womb make him? etc.] And her also, both his manservant and maidservant: these were made, by the Lord as Job was, and in a like place and manner as he himself; though parents are the instruments of begetting children, and of bringing them into the world, God is the Maker of men, as at the beginning, and all are alike made by him, in whatsoever rank, condition, and circumstance of life, whether masters or servants; and they are all fabricated in the same shop of nature, the womb of a woman:

and did not one fashion us in the womb? that is, he who is the one God, according to (<391210>Malachi 2:10); God is one in nature and essence, though there are three Persons in the unity of the Godhead; and this one God, Father, Son, and Spirit, is the Creator of all men and things; hence we read of “Creators”, (<211201>Ecclesiastes 12:1); and, though one God makes the bodies and creates the souls of men now as at the first, and all are formed and fashioned by him, high, low, rich and poor, bond and free; and they have all the same rational powers and faculties of soul, (<193315>Psalm 33:15); as well as the same curious art and skill are employed in forming and fashioning their bodies and the members of them, in the lower parts of the earth, in their mother’s womb; yea, they are fashioned “in one womb”[f1132], as the words will better bear to be rendered according to the position of them in the original and the accents; not indeed in the same identical womb, but in a like one: there are two words in the original here, both translated “womb”; the one signifies the “ovarium”, in which the conception is made; the other designs the “secundine”, in which the fetus is wrapped or covered; for so it may be rendered, “did he not cover us?” etc. [f1133]; though Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom, and others, interpret it of the one God as we do: Job’s reasoning is, that seeing he and his servants were equally the workmanship of God, and both made in the womb by him, and curiously fashioned alike, and possessed of the same rational powers, it would be unreasonable in him to use them ill, who were his fellow creatures; and should he, he might expect the Maker of them both would highly resent it. Macrobius[f1134], an Heathen writer, gives a remarkable instance of the care heaven, as he expresses it, has of servants, and how much the contempt of it is resented thereby; and reasons much in the same manner concerning them as Job does here, that they are men, though servants; are of the same original, breathe in the same air, live and die as other men.

Ver. 16. If I have withheld the poor from [their] desire, etc.] Their reasonable desires, and which it was in his power to grant; as when they desired a piece of bread, being hungry, or clothes to cover them, being naked; but not unreasonable desires, seeking and asking great things for themselves, or unlimited and unbounded ones, such as the two sons of Zebedee desired of Christ, (<411035>Mark 10:35); or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; through long waiting for, and expecting help and succour from him, and at last disappointed. Job did not use the widow in such a manner as to give her reason to hope for relief or counsel from him she came for, and make her wait long, and then send her away empty, as he was charged, (<182209>Job 22:9); but he soon dispatched her, by granting her what she sued to him for.

Ver. 17. Or have eaten my morsel myself alone, etc.] Though he had kept no doubt a plentiful table in the time of his prosperity suitable to his circumstances, yet had been no luxurious person, and therefore calls provisions a “morsel”; however, be it what it would, more or less, he did not eat it alone; what he had for himself the poor had a share of it with him, and the same he ate himself he gave to them:

and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof: meaning the poor fatherless: for as to the rich fatherless, it was no charity to feed them: this verse contradicts the charge exhibited against him, (<182207>Job 22:7).

Ver. 18. For from my youth he was brought up with me as [with] a father, etc.] That is, the poor or the fatherless, one or both; as soon as he was at years of discretion, and was capable of observing the distressed circumstances of others, he had a tender and compassionate regard to the poor and fatherless, and acted the part of a father to them; was as affectionately concerned for them as if he had been their father, and took such care of them as if they were his children; (see <182916>Job 29:16); and I have guided her from my mother’s womb; the widow, by his counsel and advice; an hyperbolical expression, signifying how early he was a succourer of such persons, by giving his friendly advice, or needful assistance; the Vulgate Latin version renders it, “from my youth mercy grew up with me”, etc. a merciful disposition, a compassionate regard to the poor and fatherless; this was as it were connatural to him; for though there is no good disposition really in man, without the grace of God, of which Job might early partake, yet there is a show of it in some persons, in comparison of others; some have a natural tender disposition to the poor, when others are naturally cruel and hardhearted to them; and so Mr. Broughton renders the words to this sense, but the first sense seems best.

> “for from my youth this grew with me as a father, and from my mother did I tender it:”

Ver. 19. If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, etc.] A man may be in such poor circumstances as to want proper clothing to cover his naked body with, and preserve it from the inclemencies of the weather, and for want of it be ready to perish or die with cold. Job denies he had seen any such; not that he had never seen persons in such perishing circumstances; but he had not seen them as to “despise” them, as the Vulgate Latin version, as to have them in contempt, or look at them with disdain because of their poverty and rags, or sordid apparel; or so as to “overlook” them, as the Septuagint version, to neglect them, and to take no notice of them, and make no provision for their clothing, a warm and comfortable garment, as in (<183120>Job 31:20):

or any poor without covering; without clothing sufficient to cover himself with, and keep him warm; Job had seen such objects, but he did not leave them in such a condition; he saw them, and had compassion on them, and clothed them.

Ver. 20. If his loins have not blessed me, etc.] Which were girded and covered with garments he gave him; which, as often as he put on and girded his loins with, put him in mind of his generous benefactor, and this put him upon sending up an ejaculatory wish to heaven, that all happiness and blessedness might attend him, who had so comfortably clothed him; (see <182913>Job 29:13);

and [if] he were [not] warmed with the fleece of my sheep; not with a fleece of wool as taken off the back of the sheep, or with a sheep’s skin, having the wool on it, but with it, as made up into cloth; with a woollen garment, which was a kind of clothing that very early obtained, and is what is warm and comfortable, (see <052211>Deuteronomy 22:11). Job clothed the naked, not with gay apparel, which was not necessary, but with decent and useful raiment, and not with the fleece of other men’s sheep, but with the fleece of his own sheep, or with cloth made of the wool of his own flock, giving what was his own and not others; which always should be observed in acts of charity; (see <101204>2 Samuel 12:4). Thus Christ, the antitype of Job, feeds the poor and the fatherless whom he finds, though he does not leave them so; it is at his own table, and with his own bread, with provisions of his own making; and clothes them with the robe of his righteousness, and garments of salvation, which is a clothing and a covering to them, and secures them from perishing, and causes joy and gladness in them, (<236110>Isaiah 61:10).

Ver. 21. If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, etc.] Either in a menacing way, threatening what he would do to them; which, from a man of wealth and authority, a civil magistrate, a judge, is very terrible to the poor and fatherless; or in order to strike him, which would be to smite with the fist of wickedness; or give a signal to others, by lifting up the hand to smite, as Ananias gave orders to smite the Apostle Paul; or thereby to give his vote against the fatherless wrongly, suffrages being sometimes made by lifting up the hands; or hereby Job signifies, that he was so far from doing the fatherless any real injury, that he had not so much as lifted up his hand, and even a finger against him:

when I saw my help in the gate; in the court of judicature held in the gate of the city, as was usual; though he knew he had the bench of judges for him, or they would give sentence in his behalf, and against the fatherless, if he did but hold up his hand, or lift up a finger to them, so ready would they be take his part and be on his side; yet he never made use of his power and interest to their detriment, or took such an advantage against them.

Ver. 22. [Then] let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, etc.] With which the upper part of it is connected; let it be disjointed from it, or rot and drop off from it; a dreadful calamity this, to lose an arm and the use of it, to have it full off immediately, as a judgment from God, and in just retaliation for lifting up an hand or arm against the fatherless; as Jeroboam’s arm withered when he put it forth from the altar, and ordered hands to be laid upon the prophet for crying against the altar, (<111304>1 Kings 13:4); and mine arm be broken from the bone; from the channel bone, as the margin of our Bibles, or rather from the elbow, the lower part of the arm and so may be rendered, “or mine arm”, etc. Eliphaz had brought a charge against Job, that the arms of the fatherless had been broken, and suggests that they had been broken by him, or by his orders, (<182209>Job 22:9); and Job here wishes, that if that was the case, that his own arm was broken: such imprecations are not to be made in common, or frequently, and only when a man's innocence cannot be vindicated but by an appeal to the omniscient God; an instance somewhat like this, see in (<19D705>Psalm 137:5,6).

Ver. 23. For destruction [from] God [was] a terror to me, etc.] Though he feared not men, they being at his beck and command, ready to do any thing for him he should order, yet he feared God; and the dread of his resentment, and of destruction from him the lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy, had such an influence on him as to deter and keep him from all unkindness to the poor, and in justice to the fatherless; he dreaded the destruction of himself, his family, and substance in this world, and everlasting destruction of soul and body in the world to come; which of all things is to be feared, (<401028>Matthew 10:28); and Old Testament saints were much under a spirit of bondage to fear, and were actuated thereby; and, though Job might not be under any dread of eternal damnation, knowing his interest in the living Redeemer; yet he might fear temporal destruction, as it is certain he did; which thing he feared came upon him, though not for any crime or crimes he was guilty of, (see <183025>Job 30:25); he might fear, as a good man may, the chastisements and corrections of his heavenly Father:

and by reason of his highness I could not endure; God is higher than the highest angels, or men; he is above all gods, so called; he is God over all, blessed for ever; and such is his height, his glory, and his majesty, that it is terrible, and the dread of them makes men afraid; nor can any sinner stand before him, nor withstand him, nor hope to prevail against him, nor flee from his presence, nor escape out of his hand, nor bear his wrath and indignation, and the coming down of his arm; for what hands can be strong, or heart endure, when the almighty God deals with them? or Job's sense may be, that such an awe of the divine Being was always upon him, that he could not do any unkind thing to the poor, or unjust one to the fatherless.

Ver. 24. If I have made gold my hope, etc.] Job here purges himself from idolatry in a figurative sense, as he afterwards does from it, taken in a literal sense; for covetousness is idolatry, and a covetous man is an idolater; he worships his gold and silver, placing his affections on them, and putting his trust and confidence in them, (<490505>Ephesians 5:5 <510305>Colossians 3:5); for to make gold the object or ground of hope is to place it in the room of God, who is the Hope of Israel, and in whom every good man should trust, and whom he should make his hope, (<241408>Jeremiah 14:8 17:13); not gold on earth, but glory in heaven, is what the good man is hoping for; and not riches, but Christ and his righteousness, are the foundation of such an hope; to make gold our hope, is to have hope in this life, and to make a thing present the object of it; whereas true hope is of things not seen and future, and if only in this life good men have hope, they are of all most miserable; but they have in heavens better and a more enduring substance, and a better ground for hope of that substance, than worldly wealth and riches can give:

or have said to the fine gold, [thou art] my confidence; as bad men do, and good men are prone unto, and therefore to be cautioned against it, (<194906>Psalm 49:6 52:7 <540617>1 Timothy 6:17); for this is not only to trust in uncertain riches, and in unsatisfying ones, but to put them in the stead of God, who is or ought to be the confidence of the ends of the earth: not gold, but the living God, who gives all things richly to enjoy, is to be trusted in; when men covet riches, and trust in them as their security from evil, and that they may live independent of the providence of God, it is virtually to deny it, and carries in it secret atheism; as well as such a confidence is destruction of the worship of God, and such a temper makes a man an unprofitable hearer, plunges him into errors and hurtful lusts, and endangers his everlasting happiness, (<350209>Habakkuk 2:9 <401322>Matthew 13:22 <540609>1 Timothy 6:9,10 <411024>Mark 10:24); in later times the Romans worshipped the goddess “Pecunia”, or money, as Austin [f1135] relates.

Ver. 25. If I rejoiced because my wealth [was] great, etc.] As it was, (see <180102>Job 1:2,3); yet he did not set his heart upon it, please himself with it, indulge to a carnal joy on account of it, nor suffer it to engross his affections, or alienate them from God his chief joy; not but that a man may lawfully rejoice in the goodness of God unto him, in increasing his wealth, and praise him for it, who has placed him in such easy circumstances, and so comfortably provided for him and his family, and put him into a capacity to do good to others; and he may rejoice in what God has given him, and cheerfully partake of it, (<132913>1 Chronicles 29:13,14 <051207>Deuteronomy 12:7 <210519>Ecclesiastes 5:19, 20); and because my hand had gotten much; though he had much wealth, he did not ascribe it to his own industry, and applaud his own wisdom and diligence, as men are apt to do, for all comes of God, and is owing to his blessing; he did not please himself when become rich, as if his own hand had found him much substance, as Ephraim did, (<281208>Hosea 12:8).

Ver. 26. If I beheld the sun when it shined, etc.] Some take this to be a reason why Job did not make gold his hope and confidence, because all sublunary and earthly enjoyments must be uncertain, fading, and perish, since the sun and moon are not without their deficiencies and changes, to which sense the Septuagint version inclines; others, as Nachmanides, that they are a denial that Job ascribed his wealth and substance to the influence of the heavenly bodies; and many interpreters are of opinion that they are a continuation of the same subject as before; Job hereby declaring that neither his eye nor his heart were set upon his outward prosperity, comparable to the light of the sun, and the brightness of the moon; that he did not secretly please himself with it, nor congratulate himself upon it nor applaud his own wisdom and industry; and of late Schultens and others interpret it of flattering great personages, complimenting: them, and courting their favour, which we call worshipping the rising sun; but I rather think it is to be understood, as it more generally is, of worshipping the sun and moon in a literal sense; which was the first kind of idolatry men went into; those very ancient idolaters, the Zabii, worshipped the sun as their greater god, as Maimonides [f1136] observes, to whom he says they offered seven bats, seven mice, and seven other creeping things, with some other things also; in later times horses were offered to it, (see <122311>2 Kings 23:11). So the ancient Egyptians worshipped the sun and moon, calling the one Osiris, and the other Isis [f1137]. The word for sun is “light”, and it is so called because it is a luminous body, and the fountain of light to others; it is called the greater light, (<010116>Genesis 1:16); and from this Hebrew word “or”, with the Egyptians, Apollo, who is the sun, is called Horus, as Macrobius [f1138] relates; it is said to “shine”, as it always does, even when below our horizon, or in an eclipse, or under a cloud, though not seen by us. Job has here respect to its shining clearly and visibly, and perhaps at noon day, when it is in its full strength; unless regard is had to its bright and shining appearance at its rising, when the Heathens used to pay their homage and adoration to it [f1139]: now when Job denies that he beheld it shining, it cannot be understood of the bare sight of it, which he continually had; nor of beholding it with delight and pleasure, which might be very lawfully done, (<211107>Ecclesiastes 11:7); nor of considering it as the work of God, being a very glorious and useful creature, in which his glory is displayed, and for which he is to be praised, because of its beneficial influence on the earth; (see <190803>Psalm 8:3,4 19:1 136:1,7 <053314>Deuteronomy 33:14); but of his beholding it with admiration, as if it was more than a creature, ascribing deity to it, and worshipping it as God; and the same must be understood of the moon in the next clause:

or the moon walking [in] brightness; as at first rising, or rather when in the full, in the middle of the month, as Aben Ezra; when it walks all night, in its brightness, illuminated by the sun: these two luminaries, the one called the king, the other the queen of heaven, were very early worshipped, if not the first instances of idolatry. Diodorus Siculus [f1140] says, that the first men of old, born in Egypt, beholding and admiring the beauty of the world, thought there were two gods in the nature of the universe, and that they were eternal; namely, the sun and moon, the one they called Osiris, and the other Isis; hence the Israelites, having dwelt long in Egypt, were in danger of being drawn into this idolatry, against which they are cautioned, (<050419>Deuteronomy 4:19); and where was a city called Heliopolis, or the city of the sun, as in the Greek version of (<231918>Isaiah 19:18); where was a temple dedicated to the worship of it; and so the Arabians, the neighbours of Job, according to Herodotus [f1141], worshipped the sun and moon; for he says the Persians were taught by them and the Assyrians to sacrifice to the sun and moon; and so did the old Canaanites and the Phoenicians; hence one of their cities is called Bethshemesh, the house or temple of the sun, (<061922>Joshua 19:22), yea, we are told [f1142], that to this day there are some traces of this ancient idolatry in Arabia, the neighbourhood of Job; as in a large city in Arabia, upon the Euphrates, called Anna, where they worship the sun only; this being common in those parts in Job’s time, he purges himself from it.

Ver. 27. And mine heart hath been secretly enticed, etc.] Drawn away by beholding the magnitude of these bodies, the swiftness of their motion, their glorious appearance, and great usefulness to mankind, to entertain a thought of their being deities; and privately to worship them, in secret acts of devotion, as by an honourable esteem of them as such, reverence and affection for them, trust and confidence in them; for, as there is a secret worshipping of the true God, so there is a secret idolatry, idolatry in the heart, and setting up of idols there, as well as worshipping them in dark places, in chambers of imagery, as the Jews did, (<260812>Ezekiel 8:12); or my mouth hath kissed my hand; idols used to be kissed by their votaries, in token of their veneration of them, and as expressive of their worship of them; so Baal and Jeroboam’s calves were kissed by the worshippers of them, (<111918>1 Kings 19:18 <281302>Hosea 13:2). Kissing is used to signify the religious veneration, homage, and worship of a divine Person, the Son of God, (<190212>Psalm 2:12); and such deities especially that were out of the reach of their worshippers, as the sun, moon, and stars were, they used to put their hands to their mouths, and kiss them, in token of their worship; just as persons now, at a distance from each other, pay their civil respects to one another: instances of religious adoration of idols performed in this manner, (see Gill on “<281302>Hosea 13:2”). Job denies that he had been guilty of such idolatry, either secretly or openly.

Ver. 28. This also [were] an iniquity [to be punished by] the judge, etc.] As well as adultery, (<183111>Job 31:11); by the civil magistrates and judges of the earth, who are God’s vicegerents, and therefore it behooves them to take cognizance of such an iniquity, and to punish for it, which affects in so peculiar a manner the honour and worship of the true God; this by the law of Moses was punished by stoning to death, (<051309>Deuteronomy 13:9); however this will be taken notice of and punished by God the Judge of all, whose law is broken hereby, and who will visit this iniquity more especially on those who commit it, and their posterity after them. Idolaters of every sort shall have their part and portion in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone, (<022003>Exodus 20:3-5 <662108>Revelation 21:8); the consideration of its being such a heinous sin, and so deserving of punishment, deterred Job from it; the Targum paraphrases it, a most amazing iniquity, it being, as follows, a denial of the true God:

for I should have denied the God [that is] above; that is, had he worshipped the sun and moon secretly or openly; for, as the atheist denies him in words, the idolater denies him in facts, worshipping the creature besides the Creator, and giving his glory to another, and his praise to idols; which is a virtual denial of him, even of him who is above the sun and moon in place, being higher than the heavens; and in nature, excellency, and glory, being the Creator of them, and they his creatures; and in power and authority, who commands the sun, and it rises not, and has appointed the moon for seasons, (<180907>Job 9:7 <19A419>Psalm 104:19).

Ver. 29. If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, etc.] Job, though a good man, had his enemies, as all good men have, and that because of their goodness, and who hated him with an implacable hatred, without a cause, there being a rooted bitter enmity in the seed of the serpent against the godly in all generations; on whom sooner or later, at one time or another, destruction comes, one calamity or another on their families, diseases on their bodies, loss of substance, death of themselves or relatives; now it is a common thing with wicked men to rejoice in the adversity of their enemies, but good men should not do so; yet it is a difficult thing, and requires a large measure of grace, and that in exercise, not to feel any pleasing emotion, a secret joy and inward pleasure, at the hearing of anything of this sort befalling an enemy; which is a new crime Job purges himself from:

or lifted up myself when evil found him; either the evil of sin, which sooner or later finds out the sinner, charges him with guilt, and requires punishment, or the evil of punishment for sin; which, though it may seem to move slowly, pursues the sinner, and will overtake him, and light upon him. Mr. Broughton renders the words, “and bestirred me when he found loss”: loss in his family, in his cattle, and in his substance; now, when this was the case, Job did not raise up himself in a haughty manner, and insult and triumph over him, or stir up himself to joy and rejoicing, or to make joyful motions, as Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom interpret it; and by his gestures show that he was elated with the evil that had befallen his enemy; indeed so far as the fall and destruction of the wicked make for the public good, for the interest of religion, for the glory of God, and the honour of his justice, it is lawful for good men to rejoice thereat; but not from a private affection, or from a private spirit of revenge, (see <195810>Psalm 58:10,11) (<201110>Proverbs 11:10 <661820>Revelation 18:20 19:1,2).

Ver. 30. Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, etc.] Which, as it is the instrument of speech, is often the means of much sin; particularly of cursing men, and expressing much bitterness against enemies; but Job laid an embargo upon it, kept it as with a bridle, restrained it from uttering any evil, or wishing any to his worst adversaries; which is difficult to do, when provocations are given, as follows:

by wishing a curse to his soul; not to his soul as distinct from his body, being the superior excellency and immortal part; that it be everlastingly damned, as wicked men wish to their own souls, and the souls of others, but to his person, wishing some calamity might befall him, some disease seize upon him, or that God would take him away by death: Job would never suffer himself to wish anything of this kind unto his enemy.

Ver. 31. If the men of my tabernacle, etc.] Either his friends, that came to visit him, and take a meal with him, and would sometimes tarry awhile with him in his house, being very free and familiar with him; and who were, as it were, at home in his tabernacle; or rather his domestic servants, that were under his roof, and dwelt in his house, (see <181915>Job 19:15); if these said not, oh that we had of his flesh! we cannot be satisfied; of the flesh of Job’s enemy; and the sense is that his servants used to say, are cannot bear to see our master so ill used and insulted by his enemy; we wish he would only allow us to avenge him on him, we would eat him up alive; we would devour him, and destroy him at once; nor can we be satisfied unless we have leave to do it: and so this is a further proof of Job’s patience with his enemies, that though he had fetters on in his family, his servants solicited him to revenge, yet he abstained from it; which may be exemplified in the cases of David and of Christ, (<092608>1 Samuel 26:8 <101609>2 Samuel 16:9 <420954>Luke 9:54), though some think these words express Job’s patience towards his servants, who were so angry with him for the strict discipline he observed in his house, that they wished they had his flesh to eat, and could not be satisfied without it; and yet, so far was he from taking pleasure in the calamities of his enemies, and wishing ill to them, that he did not resent the ill natured speeches of his servants, and avenge himself on them for their wicked insults upon him: but it can hardly be thought that Job would keep such wicked servants in his house; but perhaps Job here enters upon a new crime, which he clears himself of, and is opened more fully in (<183132>Job 31:32), namely, inhospitality to strangers; since the particle “if” commonly begins a new article in this chapter, and being taken in this sense, various interpretations are given; some, as if Job’s servants were displeased with him for his hospitality, that his house was always so full of guests, that they were continually employed in dressing food for them, that they had not time, or that there was not enough left for them to eat of his flesh, his food, and be satisfied with it; or else, as pleased with the plentiful table he kept, and therefore desired to continue always in his service, and eat of his food; nor could they be satisfied with the food of others, or live elsewhere; though perhaps it is best of all to render the words, as by some, who will give, or show the man “that is not satisfied of his flesh?”[f1143] point out the man in all the neighbourhood that has not been liberally entertained at Job’s table to his full satisfaction and content; and his liberality did not extend only to his neighbours, but to strangers also; as follows.

Ver. 32. The stranger did not lodge in the street, etc.] By a stranger is not meant an unconverted man, that is a stranger to God and godliness, to Christ, and the way of salvation by him, to the Spirit of God and spiritual things, nor a good man, who is a stranger and pilgrim on earth; but one that is out of his nation and country, and at a distance from it, whether a good man or a bad man; these Job would not suffer to lie in the streets in the night season, exposed to the air and the inclemencies of it; (see <071915>Judges 19:15-21);

[but] I opened my doors to the traveller; even all the doors of his house, to denote his great liberality, that as many as would might enter it; and this was done by himself, or, however, by his order; and some think that it signifies that he was at his door, waiting and watching for travellers to invite them in, as Abraham and Lot, (<011801>Genesis 18:1,2 19:1,2); or his doors were opened "to the way" [f1144]: as it may be rendered, to the roadside; his house was built by the wayside; or, however, the doors which lay towards that side were thrown open for travellers to come in at as they pleased, and when they would; so very hospitable and kind to strangers and travellers was Job, and so welcome were they to his house and the entertainment of it, (see <581302>Hebrews 13:2).

Ver. 33. If I covered my transgressions as Adam, etc.] Job could not be understood, by this account he had given of the holiness of his life, that he thought himself quite free from sin; he had owned himself to be a sinner in several places before, and disclaimed perfection; and here he acknowledges he was guilty of transgressing the law of God, and that in many instances; for he speaks of his "transgressions" in the plural number; but then he did not seek to cover them from the of God or men, but frankly and ingenuously confessed them to both; he did not cover them, palliate, excuse, and extenuate them, as Adam did his, by laying the blame to his wife; and as she by charging it on the serpent; and those excuses they made are the inventions they found out, (<210729>Ecclesiastes 7:29); or the meaning is, Job did not do "as men" [f1145] in common do; who, when they have sinned, either through fear or shame, endeavour to conceal it, and keep it out of the sight of others, unless they are very hardened and audacious sinners, such as the men of Sodom were, (see <280607>Hosea 6:7); by hiding mine iniquity in my bosom; meaning perhaps some particular iniquity which his nature was most inclined to; this he did not attempt to hide in secret, as what is put into the bosom is; or that he did not spare it and cherish it, and, from an affection to it, keep it as persons and things beloved are, laid in the bosom; and so Mr. Broughton reads the words, “hiding my sin of a self-love”; either having a self-love to it, or hiding it of self-love, that is, from a principle of self-love, to preserve his honour, credit, and reputation among men.

Ver. 34. Did I fear a great multitude? etc.] No, they did not deter him from confessing his sin in the most public manner, when sensible or convicted of it, and when such a public acknowledgment was necessary:

or did the contempt of families terrify me? no, the contempt he might suppose he should be had in by some families that knew him, and he was well acquainted with, did not terrify him from making a free and ingenuous confession of his sins:

that I kept silence; or “did I keep silence”,

[and] went not out of the door? so as not to open his mouth by confession in public, but kept within doors through fear and shame; or else the sense is, that he was not intimidated from doing his duty as a civil magistrate, administering justice to the poor and oppressed; neither the dread of a clamorous mob, nor the contempt of families of note, or great personages, could deter him from the execution of his office with uprightness, so as to cause him to be silent, and keep at home; but without any regard to the fear of the one, or the contempt of the other, he went out from his house through the street to the court of judicature, took his place on the bench, and gave judgment in favour of those that were oppressed, though the multitude was against them, and even persons and families of note: or thus, though I could have put a great multitude to fear, yet the most contemptible persons in any family, so Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom interpret that phrase, the meanest person, or but a beggar, if his cause was just, terrified him; or such was the fear of God upon him, that he durst do no other than to do him justice; so that he could not open his mouth against him, or stir out of doors to do him the tease; injury; though perhaps it may be best of all, with Schultens, to consider these words as an imprecation, that if what he had said before from (<183124>Job 31:24) was not true; if he was not clear from idolatry figurative, and literal, from a malicious and revengeful spirit, from inhospitality and unkindness to strangers, from palliating, excusing, and extenuating his sins; then as if he should say, may I be frightened with a tumult, or a multitude of people, and terrified with the public contempt of families; may I be as silent as a mope

in my own house, and never dare to stir out of doors, or show my thee, or see face of any man any more: and then, before he had quite finished his account of himself, breaks out in the following manner.

Ver. 35. Oh, that one would hear me! etc.] Or, “who will give me a hearer?”[f1146] Oh, that I had one! not a nearer of him as a teacher and instructor of many, as he had been, (<180403>Job 4:3); or only to hear what he had delivered in this chapter; but to hear his cause, and hear him plead his own cause in a judiciary way; he does not mean an ordinary hearer, one that, comes out of curiosity into courts of judicature to hear causes tried, what is said on both sides, and how they will issue; but, as Bar Tzemach paraphrases it, that would hear his cause patiently, examine it thoroughly, and judge impartially, which is the business of judges to do, (<050116>Deuteronomy 1:16,17); he did not care who it was, if he had but such an one; though he seems to have respect to God himself, from what he says in the next clause, and wishes that he would but hear, try, and judge his cause:

> “who shall give me a judge that shall hear me,”

behold, my desire [is, that] the Almighty would answer me: answer to what he had said, or had further to say in his own defence; this is a request he had made before, and now repeats it, (see <181322>Job 13:22 23:3,4,5); some render it, “behold my mark”, or “scope”[f1147]; so Mr. Broughton, “behold my scope in this”; this is what I aim at, what I design and mean by wishing for an hearer, that the Almighty himself would take the cause in hand, and give me an answer: or, “behold my sign”[f1148]; the sign of my innocence, appealing to God, leaving my cause to be heard, tried, and judged by him, who is my witness, and will answer for me; (see <181619>Job 16:19); as well as desiring mine adversary to put down in writing what he has against me; or, “behold my signature”[f1149]; the plea I have given is signed by my own hand: now “let the Almighty answer me”; a bold expression indeed, and a making too free with the Almighty, and was one of those speeches Job was to be blamed for, and for which he was after humbled and repented of:

and [that] mine adversary had written a book; or “the man of my contention”[f1150]: either that contended for him, as Aben Ezra, that pleaded for him, was his advocate in court, whom he would have take a brief of him, and so distinctly plead his cause; or rather that contended against him, a court adversary, by whom he means either his three friends, or some one of them, whom he more especially took for his enemy; (see <181609>Job 16:9-11); and who he wishes had brought a bill of indictment, and put down in a book, on a paper in writing, the charge he had against him; that so it might be clearly known what could be alleged against him; and that it might be particularly and distinctly examined; when he doubted not but he should be able to give a full answer to every article in it; and that the very bill itself would carry in it a justification of him: or it may be, rather he means God himself, who carried it towards him as an adversary, at least in a providential way; he had before requested that be would show him wherefore he contended with him, (<181002>Job 10:2); and now he desires he would give in writing his charge against him, being fully confident, that if he had but the opportunity of answering to it before him, he should be able sufficiently to vindicate himself; and that he should come off with honour, as follows.

Ver. 36. Surely I would take it upon my shoulder, etc.] The bill of indictment, the charge in writing; this he would take up and carry on his shoulder as a very light thing, having nothing weighty in it, no charge of sin and guilt to bear him down; nothing but what he could easily stand up under, only some trifling matter, which could not be interpreted sin; for anything of that kind would have been a burden too heavy for him to have borne: or else his sense is, that should he be convicted of any sin, he would openly confess the charge, acknowledge the sin in the most public manner, that being visible which is borne upon the shoulder; and would also patiently bear the afflictions and chastisements that were laid upon him for it: though rather the meaning is, that he should take up and carry such a bill, not as a burden, but as an honour, as one bears a sword of state, or carries a sceptre as an ensign of royalty on his shoulder; to which the allusion may be in (<230906>Isaiah 9:6); not at all doubting but it would turn out to his glory; which is confirmed by what follows;

[and] bind it [as] a crown to me, or “crowns” [f1151], having various circles of gold hung with jewels; signifying that he would not only take his bill or charge, and carry it on his shoulder, but put it on his head, and wear it there, as a king does his crown; which is an ornament and honour to him, as he should reckon this bill, seeing it would give him an opportunity of clearing himself effectually.

Ver. 37. I would declare to him the number of my steps, etc.] To his judge, or to him that contended with him, and drew up the bill against him; he would forward it, assist in it, furnish materials for it, give an account of all the transactions of his life that he could remember; this he says not as though he thought that God stood in need of any such declaration, since he better knows the actions of men than they themselves, compasses their paths, and is acquainted with all their ways; but to show how confident he was of his innocence, and how little he feared the strictest and closest examination of his ways and works, knowing that he had lived with all good conscience unto that day:

and as a prince would I go near unto him; either he should consider such an hearer and judge of his cause he desired as a prince, and reverence and respect him as such; he should be as dear unto him, though his adversary that contended with him, as a prince; and he should be as ambitious of an acquaintance with him as with a prince: or rather he means that he himself as a prince, in a princely manner, and with a princely spirit, should draw nigh to his judge, to answer to the bill in writing against him; that he should not come up to the bar like a malefactor, that shows guilt in his countenance, and by his trembling limbs, and shrinking back, not caring to come nigh, but choosing rather to stand at a distance, or get off and escape if he could; but on the other hand, Job would go up to his judge, and to the judgment seat, with all the stateliness of a prince, with an heroic, intrepid, and undaunted spirit; like a "bold prince", as Mr. Broughton renders the word; (see <182303>Job 23:3).

Ver. 38. If my land cry against me, etc.] Some think that this verse and (<183139>Job 31:39,40) stand out of their place, and should rather follow after (<183134>Job 31:34); and some place them after (<183125>Job 31:25); and others after (<183108>Job 31:8); but this is the order of them in all copies and versions, as they stand in our Bibles; and here, after Job had expressed his desire to have a hearer and judge of his cause, and his charge exhibited in writing, and his confidence of the issue of it, should it be granted, returns to his former subject, to clear himself from any notorious vice he was suspected of or charged with; and as he had gone through what might respect him in private life, here he gives another instance in public life, with which he concludes; namely, purging himself from tyranny and oppression, with which his friends had charged him without any proof; and he denies that the land he lived on was possessed of, and of which he was the proprietor, cried against him as being unjustly gotten, either by fraud or by force, from others; or as being ill used by him either as being too much cultivated, having never any rest, or lying fallow; and so much weakened and drained of its strength, or neglected and overrun with weeds, thorns, and thistles; or on account of the dressers and tillers of it being badly dealt with, either overworked, or not having sufficiency of food, or their wages, detained from them; all which are crying sins, and by reason of which the land by a figure may be said to cry out as the stone out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber, because of the sins of spoil, violence, oppression, and covetousness, (<350211>Habakkuk 2:11); or that the furrows likewise thereof complain; or "weep" [f1152], on account of the like ill usage. Jarchi, and so the Midrash, interpret this of not allowing the forgotten sheaf and corner of the field to the poor, and detaining the tithes; and of ploughing and making furrows with an ox and an ass together; but the laws respecting these things were not yet in being; and if they had been, were only binding on Israelites, and not on Job, and the men of his country.

Ver. 39. If I have eaten the fruits thereof without money, etc.] Or, "the strength thereof without silver" [f1153]; (see <010412>Genesis 4:12), silver being the money chiefly in use in those times. Job's meaning is, that he ate not anything of the fruits and increase of his own land, without having paid for the same, which he would have done, if he had got his land out of the hands of the rightful owners of it, by deceit or violence; or if he had not paid his workmen for ploughing, sowing, reaping, etc. or if he had demanded the fruits of the earth of his tenants, to whom he had let out his farms, without giving them a proper price for them:

or have caused the owners thereof to lose their life; as Jezebel caused Naboth to lose his, who was the original proprietor, that Ahab might possess it, (<112107>1 Kings 21:7-16); or it may signify tenants, to whom Job rented out fields, but did not starve them by renting them under hard leases, or lands on hard terms, so that they could not live upon them; or it may design the tillers of the land, as Jarchi and Bar Tzemach; those that wrought in it, the servants that were employed in ploughing, etc. to whom wages were due, and who had not too hard labour imposed upon them, to the endangering of their lives; or he did not "afflict [and] grieve" [f1154] them, as some versions; or make their lives bitter, through hard bondage and service, as the Israelites in Egypt.

Ver. 40. Let thistles grow instead of wheat, and cockle instead of barley, etc.] This is an imprecation of Job's, in which he wishes that if what he had said was not true, or if he was guilty of the crimes he denied, that when and where he sowed wheat, thorns or thistles might come up instead of it, or tares, as some Jewish writers[f1155] interpret it; and that when and where he should sow barley, cockle, or darnel, or any “stinking” or “harmful” weed[f1156], as the word signifies, might spring up in room of it; respect seems to be had to the original curse upon the earth, and by the judgment of God is sometimes the case, that a fruitful land is turned into barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwell in it, (<010318>Genesis 3:18 <19A734>Psalm 107:34);

the words of Job are ended; which is either said by himself, at the close of his speech; thus far says Job, and no farther, having said enough in his own defence, and for the confutation of his antagonists, and so closes in a way of triumph: or else this was added by Moses, supposed to have written this book; or by some other hand, as Ezra, upon the revision of it, and other books of the Old Testament, when put in order by him: and these were the last words of Job to his friends, and in vindication of himself; for though there is somewhat more said afterwards by him, and but little, yet to God, and by way of humiliation, acknowledging his sin, and repentance for it with shame and abhorrence; (see <184003>Job 40:3-5 42:1-6). Jarchi, and so the Midrash, understand this concluding clause as all imprecation of Job’s; that if he had done otherwise than he had declared, he wishes that these might be his last words, and he become dumb, and never open his mouth more; but, as Bar Tzemach observes, the simple sense is, that his words were now completed and finished, just as the prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are said to be, (<197220>Psalm 72:20).

CHAPTER 32

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 32

Job’s three friends being silenced, and having no more to say in reply to him, Elihu, of whose descent some account is given, a bystander and hearer of the whole dispute between them, rises up as a moderator, and expresses some anger both against them and Job, (<183201>Job 32:1-5); he makes an apology for engaging in this controversy, by reason of his youth, and they being advanced in years, (<183206>Job 32:6,7); but since there is a spirit in man, that gives understanding to men of every age, and old men are not always wise, he desires they would hearken to him while he delivered his sentiments on the subject in debate, (<183208>Job 32:8-10); and hopes to be heard patiently, since he had waited until they had said all they had to say, and had closely attended to it, and which fell short of convincing Job; and this he was obliged to say, lest they should be wise in their own conceit, and attribute that to men which belongs to God, (<183211>Job 32:11-13); he proposes to take a new method with Job, different from theirs; and now they hearing all this from a young man, they were filled with amazement, and struck with silence; and after he had waited a while to observe whether they would say anything or not, he determined to take his turn, and show his opinion also, (<183214>Job 32:14-17); and the rather because he was full of arguments, he was desirous to propose them, and was uneasy until he had brought them out; and which he was resolved to do with all impartiality and integrity, (<183218>Job 32:18-22).

Ver. 1. So these three men ceased to answer Job, etc.] His three friends, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, who came to visit and comfort him under his afflictions; but unawares were led into a controversy with him, occasioned by some rash and impatient expressions of his; which controversy had been carried on between them a considerable time, but now dropped; they grew weary of it, and now rested themselves as men do on a sabbath, as the word signifies; they set themselves down, and made no reply to Job’s vindication of himself, not caring to give themselves any further trouble, or labour the point any more and longer, perceiving it was all to no purpose: or “and these three men ceased”, etc. the last words of the preceding chapter are, “the words of Job are ended”, (<183140>Job 31:40); and the copulative “and” connects these with them, and shows that these men also had done speaking; so that the dispute was closed between Job and them, and the way was clear for another disputant that might think fit to enter, as Elihu did, after mentioned because he [was] righteous in his own eyes; some take this to express the state of the question between them, rendering the words, “that he was righteous”, etc.[f1157]. The notion his friends had of him was, that he was righteous in his own account, and as he professed to be, and might so seem to others; but was a wicked man, and an hypocrite, as his afflictions showed; this point they had been labouring to prove, but, upon Job’s long and clear vindication of his integrity, they ceased to defend it: others suppose the words to be an inference of Job’s from their silence: “therefore he was righteous”, etc. they making no reply to him, he concluded himself to be quit and clear of the charge they had brought against him; but they rather, according to our version, contain a reason why they ceased to answer him; because they thought him self-conceited, self-willed, obstinate, and incorrigible; not open to conviction, stiffly insisting on his own innocence, not allowing that he was guilty of any sin or sins, which were the cause of his afflictions; otherwise, in the article of justification before God, Job was no self-righteous man, nor was he so charged by his friends; to say he was is to abuse his character, and is contrary to that which God himself has given of him; nor would he have so highly commended him as to suggest there was none like him on earth, when of all men in the world there are none more abominable to God than a self-righteous man; (see <236504>Isaiah 65:4 <421615>Luke 16:15 18:14). It is contrary to Job’s knowledge of and faith in Christ, as his living Redeemer, (<181925>Job 19:25); and to many clear and strong expressions, confessing his sin, disclaiming perfection, and declaring himself no self-justiciary, (<180720>Job 7:20 9:2,20,31-33).

Ver. 2. Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite, etc.] Both against Job and his three friends, for reasons after given; who this person was is not easy to say; they debase him too much, who make him to be Balaam the soothsayer, according to the tradition of the Jews[f1158]; for neither the time he lived in, nor his character, will agree with him; this man living before the times of Balaam; and being also a holy good man, which all his discourses show: and they too much exalt him who make him to be Christ; for though some phrases, being strained, may seem to agree with him, and some things in the signification of his name, and the names of his ancestors, may be thought to answer to him; Elihu signifying, “my God is he”; the son of Barachel, “the son of the blessed God”; of the kindred of Ram, of the high and holy line; the Buzite, one “despised” and reproached; yet there are other things that cannot be said of him, as particularly in (<183222>Job 32:22); besides, the Messiah seems to be spoken of by him as another person, (<183323>Job 33:23,24); it is very probable that he was one of Job’s relations that was come to visit him in his melancholy circumstances, had been a bystander, and an hearer of the whole dispute between Job and his friends, with the management of which he was not a little displeased; he is described by his descent, when Job’s other three friends are not, because he was a young man, and not known as they were: and this serves to show the truth of this history, that it is not a mere apologue, or moral fable, but a real fact; though who his father Barachel the Buzite was cannot easily be determined; it is probable he was a descendant of Buz, the son of Nahor, Abraham’s brother, (<012220>Genesis 22:20,21); of this opinion are Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom; unless it can be thought he was so called from the city Buz, of which he might be an inhabitant, mentioned along with Dedan and Tema, (<242523>Jeremiah 25:23), places in Edom or Idumea, where or near to which Job lived:

of the kindred of Ram; according to the Targum, of the kindred of Abraham, in which it is followed by other Jewish writers [f1159]; and some even take him to be Isaac, the son of Abraham [f1160]; Aben Ezra thinks he is the same with Ram the father of Amminadab, (<080419>Ruth 4:19); but he is abundantly too late for this man to be of his kindred; others take him to be the same with Aram, the son of Kemuel, a brother of Buz, (<012221>Genesis 22:21); these names being used for one another, either by adding or removing a letter; (see <400103>Matthew 1:3); compared with (<080419>Ruth 4:19); against Job was his wrath kindled, because he justified himself rather than God; not that he made himself more just than God, he could never think or say so, (see <180417>Job 4:17); nor that he was just before him or by him; for he was so in an evangelic, though not in a legal sense; and Elihu would not have been displeased with him for asserting that; he did not deny that Job was a righteous man in the sight of God; nor that he was righteous, and in the right in the sight of God, with respect to the controversy between him and his friends; nor did he blame him for justifying himself from their charges; but that he justified himself “more” than God; so the Jewish writers [f1161] generally render it: he spent more time, and insisted longer on his own justification than upon the justification of God in the dealings of his providence with him; he was more careful of his own character and reputation than he was of the honour of God, and the glory of his justice; he said more for himself than he did for God; and this displeased Elihu; it gave this good man some concern, that, though Job did not directly charge God with unrighteousness in his dealings with him, yet by consequence; and he expressed himself in such language that would bear such a construction, whether it was his real sense or not; and to hear him complain so heavily of God, and at the same time enlarge so much on his own innocence, and to importune in so bold and daring a manner to have a hearing of his cause; these things being observed by Elihu, raised his choler and indignation.

Ver. 3. Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled, etc.] He did not take part with either side, but blamed both, and took upon him to be a moderator between them, and deal impartially with them: what highly displeased him, and raised his spirit against the three friends of Job, was, because they had found no answer; they were at a loss for one, for a sufficient one; they had all of them been answering him in their turns again and again, but with nothing to the purpose, not with anything conclusive and convincing; and particularly they could find and give no answer to Job’s last vindication of himself:

and [yet] had condemned Job; as a very wicked man, and an hypocrite, for no other reason but because he was afflicted; and they still persisted in their sentiment, though Job had so fully cleared himself, and put them to entire silence; this exasperated Elihu, to observe these men to retain so unreasonable a sentiment, to pronounce such a rash sentence, and yet could make no reply to Job’s defence of himself. Jarchi says, this place is one of the corrections of the Scribes, it having been formerly written “God” instead of “Job”; as if the sense was, that Elihu was provoked with them, because by their silence they had condemned the Lord, not vindicating his honour and glory as became them; but Aben Ezra declares his ignorance of that correction, and observes, that they that say so knew what was hid from him.

Ver. 4. Now Elihu had waited till Job had spoken, etc.] Made an end of speaking, until he had thus expressed himself, “the words of Job are ended”, (<183140>Job 31:40): and waited likewise until his three friends had said all they had to say, and which is here supposed and implied, as appears by what follows:

because they [were] elder than he; it may be added, from the original text, “in”, or “as two days” [f1162]; they had lived longer in the world than he, and therefore did not take upon him to speak till they had done; he, as became a young man, was swift to hear, and slow to speak; that they were old men, appears from what Eliphaz says, (<181510>Job 15:10).

Ver. 5. When Elihu saw that [there was] no answer in the mouth of [these] three men, etc.] That could be called an answer; nay, when he perceived they were quite nonplussed and silenced, though men of years and experience, and reputed wise and knowing:

then his wrath was kindled; his spirit was stirred up; his heart was hot within him; he burned with anger against those men; he was all on fire, as it were, and wanted to vent his resentment.

Ver. 6. And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, etc.] Since there was no answer in them, he takes upon him to give one himself; but first makes an apology on account of his youth:

I [am] young, and ye [are] very old; or “few of days”; a few days, comparatively speaking, had he lived in the world; or “small”, or “little as two days” [f1163]; he had been but a little time in it, and so could be thought to have but little knowledge and experience; whereas they were old, even very old; with them were the aged and the grayheaded, (<181510>Job 15:10); in whom it might have been expected was much wisdom and knowledge:

wherefore I was afraid, and durst not show mine opinion; declare what knowledge he had of the things in dispute, lest it should appear mean, small, and contemptible; or give his sentiments concerning them, lest he should speak wrongly, and not only give offence, but do more harm than good: the first of these words, in the Arabic language [f1164], as Aben Ezra observes, signifies to go back; it is used of worms, which, through fear, withdraw themselves from men; so mean an opinion had he of himself, and such a sense of his own weakness, that it not only kept him back, but even caused him to draw back, and keep out of the dispute, and at a distance from it, instead of being forward to engage in it: one Jewish commentator [f1165] paraphrases it referring to worms that go low and creep upon their belly, or to the prostrate posture of men that humble themselves to their superiors.

> “I humbled myself as one that goes on his belly;”

Ver. 7. I said, days should speak, etc.] That is, men of days, of many days, who have lived many days and years in the world: man in common is but of few days, even the most that men arrive to are but few; and some indeed are very few, in comparison of whom others may be said to be men of days, or to have lived many days; and to such it belongs to speak, it is their place, nor should they be prevented or interrupted; it should be allowed them to speak, nor should they be hindered; and it is their duty to speak and instruct juniors, and all that are under them; and it might be reasonably expected, that when they speak it will be to the purpose, and to profit and edification:

and multitude of years should teach wisdom; that is, such over whom many have passed; these it may be thought, having had an opportunity of making their observation on things, and of increasing experience, and of treasuring up a stock of knowledge, they should be very capable of, and indeed the only fit persons to teach others wisdom; either natural wisdom, or the knowledge of natural things; or divine wisdom, the knowledge of God, of his perfections and providences; and inward, spiritual, and evangelical wisdom, which lies in the knowledge of a man’s self; in the knowledge of God in Christ; in the knowledge of Christ and of the Gospel of Christ, and the truths of it: this was a sentiment Elihu had entertained of ancient men, and this had restrained him from entering sooner into this debate between Job and his friends; they all being his superiors in age, and, as from thence he judged, in wisdom and knowledge also.

Ver. 8. But [there is] a spirit in man, etc.] This seems to be a correction of his former sentiment; the consideration of which gave him encouragement, though young, to declare his opinion, since there is a spirit in men, both young and old; and wherever that be, there is an ability to speak and a capacity of teaching wisdom; which is not tied to age; but may he found in young men as well as in old men: some by this understand the rational soul, or spirit, which is immaterial, immortal, is of God, and is in man; and the rather it is thought this is meant, because it is in every man, whereby he has knowledge of many things, natural and divine, and particularly is capable of trying and judging things, of discerning the difference between one thing and another, and of reasoning and discoursing upon them; and this being observed by Elihu, and he being conscious to himself of having such a spirit in him, was emboldened to engage in the debate, though a young man; but if such a spirit is meant, the words may be rendered to such a sense, verily, truly, indeed “there is [such a rational spirit] in man”, which makes him capable of knowing many things, “but the inspiration of the Almighty”, etc.[f1166]; it is not owing to the rational powers and faculties of the soul of man, and the use of them, that a man becomes capable of teaching others wisdom; but to his soul or spirit being inspired by the Almighty; and such an one, be he young or old, that God breathes into, and he is under his inspiration, he is the man fit to engage in such work: though I rather think, that in this first clause the spirit of God is meant, and so Jarchi; who is an uncreated, infinite, and eternal Spirit; is of God, and is put into men; for he is not in men naturally, nor in everyone; and where he is, he is given, and there he abides; and it is from him men have their wisdom and knowledge; it is he that makes men know themselves, that searches the deep things of God, and reveals them to men, and that is the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ, and leads into all truth, as it is in him; though rather the spirit in his gifts, than in his spiritual saving grace, is here meant; and so does not point to every good man in common, but to such who are favoured with the gifts of the spirit superior to others; and so the Targum interprets it of the spirit of prophecy; and on whomsoever this rests, whether on young or old, he is fit to teach men wisdom:

and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding; not the soul of man, or breath of God inspired by him, which is the candle of the Lord, searching the inward parts of men; for that leaves him without understanding of things of the greatest importance: rather, as the Targum, the Word of God, the essential Word, the Son of God, who gives an understanding of the best things, (<620520>1 John 5:20); but, better, the Spirit of God, by whom the Scriptures were inspired, and who is breathed into men, (<432022>John 20:22); and is a spirit of understanding to them; for though a man has an understanding of natural things, yet not of things spiritual; to have an understanding of them is the special gift of God, and is in particular the work of the Spirit of God: Elihu now having some reason to believe that he had the Spirit of God, and was under his inspiration, and was favoured with knowledge and understanding by him, is encouraged, though young, to interpose in this dispute between Job and his friends, and declare his opinion on the matter in debate; and which leads him to make an observation somewhat different from his former sentiment, as follows.

Ver. 9. Great men are not [always] wise, etc.] Men of grandeur and dignity, as Job’s friends might be, the rich, the honourable, and noble; the apostle is thought to refer to this, at least to express the sentiment contained in it, (<460126>1 Corinthians 1:26); or the great in quantity, the many, the multitude; and therefore are not to be followed in principle or practice; or that are great in years, well stricken in age, have lived long in the world, so some versions [f1167]; or are doctors, teachers of others, masters in Israel, as Nicodemus, and yet ignorant; all these may be wise in natural, civil, and worldly things, though this is not always the case; but not wise and knowing in divine and spiritual things, particularly in those respecting the causes and reasons of God’s providential dealings with men, afflicting the righteous, and suffering the wicked to prosper, which is more fully explained in the next clause:

neither do the aged understand judgment; what is right and wrong, the difference between truth and error, and particularly the judgments of God, which are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out; even so to understand them as to observe and acknowledge his sovereignty, wisdom, truth, and faithfulness in them.

Ver. 10. Therefore I said, hearken to me, etc.] Thou O Job, and every one of you his friends, for the word is singular; though I am but a young man, yet if I have the Spirit of God, and am under the inspiration of the Almighty, I may be able to say something to you worth your hearing:

I also will show mine opinion; for though for a while he was timorous and fearful of doing it, lest he should mistake and expose himself, yet having duly weighed and considered the above things, he was determined to do it.

Ver. 11. Behold, I waited for your words, etc.] With great desire, with great eagerness and earnestness, in hope of meeting with arguments fully satisfying and convincing; he waited for them, as for the rain, and the latter rain, to be revived, refreshed, and edified therewith; and he patiently waited until they had done speaking:

I gave ear to your reasons, or “understandings” [f1168]; endeavoured to get into the sense and meaning of their words; not only attended to what they did say, but to what he thought they meant to say: some are not so happy in their expressions; and yet, by what they do say, with close attention it may be understood what they aim at, what is their drift and design; this Elihu was careful to attain unto, not barely to hear their words, but penetrate, if possible, into their meaning:

whilst ye searched out what to say; for they did not make their replies to Job immediately, and say what came uppermost at once, but they took time to think of things, and to search out for the most forcible arguments to refute Job, and strengthen their cause; it is very probable they made a pause at the end of every speech of Job’s, and considered what was proper to be said in reply, and, perhaps, consulted each other.

Ver. 12. Yea, I attended unto you, etc.] Very closely, with great application and diligence, endeavouring to get, as it were, within them, and thoroughly understand the meaning of what they said:

and, behold, [there was] none of you that convinced Job; which was not owing to his obstinacy, but to want of proof in them, their words and arguments; they had charged Job highly, as particularly Eliphaz, (<182205>Job 22:5-9); but then they failed in their proof; they produced nothing to support their allegations:

[or] that answered his words; the arguments and reasons he gave in proof of his own innocence and uprightness, or the instances he produced, showing that God often afflicted good men, and suffered the wicked to prosper; and therefore no argument could be drawn from God’s dealings with men, proving they were either of this or the other character, good or bad men.

Ver. 13. Lest ye should say, we have found out wisdom, etc.] They were left to themselves, and not directed to take the proper methods of convincing Job, and answering his arguments; lest they should be wise in their own conceits, and attribute too much to themselves; or Elihu told them this, that they had not convicted Job, though they had condemned him, nor answered his arguments, though they had left off speaking; and this he was obliged to say, and that for the reason before observed: for all wisdom is of God, and not to be found out or acquired by men; not natural wisdom, that is not of men, but of God, and especially supernatural wisdom, or the knowledge of divine and spiritual things, and the reason of God’s dealings with the sons of men in the different manner he does, (see <182812>Job 28:12,13,20,28);

God thrusteth him down, not man: some think Elihu says this in reference to himself, whom God would make use of as an instrument to convince Job and answer his arguments; and that he would ascribe this not to himself, but to God; they took a natural way to convince Job, which failed, that they might not be proud of their own wisdom; he should take a more divine and spiritual method, and, if he succeeded, he should give all the glory to God, and ascribe nothing to himself: as in the conviction and conversion of a sinner, though ministers are instruments, it is not by might or power of men, but by the Spirit of the Lord of Hosts; it is God that thrusts down man from a vain opinion he has of himself; that convinces him of sin, that takes him off of his own righteousness, and humbles him, and lays him low at his feet: but they rather seem to be the words of Job’s friends, as related by Elihu; and the sense is in connection with the former, either that they found it was the wisest method they could take with Job to be silent, and leave him to himself, lest they should add to his afflict; on; to which Jarchi inclines, who paraphrases it, which, if their sense, shows more tenderness and compassion than they had hitherto expressed, and answers pretty much to the advice given (<470206>2 Corinthians 2:6,7); or else their meaning is, that they found it the best and wisest way to leave him with God, he being so obstinate and incorrigible that none but God could move him; it was not in the power of men, or of words used by men, to make him sensible of things; or rather the meaning is, Elihu was obliged to tell them, that none of them had convinced Job, or answered his arguments, lest they should say, we have found out a wise and strong argument, proving the charge brought against him, that he must be a wicked man and an hypocrite, since God has so sorely afflicted him, and thrust him down from all his grandeur and dignity; which no man could ever have done, and God would not, if he had not been the man we suppose him to be; now Elihu’s view is to observe to them, that there was nothing in this argument convincing, in which they imagined so much wisdom lay. Job’s afflictions, indeed, were of God, and not men; and which he often owns himself; but this was no proof or argument of his being a wicked man: Mr. Broughton renders the words,

> “we found wisdom by our silence, that we may not provoke him any more;”

> “the Omnipotent doth toss him, not man.”

Ver. 14. Now he hath not directed [his] words against me, etc.] That is, Job had not directed his speech to him, or levelled his arguments against him; he had not set himself and his words in battle array against him, as the word signifies; he had not lashed and irritated him as he had them; and therefore he came into the dispute calm and unprovoked, having nothing in view but truth, the glory of God, and the good of Job; and therefore hoped for better success than they had had:

neither will I answer him with your speeches; he proposed to take a new and different method from them, as he did; for he never charges Job with any sin or sins, or a course of living in a sinful manner, before those afflictions came upon him, and as the cause of them; he only takes notice of what was amiss in him since his afflictions, and what dropped from him in the heat of this controversy, rash and unbecoming speeches, which reflected upon the honour and justice of God; and if he made use of any words and arguments similar to theirs, yet to another purpose, and in a milder and gentler manner.

Ver. 15. They were amazed, etc.] They were like persons thunderstruck, quite surprised and astonished to hear a young man talk after this manner:

they answered no more; as they had ceased to answer Job, they did not undertake to answer Elihu, who had plainly told them their arguments were not convincing, their answers were no answers, and that they had done a wrong thing in condemning Job without proof; and that which they thought their greatest wisdom, and strongest argument, had no wisdom nor strength in it; namely, which was taken from his sore afflictions by the hand of God:

they left off speaking; or words departed from them, as Jarchi; their speech left them, they seemed deprived of it: Mr. Broughton renders the whole,

> “they shrink away, do speak no more, speeches be departed from them.”

Ver. 16. When one had waited, etc.] To observe whether they would make any reply to what he had said, or any objection to his engaging in the controversy:

for they spake not; were as mute as fishes:

but stood still; like statues, had no power to move, neither to sit down nor to depart, but were as if all life, sense, and motion, were gone from them:

[and] answered no more; or not at all; for it does not appear that they had given him any answer before, as well as not now.

Ver. 17. [I said], I will answer also my part, etc.] Or take his turn in giving an answer to Job; what they had given being quite insufficient and unsuitable:

I also will show mine opinion; knowledge, or sentiment; this for a while he was fearful of doing, but, upon a thorough and serious consideration of things, he determined upon it, and now repeats it, to assure he would do it; the reasons of which follow.

Ver. 18. For I am full of matter, etc.] Or “full [of] words”[f1169]; not of mere words, such that have nothing solid and substantial in them; this is the character of a fool, (<211014>Ecclesiastes 10:14); nor was Elihu a loquacious talkative man, as Job is charged to be, a man full of talk, (<181102>Job 11:2); but he was full of words, which had fulness of matter in them, which were to the purpose, and contained strong reasonings and solid arguments; his mind was full of them, and he could easily fill his mouth with them, and was not easy until he had uttered them: so an able minister of the word may be said to be full of words, of the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus, of useful doctrines, when the word of Christ dwells richly in him, and he has a rich treasure in an earthen vessel, is full of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ; has a large knowledge of Gospel truths, a real experience of them in the heart, great gifts to express them to others, and is full of power and of the Spirit of God to declare them, as this good man was:

the spirit within me constraineth me, or “the spirit of my belly”[f1170]; alluding to wind pent up therein, which, unless expelled, gives great uneasiness and pain: he either means the Spirit of God within him, as in (<183208>Job 32:8), by whom the prophets were inspired and spoke, by whom ordinary ministers of the word are qualified for their work, and by whom they are led into all truth, and who presses and obliges them to speak what they know; there is a necessity upon them to preach the Gospel wholly and faithfully, and a woe unto them if they do not: or else his own spirit, influenced and actuated by the Spirit of God; as the spirit of the Apostle Paul was stirred up in him to speak, when he saw the idolatry and superstition of the people of Athens, (<441716>Acts 17:16); so love to God and Christ, and the souls of men, the honour of God, and interest of religion, constrain the ministers of Christ to speak in his name, notwithstanding all the opposition made unto them, and reproach cast upon them.

Ver. 19. Behold, my belly [is] as wine, [which] hath no vent, etc.] Or, “is not opened”[f1171], like a bottle of wine, as Ben Gersom, which is stopped close, and the wine in it new; which is most apt to ferment, and should have vent given it; so the Targum, in the same manner Jarchi and Bar Tzemach interpret it; in these words Elihu illustrates, by a metaphor taken from new wine put into bottles and tightly stopped, what he had before more literally and properly expressed, and so in the following clause:

> “as new wine, which is not opened:”

it is ready to burst like new bottles; or perhaps it may be better rendered, “like bottles of new wine”[f1172]; for new bottles are not so apt to burst as old ones, and especially when they have new wine in them; the bottles of the ancients, and in the eastern countries, being made of skin, which better agrees with what our Lord says, (<400917>Matthew 9:17); by his belly he means his mind, which was full of matter, and that matter he compares to new wine in bottles, tightly stopped, which need vent, and are in danger of bursting: the doctrine of the Gospel is like to wine, (<220709>Song of Solomon 7:9); to wine neat and clean, being free from all human mixtures; to wine of a good flavour and pleasant taste, as the Gospel is to those whose taste is changed; to generous wine, which revives, and refreshes, and comforts; all which effects the doctrines of the Gospel have, when attended with a divine influence: and it may be compared to new wine; not that it is a new and upstart doctrine, it is the everlasting Gospel, made known immediately on the fall of Adam, and was ordained before the world for our glory; but because it is newly, or of late, under the Gospel dispensation, more clearly revealed: ministers of the word are like vessels, into which it is put; they are but vessels, even earthly vessels, and have nothing but what is put into them; and they are like vessels stopped up, when they are straitened in themselves, or shut up by the Lord, that they cannot come forth freely in their ministry, and when any outward restraint is laid upon them by persecuting magistrates, and when there is no open door for them in Providence; which gives them great pain and uneasiness, and, let the consequence be what it will, they are weary of forbearing, and cannot stay, but must speak the things they see and know; (see <242009>Jeremiah 20:9 <440418>Acts 4:18,20).

Ver. 20. I will speak, that I may be refreshed, etc.] That his mind might be made easy; the matter it was full of lay with much weight upon it, pressed him hard, and gave him pain; and therefore he determines to speak his mind, and disburden himself: so a minister of the word speaks sometimes to the refreshment of others, the Gospel being a word in season to weary souls, bread to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, even wine to them that are of an heavy heart; and especially it is refreshing when the love of God is shed abroad in the heart through it, and the presence of God is enjoyed under it; and sometimes he speaks to the refreshment of himself with others, (<451532>Romans 15:32); and whether it be so, one or the other, yet a faithful minister eases his mind, discharges his conscience, and is clear from the blood of all, when he truly and fully declares the whole counsel of God, so far as he is acquainted with it:

I will open my lips and answer; speak freely and boldly what was upon his mind, and he had to say, and which he judged would be a sufficient answer to Job; the opening of his lips is a phrase used by him in allusion to the opening of a bottle, full of new wine, the metaphor before expressed by him.

Ver. 21. Let me not, I pray you, accept any man's person, etc.] Neither the person of Job, because of his poverty and affliction, indulging too much to pity and commiseration, and affecting to get a good name from others for it; nor the persons of his three friends, on account of their wealth and grandeur; for neither the persons of the poor, nor of the rich, are to be regarded in judgment, or in the decision of any matter between them, but truth and justice are to be attended to; (see <022303>Exodus 23:3 <031915>Leviticus 19:15). Elihu was determined with himself not to respect the person of any, and he hopes that Job and his friends would bear with him, and excuse him on that account:

neither let me give flattering titles unto men; he does not mean titles of civil honour and respect, which belong to men, and are in common use among men, according to the different stations of life, men are in; for honour is to be given to whom it is due; and it is no piece of flattery to give men their proper and usual titles, as it was not in the Evangelist Luke, and in the Apostle Paul, (<420103>Luke 1:3 <442625>Acts 26:25); but he means such titles that do not belong to men, and are unsuitable unto them, and only given them by way of flattery; as to call a man wise and prudent when he is the reverse; or a holy, just, and good man, when he is a very wicked one. Elihu was resolved not to act such a part, and he hopes the persons he had to deal with would not take it amiss that he spake his mind plainly and freely, and called a spade a spade; not must they or any other expect to be complimented by him with the characters of wise and prudent, just and good, if they did not appear to him to be so. According to Ben Gersom the sense is, that he would not hide a man's name under epithets, but call him by his proper name; he would not do as they had done by Job, who, under covert names, meant him; as when they described a wicked man, and an hypocrite, designed him, but did not say so express words; now Elihu suggests, that, should Job or they appear to him to have acted a wrong part, he should tell them plainly of it, and say, thou art the man.

Ver. 22. For I know not to give flattering titles, etc.] He had not been brought up in such a manner, nor taught to use them; he had not been inured to them, nor did he know or approve of them; nor could he in conscience give them;

[in so doing], my Maker would soon take me away; it being such a piece of wickedness, so abominable to him, and so highly resented by him, that I might justly expect he would, as he could, strike me dead at once; just as Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead for lying, (<440505>Acts 5:5,10): or he knew that it would be but a short time at most, and he should be taken out of the world by death, when he must appear before his Maker, his Judge, to whom he must give an account of his words, as well as actions; the awe of this being continually on his mind would not admit him to flatter any man. Some render it, “will burn me”[f1173], as in (<100521>2 Samuel 5:21); so Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom, that is, in hell fire; (see <191202>Psalm 12:2,3).

CHAPTER 33

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 33

In this chapter Elihu addresses Job himself, and entreats his attention to what he had to say to him, and offers several things to induce him to it; and recommends himself as one that was according to his wish, in the stead of God, a man like himself, and of whom he had no reason to be afraid, (<183301>Job 33:1-7); and then he brings a charge against him of things which he himself had heard, of words that had dropped from him in the course of his controversy with his friends; in which he too much and too strongly insisted on his own innocence and purity, and let fill very undue and unbecoming reflections on the dealings of God with him, (<183308>Job 33:8-11); to which he gives an answer by observing the superior greatness of God to man, and his sovereignty over him, not being accountable to him for anything done by him; and therefore man should be silent and submissive to him, (<183312>Job 33:12,13); and yet, though he is so great and so absolute, and uncontrollable, and is not obliged to give an account of his affairs to man, and the reasons of them; yet he condescends by various ways and means to instruct him in his mind and will, and even by these very things complained of; and therefore should not be treated as if unkind and unfriendly to men; sometimes he does it by dreams and visions, when he opens the ears of men, and seals instruction to them, and with this view, to restrain them from their evil purposes and doings, and to weaken their pride and humble them, and preserve them from ruin, (<183314>Job 33:14-18); and sometimes by chastening and afflictive providences, which are described, (<183319>Job 33:19-22); and which become teaching ones; through the interposition of a divine messenger, and upon the afflicted man’s prayer to God, and humiliation before him, God is gracious and favourable to him, and delivers him; which is frequently the design and the use that he makes of chastening dispensations, (<183323>Job 33:23-30); and the chapter is concluded with beseeching Job to mark and consider well what had been said unto him, and to answer it if he could or thought fit; if not, silently to attend to what he had further to say to him for his instruction, (<183331>Job 33:31-33).

Ver. 1. Wherefore, Job, I pray thee, hear my speeches, etc.] In the preceding chapter, Elihu directed his discourse to the three friends of Job chiefly, here to Job himself, and that by name; which none of his friends in all their discourses ever used; and in an humble suppliant manner entreats his attention to what he was about to deliver, and that for reasons which his address to his friends could furnish him with; and hence begins his speech with “wherefore”, seeing he took not the part of his three friends, but blamed them; and because he had the Spirit of God in him, and was full of matter, and uneasy until he had vented it; and which he proposed to deliver in a plain and faithful manner, with sincerity and without flattery; on all which accounts be beseeches him to give him a diligent and attentive hearing:

and hearken to all my words; not to some of them only, but to all; he bespeaks his candid and constant attention, that he would hear him out, all that he had to say, with patience, and without interruption; and then judge of the truth, force, and pertinency of them; which he would not so well be able to do, unless he heard them all; for sometimes the proof, the evidence, and demonstration of a thing depends not on a single argument, but upon many put together; each of them alone being insufficient, at least may appear so, when all considered together give full satisfaction.

Ver. 2. Behold, now I have opened my mouth, etc.] Begun to speak in order to give vent to the fulness of matter within him, which made him, like bottles of new wine, ready to burst; and since he had opened his lips, that he might speak and be refreshed, he desires Job to listen to him, and offers same things to his consideration to induce him to it:

my tongue hath spoken in my mouth: but does not every man’s tongue speak in his mouth when he speaks? is there anything singular and peculiar in this, that can excite attention? it may be rendered, “in my palate”[f1174]; which, as it is an instrument of speech, so of tasting and trying food, (see <180630>Job 6:30 12:11); and Elihu’s sense is, that he had thoroughly considered what he should say, he had well weighed what he should speak, and should not deliver anything raw, crude, and undigested; he had palated his words, in order to discern whether there was anything in them perverse or not.

Ver. 3. My words [shall be of] the uprightness of my heart, etc.] Not that the uprightness of his heart, or his own personal integrity, should be the subject of his discourse; but what he should say would be in or out of the uprightness of his heart, with all sincerity and faithfulness; what would be the real sentiments of his mind, and not proceed from a double or insincere heart:

and my lips shall utter knowledge clearly; what knowledge he had of God, and of the perfections of his nature, and of his works in nature and grace, and of his dealings in a providential way with the sons of men; and what knowledge he had of Christ, his person, office, and grace somewhat of which speaks in this chapter; and such sort of knowledge is to be uttered, to be published, and made known to the good of others; and not to be concealed, and hid, or held, as in a prison, in unrighteousness; and to be uttered clearly, plainly, and distinctly, in words intelligible, and easy to be understood; and not in ambiguous terms, or in words of a double meaning; or which are abstruse and intricate, and serve rather to make the mysteries of Providence and grace more dark and obscure than to explain them; integrity of heart, and perspicuity of language, serve much to recommend a speaker, and both are expressed in this verse.

Ver. 4. The Spirit of God hath made me, etc.] As a man; so every man is made by God, and not by himself; Father, Son, and Spirit, are his Makers or Creators, as we read of them in the plural number, (<19E902>Psalm 149:2) (<211201>Ecclesiastes 12:1); and this is a proof of the deity of the Spirit, who was not only concerned in the creation of all things, garnishing the heavens, and moving upon the face of the waters on the earth; but in the formation of man:

and the breath of the mighty hath given me life; the same with the Spirit of God, the allusion is to the creation of man at first, when God breathed into him the breath of life, and he became a living soul: life natural is from God, he is the God of our life, he gives all the mercies of life, and by him is this life preserved; and the whole is the effect of almighty power: now this is observed by Elihu to Job, to encourage him to attend to him without fear, since he was a man, a creature of God, as he was: it may be understood of his spiritual formation, the Spirit of God remakes men, or makes them new men, new creatures; this is done in regeneration, which is the work of the Holy Spirit; hence regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, are put together; and being a work of almighty power, is proof of the deity of the Spirit of God; it is he that quickens men when dead in trespasses and sins, and makes them alive to God; which appears by their spiritual breathings after divine things, and by the exercise of their spiritual senses, and by their performance of spiritual actions; and now Elihu, being a man regenerated and quickened by the Spirit, might more justly claim the attention of Job, since what he should say was what he had heard, felt, and seen, as good man, one that had an experience of divine and spiritual things.

Ver. 5. If thou canst answer me, etc.] That is, when he had done speaking, after he had heard him out; if he thought he could make a reply to him, he gave him full liberty so to do, and tacitly suggests that he should give him an attentive and candid hearing, as he had requested of him:

set [thy words] in order before me; put them into the best form and order thou canst for thy self-defence, and level them at me; set them, as it were, in battle array against me; give them all the poignancy, strength, and three thou art capable of:

stand up; not out of veneration to him, but to denote freedom and boldness in himself; a presentation of himself with boldness, and standing and keeping his ground: the expressions are military; Mr. Broughton renders it, “stand to it”.

Ver. 6. Behold, I [am] according to thy wish in God’s stead, etc.] So some persons are, as civil magistrates, the ministers of the word, the prophets of the Old Testament, and the apostles of the New; (see <470520>2 Corinthians 5:20); and so in some sense was Elihu; he undertakes to be an advocate for God, to vindicate his justice in his dealings with the children of men, and clear him from the charge of severity towards them, and hard usage of them, and particularly Job; and whom he besought, as in God’s stead, to be reconciled to his providential dealings with him; to bear his afflictions patiently, and wait the issue of them: or “I am as thou art”; so the Targum and Ben Gersom interpret it; one that belongs to God, a creature of God’s, a sinful frail mortal creature, as Job was, and accountable to God; one that belonged to him both as the God of nature and providence, and of grace; and such an one Job seemed to have wished for, to dispute the point in question with; (see <180932>Job 9:32,33);

I also am formed out of the clay; or “cut out” [f1175] of it; alluding to the potter, who, out of a mass or lump of clay before him, cuts a piece out of it to make a vessel of God is the potter, men are as clay in his hands, their bodies are bodies of clay, houses of clay, which have their foundation in the dust; reference may be had to the original formation of man, (<010207>Genesis 2:7), and may denote not so, much the pollution of his nature, clay being defiling, but the frailty of man, a vessel made of clay being brittle, and easily broken; (see <180419>Job 4:19 10:9 13:12) (<236408>Isaiah 64:8).

Ver. 7. Behold, my terror shall not make thee afraid, etc.] To come near, join issue in a debate, and speak freely; this Job had wished for, and desired of God that his fear might not terrify him, and his dread not make him afraid, and then he could talk and reason freely with him, (<180934>Job 9:34,35 13:21,22); now Job had nothing to fear from Elihu, he was a man and not God, with whom there was no terrible majesty, as with God; he was but a clod of clay, and had nothing in him or about him to strike terror into him; he was no great personage, as a king or prince, nor in any civil authority, nor had so much as age to command an awe, much less could inject dread and terror:

neither shall my hand be heavy upon thee; which is not to be literally understood; Job could be in no fear of that, nor Elihu guilty of such rudeness; but figuratively, that he should not seek to afflict and distress him, or add to his affliction, and make it heavier, by hard words, severe reflections, and cruel reproaches; he seems to refer to (<181321>Job 13:21); the Targum is,

> “my burden upon time shall not be heavy;”

he promises not to aggravate things, but make them as easy as they would admit of.

Ver. 8. Surely thou hast spoken in mine hearing, etc.] After the above preface, Elihu proceeds to the point in hand, and enters a charge against Job; which he took up, not upon suspicion and surmisings, nor upon report, nor upon accusations received from others, but what he had heard with his own ears, unless he was greatly mistaken indeed, which he thought he was not:

and I have heard the voice of [thy] words; the sound of them, clearly and distinctly, and took in the sense of them, as he really believed:

[saying]; as follows.

Ver. 9. I am clean without transgression, etc.] This with what follows is supposed to be gathered from (<181006>Job 10:6,7 13:23 27:5,6); for this is nowhere said by Job in express words; though I rather think, since Elihu so peremptorily affirms that they were spoken in his hearing, that these words and the following did drop from Job’s lips, in the controversy with his friends, though not recorded; for we are not to suppose that everything that was said on both sides is preserved, only so much as the Holy Ghost thought fit should be: no man is naturally clean, or free from sin; man came clean out of the hands of God, by sin is become unclean. This impurity is propagated by natural generation, and is in all without exception. Job expresses himself clearly on this point, and agreeably to it, (<181404>Job 14:4); nor is any man clean by and of himself, or through anything he is capable of doing, in a moral, ceremonial, or evangelic sense, to make himself clean; as by moral actions, by ceremonial ablutions and sacrifices, or by submission to evangelic ordinances, or even by his own tears, repentance, and humiliation. Job seemed clearly and fully sensible of this, (<180930>Job 9:30,31); (see <202009>Proverbs 20:9 <240222>Jeremiah 2:22); yet there are some persons that are clean through the blood of Christ, in which they are washed, and which cleanses from all sin; and through the righteousness of Christ imputed to them, in which they appear without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; and through the sentence of justification pronounced on them, by which word spoken they are all clean; and through the grace of God bestowed on them, the clean water that is sprinkled upon them, by which they are cleansed from all filthiness, and hence said to have clean hearts and clean hands; and if Job meant it in this sense, as he had knowledge of his living Redeemer, he no doubt was such an one, (<181925>Job 19:25): but not “without transgression”: without transgression imputed he was, and such are all they whose persons are justified, and their sins pardoned; to those God does not impute sin, (<193201>Psalm 32:1,2); but they are not without the being nor commission of sin; for no man, even the best of men, are clear of it in this sense. Job might be free from the grosser sins of life, but not from indwelling sin, and the actings of it; we find him confessing sin, and disclaiming perfection, (<180720>Job 7:20 9:20);

I [am] innocent; so he was, as to the charges brought against him by his friends, or the things it was insinuated he was guilty of, as hypocrisy, etc. or as to doing any injury to the persons and properties of men, or with respect to gross enormities, from which he had sufficiently cleared himself in (<183101>Job 31:1-40); but not so innocent as to be free from all sin, as Adam was in his state of innocence, which is contrary to his own declarations in the passages before referred to; some, as Aben Ezra observes, interpret the word “covered” [f1176], and as having the same sense with (<193201>Psalm 32:1); and in which sense it was true of Job, that his iniquities were covered; and others of his being covered with righteousness, with civil righteousness, as in (<182914>Job 29:14); which was true of the exercise of it; and in an evangelic sense he was covered with the justifying righteousness of Christ; the Targum renders the word “washed”, as he was in a spiritual sense. Jarchi interprets it “wiped” or “rubbed”, and others combed and brushed, and so “neat” and “clean”, which is the sense of several versions[f1177]:

neither [is there] iniquity in me; in a Gospel sense there is none in believers in Christ; their iniquities being removed from them to him, and are done away and made an end of by him; nor are they to be seen with the eye of vindictive justice; God has cast them behind his back, and into the depths of the sea, never to be seen more; but then there is iniquity in them, as considered in themselves; for men to say they have none shows pride and ignorance, and is inconsistent with the truth of grace. If Job is to understood in these expressions in an evangelical sense, or with respect to the grossest sins of life, or a vicious course of life (and indeed in no other sense can he well be understood, consistent with himself), he is not to be blamed for what he said, and I apprehend that Elihu does not blame him for saying these things in his own defence; but for insisting so much and so long upon his innocence and purity, and unspotted life; and especially for joining with it undue and unbecoming reflections on the Lord, for afflicting a person so holy and righteous, as follows.

Ver. 10. Behold, he findeth occasions against me, etc.] That is, sought in order to find them; so Job in some places suggests, that God inquired after his sins, and sought diligently after them, that he might have something to bring against him; and because he could not find great sins, gross enormities, he sought after lesser sins; so some render the word, “staggerings”, “totterings”[f1178]; frailties, failings, and infirmities; and because he could find none of late of a very heinous nature, he went back as far as the sins of his youth; (see <181006>Job 10:6 13:26); and this in order to pick a quarrel with him; and so Mr. Broughton renders the words, “lo, he picketh quarrels against me”; or that he might have just reason to depart from him, or to break from him, or to break off friendship with him, or to break him to pieces in his estate, family, and health; all which senses some observe the words will bear: but it would be needless for God to seek in order to find occasions against men; there is enough ready at hand, the sins that are about them; and to represent the Lord as dealing thus with good men is to represent him as acting contrary to the declarations and methods of his grace; yea, as doing what wicked men do to good men, as the enemies of David, Daniel, and Jeremiah, did to them; nay, even as Satan himself does, who goes about and seeks for, and picks up accusations against the saints; this must be owned to be a very irreverent and unbecoming expression of Job’s, and for which he deserved to be sharply rebuked, as well as for some following ones, and for which he afterwards was thoroughly humbled:

he counteth me for his enemy; this he had often said, but very wrongly; (see Gill on “<181324>Job 13:24”), and (see Gill on “<181609>Job 16:9”), and (see Gill on “<181911>Job 19:11”).

Ver. 11. He putteth my feet in the stocks, etc.] This also he had said, (<181327>Job 13:27); by which he would suggest not only that his afflictions were painful and disgraceful, and from which he could not extricate himself, being close fettered by them; but that they were inflicted on him as punishments, and he was treated as a criminal, as a malefactor, who had been guilty of some notorious breach of the law:

he marketh all my paths; looked narrowly at them, numbered and counted them; this also he had said, (<181327>Job 13:27 14:16 31:4); meaning not only his natural and civil paths and steps, but his moral ones, that he could not step the least awry, but presently it was marked and observed, (<181014>Job 10:14); but though God does take notice of the sins of his people, and chastises them for them, yet he does not mark them in strict justice, for, should he, they could not stand before him, (<19D003>Psalm 130:3).

Ver. 12. Behold, [in] this thou art not just, etc.] Here begins Elihu’s answer, who does not deny that Job was a just man, both before God in an evangelic sense, and before men in a moral sense; he did not go about to detract from Job’s general character, as a man that lived soberly, righteously, and godly in the world; but in this he was not just, nor is it to be justified, with respect to this thing, he could not acquit him of doing what was wrong; namely, insisting so much on his own innocence, and tacking therewith such unbecoming and undue reflections on the dealings of God with him; he did not give to God his due, he did not do him justice in representing him in this light; he did not say nor do the right thing, so Mr. Broughton translates the words, that God is greater than man: than any man, than the greatest of men, most famous for power, wisdom, or justice; he is not only greater in his power, faithfulness, goodness, grace, and mercy, but in his holiness and righteousness, wisdom and knowledge; and therefore can never do either an unjust thing, or an unwise one; and for man, who is both sinful and ignorant, even the best in comparison of him, to arraign him at his bar, is very arrogant and presumptuous; since he knows best what to do, and what are his reasons for so doing, and is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works.

> “lo, here thou art not in the right;”

(see <183202>Job 32:2);

I will answer thee; or “I must tell thee”; as the same writer renders the words, being able to make it clear and plain:

Ver. 13. Why dost thou strive against him? etc.] A creature against the Creator, a man against his Maker, the clay against the potter; how absurd and stupid is this! and a piece of weakness and folly it was in him to desire to litigate the point with God, and dispute with him, as he often did, when men cannot answer him one of a thousand, as he himself owned, (<180903>Job 9:3,4); and very sinful and criminal it is to chide with God, or complain of him, on account of any of his dealings with the sons of men, as well as it is vain and fruitless:

for he giveth not account of any of his matters; he is a sovereign Being, and does what he pleases in nature, providence, and grace, and is not accountable to any for what he does; in things temporal, he does all after the counsel of his will; he bestows riches and honours, wealth and health, gifts of natural wisdom and knowledge on some, and withholds them from others; and each of these are his own, and he may do with them as he pleases: so likewise in things spiritual, he loves, chooses, redeems, regenerates, calls by his grace, and brings to glory whom he thinks fit; the blessings of grace and glory are his own, and he disposes of them as seems good in his sight; and in all respects he acts according to his will in heaven and in earth; none can stay his hand, or hinder him from doing his pleasure; and none ought to say to him, what dost thou? or why dost thou thus? or, if they do, he is not obliged to give any reasons for his so doing. Some take this to be the thing Job strove and contended with God about, that he did not, and because he did not give an account of all his matters, or answer all his words; and particularly he did not show to him wherefore he contended with him; and others think the meaning is, that God does not reveal all his secrets to men, but only as much as he thinks fit to acquaint them with; secret things belong to him, and things revealed to men; the secrets of his own nature, and the modes of subsistence of the divine Persons in the Godhead, the secret reasons of divine predestination of men to life or death, and of his dealings with men in a providential way, afflicting the righteous, and suffering the wicked to prosper.

Ver. 14. For God speaketh once, yea, twice, etc.] Or, “but God speaketh” [f1179]; though he is not bound to give an account of his matters, and the reasons of his proceedings in a way of providence or grace; yet such is his condescension and goodness, that he makes use of various ways and means to make known his mind and will in his dispensations, if men were but attentive to them; he speaks once, in dreams and visions, as in (<183315>Job 33:15); and twice, or a second time, by chastisements, as in (<183318>Job 33:18); or he speaks frequently, again and again, (see <196211>Psalm 62:11); gives line upon line, and precept upon precept; if one way is without effect, he will take another; and if one warning and admonition is not sufficient, he will give another; so that though he is a sovereign Being, and not accountable to any, yet he does not act the unkind and unfriendly part Job had suggested:

[yet man] perceiveth it not: the voice of God speaking in one way or another; hearkens not to the admonition given in a dream or vision, nor hears the chastising rod, and him that has appointed it; he is deaf to all instructions; he understands not the mind and meaning of God in his dispensations; which is not owing to want of means of knowledge, but to the blindness and ignorance of his mind, to dulness of hearing, to negligence and inattention, and to the prevalence of sin and corruption: the words, “yet man”, are a supplement to the text, and not in it, and some versions are without it, and understand the whole of God, rendering the words thus, “God speaketh once, and a second time he does not repeat it”; so the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic versions: or “does not revise it”, or “will not see it” [f1180]; to which agrees the Targum,

> “and a second time he needs not to look upon it;”

and which rendering, as it suits with the context, so is more agreeable to the accents; but is differently applied, by some to the sufficiency of the word of God, that God has at once made known all truth, and there is no need to do it a second time; but certain it is, that God did at sundry times, and in divers manners, speak unto the fathers by the prophets; though indeed in these last days he hath spoken at once all his mind and will by his Son, so that no future revelation is to be expected; but though this is true now, it was not in the times of Elihu: by others it is referred to God’s dealings with a proud man, that calls him to an account for his actions, to whom he speaks once, and reproves him for his boldness; but a second time he will not look at him, nor bear his pride and insolence: and by others to the unalterable decrees and purposes of God; what he has said or determined in his eternal mind is done at once, and remains invariably fixed; he has no need to look over a second time, or revise his first thoughts and designs, or reconsider them, whether it is proper to make any alteration in them or not, they are at once so wisely formed; and he has all things before him in one view in his all comprehending mind, so that there cannot possibly anything turn up unforeseen by him, to hinder the execution of his purposes, or cause him to make any change in them; no new thoughts, resolutions, or purposes, can arise in his mind, with whom there is no variableness, nor shadow of turning. This agrees well with his sovereignty, expressed in (<183313>Job 33:13), and carries in it a strong reason enforcing what is there said. Though some take the meaning to be this, that God speaks once to a man, and admonishes and reproves him as he used to do, in the way expressed in the following verse; and if he regards it not, he do not speak to him a second time in that way, or no more by words, but now by blows or chastisements.

Ver. 15. In a dream, in a vision of the night, etc.] That is, God speaks to men in this way, and which in those times was his most usual way; (see <180412>Job 4:12,13); sometimes he spake to a prophet, a person in public office, and made known his mind and will in this manner to him, that he might deliver it to others, (<041206>Numbers 12:6); and sometimes directly and immediately to persons themselves, as he did to Abimelech and Laban, (<012003>Genesis 20:3 31:24);

when deep sleep lieth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; the former denotes a fast, heavy, and sound sleep, when the senses are all locked up, and there is not the least attention to any outward object; the latter a slight sleep, when a man is between sleeping and waking; and now at such a time, when he was laid on his bed in the night season, it was usual for God to come to him in a visionary way, and impress things on his mind; when it was called off front worldly and earthly thoughts and cares, and was calm and serene, and so fit to receive what intimations and instructions might be given this way; (see <190404>Psalm 4:4). Job had his dreams and night visions, though he seems not to have had any benefit by them, or to have understood them, but was scared and terrified with them, (<180714>Job 7:14); to which Elihu may have some respect.

Ver. 16. Then he openeth the ears of men, etc.] Not the ears of his body, which remaining shut while things are presented to his mind in a dream or vision, but his internal ears; it is the same with opening the heart or understanding to attend to and receive the things delivered in this visionary way:

and sealeth their instruction; sends home the instruction given in this manner, and imprints it upon the mind, so that it is well remembered when awake, not only the dreams themselves, but the lessons taught and learnt there, as may be observed in the cases of Abimelech and Laban, (<012003>Genesis 20:3 31:24); the word signifies "chastisement" [f1181] as well as instruction, that being one way in which God teaches and instructs men, (<199412>Psalm 94:12); and so the sense may be, that God in a dream or vision makes it known to men, that if they regard not what he says to them, and repent not of their evils, and turn from them, he will correct and chastise them, and this he assures them of; and they may look for the certain performance of it, that he will visit their transgressions with a rod, and their iniquities with stripes; things that are sealed being sure and firm. Mr. Broughton renders the words, "and imprints why they are chastised."

Ver. 17. That he may withdraw a man [from his] purpose, etc.] Or "work" [f1182], his wicked work, as the Targum; either which he has begun upon, or which he designed to do. Thus Abimelech and Laban were restrained from their intentions by a divine admonition in a dream, the one from taking Abraham's wife, as he intended, and the other from doing harm to Jacob, which he designed:

and hide pride from man; by pardoning his sins, in which there is always pride, so some; pardon of sin being expressed by covering it, (<193201>Psalm 32:1); or rather by repressing, weakening, and preventing it; and that by not suffering vain and proud men to perform their enterprises, but obliging them to submit to the will of God, and humble themselves under his mighty hand. These are the ends proposed, and which are effected through the Lord speaking to men in dreams, opening their ears, and sending instructions to them; and others also for their good follow.

Ver. 18. He keepeth back his soul from the pit, etc.] Or, "that he may keep back" [f1183]; for this is another end and use of God's speaking unto men; it is to preserve them for the present from going down to the grave, the pit of corruption and destruction; so called because the bodies of men, being there laid, corrupt, and are entirely destroyed by worms, and turn to rottenness and dust; and to preserve them from the bottomless pit of everlasting ruin and destruction; for the Lord’s people are reproved by him, that they may not be condemned with the world, (<461132>1 Corinthians 11:32); and his life from perishing by the sword; by the sword of men, which is one of God’s sore judgments; or by the sword of the civil magistrate, the man spoken to being warned of God of committing these sins, which would bring him into the hands of such; or by the sword of divine justice; Jarchi interprets it of the sword of the angel of death; the word signifies a missive weapon, as a dart; so Mr. Broughton renders the words, “and his life from going on the dart”: or, as another version has it, “lest it should go on under the cast of darts” [f1184]; the darts of an enemy in war, or the fiery darts of Satan, (<490616>Ephesians 6:16).

Ver. 19. He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, etc.] This seems to be another way, in which God, according to his eternal purposes, speaks unto men, as the word “also” intimates; namely, by afflictions, and sometimes painful ones; which have a voice in them, and men of wisdom will hearken to it, (<330609>Micah 6:9). Pain here signifies not pain of the mind, or a wounded spirit, which is very afflicting, distressing, and intolerable; but pain of the body, as the next clause shows; and this endured on the bed, it being so great as to confine a man to his bed, or is what he felt there, where he might hope for ease and rest; (see <180713>Job 7:13); and the multitude of his bones with strong [pain]; not with a slight one, but a very strong one, such as those felt who gnawed their tongues for pain, (<661610>Revelation 16:10). Jarchi interprets it, the multitude of his bones, which are strong; though they are hardy and strong, yet filled with exquisite pain; and not one, or a few of them, but a multitude of them, as there are a multitude of them in a man’s body; even all of them, as Hezekiah complains, which must be very excruciating indeed, (<233813>Isaiah 38:13); and which was Job’s case; not only his flesh was in pain, through the sores and ulcers upon him, but his bones were pierced in him, and his sinews had no rest, and he was full of tossings to and fro, (<180703>Job 7:3,4 30:17); and in this way he was, as other good men are, reproved and chastened by the Lord; and in which way he had spoke to him, as he does to others, and which should be attended to; and since such painful afflictions are but fatherly chastisements, they should be patiently endured, and the voice of God in them listened to, and before long there will be no more pain: the “Cetib”, or textual writing, is, “the contention of his bones is strong”; through pain, or with which God contends with men; we follow the marginal reading.

Ver. 20. So that his life abhorreth bread, etc.] Through the force of pain he loses his appetite for food, and even a nausea of it takes place; he loathes it as the most abominable and filthy thing that can be thought of; even bread, so necessary to the support of human life, so strengthening to the heart of man, and what he every day stands in need of, and should pray for, and in health is never weary of; it may be put for all common and useful food:

and his soul dainty meat; the most rich and delicious; such as the tables of the great and rich are furnished with: “food of desire”[f1185]; or desirable food, as it may be rendered; (see <271003>Daniel 10:3); such as in the time of health the appetite craves and desires, and is fed on with delight and pleasure, but now had in the utmost aversion. Pains and diseases of body often produce such a nausea in men, (<19A717>Psalm 107:17,18), and was Job’s case, (<180324>Job 3:24 6:7).

Ver. 21. His flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen, etc.] All being gone, none left to be seen, nothing but skin and bones; and this partly through the vehemence of strong pain, and partly through the nausea of food; not being able to take anything for nourishment and the support of the fluids, and so quite emaciated:

and his bones [that] were not seen stick out: which before were covered with flesh and fat, so that they could not be seen; but now the flesh and fat being wasted, they seem as if they rose up in an eminence, and stood out to be beheld; this was also Job’s case, being reduced to a mere skeleton, (<181920>Job 19:20). Elihu, in this description of an afflicted man, seems to have Job chiefly in view, and by this would intimate to him that God had been, and was speaking to him by those afflictions, which he would do well to advert unto.

Ver. 22. Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, etc.] Not the soul, strictly and properly speaking, for that does not, nor is it laid in the grave at death, but returns to God that gave it; rather the body, for which it is sometimes put, and of which what is here said is true, (see <191610>Psalm 16:10); or the person of the sick man, whose disease being so threatening, all hope is gone, and he is given up by his physicians and friends, and seemingly is at the grave’s mouth, and that is ready for him, and he on the brink of that; which were the apprehensions Job had of himself, (<181701>Job 17:1); (see <198803>Psalm 88:3 107:17);

and his life to the destroyers; the destroying angels, as Aben Ezra, and so the Septuagint version: or destroying diseases, and so Mr. Broughton renders it, “to killing maladies”; or it may be to worms, which destroy the body in the grave, and which Job was sensible of would quickly be his case, (<181926>Job 19:26); though some interpret it of those that kill, or of those that are dead, with whom they are laid that die; or of deaths corporeal and eternal, and the horrors and terrors of both, with which persons in such circumstances are sometimes distressed.

Ver. 23. If there be a messenger with him, etc.] Or angel, either with God, as some think; or rather with the sick man; by which messenger is meant not an angel by nature, a created angel, though sometimes such are God’s messengers, sent by him on errands to men, are interpreters of things to them, as Gabriel was to Daniel; of whom there are thousands, and who may be of service to sick men for their comfort and instruction, since it is certain they attend saints in their dying moments; yet this proves not that they are to be invoked as mediators between God and men: but rather a minister of the word is designed, who is by office an angel, a “messenger” of Christ, and of the churches; an “interpreter” of the Scriptures, and of the mind of God in them; and a spiritual, evangelical, faithful minister, is scarce and rare, one among a thousand; and his business is to visit sick persons, and to observe the “uprightness” and faithfulness of God in afflicting them, that they may quietly submit to and patiently bear the affliction; and to direct them for their peace and comfort to the uprightness or righteousness of Christ, for their justification before God; and to show them what is right for them to do in their present circumstances; whether the sick man be stupid and insensible of his case, and his need of righteousness, or whether he be a truly gracious man, yet labouring under doubts and fears about the truth of grace in him, the uprightness of his heart, and his interest in the righteousness of Christ: but it seems best to understand this of Christ himself, the angel of God’s presence, the messenger of the covenant, who is with the sick man, and favours him with his spiritual presence; or is “for him”[f1186] as it may be rendered, is on his side, an advocate and intercessor for him with God;

an interpreter of his Father’s mind, and with which he is long acquainted, he lying in his bosom; and of the sacred Scriptures, as he was to his disciples concerning himself; or an “orator”[f1187], an eloquent one, never man spake like him, having the tongue of the learned given him as man; and who as a divine Person is the eternal and essential Word of God; who spake for his people in the council of peace and covenant of grace; and also as Mediator is the antitypical Aaron, can speak well for them on all occasions:

one among a thousand: the chiefest among ten thousand, angels or men; (see <220510>Song of Solomon 5:10 <210728>Ecclesiastes 7:28);

to show unto man his uprightness; which to do is his office as Mediator, and especially as a prophet, even to show the uprightness of God, the rectitude of his nature, the righteousness required in his holy law; and this Christ has shown forth and declared in his being the propitiation for the sins of his people, (<450325>Romans 3:25,26); by his Spirit he shows to man, and so to a sick man, his want of uprightness in himself, his need of righteousness from another; and brings it near him, and shows it to be perfect, complete, and suitable; as well as teaches to live soberly, righteously, and godly.

Ver. 24. Then he is gracious to him, etc.] To the sick man; either the messenger or the minister that is with him, who pities his case and prays for him; and by some the following words are supposed to be a prayer of his, “deliver me”, etc. since one find in the Gospel there is a ransom for such persons. Rather Christ, who is gracious to man, as appears by his assumption of their nature and becoming a ransom for them, and who upon the foot of redemption which he has “found” or obtained, (see <580912>Hebrews 9:12); pleads for the present comfort and future happiness of his people, in such language as after expressed, “deliver him”, etc. Or rather God the Father is gracious to the sick man for his Son’s sake, and saith, deliver him from going down to the pit; addressing either the disease, so Mr. Broughton renders the word, “spare him (O killing malady) from descending into the pit”, the grave, for the present his disease threatened him with. Or the minister of the word attending the sick man, who is bid to declare to him, as Nathan to David, and Isaiah to Hezekiah, that he should live longer, and not die for the present: or rather the address is to law and justice, to let the redeemed of the Lord go free, and particularly the sick man being one of them; and not thrust him down into the bottomless pit of everlasting ruin and destruction, for the reason following:

I have found a ransom; which is no other than Christ the Son of God; whom Jehovah, in his infinite wisdom, found out and settled upon to be the ransomer of his people; to which he agreed, and in the fulness of time came to give his life a ransom for many, and for whom he has given himself as a ransom price, which has been testified in due time: and this ransom is for all the elect of God, and is of them from sin, Satan, law, hell, and death; and the finding of it is not of man, nor is the scheme of propitiation, peace and reconciliation by Christ, or of atonement and satisfaction[f1188] by the sacrifice of Christ, as the word here used signifies, an invention of men; but is the effect of infinite wisdom, and a scheme drawn in the eternal mind, and formed in Christ from everlasting; (see <470519>2 Corinthians 5:19). Some take these words to be spoken by the Father to the Son, upon his appointment and agreement to be the ransomer and Redeemer, saying, “go, redeem him”, etc. for so the words[f1189] may be rendered; and others think they are the words of the Son the messenger to his Father, the advocate with him for his people, as before observed.

Ver. 25. His flesh shall be fresher than a child’s, etc.] Being recovered from illness and restored to health, through the gracious dealings of God with him. This is to be understood not simply and absolutely, but comparatively, or with respect to his former condition; that he, who before was reduced to skin and bone, is now become fat and plump; and whose flesh was dry and withered, now moist, succulent, and juicy; and whose skin was wrinkled, now soft and smooth, and sleek; and whose face was pale, now bloomy and ruddy. The Targum is,

> “his flesh is weakened more than a child,”

and the Vulgate Latin,

> “is consumed,”

referring to his former state:

he shall return to the days of his youth. His youth renewed, and he seem young again; become hale and robust as in his youthful days; (see <19A305>Psalm 103:5).

Ver. 26. He shall pray unto God, etc.] As the former verse expresses the condition of the body of the man recovered from sickness, this the frame of his soul, and the spiritual blessings enjoyed by him: some understand this of his praying in the time of his affliction, and consider it as one means of his recovery; and indeed a time of affliction is a time for prayer; and which brings a good man to it, who in health and prosperity has been negligent of it; such an one will make his application to God for deliverance, and not to the creature; and it is his mercy and privilege he has a God to pray unto, who can and will help him. But according to the course and connection of the words, it seems rather to respect what the good man would do, and the frame he would be in upon his recovery; who would entreat the Lord to make him thankful the mercy received, and accept of his thanksgiving for the same; that his affliction might appear to be sanctified unto him, and that he is much the better for it, more holy and more humble; and that he would manifest his pardoning grace to him for all the sins and transgressions he had been guilty of, his murmurings and repinings, and everything else during his affliction; and that he may make use of his health and strength given him in the service of God, and for the glory of his name; and he will be favourable to him; which, if understood of the time of affliction, it may be interpreted of his laying no more on him than he will enable him to bear, and supporting him under it; of granting his gracious presence in it, and of his taking notice of him, visiting him, knowing, owning, and choosing him in the furnace of affliction, and manifesting his care unto him; and of the deliverance of him out of it. But if it respects the man as recovered out of affliction, it denotes further discoveries of the special care and favour of God to him, which are very enlivening and refreshing, strengthening and supporting; and of his gracious acceptance of his person, and of his sacrifices of prayer, praise, and thanksgiving, through Christ the Mediator and messenger of the covenant; and he shall see his face with joy: that is, either God who is favourable to him, he looks with a smiling countenance upon the man now recovered, who before seemed to look upon him with frowns in his countenance, there being a change in the outward dispensations of his providence towards him, though none in his heart: his countenance beholds the upright with pleasure, whether they see it or not; he looks upon his people in Christ with the utmost complacency and delight, and particularly when they come to him in the exercise of grace, with their prayers, praises, and thanksgivings. Or the man recovered from illness, God being favourable to him, he beholds the face of God with joy, who perhaps had hid it from him in his affliction, which caused trouble; but now showing his face and favour, it causes joy and exultation, even a jubilee in his soul. He beholds him in Christ as the God of grace and peace; and through him can come to him, and look him in the face with comfort and pleasure, as nothing is more delightful to him than the light of his countenance; for he will render unto man his righteousness: not the sick man recovered render to another man what is his right and due, or what he may have wronged him of; for which being reproved by the affliction, and convicted of, is desirous of making restitution: but God, who will render, return, or restore to the man recovered his righteousness, which is the foundation of his joy; not render to him according to his own righteousness, as the Targum, which would be but a poor recompense if strictly given; nor restore to him the righteousness he lost in Adam, which is but a creature righteousness; but the righteousness of Christ, as Mr. Broughton, which is the good man's or the believer's in Christ, because wrought out for him, imputed to him, and bestowed as a free gift on him. Now though this righteousness can never be lost, being an everlasting one, yet a sense of interest in it may, which is returned, restored, and rendered to a man, when that righteousness is afresh revealed to him from faith to faith; the consequence of which is peace and comfort, joy and triumph.

Ver. 27. He looketh upon men, etc.] According to our version, and other interpreters, the sense is, God looks upon men as he does on all men in general, their ways and their works; and particularly he takes notice of men under affliction, and observes how they behave; if they are penitent and confess their sins, he restores them to health, and does them good both in body and soul. But most carry the sense another way, and interpret it of the sick man recovered, who looks upon his friends and relations about him, and any others that come within his reach; of he goes about them, as Aben Ezra explains the word; or will accompany with men, as Mr. Broughton; or sets them in rows, as Gersom, in order, as at a levee, that he may the better address them; or he shall direct himself to them, as the Targum; or shall sing over them or before them, so Schultens[f1190]; in a joyful manner, in an exulting strain, express himself, as follows; for the phrase, and [if any] say[f1191], should be rendered, "and he shall say"; make the following confession of his acknowledgment of the goodness of God unto him;

I have sinned; against God and man, and that has been the cause of all my afflictions; I am now sensible of it, and ingenuously own it:

and perverted [that which was] right: have not done that which is right in the sight of God, nor what is just and right between man and man; have perverted the right ways of God, swerved from his commandments, and gone into crooked paths, with the workers of iniquity; and declined from, or perverted, justice and judgment among men; and it profiteth me not; as sin does not in the issue; though it promises profit and advantage, it does not yield it; but, on the contrary, much harm and mischief come by it.

Ver. 28. He will deliver his soul from going into the pit, etc.] Into the pit of the grave; and then the soul is put for the man or for the body; or into the pit of hell or perdition:

and his life shall see the light; or he shall live and enjoy outward prosperity here, and the light of eternal happiness hereafter; and so the Targum interprets it of superior light, or the light above, even the inheritance of the saints in light. These words have a double reading; the “Keri”, or marginal reading, is what we follow; but the “Cetib”, or textual reading, is, “he hath delivered my soul from going into the pit, and my life sees the light”; and which seems to be the better reading; and so the words are a continuation of the address of the man recovered from illness to his friends; setting forth and acknowledging, with joy and thankfulness, the great goodness of God unto him, that he had delivered him from the grave, and spared his life, and given him to enjoy great prosperity, both temporal and spiritual.

Ver. 29. Lo, all these [things] worketh God oftentimes with man.] This is a summary or recapitulation of what goes before, from (<183315>Job 33:15); God is an operating Being, he is always at work in a providential way: “my father worketh hitherto”, (<430517>John 5:17); sometimes on the minds of men in dreams and visions; and sometimes by affliction; and sometimes by his prophets, messengers and ministers of the word; he works with and by these, and all according to the internal workings and actings of his mind, his eternal purposes and decrees, which are hereby brought about: and these he works “oftentimes”, or, as in the original, “twice” [f1192]; therefore when once is not sufficient, he repeats it in dreams and visions; when men are not admonished by one, he comes to them in another: and afflictions, when one does not bring men to repentance, or answer a good purpose, he sends another; and continues the ministry of the word, in which he waits to be gracious, till all his people are brought to repentance, and all his ends answered by it: and all this he works “with man”, his darling object, the special care of his providence; and for whom his great concern is in redemption and salvation. He works with men distributively considered, with various men, in the several ways before expressed; and with men personally and individually; to one and the same man he has often appeared in dreams and visions, and on the same person has laid his afflicting hand again and again; and to the same individual has given line upon line, and precept upon precept. And because this is certain and to be depended upon as truth, and is worthy of notice and consideration, as well as is very wonderful and astonishing, that God should thus be mindful of man, and work with him and for him, “lo”, or “behold”, is prefixed unto it: the ends for which all this is done follow.

Ver. 30. To bring back his soul from the pit, etc.] From the pit of the grave; at the mouth or on the brink of which he seemed to be in the apprehension of his friends, and having the sentence of death in himself; (see <199003>Psalm 90:3). Or “to turn away” [f1193], or “stay his soul from the pit”, as Mr. Broughton; prevent his going into it by removing his disorder, and restoring him to health, as in the case of Hezekiah, (<233817>Isaiah 38:17). Or figuratively, from the pit of an unregenerate state, which may be compared to a pit or grave, because in it lie such who are dead in trespasses and sins; and which is a pit of corruption, or a corrupt state: men in it are corrupt and corrupters, corrupt both in principles and practices; and is an impure one, like to mire and clay; and a very uncomfortable one, a pit wherein is no water, no refreshment, no solid peace and comfort. In conversion, which sometimes is brought about by the above means, afflictive providences, as well as by the ministry of the word, souls are brought back from hence; are regenerated, quickened, and raised from the graves of sin, and live spiritually, as they are also secured from going down into the pit of hell and everlasting destruction:

to be enlightened with the light of the living; in a natural sense, to enjoy the light of living men, the light of the sun, and to live in health and prosperity, which is called light in opposition to affliction and adversity, expressed by darkness; (see <170815>Esther 8:15 <19B204>Psalm 112:4) (<230822>Isaiah 8:22). And in a spiritual sense, to live a spiritual life, who before were dead in sin, to live a life of faith on Christ as their righteousness, and to live a life of holiness from him, and in newness of life to his honour and glory; and to have spiritual light into their state by nature, and their recovery and salvation by Christ; to see their need of him, his suitableness, worth, and excellency, and to have a glimpse of eternal glory; as also hereafter to partake both of eternal life and eternal light, called by our Lord “the light of life”, ([<430812>]John 8:12).

Ver. 31. Mark well, O Job, etc.] Consider and weigh well what has been said; or rather attend to what is further to be said:

hearken unto me; to what he was about to say; for he was full of matter, and had not yet vented all he had to utter:

hold thy peace, and I will speak; be silent and do not interrupt, and I will go on with my discourse.

Ver. 32. If thou hast anything to say, answer me, etc.] Any thing to object to what he had delivered, or any answer to return to what he had charged him with:

speak, for I desire to justify thee. Elihu was a fair antagonist, and gave free liberty, time and space, to make whatsoever reply he thought fit, and which he should patiently and attentively hear: his view was not victory, but that truth might come out, and take place and prevail, having nothing more at heart than Job’s good; and could wish it would appear that he was in all respects a just man, and even in that in which he thought he was not just; but could he fairly acquit himself it would be a pleasure to him.

Ver. 33. If not, hearken to me, etc.] If he had no objection to make, nor answer to return, then he desires he would attend and listen to what he had further to lay before him:

hold thy peace, and I shall teach thee wisdom. For though Job was a wise and good man, he might become wiser and more knowing; and indeed when instruction is given to a wise man, he will be yet wiser, ([<200909>]Proverbs 9:9); and this may be received sometimes from persons inferior in age and abilities. Elihu proposed to teach him, as he did, natural, moral, and evangelical wisdom, especially the wisdom of God in his providential dealings with men, and what is man’s highest wisdom under them; which is to be reconciled unto them, and patiently to submit, and to fear the Lord, and be careful not to offend him, which to do is wisdom and understanding.

CHAPTER 34

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 34

In this chapter Elihu reassumes his discourse, and proceeds in his answer to Job, in which are first a preface exciting attention, (◁183401▷Job 34:1-4); then a charge is brought against Job, expressed in or extracted from some words that dropped from his lips, not so well guarded, (◁183405▷Job 34:5-9); a refutation of these expressions of his in a variety of arguments, (◁183410▷Job 34:10-30); and the chapter is closed with some good advice to Job, (◁183431▷Job 34:31-33); and with an earnest request of Elihu to men of understanding, to join with him in trying him to the uttermost, (◁183434▷Job 34:34-37).

Ver. 1. Furthermore Elihu answered and said.] It is reasonable to suppose that Elihu made a considerable pause, to see whether Job would make any reply to what he had delivered, or object to what he had said; which he gave him free liberty to do, if he had anything upon his mind: but perceiving he was not inclined to return any answer to him, he went on with his discourse; and which is called a further answer to him: for though John had made no reply to which this could be called an answer, yet as there were several things remaining for Elihu to answer to, and which he proposed to answer and did, it may with great propriety here be said that he answered him.

Ver. 2. Hear my words, O ye wise [men], etc.] This is not an address to Job’s three friends, as some think; for Elihu had expressed his displeasure at them, in condemning Job without convicting him, and returning solid answers to him; and therefore he should not take their method of dealing with him, but take another; and plainly suggests that wisdom was not with them, nor taught by them; and therefore, as he could not give flattering titles to men, it could not well be thought that he should address them as wise and understanding men, unless indeed in an ironic way, as some choose to interpret it; (see ◁183203▷Job 32:3,5,7,9,12,14,21,22). Rather therefore some bystanders are here spoken to, whom Elihu knew to be men of wisdom and knowledge, etc. as it follows, and give ear unto me, ye that have knowledge; and as they were endued not only with natural and political wisdom and knowledge, but with that which is divine and spiritual, they were proper judges of the affair in controversy, and could best discern whether what Elihu delivered was right or wrong, and to the purpose or not. And besides, though they had a large share of wisdom and knowledge, yet it was but imperfect; and the most wise and knowing may become more so, and that sometimes by means of their inferiors and juniors: and therefore Elihu craves their attention to what he had said or should say, though he was but a young man, and they aged, and men of great geniuses and abilities; and the rather he might be pressing on them to be his hearers and judges, because, generally speaking, such, as they are the most judicious, so the most candid hearers.

Ver. 3. For the ear trieth words, etc.] Not only the musical sound of them, the goodness of the language and diction, and the grammatical construction of them, but the sense of them, and whether the matter of them is good or not; that they are sound speech, which cannot be condemned, or unsound; whether they are right or wrong, agreeably to right reason, sound doctrine, and the word of God; for there are words and words, some the words of men, others the words of God. A sanctified ear tries these; but then men must have such ears to hear, and be attentive to what they hear, and retain it; hear internally as well as externally; and which a man does when his ears are opened by the Lord, from whom are the hearing ear and seeing eye; and such try what they hear, distinguish between good and bad, approve truth and receive it, and retain and hold it fast:

as the mouth tasteth meat; words and doctrines are like meat, some good and some bad; and such that have a good taste try them, either a rational or rather a spiritual discernment: some have no spiritual taste, their taste is not changed, and therefore cannot distinguish, nor make any good judgment of things; but others have, and these discern the difference, relish truth, savour the things that be of God, taste the good word of God, and esteem it more than their necessary food; and it is sweeter to them than the honey or the honeycomb. Such Elihu judged these men to be he addressed, and therefore desired their attention to what he had to say.

Ver. 4. Let us choose to us judgments, etc.] Take the part of the question or controversy in which truth and justice lie, and he doubtless has respect to the present controversy with Job;

let us know among ourselves what [is] good; agree upon that which is best to be done in the present case, what judgment to be made of the dealings of God with Job, and his behaviour under them, and what the best advice to give to him.

Ver. 5. For Job hath said, I am righteous, etc.] Not in express words, but what amounted to it: no doubt he was a righteous man in an evangelic sense, being justified by the righteousness of Christ, as all the Old Testament saints were, who looked to him and believed in him as the Lord their righteousness, and said, as the church in those times did, "surely in the Lord have I righteousness and strength"; (<234524>Isaiah 45:24,25). And moreover he was an upright man, to which the Lord himself bore testimony, (<180108>Job 1:8); and had the truth of grace in him, that "new man which is created in righteousness and true holiness"; and also lived an holy life and conversation; but then he did not say or think that he was righteous in or of himself, or so as to be free from sin: Job could not judge or speak thus of himself, which would be contrary to what he expressly declares, (<180720>Job 7:20 9:20,30,31); though it must be owned, that he thought himself so righteous, holy, and good, that he ought not to have been afflicted in the manner he was; in which sense it is probable Elihu understood him: and besides, these words are not to be taken separately, but in connection with what follows, which shows Job's sense, and how Elihu understood him, that though he was a righteous person, he had not justice done him:

and God hath taken away my judgment; which words he did say, (see Gill on "<182702>Job 27:2"); or, as Mr. Broughton renders the words, "the Omnipotent keeps back my right"; does not vindicate my cause, nor so much as give it a hearing, nor lets me know why he contends with me; and, though I call for justice to be done, cannot be heard, (<181907>Job 19:7); a like complaint of the church in (<234027>Isaiah 40:27).

Ver. 6. Should I lie against my right? etc.] No; I ought not: this though Job had not said in so many words, yet this seems to be his sense in (<182704>Job 27:4-6); that should he own and say that he was a wicked man, a hypocrite, and destitute of the grace of God, he should not only speak against himself, but, contrary to his conscience, say an untruth, and not do justice to his character. Some read the words without an interrogation, as Mr. Broughton, that is, for vindicating my right, seeking and endeavouring to do myself justice, and clear myself from false imputations, I am reckoned a liar. And to this purpose is the paraphrase of Aben Ezra,

> "for my right I must be a liar;"

> "because I seek judgment, they say that I lie."

Others render them, "there is a lie in judging me", so the Vulgate Latin version; that is, things I know not are laid to my charge, which has often been the case of good men: or, "I have lied in judgment"; that is, "failed", as the word is sometimes used, (<235811>Isaiah 58:11 <350317>Habakkuk 3:17); failed in his expectation of judgment or of justice being done him; he looked for it, but was disappointed; but the first sense seems best;

> "I am falsely accused, I am judged wrongfully:"

my wound [is] incurable without transgression; not that he thought himself without transgression, but that his wound or stroke inflicted on him, or the afflictions he was exercised with, were without cause; were not for any injustice in his hands, or wickedness that he had committed; and that he utterly despaired of being rid of them, or restored to his former health and prosperity; and to this sense he had expressed himself, (<180917>Job 9:17 16:17-20). In the Hebrew text it is, "my arrow" [f1194], that is, the arrow that was in him, the arrows of the Lord that stuck fast in him; these were thrown at him and fastened in him without cause; and there was no hope of their being drawn out, or of the wounds made by them being healed; (see <180604>Job 6:4). Now what Elihu was offended at in these expressions was, that Job should so rigidly insist on his innocence, and not own himself faulty in any respect; nor allow there was any cause for his afflictions, nor entertain any hope of the removal of them: whereas it became him to acknowledge his sins, which no man is free from, and that he was dealt with less than his iniquities deserved; and that, instead of indulging despair, he should rather say, "I will return" to the Lord; he hath "torn" and he will "heal", he hath "smitten" and he will "bind up", (<280601>Hosea 6:1).

Ver. 7. What man [is] like Job, etc.] This is said as wondering at the part he acted, that a man so wise and good as Job was esteemed to be should behave in such a manner as he did;

[who] drinketh up scorning like water? For a foolish and wicked man to do so is not strange nor uncommon; but for a man of such sense and grace as Job was to do this was astonishing; to have no more regard to his character than to expose himself to the scorn and ridicule of men: for a man to become a laughing stock to profane and wicked men for his religion and piety, it is no disgrace, but an honour to him; but by unbecoming words and gestures to make himself justly jeered and scoffed at is great indiscretion. Or it may be understood actively of his dealing very freely and frequently in scoffs and jeers, which he poured out very liberally and plentifully, and seemingly with as much delight as a man drinks water when thirsty; (see <181103>Job 11:3).

Ver. 8. Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, etc.] The worst of men, who make it their constant business and employment to commit sin:

and walketh with wicked men; the most abandoned of mankind. Not that Job kept company with such, and walked with them in all excess of not; nor did Elihu think so; Job was “a man that feared God, and eschewed evil”, and evil men; he was “a companion of them that feared the Lord”; his delight was “with the excellent of the earth”: nor should a good man keep company and walk with the wicked, nor can he with any pleasure. But the sense is, that by his words, the expressions that dropped from his lips, he seemed to agree with them, and to be of the same sentiments with them; and what he delivered tended to encourage and harden them in their sinful ways; and what those words were follow.

Ver. 9. For he hath said, etc.] Not plainly and expressly, but consequentially; what it was thought might be inferred from what he had said, particularly in (<180922>Job 9:22);

it profiteth a man nothing that he should delight himself with God; in his house and ordinances, ways and worship; he may as well indulge himself in the pleasures of sin, and in the delights of the world, if God destroys the perfect and the wicked, as Job had said in the place referred to; if this be the case, it is in vain to serve God, and pray unto him, or keep his ordinances; which are the language and sentiments of wicked men, and according to which they act, (see <182114>Job 21:14,15) (<390314>Malachi 3:14). Mr. Broughton renders it, and so the Targum,

> “when he would walk with God;”

> “in his walking with God;”

and another Targum,

> “in his running with God:”

though he walks and even runs in the way of his commandments, yet it is of no advantage to him; or he does the will of God, as Aben Ezra; or seeks to please him or be acceptable to him, and to find grace in his sight. Whereas though love and hatred are not known by prosperity and adversity, but both come to good and bad men, which seems to be Job’s meaning in the above place, from whence this inference is deduced; yet it is certain that godliness is profitable to all, (<540408>1 Timothy 4:8).

Ver. 10. Therefore hearken unto me, ye men of understanding, etc.] The same persons he addresses as wise men and men of knowledge, (<183402>Job 34:2); and here as men of understanding, or “heart” [f1195]; the heart being the seat of wisdom and knowledge; and such Elihu desired to be his hearers, to attend to what he was about to say; which was to refute the words of Job, or his sense expressed in the preceding verses; far be it from God [that he should do] wickedness; and [from] the Almighty, [that he should commit] iniquity; do any injustice or injury to any person, there being no unrighteousness in him, nor in any of his ways and works; which Job tacitly seemed to charge God with, at least as Elihu understood him. But sin is contrary to his pure and holy nature; he cannot look upon it with pleasure, much less commit it; it is forbidden by his holy righteous law, and therefore would never he done by him the lawgiver; nor can anyone single instance be given of wickedness and unrighteousness committed by him in any of his works of nature, or providence, or grace. He is the author of the evil of afflictions, whether as punishments or fatherly corrections; and in neither case does he commit or do any injustice; not in punishing wicked men less than they deserve, as he does in this life; nor in correcting his own people, which is always for their good: but not of the evil of sin; this may be concluded from the titles here given, of “Almighty and All-sufficient”; for being so he can be under no temptation of doing an unjust thing; and which is expressed with the like abhorrence and indignation by Elihu as the same sentiment is by the Apostle Paul, (<450914>Romans 9:14).

Ver. 11. For the work of a man will he render unto him, etc.] The reward of his work, as Ben Gersom interprets it, whether the work of a wicked man or of a good man:

and cause every man to find according to [his] ways. Which is a truth frequently inculcated in the Scriptures; and will take place especially at the resurrection of the dead, which is for that purpose, and at the final judgment, by the righteous Judge of all; for, though wicked men may not be punished now according to their deserts, they will hereafter, which is sufficient to vindicate the justice of God: and as for the works and ways of good men, though God does not proceed according to them in the methods of his grace, they are not justified by them, nor called and saved according to them; for, though evil works deserve damnation, good works do not merit salvation; yet they are not neglected by the Lord; he is not unrighteous to forget them, and verily there is a reward for righteous men though it is not of debt but grace; and not for, but in keeping the commands of God, is this reward; even communion with him and peace in their souls, which they enjoy in, though not as arising from their keeping them; and at the last day, when their justification will be pronounced before men and angels, it will be according to their works of righteousness, not done by themselves, but done by Christ, in their room and stead and reckoned to them; for the obedience of Christ, by which they are made righteous, though imputed to them without works, is nothing else but a series of good works most perfectly done by Christ for them; and according to which the crown of righteousness in a righteous way will be given them by the righteous Judge. All which therefore is a full proof that no iniquity is, will, or can be committed by the Lord.

Ver. 12. Yea, surely God will not do wickedly, etc.] This truth is repeated and affirmed in the strongest manner; or “will not condemn”, as the Vulgate Latin version, and so the Targum, that is, he will not condemn the righteous; for, though he may afflict them, which is done that they may not be condemned with the world, he will not condemn them; for there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ; his righteousness, by which they are justified, secures them from all condemnation; neither will the Almighty pervert judgment: pronounce a wrong sentence, decline the execution of justice, swerve from the rule of it, or do a wrong thing; for he punishes wherever he finds it, either in the sinner or his surety; and his punishing it in his Son, as the surety of his people, is the strongest proof of his punitive justice that can be given: nor does he neglect to chastise his people for sin, though satisfied for; so far is he from conniving at sin, and still further from committing it; see (see Gill on “<180802>Job 8:2”).

Ver. 13. Who hath given him a charge over the earth? etc.] Or who hath committed the earth unto him, and made it his care and charge? Is there any above him that has put him into this post and office? Under whose direction and command is he, and to whom is he accountable? None at all; he is no deputy or sub-governor: the kings of the earth are under him, and they have others subordinate to them; but he above all, higher than the highest: he is sole Governor of the world in his own right, by right of creation, and which he has from himself and not another; he has no rival, nor partner with him, none to whom he is accountable, or can control him; and since he is the Judge of all the earth, he will do right. Subordinate governors sometimes do unjust things in obedience to their superiors, or to please them, or through fear of them; but nothing of this kind is or can be the case with God; as he cannot do any injustice through inclination of nature, nor through ignorance, as men may; so neither through fear of any, there being none above him from whom he has received a charge, or that rules over him; and, as Jarchi expresses it, can say to him, what dost thou? as, I did not command thee so and so. And though he is sovereign and independent, and his power uncontrollable, it is contrary to his nature to make an ill use of it; and was justice perverted by him, the world would soon be in the utmost confusion: but it is a plain case there is a God that judgeth in the earth, and cannot commit iniquity. Or this may be said with respect to man; who has committed the earth to man, to be his charge, to be governed by him? if so, it would soon come to nothing; all creatures in it would be destroyed, as in the following verses; but this is not the case. Or who has given it to man to possess it, and to enjoy all things in it, and has put all things into his hands, and in subjection to him, to make use thereof, and for his good, delight, and pleasure, and visits him in it in a providential way, in great kindness and goodness? It is the Lord; and can it be thought that he that is so good and beneficent to men will do them any injustice? no, surely! Yea, should he take away all these good things he has given them, and even life itself, it could be no injustice, since he would only take away what he had given and had a right unto;

or who hath disposed the whole world? or created it, as Aben Ezra; that stored it with all the good things in it for the use of men? or put it in the beautiful order it is, so suitable and convenient for the good of his creatures? or made it the habitable earth it is for man and beast? so Mr. Broughton renders the whole,

> “who before him looked to the earth, or who settled all the dwelt land?”

Or who made it the fruitful earth it is, abounding with plenty of food for man and beast? or who disposes of all things in it by his wise providence, so that everything is beautiful in its season? None but the Lord has done all this; how then can it be thought that he who has filled the earth with his goodness should do wickedly or pervert judgment?

Ver. 14. If he set his heart upon man, etc.] Not his love and affections; though there are some he does in this sense set his heart on, and whose souls at death he gathers to himself, but with this sense the next verse will not agree; but to destroy him, as Jarchi adds by way of explanation; if he gives his mind to it, is set upon it and resolved to do it, none can hinder him; or sets himself against him in an hostile way, the issue must be entire ruin and destruction to the race of men; but it is plain this is not the case, or otherwise all must have perished long ago: or if he severely marks the ways and works of men, and deals with them according to the strictness of his justice, which yet he might do without any charge of injustice, none could stand before him; but this he does not, so far is he from any injustice, or any appearance of it;

[if] he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath; not his own spirit and breath, drawing in and retaining that within himself, and withholding the influence of it from his creatures, which the Septuagint version seems to favour; but the spirit and breath of man, which are of God, and which, as he gives, he can gather when he pleases. The spirit or rational soul of man is put in him by the Lord; this at death is separated from the body, yet dies not with it, but is gathered to the Lord: and the breath which he breathes into man, and is in his nostrils, and which, as he gives, he can take away, and then man dies. But in doing this he does no injustice; indeed, should he in anger and resentment rise up and deal thus with men in general, the consequence must be as follows.

Ver. 15. All flesh shall perish together, etc.] Not one by one, or one after another, as they generally do, but all together; as when the flood swept away the world of the ungodly. “All flesh” signifies all men, and their bodies of flesh particularly, which are weak, frail, and mortal; and if God gathers or takes out the spirit from them, they die immediately, which is meant by perishing, as in (<210715>Ecclesiastes 7:15 <235701>Isaiah 57:1); and man shall turn again unto dust; from whence he came, as the body does at death; when those earthly tabernacles of the bodies of men, which have their foundation in the dust, are dissolved and sink into it. Now though this is the case of particular persons, one after another, yet it is not a general case, as it would be if God was to exert his power, as he might without any charge of injustice: and this shows the merciful kindness of God to man, so far is he from doing any thing injurious or unjust.

Ver. 16. If now [thou hast] understanding, hear this, etc.] Not as calling his understanding in question, as if he, had none; for Job was a very understanding man; he had not lost his natural understanding by his afflictions, (see <180613>Job 6:13); nor was he without an understanding of divine things, as his speeches and answers show; but rather it is taken for granted that he was a man of understanding: “if” or “seeing” thou hast understanding, art a man of knowledge and intelligence, therefore hearken and attend to what has been said or about to be said; though, as some Jewish interpreters [f1196] observe, the word is not a noun, but a verb, and is imperative, “understand thou now, hear this”; and then the sense is, “if” things are so as before related, (<183413>Job 34:13-15); then now understand this, take it into thy heart and mind, and well weigh and consider it:

hearken to the voice of my words; either the preceding or following ones.

Ver. 17. Shall even he that hateth right govern? etc.] That hates moral and civil justice; is such an one fit to rule among men or over them? No, surely; for to love righteousness and do it is a qualification of a civil governor; it is his business to administer justice; and if an hater of it, he can never be a proper person to rule: and if God was an hater of that which is right, as he would seem to be if he did not do it, he would not be fit to govern the world as he does. To this absurdity is Job reduced, by suggesting that right was not done him, or that God had removed his judgment from him; (see <102303>2 Samuel 23:3 <011825>Genesis 18:25) (<450305>Romans 3:5,6). Mr. Broughton translates the words, “can a foe to judgment rule well?” And yet it cannot be denied, but must be owned, that God does judge in the earth, and judges righteously. Or shall such an one “bind” [f1197]? the allusion may be to a surgeon that binds up wounds. Sin makes wounds, and such as cannot be healed by men; but God can bind them up and cure them, and does: but would he do this if he hated that which is right, if he was not kind and merciful, just and good? (see <280601>Hosea 6:1). Or, as others render it, which comes pretty near to the same sense, “shall a hater of judgment refrain wrath” [f1198]? Such are tyrants, cruel and unmerciful, full of wrath and vengeance, and which they execute in a barbarous manner: but such is not God; he stirs not up all his wrath, which he in justice might; he retains it not for ever, but delights in mercy; and wilt thou condemn him that is most just? It is not right to condemn any just man, to charge him wrongfully, and then pass an unrighteous sentence on him; and much less to charge the righteous God with injustice, and condemn him that is most just, superlatively just; in whom there is not the least shadow of unrighteousness; who is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works; who is naturally, essentially, and infinitely righteous.

Ver. 18. [Is it fit] to say to a king, [thou art] wicked? etc.] Not even to a bad king; for though he may be reproved for his sins, yet not by any or everyone, but by a fit and proper person: and generally speaking, if not always, the Scriptural instances of reproving such kings are of men that were prophets, and sent in the name of the Lord to do it; and when done by them, was done with decency: and much less should this be said to a good king; as to say to him, Belial, the word here used; or thou art Belial; or a son of Belial, as Shimei said to David, (<101607>2 Samuel 16:7); a name given to the worst of men, and is the devil himself; and signifies either one without a yoke, or lawless, which a king is not; or unprofitable, whereas a king is a minister of God for good; is for the punishment of evildoers, and for a praise to them that do well;

[and] to princes, [ye are] ungodly? Who have their name from being generous, munificent, and liberal, and therefore should not be treated in such a manner; who are the sons of kings, or subordinate magistrates to them, and execute their will and pleasure, laws and precepts. And if now such language is not to be used to earthly kings and princes, then surely not to the King of kings and Lord of lords; so Jarchi interprets it of God the King of the world; and some Christian interpreters, as Schmidt, understand by “princes” the three Persons in the Godhead; which can hardly be made to bear: though, could the whole be understood of God in the three Persons of the Deity, the connection with (<183419>Job 34:19) would run more smoothly without the supplement that is made; so Broughton,

> “to the King, the King of nobles, that accepteth not,” etc.

Ver. 19. [How much less to him] that accepteth not the persons of princes, etc.] And indeed God is not the respecter of the persons of any, no, not of the greatest men on earth, kings and princes, (<441034>Acts 10:34); these are alike dealt with by him as others in the dispensations of his providence; nor do they escape the marks of his displeasure, wrath and vengeance, when they sin against him:

nor regardeth the rich more than the poor? by showing favour to them, or conniving at them, for they [are] all the work of his hands; both the rich and the poor; not only as creatures made by him, but as rich men and poor men; it is God that makes men rich or poor, (<090207>1 Samuel 2:7 <202209>Proverbs 22:9); instances follow proving this, that God is no respecter of persons on account of outward circumstances.

Ver. 20. In a moment shall they die, etc.] Princes as well as the common people, rich men as well as poor; all must and do die, great and small, high and low, kings and peasants, rich and poor men, and sometimes suddenly; are struck dead at once, and without any previous notice, that night, that hour, that moment their souls are required of them. The Targum interprets this of the men of Sodom. And Mr. Broughton, in his margin, refers to the history of them in (<011901>Genesis 19:1-38); and the people shall be troubled at midnight; either the common people, when their kings and governors die; or the relations and friends of persons deceased; and this circumstance "at midnight" is added, which makes the scene more melancholy, awful, and shocking, when it happens at such a time. The above Targum understands it of the Egyptians, when their firstborn were slain, which was in the middle of the night; and Mr. Broughton refers in his margin to the same instance: but it is a question whether this affair ever came to the knowledge of Job and his friends, at least not so early as this controversy; and pass away; not into another country, being taken and carried away captive; but pass away by death into their graves, and into another world. Sephorno interprets it of the destroying angel's passing over the tents of the Israelites, and not entering into them to smite them when they smote the firstborn of Egypt. But the former sense is best, (see <193736>Psalm 37:36);

and the mighty shall be taken away without hand: without the hand of men, but by the immediate hand of God; not falling in battle, or in a common natural way by diseases, but by some judgment of God upon them: and the whole verse seems to be understood not of a natural death, or in the common way, but of sudden death in a way of judgment, from the immediate hand of God, and that upon the mighty and great men of the earth; which shows that he is no respecter of princes, (see <270825>Daniel 8:25 11:20).

Ver. 21. For his eyes [are] upon the ways of man, etc.] Which denotes the omniscience of God, which reaches to every man, to every individual, and to all men in general; and to their ways, to every step taken by them, to the whole of their lives and conversations, and every action of them; to all their internal and external ways and goings; perhaps the former may be meant in this, and the latter in the following clause. This may denote all their inward thoughts, the workings of their mind, the imaginations of their heart; all their secret purposes, designs, and schemes; and all the desires and affections of their soul; and all these, whether good or bad:

and he seeth all his goings; the whole of his walk and conversation, conduct and behaviour; all his external ways, works, and actions; and these whether of good or bad men, (see <19D901>Psalm 139:1-6).

Ver. 22. [There is] no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves.] By whom may be meant chiefly profane sinners that are abandoned to a vicious course of life, and make a trade of sin, or that the common course of their lives; though secret sinners, and even professors of religion, hypocrites, who in a more private manner live in sin, come under this name, (<400723>Matthew 7:23); such may endeavour to hide themselves through shame and fear, but all in vain and to no purpose; there is no screening themselves and their actions from the all-seeing eye of God, and from his wrath and vengeance. “No darkness” of any sort can hide them, not the thick clouds of the heavens, nor the darkness of the night; nor is there any darkness in God that can obstruct his sight of them; nor are they able to cast any mist before his eyes, or use any colourings, pretences, and excuses he cannot see through. “Nor shadow of death”: the grossest and thickest darkness; nor is even the grave itself an hiding place for sinners, from whence they will be raised to receive the just deserts of their sins. (see <181021>Job 10:21,22 14:13). Now from the omniscience of God, and his clear uninterrupted sight of all persons and their actions, inward and outward, Elihu argues to the justice of God, who therefore cannot do anything amiss through ignorance, error, or mistake.

Ver. 23. For he will not lay upon man more [than right], etc.] Neither in a way of duty, his law being holy, just, and good, not any of his commandments grievous, but all his precepts concerning all things right, his yoke easy and his burden light; nor in a way of punishment, always punishing then less than their iniquities deserve; nor in a way of chastisement, suffering nothing to befall his people but what is common to men; and he is faithful to bear them up under it and through it, and to make a way to escape out of it: or the phrase, “than right”, being a supplement, may be left out, and the words be connected with what follows, that he should enter into judgment with God; and the sense is, either that God does not put it on man to go again into judgment with him; he does not suffer him to have a cause heard over again, to appeal from God or to him to have a second hearing; nor is anything to be got by it, he is in one mind, and none can turn him or reverse or get reversed any sentence of his; and therefore it was a piece of weakness in Job to insist so much as he did to have a hearing of his cause before him, since he could not expect there would be any alteration made in his favour: or, as Mr. Broughton reads it, “it is not for men to purpose to enter into judgment before the Omnipotent”; such a purpose is vain, he can never carry his cause against him; it is a piece of weakness to pretend to litigate a point with him: or the sense is, he puts no more on man than to come to him in judgment, so Schultens; he has appointed a person and time to judge the world in righteousness, and all must appear before his tribunal; and everything, thought, word and action, will then and there be brought into an account, and righteous judgment will pass; and therefore, since he has fixed such a method of proceeding, and requires no other, he can never be charged with injustice.

Ver. 24. He shall break in pieces mighty men without number, etc.] Such as are mighty in bodily strength, as the giants of the old world, and such as were inhabitants of some parts of the land of Canaan; or mighty in power and authority, being kings, princes, rulers, and governors, over nations and cities; or mighty in wealth and riches, which give men power and strength; these God can and sometimes does break in pieces like potters’ vessels, and even mighty kingdoms and nations themselves he will make like the chaff of the summer threshing floor: and even without number; or there have been and will be numberless instances of this kind; who can tell how many of these mighty men, men of gigantic stature, were drowned in the flood, or cut off by the sword of the Israelites in the land of Canaan? or "without search"[f1199] as it may be rendered; either on the part of God, who needs not any, with whom are unnecessary any formal inquiries into a cause, or examination of witnesses, in order to a judicial process against delinquents, all being naked and open before him at once; or on the part of man, with whom the ways and judgments of God are unsearchable and who ought not closely and curiously to inquire into any of his proceedings, and the causes and reasons of them, who does all things after the counsel of his own will. Mr. Broughton renders it "without end", for ever; with an everlasting destruction, an utter and irretrievable one; he so breaks them as that they never can be made whole again, like an earthen vessel that is broke to pieces and cannot be put together again; and set others in their stead; God always provides for a succession in the world, that as when one generation goes off another comes on; when he destroyed the world with a flood, he preserved a family to replenish the earth; when the fathers of the Jewish nation, their carcasses fell in the wilderness, their children were raised up in their room to enter the good land and possess it; and particularly he provides for the civil government of the world and when he pulls down or removes one king he sets up another, and will not suffer kingdoms and states to fall into anarchy and confusion: and sometimes, when he casts down the mighty from their seats, he exalts men of low degree, as when he rejected Saul he took David from the sheepfold, (<091611>1 Samuel 16:11-13); and makes such kings and kingdoms to "stand"[f1200] stable and firm, as the kingdom of David, and as the word here used signifies.

Ver. 25. Therefore he knoweth their works, etc.] Being God omniscient, or rather takes notice of them, weighs and considers them, and gives to man according to them; or rather makes them known, for of his omniscience Elihu had spoken before; he makes them known to themselves, fastens convictions of their evil ways and works on their consciences, and obliges them to confess them, as the instances of Cain, Pharaoh, and others, show; and he makes them known to others by the judgment he executes, as on the old world, Sodom and Gomorrah; and the works of all will be made manifest at the day of judgment; and he overturneth [them] in the night; literally taken, as the firstborn of the Egyptians were slain in the night, (<021230>Exodus 12:30); and Pharaoh and his host were drowned in the Red sea in the night, (<021504>Exodus 15:4); and the Assyrian army were destroyed by an angel in one night, (<121935>2 Kings 19:35); and Belshazzar was killed in the night, and the Babylonian empire translated to the Medes and Persians at the same time, (<270530>Daniel 5:30,31): or figuratively, that is, suddenly, at unawares, and by surprise, and as quickly and easily as the night is turned into day; and such a revolution is made, as when he turns the night into day, and discovers and makes known all their secret actions committed in the dark; or he turns the night of calamity upon them, and puts an end to their light of temporal happiness and prosperity; or turns the night of death and everlasting wrath and justice on them, the blackness of darkness upon them:

so that they are destroyed; both in a temporal sense, on every side, with an utter destruction; and in a spiritual sense, with an everlasting one.

Ver. 26. He striketh them as wicked men, etc.] Such is the strict justice of God, that he never strikes men, or inflicts punishment on them, or brings down his judgments upon them, but as wicked men, and because of their wickedness; the casting of man out of Eden was for his sin, as well as the casting down the angels from heaven that sinned; the drowning of the old world, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, the ruin of Pharaoh and his host, the driving the Canaanites out of their land, the various captivities of the Israelites, with other instances of God’s displeasure with men in this world, and the everlasting punishment of them in another, are only of them as wicked men, and for sin; and therefore he is not chargeable with any unrighteousness. Sephorno interprets it, “instead of wicked men”, and illustrates it by the shaking out of Pharaoh and his host into the sea in the room and stead of the wicked Israelites, that came up from thence, in the open sight of others: which the same interpreter refers to the Israelites seeing the Egyptians dead on the seashore; or “in the place of them that see” [f1201], that is, in a public manner, as generally malefactors are executed, to which the allusion may be; it denotes the publicness of God’s righteous judgments on wicked men, for the greater declaration of his power and justice, and for the greater shame and disgrace of such wicked men, and for the joy and comfort of the righteous delivered from them.

Ver. 27. Because they turned back from him, etc.] Became apostates from the ways and worship of God, as the posterity of Cain before the flood, and the posterity of Ham after it; who had been educated and trained up therein, and turned from the law of God, as the Septuagint version, from the light and law of nature:

and would not consider any of his ways; either of providence, whether in a way of mercy which might lead to repentance, or in a way of judgment which might be a caution and instruction to them; or of his precepts, the way of his commandments, not any of these would they consider; so as to express a value for them, show any regard to them, and walk in them; and which was owing to the stubbornness of their wills; they would not advert to them.

Ver. 28. So that they cause the cry of the poor to come to him, etc.] To God; through their oppressions of the poor they are made to cry by reason of them, and who come to God with their cries, and tears, and supplications, and which enter into the ears of the Lord of hosts; and he heareth the cry of the afflicted; as he did the cry of the Israelites under Egyptian bondage; he is a God hearing and answering prayer, and he particularly attends to the cry of the humble and of the afflicted, and arises for their help and deliverance.

Ver. 29. When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? etc.] Quietness or peace is of God; external peace to bodies of men, to communities, civil and religious, and to particular persons; quietness and contentment in outward enjoyments, peace and safety at home, and from enemies abroad; inward spiritual peace, this is of God, is in Christ, and from him; is the fruit of his righteousness, spoke by his blood, comes through faith in Christ, and is enjoyed in his ordinances, and continues as long as it is the pleasure of God to give it, and cannot be disturbed by men or devils; a national peace, when God gives it, cannot be broke in upon; nor the peace of churches, though there are always some inclined to be troublers of the Israel of God; nor the peace of particular persons, not their outward peace and quietness, when God sets an hedge of providence about them; nor their inward peace, not by all the afflictions and persecutions they meet with in the world; nor by all the temptations of Satan, and the corruptions of their own hearts. The Targum is, “who shall condemn?” and so the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic versions; when God acquits, absolves, and justifies men, who can condemn them? (see <450833>Romans 8:33 <235008>Isaiah 50:8,9). When God pronounces the sentence of justification by the righteousness of Christ in the conscience of a sinner, it produces peace solid and substantial, and this being done, who shall condemn? or of what avail will their condemnation be? whether of the law, or of Satan, or of the world, or of themselves, of their own hearts; and when he hideth [his] face, who then can behold him? whether [it be done] against a nation, or against a man only; whether God hides his face from a nation, as he sometimes did from the nation of Israel, because of their sins; when he would not hear their prayers, nor assist them against their enemies, nor arise for their help and deliverance out of their hands: or from his church and people, his spiritual Jacob and Israel, as when they complain, their way is hid from the Lord, and the Lord has forgotten and forsaken them; or from particular persons, as from David, Heman, and others; and who, of the Lord’s people, but at one time or another are under the hidings of his face? and then there is no finding him, no looking to him with comfort and confidence; no looking into and beholding the works and ways of God, and the causes of his dealings with them; these are out of sight, his ways are in the deep, and his footsteps are not known. Some refer this to men; who will show favour to him whom God frowns upon? who will look at him in a pleasant manner, when God hides his face from him?

Ver. 30. That the hypocrite reign not, etc.] These words seem to be connected with (◁183424▷Job 34:24-28), “he breaketh in pieces mighty men”, etc. the whole of (◁183429▷Job 34:29) being read in a parenthesis; or with the phrase “he hideth his face”; as God is said to be in the destruction of mighty wicked men, who oppress the poor, and cause their cry to come to God, to prevent the reign of an hypocrite, or however to shorten it. By “an hypocrite” is not meant a common hypocrite in religion, but an hypocrite in politics; who pretends to great humanity and goodness, to a tender care of the people, and a preservation of them in their rights and liberties, and promises to support and establish the constitution, and observe the laws of the nation, with a show of zeal for the religion professed in it. But when he has ascended the throne, and got the power into his hands, he throws off the mask and becomes a tyrant; and men of such a temper, either God does not suffer to ascend the throne, but if they do get on it through artifice and deceit, he suffers them not to continue, but deposes them, and cuts their reign short: and this he does lest the people be ensnared; be brought into bondage, and lose their rights, privileges, and liberties; or lest they be drawn into sin by their precepts or examples. Some take the sense of the words to be, that God suffers not such to reign, but when he does it is because of the offences or sins of the people; he gives them such kings in his wrath, to punish them for their iniquities.

Ver. 31. Surely it is meet to be said unto God, etc.] By any afflicted person under his chastising hand, and particularly by Job, for whom the advice and instructions in this verse and (<183432>Job 34:32) are designed:

I have borne [chastisement]; the word “chastisement” is not in the text, but is very properly supplied, as it is by Jarchi and others; the affliction of God’s people is a fatherly chastisement, and should be considered and borne as such; and it becomes an afflicted good man to say,

> “I have borne and still do bear, and I am content yet to bear, the chastisement of the Lord; I am desirous to bear it willingly, cheerfully, and patiently, until he is pleased to remove it from me.”

(see <330709>Micah 7:9);

I will not offend [any more]; that is, sin any more; sin is an offence to God, being contrary to his nature, and a breach of his law; Job had sinned as every good man does, no man is without sin, in many things we all offend; and on account of sin God chastens his people, and the design of it is to bring them to a sense and acknowledgment of it; and it becomes them under chastening providences to confess it, and humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and in the strength of divine grace determine to be careful not to offend more. Some render the words “I will not corrupt” [f1202]; that is, myself or others, my ways and works, by sinning; and others, “I will not break”, or “break through” [f1203]; the commands of God; and so the sense of this and the former version is much the same with ours; or I will not endeavour to break through the afflictive providence in which I am shut up, or break off the fetters and cords of affliction, but bear all patiently, until it is the Lord’s time and will to set me at liberty. Some, as Ben Gersom, interpret this and the preceding clause, “I pardon, I will not destroy”; or “will not retain a pledge”, as others [f1204]; and so take them to be the words of God himself; and thus Mr. Broughton renders the whole verse, namely, what follows in (<183432>Job 34:32) [f1205]; it is the prerogative of God, and it is his grace to pardon, and such whom he pardons he never destroys, but accepts, discharges, and remits the surety’s bond or pledge; and nothing more effectually engages to a careful abstinence from sin for the future, than a sense of pardoning grace; and it highly becomes such persons to say what they are next directed to.

> “now unto the Omnipotent, which saith, I pardon, I will not destroy, “this should” be said,”

Ver. 32. [That which] I see not teach thou me, etc.] Which may be understood either of the chastisements of God, and his dealings with his people in a providential way, and of the design and use of them, which are sometimes unsearchable, and at most but a part of them only seen and known; it is meet to say to God, it is but a small part and portion of thy ways that is known by me; I can see but little into them: teach me more of thy mind and will in them, or else of sins and transgressions, the cause of chastisement; it is proper for an afflicted man to say unto God, I am conscious to myself of many sinful failings and infirmities, but there may be secret sins committed by me which have escaped my notice and observation; point them out to me, that I may be humbled for them, and make a free confession of them;

if I have done iniquity, I will do no more; that is, if I have committed any capital crime, any foul offence or gross enormity, for otherwise no man lives without sin, I sincerely repent of it, and will take care for the future, through divine grace, to do so no more.

Ver. 33. [Should it be] according, to thy mind? etc.] O Job, for the words seem to he directed to him; and may respect either the government of the world in general, and the disposal of all things in it, treated of in this chapter, though more remotely, (<183413>Job 34:13). Is it not proper that God should govern it, who has made it, and do all things in it as he pleases? is it fit he should consult with men what to do, or be instructed and taught by them in the path of judgment? is it meet that every man should have his mind and will, and have everything go in the form and course most eligible to him? Or else they may respect chastisement, with which the words are more nearly connected; and so the sense be, should man be consulted, as Job or any other, and his mind known first, whether he should be chastened or not? should a son or a servant be asked first by a parent or master, whether it is fitting to give correction or not? or is man to be advised with in what way and manner he should be chastened of God, whether in his person, or family, or estate? or how long the chastening should endure upon him, and when it should be removed? no, surely; all should be left with God, the wise and sovereign Disposer of all things;

he will recompense it, whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose, and not I; that is, God will recompense chastisement; he will chastise whom he pleases, and in what manner he pleases, and as long as he pleases, whether man consents or submits to it or not; he will not ask his leave; he will do according to the counsel of his own will; and thou Job mayest choose or refuse to submit to him as thou likest best; for my part, was it my case, I would not refuse submission to his will; I would say, "it is the Lord, let him do what seemeth good in his sight". Some make this last clause the words of God, put by way of question, "shouldest thou choose or refuse, and not I?" shouldest thou have thine option and refusal, and not I? should man be his own chooser, or choose for himself what he likes best? should he not say, the Lord shall choose mine inheritance for me, though that inheritance is affliction? The words are rendered by others to different senses, all which to observe would be too tedious: some [f1206] to this sense, sin is of a man's self, it flows from his corrupt heart and will, he is not tempted to it of God; nor is it to be ascribed to the temptations of Satan, which, though they may have their influence, sin is a man's own act and deed; and God will recompense it in one way or another, whether man will or not; either in a way of punishment on the sinner himself, or on his surety for him; or in a way of fatherly correction and chastisement; and this is the Lord's doing and not mine, and he is just in so doing;

> "what is of thyself God recompenses;"

therefore speak what thou knowest: if thou knowest anything better than this, or canst contradict what is said: or as others [f1207] to this purpose,

> "did ever such a speech come from thee, as expressed in the preceding verses? God will recompense it, if thou refusest to speak in such a submissive manner; thou mayest refuse to do it, I would not; I should choose to submit and hear the affliction patiently; if thou thinkest otherwise, speak out thy mind."

Ver. 34. Let men of understanding tell me, etc.] Whether I am right or wrong:

and let a wise man hearken unto me; to what I have said or shall say. Elihu here addresses the company around him, the wise and intelligent part of them; the words may be rendered in the future tense, men of understanding "will" tell me [f1208], and a wise man "will" hearken to me and assent, not only to what I have said, but to what I am about to say, namely, what follows.

Ver. 35. Job hath spoken without knowledge, etc.] Not that Job was an ignorant man, either in things natural or divine; but in this point, about the chastening hand of God upon him, he had said some things which betrayed lack of knowledge, as in (<183405>Job 34:5); and his words [were] without wisdom; Job was not destitute of human wisdom, nor of spiritual wisdom, but no man is wise at all times; some things had dropped from him which savoured of folly and ignorance, and which he afterwards was convinced of, and confessed with shame, (<184004>Job 40:4,5 42:3); being charged by the Lord himself with what he is here by Elihu, (<183802>Job 38:2); and it may be observed, that Elihu does not charge Job with being a wicked man, as his three friends did, but as having spoken unadvisedly with lips, under his chastening circumstances, and which he labours to convince him of.

Ver. 36. My desire [is that] Job may be tried unto the end, etc.] This is my opinion, or what “I bring in”[f1209] adduce, and lay before you, men of understanding and wisdom, and leave it with you to consider of. Some render it, “O my Father, let Job be tried”, etc. as if it was an apostrophe to God, and a request to him; so Mr. Broughton, who adds, and the same is added by some Jewish interpreters[f1210], as there are others[f1211] of them which go this way, and also several Christian commentators[f1212]; and of late[f1213] it has been urged, from this and other passages, that Elihu was Christ, who here addresses God as his father: but this is his New Testament title; and though God is the father of all men by creation, and of saints by adoption, yet this relation and title are not so frequently claimed under the former dispensation, or however not so early as the times of Job, but are more peculiar to the Gospel dispensation, under which saints receive “not the spirit of bondage again to fear, but the Spirit of adoption, whereby they cry, Abba, Father”, (<450815>Romans 8:15); wherefore admitting this version, rather some grave venerable person, as Eliphaz[f1214], senior to Elihu, who was a young man, is addressed under this title; or the whole circle of Job’s friends now about him, all elder than Elihu, may be intended; “father” for “fathers”, the singular for the plural, (see <440702>Acts 7:2); and what he proposes is, that they should make it their joint request at the throne of grace, that Job’s afflictions be still continued; that he might be thoroughly tried by them, and be purged from all his dross, he not appearing yet to be thoroughly sensible of his sinful speeches, and humbled for them; and therefore it was proper he should be still corrected and chastened to the end, or unto victory, as Mr. Broughton, or until victory was obtained, and he was obliged to yield, and cry “peccavi”: but since afflictions are things not joyous but grievous, and it does not seem so agreeable to a good man, kind and humane, to desire the continuance of the afflictions of another, though palliated with a plausible for his good; it seems better to understand this as a motion made to the understanding part of the company by Elihu, that the words of Job, which he had spoken without knowledge and wisdom, might be taken under strict examination by them, and thoroughly scanned, that it might be better known what was proper to be said more to him for his conviction;

> “which art in heaven,”

because of [his] answers for wicked men; or concerning or relative to such answers which he had made, which were like to those which wicked men make; who charge the ways of God with inequality and want of equity, ask where is the God of judgment? or which serve the cause of the wicked, and which furnish them with arguments, prepare them for them, and put them into their mouths, to argue against God and his providential dealings with men, and against all religion. (see <183408>Job 34:8).

Ver. 37. For he addeth rebellion unto his sin, etc.] Or he “may” or “will” add[f1215], if he is suffered to go on at this rate, and is not stopped; as yet he has only committed, it may be charitably hoped, some sins through ignorance, error, and mistake, but if he is let alone he will proceed from evil to evil, to more ungodliness; to be guilty of presumptuous sins, of open treason and rebellion against God;

he clappeth [his hands] amongst us, or “he will clap”; he will either clap his hands together as expressive of extreme grief and sorrow, of the agonies of his mind; showing extravagant impatience, and pouring out his complaints in the most bitter manner, (see <262114>Ezekiel 21:14); or rather by way of joy and triumph, as having got the victory over us, (see <194701>Psalm 47:1); and multiplieth his words against God, or “will multiply”; he has said too many things already against God, his justice in his dealings with him, (<183405>Job 34:5); he will say more if he is not restrained. These are the reasons Elihu gives for a thorough trial and strict examination of Job; and they are taken partly from a concern for the good of Job, and partly on their account, that they might not be triumphed over, and chiefly for the glory of God.

CHAPTER 35

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 35

Is this chapter Elihu goes on to charge Job with other unbecoming speeches, which he undertakes to refute; as that he had represented his cause more just than God’s, and religion and righteousness as things unprofitable to men, only to God; to which Elihu takes upon him to make answer, (<183501>Job 35:1-8); and that the cries of the oppressed were not heard by the Lord, so as to give occasion to songs of praise and thankfulness, to which he replies, (<183509>Job 35:9-13); and that Job had expressed diffidence and despair of ever seeing and enjoying the favour of God, which he endeavours to remove, (<183514>Job 35:14-16).

Ver. 1. Elihu spake moreover, and said.] Elihu very probably paused awhile, and waited to observe whether any of the company would rise up, and either contradict and refute what he had said, or declare their assent unto it and approbation of it; or rather to see whether Job would make any reply or not; but perceiving no inclination in him to it, he proceeded to take notice of some other undue expressions of Job, and refute them; one of which is observed in (<183502>Job 35:2), and the proof of it given in (<183503>Job 35:3).

Ver. 2. Thinkest thou this to be right, etc.] Elihu appeals to Job himself, to his conscience and reason; who as a natural man, guided by the light of nature and reason only, and judging according to the dictates of a natural conscience, and especially as a good man, one that feared God, and had so much knowledge of him and his perfections, as his speeches showed, could never upon reflection think it right what he had said concerning God and his justice, as follows:

[that] thou saidst, my righteousness [is] more than God’s? A strange expression this indeed! but what is to be understood not of his personal righteousness; Job in his senses could never say that this was more or greater than God’s, or to be above it and preferred to it in any sense; nor even of righteousness imputed. Old Testament saints had the righteousness of Christ imputed to them, and were justified by it; and so Job, who had knowledge of and faith in Christ as his living Redeemer, and the Lord his righteousness: but then though this is the righteousness of God, wrought out by one that is God as well as man, and approved and accepted of by God, and imputed by him to his people, which is revealed in the Gospel, and is unto all, and upon all them that believe, and they are made the righteousness of God in Christ; yet this cannot be more than the righteousness of God: besides it is not the essential righteousness of Christ as God, as Osiander dreamed, by which men are justified, but his obedience, active and passive, as Mediator, otherwise they would be deified who are justified by it; and if even so absurd a notion as this could obtain, it would not be more of man than the righteousness of God: much less can this be interpreted of Job's inherent righteousness, or the new man which is created in righteousness and true holiness; since all the holiness and righteousness that is in man is from God, and at present imperfect, and therefore cannot be more or greater than his; and still less can this be meant of Job's external righteousness, which, how great soever, was not perfect and without sin; whereas God is just and without iniquity. But there is not a just man that does good and sins not. This therefore must be understood of the righteousness of his cause; and to say that this was more than God's was what he ought not to have said, and more than became him to say: for though a good man may defend himself against the calumnies of his enemies, by asserting his own righteousness, innocence, and integrity, and may desire the Lord to plead his cause against them, and judge him according to his righteousness and the integrity of his heart; but to attempt to make it out, that his cause is more righteous than the Lord's, is doing an ill thing. Now though Job had not expressed this in so many words, yet he had said that from whence this might by consequence be deduced; he had given great occasion for such an inference to be drawn from his speeches; for since he had spoken so largely of his innocence and integrity, and holy life, and of the hard usage nevertheless he had met with from God; and had represented his own case, as if he had behaved so well as to deserve better treatment at the hand of God than to be afflicted in the manner he was; that he had wrong done him, and complained of it, and could not be heard; his judgment was taken from him by the Lord; which was in effect to say, that his cause was better than the Lord's, and would bear a stricter examination than his; which to say was, exceeding bad and unbecoming; (see <181617>Job 16:17 19:7 27:2).

Ver. 3. For thou saidst, what advantage will it be unto thee? etc.] Meaning that his righteousness, his holy life and conversation, were of no avail to him: he received no more benefit by being righteous than if he was wicked, since God destroyed one as well as another; and since his righteousness did not secure him from afflictions and calamities, it was of no advantage to him; he had not said so in so many words, but it is inferred from what he had said, (<180922>Job 9:22 10:15). Man's own righteousness is of no advantage to him as to justification before God, and acceptance with him, nor in the business of salvation, or with respect to heaven and happiness, so as to give a right and title to it; bat is of great advantage in other respects; is for self-defence against the imputations and calumnies of wicked men; it makes a man honourable and respectable among men, when to live a vicious course of life is scandalous and reproachful; it gives pleasure and satisfaction to the mind, the testimony of a good conscience is matter of rejoicing; and such a man is free from the racks and tortures of an evil conscience others are distressed with; besides, good works are an evidence of the truth and genuineness of faith to others, and ornament the doctrines of the Gospel and a profession of them: and though a righteous man may be afflicted as others, yet in a different manner, in love and not in wrath, and always for his good;

[and], what profit shall one have, [if I be cleansed] from my sin? The words, "if I be cleansed", are a supplement, and seem necessary; so Mr. Broughton supplies. Sin is of a defiling nature, yet man may be cleansed from it, not by anything he can do, but only by the grace of. God and blood of Christ; and from such a cleansing profit arises. This fits a man for the service and worship of God, and for communion with him; gives him peace of mind, and makes him meet for heaven. This Job had not expressly said, and not at all in this sense, but it seems to be inferred from (<180929>Job 9:29-31); where he is speaking of outward purity of life, and yet was plunged into the ditch of afflictions. Some render the words to this sense, as if there was no profit "by expiation of atonement for sin" [f1216]; the same word signifying both sin and atonement for it: there is none but by the blood and sacrifice of Christ, and much profit arises from that; pardon of sin proceeds upon it, and this furnishes out much solid peace, joy, and comfort, (<450510>Romans 5:10,11). Others, what profit by punishment for sin [f1217], unless to God? so sin is sometimes put for punishment; or through leaving sin and repenting of it [f1218]. Now though these are not the causes of the pardon of sin, yet it is given and applied to such who do repent of it, confess and forsake it, (<202813>Proverbs 28:13 <235507>Isaiah 55:7). Or by being “without sin” [f1219]: no man is without sin; but a man may be without any gross and enormous crime he is chargeable with, or without living a vicious course of life; and this is profitable, as has been before observed. Jarchi’s paraphrase is, which sense is followed by others: I may as well be wicked as righteous; I am not the better for it, since I am afflicted in the manner I am: my righteousness is of no profit to me; if to any, it is to God. To this Elihu returns an answer in the following verses.

> “what shall I profit more by my righteousness than by my sin?”

Ver. 4. I will answer thee, and thy companions with thee.] Meaning not his three friends, as the Septuagint version expresses it; for they were not on the side of Job, and of the same sentiment with him, but rather on the side of Elihu; especially Eliphaz, who expresses much the same sentiment he does, (<182202>Job 22:2,3); but all that were of the same mind with Job, whether present or absent, or in whatsoever part of the world; the answer he should return to him would serve for them all, and sufficiently confute such a bad notion of God, let it be embraced by whomsoever.

Ver. 5. Look unto the heavens, and see, etc.] The firmament of heaven, in which are the sun and moon and stars:

and behold the clouds [which] are higher than thou; the clouds of the air or sky, which are lower than the starry heavens, yet these were higher than Job, and much more the starry heavens: but because the word has the signification of “thinness”, which does not so well agree with the clouds, which are thick substances, condensed air; some take it to be meant of the supreme region of the heavens, which is pure and thin; so Sephorno: and Job is directed to look to these, not as stargazers do, such as are given to judicial astrology, to judge of the fates of men and kingdoms; but rather thereby to be led to the contemplation of God the author of them, and the glorious perfections of his being they display; and chiefly to observe the height of them, that they were out of his reach, and he could neither help them nor hurt them; that he could neither increase nor diminish the light of the celestial bodies, which he could only behold; nor either advance or hinder their course, nor in the least add to or abate their influence and efficacy; and if he could neither be beneficial nor harmful to them, how was it possible that he could be of any advantage or detriment to God, by any actions of his, good or bad, who is higher and out of sight? This is the answer Elihu in general returned, he more particularly replies as follows.

Ver. 6. If thou sinnest, what dost thou against him? etc.] Sin is expressly said to be against God, (<195104>Psalm 51:4); it is contrary to his nature, as any opposites can be to each other: it is against his law, a breach and violation of it; and so against his supreme legislative power and authority, and a contempt of it; it is what he is angry with and is provoked by, being what he hates and abhors, and is abominable in his sight. But then he cannot be supposed to be so affected with it to be ruffled and discomposed, or his peace be disturbed, and his happiness in the least broke in upon; for affections are only attributed to him after the manner of men; much less is he so affected hereby as to be hurt or in danger of being destroyed, nor even of being dethroned: men can no more reach him by any hostile action of theirs, such as sin is, than they can reach the sun and stop its course, lessen its light or pluck it from its orbit. Or, "what canst thou work for him?" as Mr. Broughton; by way of atonement or satisfaction for sin? Nothing at all; (see <180720>Job 7:20); but the other sense is best; or [if] thy transgressions be multiplied, what dost thou unto him? As he is not hurt by a slight single sin, a failing or infirmity, an error or mistake, common to men, as the preceding word may signify; so not by greater sins, presumptuous ones, gross enormities, rebellions against God, overt acts of treason against the Almighty, and these multiplied and heaped up even unto heaven; for though by these the name of God is profaned and blasphemed, and he is dishonoured and despised, and his manifestative glory is eclipsed, or he has not the honour given him that is due unto him; yet his essential glory is untarnished, unsullied, and unhurt, no more than the sun by an eclipse; he is the same without any variableness or shadow of turning, as well as is over all blessed for ever. And, indeed, his manifestative glory in many instances receives a lustre, through his power, wisdom, and goodness, overruling the sins of men for the display of it; as the fall of the first Adam made way for the sending of Christ the Saviour, in which God has shown forth the exceeding riches of his grace; and as his mercy and grace are displayed in the pardon of sin, and his power and justice in the punishment of sin and sinners; and his patience and longsuffering in bearing with them.

Ver. 7. If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? etc.] All righteousness is of God that any creatures have. What the angels in heaven have, or

Adam had in a state of innocence; or what believers in Christ have in and from him; his righteousness imputed to them is of God; the grace of righteousness, or holiness, imparted to them and implanted in them, is from him; and it is under the influence of his Spirit, and by his grace and strength, they do works of righteousness externally; and therefore can give nothing to him of their own, nor does he need any, being God all sufficient; even the goodness of his Son does not extend to him, but to the saints, (<191602>Psalm 16:2,3); much less any goodness of theirs: their best works of righteousness are due to him, and not gifts; and though they may contribute to his manifestative glory, both in them that do them and in others that see them, they can add nothing to the essential glory of God; or what receiveth he of thine hand? He can receive nothing but what he has given, or what he has a prior right to and is his due, and so cannot be laid under any obligation to man by what he does; nor can man merit anything at his hand, not even the least temporal mercy, and much less spiritual ones and everlasting life: and what notice God is pleased to take of the good works of men, in away of reward, is not of debt, but of grace, and entirely owing to his goodness; and does not arise from any intrinsic worth in them, or from any advantage to him by them.

Ver. 8. Thy wickedness [may hurt] a man as thou [art], etc.] But not God: a man may hurt himself by his wickedness; his body, by bringing various diseases upon it, through debauchery and intemperance; his family and estate, by wasting it; his soul, for every sin is a wrong and injury to a man’s soul, and exposes it to ruin and destruction: and sin does even a good man harm, since it breaks in upon his peace, and hinders his communion with God; and the wickedness of men may harm others like themselves, frail, mortal, sinful creatures, and easily led aside by ill examples; as well as there are many sins which do injury to the persons, families, and estates of others, as murder, adultery, theft, etc. and since sin is harmful to others, God resents it, and punishes for it, though, strictly speaking, it cannot harm him in the sense before given; and thy righteousness [may profit] the son of man; may profit a man himself ((see Gill on “<183503>Job 35:3”)), and others, but neither for justification before God; but godliness is profitable to a man’s self, both for this life and that to come, and good works are profitable to other men; for what reasons they are to be performed and maintained, (see <540408>1 Timothy 4:8 <560308>Titus 3:8,14). Some are of real and direct profit to men, as acts of beneficence to them, and all as being examples to them; but then no works of righteousness can be profitable to God, they adding nothing to him; which is what Elihu undertook to answer to.

Ver. 9. By reason of the multitude of oppressions, they make [the oppressed] to cry, etc.] Which is either an illustration by an instance of what is before said, that wickedness hurts men, as particularly oppression does, which makes then cry; or this refers to something new, to another complaint of Job, or an undue expression of his. Elihu undertakes to answer; that men cry unto God, as he himself had, but are not heard and answered; the place or places referred to may be (<182412>Job 24:12 19:7 30:20). To which Elihu replies, by granting that men oppressed cry because of their oppression, and are not heard; for which reasons may be given, as in the following verses. The poor are often oppressed by the rich, whose wealth gives them power, and that they abuse; and the weak and feeble by the mighty; and their oppressions are many, there is a multitude of them: men in power and authority have various ways of oppressing others, who like the Israelites cry by reason of them, and are made to cry by their oppressors;

they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty; which falls with weight, and lies heavy upon them, and crushes them; meaning the power they have, and which they abuse to the injury of them; nor are they able to help themselves or deliver themselves out of their hands, they being mighty, if not in body, yet through wealth; and by means of that authority over them which gives it them: now on account of the pressure upon them, they cry, not to God, but to men: and if they cry to God, it is in a murmuring and complaining way, through impatience under their burden, through envy at the riches and power of others, in a passionate manner, in a revengeful spirit, calling and seeking for vengeance on their oppressors; not in an humble penitent manner, acknowledging their sins, and owning their unworthiness to be heard and regarded, and submitting all to the will of God: for which reasons they are not heard, their cries and, prayers being reckoned no other than howlings, (<280714>Hosea 7:14).

Ver. 10. But none saith, where [is] God my Maker? etc.] Or "Makers" [f1220], as in (<19E902>Psalm 149:2 <235405>Isaiah 54:5); for there are more concerned in the formation of man, (<010126>Genesis 1:26); even the Father, Son, and Spirit, who are the one God that has made all men, (<390210>Malachi 2:10). Now not one of the oppressed ones that cry by reason of their oppression, or very few of them, inquire after God, seek unto him for help and deliverance from their oppressions, or desire to enjoy him and his gracious presence under their afflictions and distresses; and that is one reason why they are not heard: they do not so much as consider him as the author of their beings, and be thankful to him for them; nor as the preserver of them in their beings; nor as their kind benefactor, who gives them all that they enjoy, and who is the disposer of all their affairs in providence: and if they are new creatures, or are remade, they are his workmanship; and therefore should upon all accounts seek him and submit to his will, and patiently bear all their afflictions, waiting his time to deliver them out of them: but there are few or none that regard him in this light, or make an inquiry after him, even though he has not only made them, but is he who giveth songs in the night; which respects not the praises of the angels in the night, as the Targum; nor the shining of the moon and stars in the night, which cause praise and thankfulness; nor the singing of birds in the night, as of the nightingale; senses some give into: but matter and cause of rejoicing in the night, either taken literally, as the mercies of the day, which, when reflected upon when men come to lie down on their beds at night, and commune with their hearts there, afford them songs of praise, (see <194208>Psalm 42:8). Or the mercies of the night, as sweet refreshing sleep, and preservation in safety from all dangers by fire, thieves, etc. all which are of God; and, when duly considered, will direct to encompass him with songs of deliverance, (see <19D702>Psalm 137:2,3 3:5 4:8). Or, figuratively, the night sometimes signifying a time of calamity, affliction, and distress, either on temporal or spiritual accounts; and when men seek to him in such a night with their whole hearts, and he is pleased to visit them in a gracious manner, and favour them with his presence and the discoveries of his love, this occasions songs of praise to him, (<232609>Isaiah 26:9 <191703>Psalm 17:3). But when men are unconcerned about and not thankful for the mercies of the day and of the night, though these administer songs unto them, it is no wonder that, when they cry through oppression, they are not heard.

Ver. 11. Who teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth? etc.] Who are taught and know much, especially some of them; but not so much as man, (see <230103>Isaiah 1:3,4); and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven? who are wise to provide food and nests for themselves and their young; and such as are birds of passage, as the turtledove, the crane, the stork, and the swallow, to know the time of their coming and returning, (see <240807>Jeremiah 8:7-9). But then neither the beasts not; the fowls, though they are endowed with much knowledge and sagacity, according to their natures, yet not with reason and understanding, as men are, so as to make reflections on things they see and hear, and reason and discourse about them; nor are they capable of being taught and attaining to knowledge and wisdom as men are, by the works of God, of creation, and providence; and by the word of God, the Scriptures of truth, which are able to make men wise unto salvation; and by the Spirit of God, who teaches all things of a spiritual nature. God not only endows men with reason, but with sentiments of religion, which brutes are incapable of: he gives to men wisdom in the hidden part; he puts in them his fear, which is the beginning of wisdom; he makes them wise to know God in Christ, and to know his Son Jesus Christ, whom to know is life eternal; and he gives them knowledge of a future state, and hope of immortality and eternal life. Wherefore it becomes them to bear afflictions and oppressions with a fortitude of mind, and patiently submit to the will of God, and wait his time for deliverance, having called upon him in faith, and left their case with him; but if they only cry, as the brutes do under their burdens, it need not seem strange they are not heard and answered; since God has given them more wisdom and knowledge than they, and therefore should behave after another manner; though sometimes they act a part inferior to them, (<650110>Jude 1:10).

Ver. 12. There they cry, etc.] As brutes do, and as in, (<183509>Job 35:9); by reason of their oppressions, but not under a due sense of the hand of God upon them, nor of his being their only helper, and saviour, and deliverer;

but none giveth answer; to them, either God or men, and they lie groaning and howling under their oppression; because of the pride of evil men; this is either to be connected with “they cry”, and then the sense is, that they cry by reason of the oppressions of wicked men, who, through the pride of their hearts, and to show their superior power and authority, persecute and distress them, (<191002>Psalm 10:2). And it is because of this they cry out, being distressed by them, and not through any sense of sin they have committed, as the reason of God’s suffering them to be thus oppressed: or “with none give answer”; God gives them no answer to their cry, because pride is not withdrawn from them, which is one end he has in afflicting men; because they are not humbled under the mighty hand of God, and are not brought to a sense of sin and humiliation for it, and acknowledgment of it. And another reason follows:

Ver. 13. Surely God will not hear vanity, etc.] Or “a lie”[f1221], than which nothing is more an abomination to him; if men come to him with a lie in their mouths, they cannot expect to be heard by him; he is only nigh to those who call upon him in truth: or that which is “rash”[f1222]; which is rashly uttered, and in a passionate wrathful manner, savouring of a revengeful spirit, too often the case of those that cry under oppression; (see <210502>Ecclesiastes 5:2 <540208>1 Timothy 2:8); or vain and empty prayers, a speech of vanity, as Aben Ezra; which as to the matter of them are about vain and empty things; only for outward mercies, worldly goods; and not for spiritual mercies, or such things as are according to the will of God; but what are pleasing to the flesh, and sought for to consume on the lusts of it, and therefore such prayers are not heard, (<190406>Psalm 4:6 <590403>James 4:3); and as to the manner of them, they are not put up in the name of Christ, nor under the influence of the spirit of Christ, nor in the exercise of any grace, nor with reverence of God, nor with sincerity of soul, not in faith, nor with fervency: or “vanity” is put for vain men, as sin for sinners; such as are proud men, and are vainly puffed up in their fleshly mind. God hears humble penitent sinners, who find mercy with him; and humble saints, to whom he gives more grace; but not proud Pharisees, or men not humbled by afflictions; (see <421811>Luke 18:11-14); nor light and empty persons, who are without God and Christ, destitute of the spirit, devoid of all grace, and full of all unrighteousness; unstable ones, who are vanity itself, and lighter than vanity, tossed to and fro like a wave of the sea, and double minded, (<590106>James 1:6-8); nor men of vain conversations, that walk in the vanity of their minds, whose words are vain, and especially such as take the name of God in vain; and all whose actions are vain, or such that live a vain and sinful course of life; God hears not sinners, (<430931>John 9:31); neither will the Almighty regard it; vanity, vain prayers and vain persons; he regards the prayer of the destitute, the lowly, and the humble, but not the prayer of such as before described; he cannot “look” at, it[f1223], nor at them: he looks to the poor and contrite, and desires to see their countenance and hear their voice in prayer; but he is of purer eyes thou to look on vain persons and their vain prayers; and a greater contempt cannot be shown to petitioners and their petitions than when those to whom they apply will not so much as look at them, but turn both a deaf ear to them, and their eyes away from them.

Ver. 14. Although thou sayest thou shall not see him, etc.] Which is another expression of Job's taken notice of by Elihu, and to which he makes answer; he seems to refer to (<182303>Job 23:3,8,9). God is indeed invisible in his nature and essence, but is to be seen in his works of creation and providence; which Job was acquainted with, and in which he had seen somewhat of the glory of God, and of his divine perfections in them. (see <180904>Job 9:4-10 26:14). And he is to be seen in Christ by an eye of faith, and Job had trusted in him as his salvation; and he will be seen with the beatific vision in heaven as he is, in a more glorious and perfect manner, which Job had a full persuasion of, (<181315>Job 13:15,16 19:26,27); and therefore is not to be understood in either of those senses, but of his not seeing him on a throne of judgment, hearing and trying his cause, judging and acquitting him; this he had often desired, but despaired of ever seeing it; (see <182304>Job 23:4-7 31:35-37 9:32-35); to which Elihu replies;

[yet] judgment [is] before him; all things are naked and open to him, and stand clear before him; he has perfect knowledge of what is right and wrong; no cause is unknown to him, and needs not to be searched into by him; nor can he nor will he ever pass a wrong judgment: he is just and true, righteous in all his ways and works, the Judge of the whole earth, who will do right, and will plead and judge the cause of every good man sooner or later; if not now, there is a judgment to come with him, when all must appear before his judgment seat, and he will render unto every man according to his works;

therefore trust thou in him, or "wait for him" [f1224]; wait for his coming to judgment: wait till that time comes when everything will be brought to light, and every good man shall have praise of God. Or, as we render it, "trust in him"; God alone is the object of trust and confidence, and happy is the man that trusts in him; he is to be trusted in for all things, both temporal, spiritual, and eternal; and particularly for this of doing justice to his people; if not now, yet hereafter, he will render tribulation to them that trouble them; he will right all their wrongs and avenge their injuries, and remove the rebuke that is upon them, and confess them before men and angels, and declare them righteous, and receive them into his kingdom and glory: and be is to be trusted in at all times, in times of adversity as well as prosperity; and even when he is not to be seen, and the dispensations of his providence are dark and intricate, (see <235010>Isaiah 50:10); The word used signifies such a trust, hope, and waiting, as of a woman in travail, who bears her pains patiently, holding and trusting for a safe deliverance of a child, to the joy of her and her family.

Ver. 15. But now, because [it is] not [so], etc.] Because there was not such trust, hope, patience, and quiet expectation in Job that God would appear for him, and do him, justice openly and publicly; for though he had hope and confidence of an interest in his living Redeemer and Saviour, and of eternal life and happiness through him; yet not of his bringing his judgment to the light, and of his beholding his righteousness, as he ought to have had, (see <193705>Psalm 37:5-7 <330709>Micah 7:9);

he hath visited in his anger; corrected and chastised in fatherly anger and displeasure, though not in wrath and vengeance, and in a way of punishment in strict justice; but consistent with his invariable love and free favour in Christ; being displeased at his want of faith and patience, failing in the exercise of which is oftentimes resented by the Lord, (see <042012>Numbers 20:12 <360302>Zephaniah 3:2);

yet he knoweth [it] not in great extremity: so stupid was Job, that though he was in the utmost extremity of affliction, in his body, family, and substance, yet was not sensible it was his duty to trust in God, and patiently wait for him; he knew that the hand of God was upon him, and that he had visited him in anger, and that his arrows stuck fast in him, and his hand pressed him sore; but was insensible of the cause of the continuance of it, his unbelief, impatience, and non-submission to the will of God. The word for “extremity” signifies “abundance” [f1225], and may be applied to an abundance and plenty of good things; and therefore some understand it of Job’s prosperity, and take the sense to be, that God took no notice of this; it did not hinder him from visiting him, but he destroyed it all: though Mr. Broughton, on the other hand, interprets it of the great plenty of sorrows and distresses Job was attended with, the true cause of which he did not advert to: some [f1226] think the whole refers to the merciful dealings of God with Job, and read the first clause, the affliction is but a light one comparatively speaking, scarce any thing at all in comparison of what sin deserves, being abundantly less than that:

> “know now his anger hath visited but a little or noticing;”

> “neither hath he made great inquisition, or inquired out the multitude” of sins; not strictly and severely marking them, and dealing with and for them according to their deserts; (see <150913>Ezra 9:13 <19A310>Psalm 103:10); with which compare (<470417>2 Corinthians 4:17); and therefore Job had no reason to complain of God, or of any hard usage from him.

Ver. 16. Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain, etc.] In uttering such unbecoming expressions, observed, and refuted, in his loud complaints of God, and of his dealings with him, and in defence of himself;

he multiplieth words without knowledge; both against God and in answer to others; being in a great measure ignorant of the nature and number of his sins, and of his afflictions; and of the end of God in them, and of the right he had to lay them upon him; us well as of his duty patiently to bear them, and trust in God, and wait his own time for deliverance out of them; and or the truth of this he was afterwards convinced, and acknowledged it, (<184203>Job 42:3).

CHAPTER 36

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 36

This chapter, with the following, contains Elihu’s fourth and last discourse, the principal view of which is to vindicate the righteousness of God; which is done by observing the dealings of God with men in his providence, according to their different characters, and from the wonderful works wrought by him in a sovereign manner, and for the benefit of his creatures. This chapter is introduced with a preface, the design of which is to gain attention, (<183601>Job 36:1-4); the different dealings of God with men are observed, and the different issue of them, and the different ends answered thereby, (<183605>Job 36:5-15); and it is suggested to Job, that had he attended to the design of the providence he was under, and had submitted to it patiently, things would have been otherwise with him; and therefore Elihu proceeds to give him some advice, which, if taken, would be for his own good, and the glory of God, (<183616>Job 36:16-25); and closes the chapter by observing the unsearchable greatness of God, as appears by the works of nature wrought by him, (<183626>Job 36:26-33).

Ver. 1. Elihu also proceeded, and said.] Or “added” [f1227] what follows to his former discourses; pausing a while to see whether Job would make any reply to what he had already said; but perceiving he had no inclination to do it, and having more upon his mind to deliver, went on with his discourse.

Ver. 2. Suffer me a little, etc.] Bear with me a little longer, and allow me to say a few words more. I have but little more to say, and it will take but a little time to say it in; thus, proposing brevity, he hoped to be heard with patience, since he should not long trespass upon it. The word used has the signification of a crown; but not to be understood in the sense of surrounding, as a crown surrounds the head, as some, who interpret it, stand about me, surround me, in order to hear; for this cannot with propriety be said to a single person; but rather in the sense of doing honour, as Aben Ezra; and so the meaning may be, do me the honour of giving; me thy presence a little longer, and hearing me out patiently; and I will show thee: make things clear, manifest, and plain to thee: clearness of expression, with brevity, recommends a discourse. Something may be here supplied; for a greater stop is here to be made than in our version, as either "my opinion", as in (<183210>Job 32:10,17); his sentiment concerning God and his righteousness in his dealings with the sons of men; or "truth", as Ben Gersom; truth in general, plain naked truth, without any colouring, just as it is, cordially, sincerely, in love, and by clear manifestations of it; and particularly the truth of the righteousness of God in all his ways and works. He proposed to make it clear to him that God did all things well and right, and to lay before him in the plainest manner what were the ends God had in view in dealing thus with Job, and what was his duty to do in his present circumstances; that [I have] yet to speak in God's behalf: or "for I have yet to speak"[f1228], etc. Elihu had said much for God already, in vindication of his sovereignty, purity, holiness, and justice, and he had yet more to say; out of the abundance of his heart his mouth spake for God; he set out with this, that he was full of matter, and wanted to vent himself, that he might be eased, (<183218>Job 32:18-20); and he had vented much, but he had yet more to deliver; and since it was not for himself, in his own behalf, nor of any other but God, he hoped he should be heard: it may be rendered, "for yet God has words"[f1229], to put into my mouth, and speak by me; signifying, that he had spoken by him already, and had still more to say by him; and since it was not so much he that spoke, as God that spoke in him and by him, it might be expected he would be heard.

Ver. 3. I will fetch my knowledge from afar, etc.] Not from himself; for it is but a small share of knowledge that a man gets of himself, or attains to by the light of nature, and especially concerning God and divine things; but from others, either from persons that lived in former ages, and in foreign countries; it being usual for men desirous of acquiring knowledge to travel into distant parts for it; and such were generally much esteemed of, and the knowledge they professed to have got and published; as the queen of Sheba came from the further parts of the earth to hear and learn the wisdom of Solomon, (<111001>1 Kings 10:1): or rather the sense is, he would fetch the knowledge he should now communicate concerning God from God himself, from the nature and perfections of God, who, and his knowledge, are high as heaven; and from the works of God, which are far above men; or should treat of things deep and sublime, and not common; though perhaps it is best of all to read the words, "I will bring forth knowledge concerning”, or “with respect to him that is afar off”[f1230]; that is, God, who is in the highest heavens, and inhabits the high and holy place; a God both at hand and afar off; with which agrees what follows; though some interpret it of lifting it up, and causing it to be heard afar off so some, as Aben Ezra;

and will ascribe righteousness to my Maker: God is the Maker of all men; Elihu considered him as his Maker with gratitude, while many have no regard of him, ([<183510>]Job 35:10); and therefore thought himself obliged to speak for him, and on his behalf; and particularly in vindication of his righteousness; assert this to be an essential attribute and perfection of his nature; own, acknowledge, publish, and declare it; give him the glory of it, and demonstrate that he is righteous in all his ways and works; and clear him from all imputation of unrighteousness.

Ver. 4. For truly my words [shall] not [be] false, etc.] But strictly true; he would take the utmost care to say nothing but the truth, with the greatest impartiality and sincerity, so that what was said might be depended upon; truth spoken briefly, clearly, and on so important a subject as the righteousness of God, deserved attention;

he that is perfect in knowledge [is] with thee; meaning either God, whose knowledge is perfect, who knows all persons and things; knows himself, his nature, persons, and perfections; his thoughts, counsels, and purposes; all his creatures, angels and men; the hearts of all men, their thoughts, words, and works; he, the omniscient and omnipresent God was with Job, from whose presence there is no fleeing; and therefore it became him to be careful of his thoughts, words, and actions; that he did not entertain any unbecoming thoughts of God, and say anything unworthy of him, or do anything that tended to his dishonour; since he was present with him, and nothing could escape his notice: or else Elihu means himself; suggesting, that he who undertook to speak for God and plead his cause, and clear him from the charge of unrighteousness, was no novice, but one that thoroughly understood the point in hand; and though no man is perfect in knowledge in an absolute sense, yet may be in comparison of others; or however may be upright and sincere in his knowledge; which sense the word used often has; and so it may signify, that as he was a sincere searcher after knowledge, and had through divine goodness attained to a competent share of it, even of sound and not superficial knowledge, he should be honest and upright in the communication of it; and this he might choose to observe the more, to excite the attention of Job to what he had to say; though it may be the truest reading of the words is, "perfect knowledge" or "perfection of knowledge is with thee"[f1231], that is, in his own apprehension, so Jarchi; and may be understood either ironically, or rather really, insinuating that Job was a man of such consummate wisdom and knowledge, that he would easily see the force of his reasonings, and the justness of them, and acquiesce in them; and having thus prefaced his discourse, he next enters upon his subject.

Ver. 5. Behold, God [is] mighty, etc.] This is a clear plain truth, easy to be discerned, and worthy of notice, and therefore introduced with a "behold"; that God is mighty, the most mighty, the Almighty, as appears from his works of nature and providence; making all things out of nothing, upholding them by the word of his power, and governing and overruling all things in the world, and doing in it whatever he pleases: and from the works of redemption and grace; ransoming his people out of the hands of them that are stronger than they; converting them by the power of his grace; assisting them to do all they do in a spiritual way; supporting them under all their troubles; protecting and defending them from all their enemies; supplying all their wants, and preserving them safe to his kingdom and glory; and despises not [any]; not the meanest of his creatures, clothing the grass of the field, feeding the fowls of the air, and preserving man and beast; and particularly he despises not any of the sons of men: not the mighty through fear of them, nor envy at them, whose power and grandeur are from him, which he gives and can take away at his pleasure; nor the mean and miserable the poor and the afflicted, to whom he has a merciful regard; much less the innocent and harmless, as the Septuagint; or the just and righteous man, as the Targum: he does not despise his own people, whom he has loved and chosen, redeemed and called; nor any, as Aben Ezra observes, without a cause; for though there are some whose image he will despise, it is because of their own sins and transgressions; and since, therefore, though he is mighty, yet despises not any of his creatures, he cannot do any unrighteous thing; he does not and cannot use or abuse his power to the in jury of any of his creatures;

[he is] mighty in strength [and] wisdom, as there is a pleonasm, a redundancy in the expression, "mighty in strength", it denotes the abundance of his strength, that he is exceeding strong, superlatively and all expression so; and also strong in wisdom, his strength is tempered with wisdom, so that he cannot employ it to any bad purpose, or be guilty of any unrighteousness. Some men have strength, but not wisdom to make a right use of it; but God abounds as much in wisdom as in strength; he is the only wise and the all wise God, and therefore can do no injustice; and thus Elihu, as he promised, ascribes righteousness to his almighty Maker.

Ver. 6. He preserveth not the life of the wicked, etc.] He makes a difference between wicked and righteous men, which shows him to be a holy and righteous God; though he preserves the life of all men so long as they live, yet not in the same way; he preserves the lives of wicked men in the common course of his providence, but not in a special way and manner, as he does the lives of the righteous, which are dear and precious to him; nor does he preserve to any great length such as are notorious sinners, who are guilty of capital crimes, as murder, etc. their lives are shortened, and they do not live out half their days: or he does not quicken them, bestow his spiritual favour upon them, in which only is life; and though they will be quickened and raised at the last day, as well as the righteous, yet not to the resurrection of life, but to the resurrection of damnation;

but giveth right to the poor; pleads their cause and rights their wrongs, administers justice to them, especially to the poor in spirit, who hunger and thirst after righteousness; to these he gives freely the righteousness of his son, which only denominates persons truly righteous: of whom in (<183607>Job 36:7).

Ver. 7. He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous, etc.] His eyes of providence are upon them to supply their temporal wants, and to protect and defend them from their enemies, and they are never off of them; his eyes of love, grace, and mercy, are upon them; he always viewed them as righteous in his Son, and through his righteousness imputed; and looked upon them with delight and pleasure, and always so views them; they are engraven on his heart and on his hands, and are ever before him, and in his sight: and his eyes are upon them from the beginning of the year to the end of it, yea, from one eternity to another; these were set upon them from everlasting, and are upon them in time; at the time of their conversion to quicken them, and call them by his grace; and afterwards they continue upon them under all their afflictions, temptations, and desertions, and ever will remain on them; they will never be withdrawn, nothing can separate them from the love of God;

but with kings [are they] on the throne; that is, either the eyes of the Lord are with them, even with righteous kings, as the Targum; to guide and direct them in the affairs of government, and to protect and preserve them from the designs of evil men: or the righteous are with kings on the throne, or are the favourites of kings that are on thrones; are admitted into their presence, and are highly esteemed by them, and have honour conferred on them, even to be the next to them in the throne and kingdom, as Joseph and Daniel, (<014141>Genesis 41:41 <270248>Daniel 2:48): or rather, the righteous are equal to kings on the throne; they are so accounted of by the Lord as kings; they are made by him kings and priests, and are regarded by him as such; they have the power, and riches, and honour of kings; they have a kingdom of grace bestowed on them now, and a kingdom of glory they are entitled to hereafter; and shall reign with Christ on earth a thousand years, and in the ultimate glory to all eternity, (<662006>Revelation 20:6);

yea, he doth establish them for ever; as righteous persons in their righteousness, which is an everlasting one; so that they shall never come into condemnation: they are established in the love of God, in the covenant of grace, in the hands of Christ, and in a state of grace now, and shall be in a stable permanent state of happiness to all eternity;

and they are exalted: now, being raised as beggars from the dung hill to sit among princes, even among the princes of God’s people; and they will be exalted hereafter, and sit at Christ’s right hand, and be introduced into his kingdom, where they will be set down with him in his throne, and reign with him for ever and ever, (<662205>Revelation 22:5).

Ver. 8. And if [they be] bound in fetters, etc.] Not the wicked, as the Targum, but the righteous spoken of in (<183607>Job 36:7), with which this is closely connected; and this is not to be understood of righteous kings on the throne in particular, or their special favourites, but of the righteous in general; and not in a literal sense, of their bonds and imprisonment for religion and righteousness sake, which is sometimes their lot; but in a figurative sense, of afflictions, as chastenings and corrections for sin, as appears by the next clause; and the design is to obviate an objection, and to show that the eye of God is upon them, and his heart towards them; and they are not the less objects of his love and delight, of his value and esteem, care and protection, though they are afflicted by him, and, as it may seem, used with some severity; seeing he has gracious ends and designs in all this, which are suggested in the following verses;

[and] be holden in cords of affliction; righteous men are not exempt from afflictions; the afflictions of the righteous are many, according to divine appointment, the covenant of grace, the declaration of God, the constant experience of good men, it being the way in which they are all led, and must enter into the kingdom; and the metaphor here used shows that afflictions are sometimes heavy upon them, like fetters and chains, and those made heavy by the hand of God pressing them sore, (<250307>Lamentations 3:7); no affliction is joyous, but grievous and heavy in itself; it is indeed comparatively light when viewed with the weight of glory; and God can make a heavy affliction light with his presence, and the discoveries of his love; but they are heavy to the flesh, as Job felt his to be, (<180602>Job 6:2,3,12 23:2,3); and, like fetters and cords, they cannot free themselves from them, or loose them, until it is the pleasure of God to take them off; and moreover by these they are sometimes held and restrained from going into more or greater sins, which is one use of them: as they are with afflictions hedged about that they cannot come out, any more than a person bound fast in a prison; so they are hedged up with thorns that they cannot go out after their lovers, (<250307>Lamentations 3:7) (<280206>Hosea 2:6). Some render the phrase, “cords of poverty”[f1232]; it is oftentimes the case of righteous persons to be poor, and to be sadly hampered with poverty, and out of which, by all that they can do, cannot extricate themselves; and sometimes they fall into it, and are held in it, after they have enjoyed much worldly prosperity, which was the case of Job. Mr. Broughton renders it, cords of anguish; and indeed the word for “cords” is used of the pains of a woman in travail, who has then great anguish and trouble; and anguish on various accounts lays hold on the righteous, and they are holden thereby, and cannot relieve themselves, (<19B9143>Psalm 119:143); and yet this is all in mercy, and to answer some good ends and purposes, as follow.

Ver. 9. Then he showeth them their work, etc.] Either what they ought to do, so the Tigurine version; and which they have not done, their sins of omission; when they have been negligent either of the duty of prayer in private and public, or of attendance on the ordinances of the house of God; then he sends an affliction, and by it, as in a glass, presents to their view the omissions they have been guilty of: or else the work which they have done, and should not have done, their sins of commission: sin is a work at which some toil and labour, and weary themselves to commit; it is a work of the flesh; and so it is in good men; it is a man’s own work, and which he can work of himself; to have a will, and to do good works, is owing to God working in his people, and it is through him strengthening them they do them; but sin fill works are their own act and deed, though tempted to them by others, and which they are able to do of their own freewill and power. Now God, in the glass of affliction, holds forth to view the sinful actions of good men, and brings them to their remembrance which they had forgotten; as the cases of Joseph’s brethren, David, and others, prove: the Lord shows them that they have done such actions, and shows them the evil of them, how exceeding sinful they are; and humbles them under a sense of them, and brings them to repentance for them, and the acknowledgment of them; which sense is confirmed by the next clause, which explains what this their work is,

and their transgressions that they have exceeded. Sin is a transgression of the law, (<620304>1 John 3:4); every sin, greater or lesser, is, and even righteous persons are guilty of many; for there is not a just man that sinneth not; and these exceed the bounds set by the righteous law of God, and many of them are sadly aggravated by the light and knowledge, grace and mercy, such have been favoured with; and some of them, they are suffered to fall into, are exceeding great and exceeding sinful; such as those of David, Peter, and others; all which they are made to see, bewail, and weep over, when God by afflictions brings them to a sense of them. Or “when” or “because they have prevailed”[f1233]; or begin to prevail: as soon as ever indwelling sin begins to be prevalent, the Lord is pleased to take measures to nip it in the bud, by sending a sharp and severe affliction; or when it has prevailed greatly, as sometimes it does, so that good is hindered from being done, and much evil is committed, then the soul is so much under the power of it, as to be carried captive with it; (see <450723>Romans 7:23,24). Or “because they are become proud”, or “behaved themselves proudly”[f1234]; and therefore he afflicts them to humble them, and drive pride from them.

Ver. 10. He openeth also their ear to discipline, etc.] Or “to correction” [f1235]; to the rod of correction; to hear the voice of it and him that has appointed it; its reproving voice for sin, its directing voice to duty, and its commanding voice to return from iniquity, as in the next clause. Or “to instruction”[f1236]; God’s corrections of his people being instructions to them, whereby they learn more of their duty, and of the rich experiences of grace; their faith, hope, love, and patience, are tried and increased hereby; and more of the love of God, of his care and faithfulness, of his covenant, of his gracious presence, and communion with God, what it is; and even of the doctrines of the everlasting Gospel: sometimes more is learned by an affliction than by a sermon. Now in order to hearken hereunto, to the voice of God in an affliction, the ear must be opened; which is first done in conversion by the mighty power of God: but sometimes good men fall asleep, and are inattentive to divine things; and this is one way God takes to awaken them, to arouse their attention; he speaks to them out of a whirlwind; he sends some terrible startling affliction, which fetches them out of their slumber, and so their ears are opened to hear what he says in it: at the noise of his waterspouts, and his billows one after another rolling over them, they are awakened to a sense of their sin and duty, (<194207>Psalm 42:7); and commandeth that they return from iniquity; repent of their sin, turn from it and forsake it: such a strong voice has an affliction in it, when sanctified and attended with the spirit and power of God; then it effectually teaches men to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, as the word of God, the Gospel of the grace of God does, when accompanied with the same; as there is a commanding voice in the one, so there is in the other; and happy it is when such ends as these are answered by afflictions.

Ver. 11. If they obey and serve [him], etc.] That is, God, to whom so many things are ascribed in the preceding verses; and who only is to be obeyed and served in a religious way, with the obedience of faith and love, in all his commands and ordinances. But here not so much obedience to his word, his law or Gospel, as to his rod is intended: “if they hear”, etc. [f1237]; hear the rod and him that has appointed it; hearken to his reproving, instructing, and commanding voice, in affliction; to his calls, cautions, and admonitions thereby given; and act according to them; humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and return from iniquity:

they shall spend their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures; which intimates, that those to whom afflictions are sanctified, and they obedient under them, when recovered out of them shall enjoy long life; not only live many days, but years, and those in great prosperity and pleasure; be blessed with much temporal prosperity, which lies in riches and wealth, as this word is rendered in (<182113>Job 21:13); and in bodily health, which is a considerable part of outward prosperity; but more especially prosperity of soul may be intended, (see <640102>3 John 1:2); which is enjoyed when a man is favoured with the discoveries of the love of God to him; with applications of pardoning grace and mercy; when grace is in lively exercise in him, and he has a spiritual appetite for the good word of God, and is fruitful in every good work: and so pleasures do not so much design corporeal pleasures, though ever so innocent and lawful; for though they may at proper times be indulged unto, yet a man’s days and years are not to be spent in them; but rather spiritual pleasures, which are had in views of the wonderful love of God in Christ; in the enjoyment of the gracious presence of God, and communion with him; and which the people of God are favoured with, in his house and ordinances, ways and worship: and when those years are gone, endless pleasures at God’s right hand, and in his presence, will follow.

Ver. 12. But if they obey not, etc.] Who seem to be righteous and are not; and when afflicted are not submissive to the will of God; attend not to the voice of his providence; receive no instruction thereby; but kick against the pricks, and rebel, against God; complain of him, and murmur at his dealings with them:

they shall perish by the sword; or they shall pass away out of the world by it, or by some missive weapon: they shall die a violent death, by the sword of justice, of the civil magistrate, or by the sword of men; or, as a Jewish commentator [f1238] paraphrases it, by the dart of death, by the sword of Satan, they shall pass out of this world; and they shall die without knowledge; without knowledge of their death being near, it coming upon them suddenly and at unawares; or without knowledge of themselves and of their miserable and lost estate; and without knowledge of Christ, and of God in Christ, and of the way of salvation by him. Or they shall perish for lack of knowledge; because they have none; through ignorance and that affected; they know not nor will they understand, but despise the means of knowledge, and hate instruction.

Ver. 13. But the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath, etc.] Or “and the hypocrites” [f1239]; for these are the same with the disobedient in (<183612>Job 36:12); who seem to be righteous, but are not; pretend to what they have not; have a double heart, (<191202>Psalm 12:2), or say one thing with their mouth, and mean another thing in their hearts; or with their mouths draw nigh to God, but their hearts are far from him, (<401508>Matthew 15:8); and so hypocrites, at least outwardly righteous before men, but inwardly full of wickedness, as the Pharisees were, whom our Lord often calls hypocrites, (<401507>Matthew 15:7 16:3 22:18): these “put” or add wrath, as Aben Ezra interprets it; they increase the wrath of God; or, as we express it, heap up wrath; or, to use the apostle’s phrase, treasure up wrath against the day of wrath: though some understand it of the wrath of the hypocrites against God for afflicting them; so Jarchi. When afflictions come upon them, they reproach and blaspheme; they are angry with God and are wrathful, and quarrel at his dealings with them: “they put the nose”[f1240]; so it may be literally rendered; they erect that against God, and point it at him in a proud, haughty, wrathful, and contumacious manner; they cry not when he bindeth them; in fetters and cords of affliction, (<183608>Job 36:8); or when he corrects them, as Mr. Broughton rightly as to the sense renders it: they pray not, as Ben Gersom interprets it; whereas sanctified afflictions bring good men to the throne of grace, who have been too long absent from it: but these men cry not unto God for grace and mercy, help, assistance, and deliverance; they cry out against God, but not unto him.

Ver. 14. They die in youth, etc.] They, or “their soul”[f1241]; which, though that dies not, being immaterial and immortal; yet being the principal part of man, is put for the whole person, and which being taken away, the body dies. All men must die, but all do not die at an age; there is a common term of human life, (<199010>Psalm 90:10); some few exceed it, multitudes arrive not to it; such who die before it may be said to die in youth; it seems to signify premature and untimely death: the word signifies an “excussion”, or violent shaking out; and the Vulgate Latin version is, “in a tempest”; in a tempest of divine wrath, and in a storm in their consciences, (<182720>Job 27:20). Jarchi interprets it by suffocation or strangling; and their life [is] among the unclean: all men are by nature unclean, and all that is in them; some are more notoriously and openly so than others, who give themselves over to lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness; such as whoremongers and fornicators, of whom Mr. Broughton understands those unclean persons; or Sodomites, of whom the word is sometimes used, (<052317>Deuteronomy 23:17). And this may be understood either of the present life of hypocrites before they die; who are unclean persons themselves, whatever show of purity they make, and love to live and converse, at least privately, if not openly, with unclean persons, and die while they live with such and in their sins: or of their life after death; for wicked men live after death; their souls live in hell, and their bodies at the resurrection will be raised to life, and be reunited to their souls, and both together will live in endless punishment; and the life of hypocrites will be among such; as is a man in life, so he is at and after death; if filthy, filthy still; and such will have no admittance into the heavenly state, and with such impure ones, hypocrites will live for ever, (<66210>Revelation 21:8,27 22:15).

Ver. 15. He delivereth the poor in his affliction, etc.] The righteous or godly poor; who are not only poor in worldly things, but poor in spirit; who are humbled, brought low, and made contrite, through the afflicting hand of God: these, though the Lord does sooner or later deliver "out" of their afflictions, yet that is not intended here, but a deliverance "in" them; which is done by supporting them under them, by supplying them with his grace to bear them patiently, by granting them his gracious presence for their comfort in them, by stilling the enemy and the avenger, keeping Satan from disturbing them, and freeing them from doubts and fears and unbelief, and by drawing their hearts and affections off of the world, and the things of it, to himself; and openeth their ears in oppression; while they are oppressed; not only to discipline, correction, and instruction, (<183610>Job 36:10); but to hear comfortable words spoken, to them by the Lord; who, in the midst of their affliction and oppression, whispers in their ears, and tells them how he loves them, though they are rebuked and chastened by him; how he has chosen them to everlasting life and happiness, though now in the furnace of affliction; that he is their covenant God and Father, and knows and owns their souls in adversity that he has pardoned all their sins, though he takes vengeance on their inventions; and in a little time will free them from all their afflictions and oppressions.

Ver. 16. Even so, etc.] Here Elihu accommodates what he had said to the case of Job; that had he hearkened and been obedient to the voice of God in his rod, and had submitted to his chastening hand, and patiently bore his afflictions; would have removed thee out of the strait [into] a broad place, where [there is] no straitness: that is, out of the strait circumstances in which he was, into liberty; would have brought him into a large place, where he might walk at liberty, as David experienced, (<190401>Psalm 4:1 18:19 119:45); and may be understood both in a temporal and spiritual sense. In a temporal sense; he was now in great straits, in poverty and affliction; these pressed him hard on every side, so that his way, as he says, was "fenced up, that he could not pass”, (<181908>Job 19:8). Now had he been rightly humbled under his affliction, God would have taken him out of the straits of adversity, and set his feet in a large room of prosperity; (see <193107>Psalm 31:7,8). In a spiritual sense; persons are as in a strait place and pent up, when they cannot come forth in the free exercise of grace and duty; their souls are as it were in prison, they are shut up, and have not freedom with God nor man; their faith is ready to fail, their hope is sunk very low, they are straitened in their own bowels or affections, in their love to God and his people: and then they are removed into a large place, when it is the reverse with them; when they are favoured with the free spirit of the Lord, for where he is there is liberty; and when their hearts are enlarged with the love of God, and in the exercise of grace; and then they can run cheerfully the ways of his commandments;

he, God,

and that which should be set on thy table [should be] full of fatness; which in a temporal sense denotes, that he should have had a plentiful table, spread with the best of provisions, the richest dainties, the finest of the wheat, and the fattest of the creatures; and these should rest and remain upon his table, or be constantly renewed there: and in a spiritual sense, that his soul should have been satisfied with the love of God, shed abroad in his heart; with the blessings of the everlasting covenant of grace applied unto him; and with the goodness of the house of God, his word and ordinances, as with marrow and fatness; (see <196305>Psalm 63:5 36:8).

Ver. 17. But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked, etc.] Some [f1242] take this to be a continuation of the happiness Job would have enjoyed, had he behaved in his affliction as he ought to have done; then he would have been filled to satisfaction, by seeing the judgments of God exercised on wicked men, as on the Chaldeans and Sabeans, who had injured him: “and judgment and justice would have upheld thee”; when they should be cast down. But these words rather seem to be expressive of his present state, and the reason of it, he not being sufficiently humbled: and the sense is, not that he had lived a vicious course of life, as the wicked do, and filled up the measure of his wickedness as they; and so deserved to be filled with the like judgments as inflicted on them. Mr. Broughton reads the words, but rather the meaning is, that he had “fulfilled the contention of the wicked” [f1243]; pleaded as they did, argued with God after their manner: and therefore is said to go in company and walk with them, and make answers for them, (<183408>Job 34:8,36). Wherefore justice and judgment take hold [on thee]; afflictions in righteousness, or the chastening hand of God, in righteous judgment, had taken hold upon him, and would hold him until he was sufficiently humbled under them.

> “as thou hast fulfilled the sentence of the wicked, sentence and judgment have laid hold:”

Ver. 18. Because [there is] wrath, etc.] Either wrath in Job, so some; indignation and impatience under the afflicting hand of God, expressed by cursing the day of his birth, and by his angry pleadings with God: and therefore Elihu advises him to beware of it, and check this impetuous spirit; cease from his anger and forsake wrath, and fret not himself to do evil, and provoke the Lord to take him away at once, and then his case would be irretrievable. Or rather wrath in God, which is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. His vindictive and punitive justice, to revenge and punish wickedness, the effects of which are sometimes awful judgments on men in this life; and eternal vengeance hereafter, called wrath to come: this is laid up in store with him, and sealed up in his treasures, prepared in his purposes and decrees, is revealed in his law, and breaks forth in various instances; (see <041646>Numbers 16:46). And there is an appearance of wrath, a little wrath, which is no other than love displeased, in the afflictions and chastisements of God's people, and might be perceived by Job: and this being the case, Elihu advises him to lest he take thee away with [his] stroke; out of the world by death, which is the stroke of his hand; and is sometimes given suddenly, and in an awful manner, in wrath and vengeance. Some render the last word, "with clapping of hands"[f1244]; either the hands of men, (<182723>Job 27:23); or of God; expressing his exultation and pleasure at the death of such a person, laughing at his calamity, and mocking when fear cometh; which is dreadful and tremendous;

[beware]; which, though not expressed in the original, is well supplied; and his meaning is, that he would be cautious of what he said, and not go on to multiply words against God; speak unbecomingly of him, arraign his justice, and find fault with his dealings with him; as well as beware of his actions, conduct, and behaviour, that his tongue and his doings be not against the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his glory;

then a great ransom cannot deliver thee: there is no ransom on earth equal to the life or soul of man; "what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

(<401626>Matthew 16:26); (see <194906>Psalm 49:6-8). The great ransom of all is the ransom of Christ, which Elihu had made mention of before, (<183324>Job 33:24); and what else could he have in his mind now? This is the ransom found by infinite wisdom, which Christ came to give, and has given; and by which he has ransomed his people from him that is stronger than they, from the bondage of sin, of Satan, of the world, of hell and death, and everlasting destruction: and this is a great one, plenteous redemption, a great salvation; the ransomer is the great God and our Saviour; the ransom price is not corruptible things, as silver and gold, but the precious blood of Christ, his life, yea, he himself. How great must this ransom be! and it is given for great sinners, the chief of them; and is sufficient for all the elect of God, both Jews and Gentiles: and yet, as great as it is, it is of no avail to one that God has taken away by a stroke out of this world, and sent to everlasting destruction; not through want of sufficiency in this ransom, but by reason of the final and unalterable state of such persons; as, even in the present life, it is of no avail to the deniers and despisers of it, (<581026>Hebrews 10:26-29).

Ver. 19. Will he esteem thy riches? [no], not gold, nor all the forces of strength.] Riches can be of no account, nor bear any weight with God; for they are of him and come from him, and what he has a right to take away and dispose of as he pleases. These cannot ward off the stroke of death, or secure from it; nor can a man possessed of them carry them with him into the other world; nor will they profit in the day of wrath. Mr. Broughton renders it, “will he esteem thy nobleness?” so Junius and Tremellius; thy noble birth, rank and station, thou hast had among men? Not at all. God is no respecter of persons; he regards not the noble and the rich more than the poor: and as for gold, the same may be said of that, which, though the most valuable among men, is of no esteem with God; and besides it is his: “the gold is mine”, says he, “and the silver is mine”, (<370208>Haggai 2:8). Nor is death to be bribed with it, or put off by it; nor is a “munition” [f1245] fortress or castle, as some render the word, any defence against it: “nor all the forces of strength”. Had a man at his command ever such numerous and powerful armies, they could not protect him from the stroke of death, or deliver him from eternal punishment, the demerit of sin. Though as Job had no riches, no gold, nor troops of soldiers about him; nor was there any great likelihood that this would be his case at death; I should think the words might be better rendered, “will he regard thy cry? no, not in distress; not even the most strong and forcible” cries or entreaties: when the stroke of death is given, the sentence of wrath is passed, and eternal destruction takes place; weeping and wailing will signify nothing: the cries and howlings of the damned in hell are of no avail; their strong cryings, and most intense and earnest entreaties, will have no effect on the Lord; though he is a God of great pity and compassion, and has sympathy with his people in distress, and in all their afflictions is afflicted; yet will have no regard to cries and tears, when the decree is gone forth and carried into execution: the verb from whence the first word is derived is used for "crying" in this chapter, (<183613>Job 36:13); and the Targum renders it here by supplication and petition; so some other Jewish writers [f1246] interpret it of crying: and the second word is by several rendered "in straits" [f1247] and distress; and Cocceius has observed the notion of intense and fervent prayer in the third, and renders the whole pretty near to what has been observed [f1248].

Ver. 20. Desire not the night, etc.] Either in a literal sense, which Job might do; not for secrecy to commit sin, as the thief, murderer, and adulterer do; Elihu had no such suspicion of Job; nor for ease and rest, which he expected not; nor would his sores admit thereof; his nights were wearisome, and when come he wished they were gone, (<180702>Job 7:2-4); but either for retirement, that he might muse and consider, and endeavour to search and find out the reason of God's dealing with men, in cutting off sometimes such great numbers together. Elihu suggests, that such a search was altogether vain and to no purpose; he would never be able to find out the reason of these things: or rather for shelter from the eye and hand of God; as nothing before mentioned could ward off his stroke, so neither could the night or darkness preserve from it; (see <19D911>Psalm 139:11,12). Or else the words may be taken in a figurative sense; either of the night of calamity and distress, he might be tempted to desire and wish for, to come upon his enemies; or rather of the night of death, he wished for himself, as he often had done; in doing which Elihu suggests he was wrong; not considering that if God should take him away with a stroke, and he not be humbled and brought to repentance, what would be the consequence of it; when people are cut off in their place; as sometimes they are in the night, literally taken; just in the place where they stood or lay down, without moving elsewhere, or stirring hand or foot as it were. So Amraphel, and the kings with him, as Jarchi observes, were cut off in the night, the firstborn of Egypt, the Midianites and Sennacherib's army, (<011415>Genesis 14:15 <021230>Exodus 12:30 <070709>Judges 7:9 <121935>2 Kings 19:35); and so in the night of death, figuratively, the common passage of all men, as Mr. Broughton observes, who renders the words, “for people’s passage to their place”.

Ver. 21. Take heed, regard not iniquity, etc.] Not any iniquity, as to show any approbation of it, love for it, and desire after it. All appearance of sin, of every sin, is to be abstained from; but particularly by the iniquity here meant may be the sin of impatience under his affliction; murmuring at the dealings of God with him; arraigning his justice, and saying very indecent things of him, as in (<183405>Job 34:5 35:2). Or it may mean the evil he had been guilty of in so earnestly desiring the night of death:

for this thou hast chosen rather than affliction; chose rather to die than to be afflicted as he was; or chose rather to complain of God, as if he dealt hardly with him, and did not do justly by him, than to submit patiently to the will of God, as he, ought to have done: or this he chose “through affliction” [f1249]; through the force of it, because of it, and by means thereof; and so is a sort of excuse that Elihu makes for him; though at the same time he would have him by no means to regard such iniquity, and indulge to it.

Ver. 22. Behold, God exalteth by his power, etc.] He exalts himself, or causes himself to be exalted, and even above all the blessing and praise of his creatures; by his power, in the works of creation and providence, he makes such a display of his glorious perfections, as to set him on high, and out of the reach of the highest praises of men. He exalts his Son as Mediator, and has made him higher than the kings of the earth, (<540205>1 Timothy 2:5 <580915>Hebrews 9:15); he exalts him as a Prince and a Saviour, (<440531>Acts 5:31), to give repentance and remission of sins to his people, and to be the Judge of quick and dead, (<441042>Acts 10:42 <550401>2 Timothy 4:1). He has exalted the human nature of Christ to the grace of union to the Son of God: and exalted him in this nature at his right hand, far above all principality and power, (<490121>Ephesians 1:21): he exalts men in a civil sense, who are in a low estate, and raises them to a very high one; promotion is alone of him, he sets up and puts down at pleasure. In a spiritual sense, he exalts men when he brings them out of a state of nature into an open state of grace; brings them out of the horrible pit, and sets their feet upon the rock Christ Jesus; takes them as beggars from the dunghill, and places them among princes, even the princes of his people; admits them to communion with himself, puts and keeps them in his favour, as in a garrison; and at last causes them to inherit the throne of glory, (<090208>1 Samuel 2:8). He exalts men, when he sets the poor on high from affliction, and brings them out of adversity into prosperity; and which is what may be chiefly intended here; let a man he brought as low as may, God can by his power, if he will, raise him up again. And this may be said for the comfort and encouragement of Job, in his present circumstances: and so Aben Ezra interprets it, as he afterwards did. The Targum is, who teacheth like him? He teaches by his providences, adverse as well as prosperous; he teaches by his word and ordinances; he teaches by his Spirit and grace, and none teaches like him. Ministers of the word teach men both doctrine and duty, but not like him; they have their gifts for teaching, their wisdom and knowledge, their doctrine, and all the use they are of, from him; none teach so pleasantly, so profitably, so powerfully and effectually, as he does: the Targum adds, > “right things?”

> “God will exalt thee;”

> “behold, God alone is strong in his might;”

(see <192113>Psalm 21:13);

Ver. 23. Who hath enjoined him his way? etc.] He teaches men his own ways, the methods of his grace and mercy towards them; and he prescribes to them the ways in which they should walk; but none can lead or prescribe to him; as the way of governing the world, in what manner he should act in it; who has “taught him in the path of judgment?” or “showed to him the way of understanding?” (<234014>Isaiah 40:14); and particularly whom he should afflict, in what manner he should do it, when and how long he should continue it; all which he does according to his sovereign will, and is not to be controlled: and, in a spiritual sense, no man can or ought to enjoin and prescribe to him whom he should save, and in what way; he saves whom he pleases, and in his own way, even by his Son Jesus Christ, and no other; or “who hath visited”, or “should visit on him”, or “with him his way”[f1250]? who can take upon him to examine into his ways, and scrutinize them, and call him to an account for what he does? no man can overlook his ways and works, or censure him for any of his actions:

or, who can say, thou hast wrought iniquity? this may be said of every man, but it cannot be said of God by any without sin; for, as there is no iniquity in his nature, there can be none in his works; not any in his works of providence, no, not in the afflictions of his people; just and true are all his ways.

Ver. 24. Remember that thou magnify his work, etc.] Or his works; his works of creation and providence, which are great in themselves, and declare the greatness of God; and which, though they cannot be made greater than they are, men may be said to magnify them when they ascribe them to God, and magnify him on account of them; when they think and speak well of them, and give glory to God: and particularly by his work may be meant the chastisement of his people, which is a rod in his hand, which he appoints, and with which he smites; it is his own doing, and he may do what he pleases this way; and it becomes his people to be still and patient because he does it; and then do they magnify this work of his, when they bear it patiently, quietly submit to it, and humble themselves under the mighty hand of God;

which men behold: for the works of God are visible, particularly the works of creation, and the glory of God in them; which men of wisdom and understanding behold with admiration and praise; and so the Targum is, and some derive the word here used from a root which signifies to “sing”, and so may be understood of men’s celebrating the works of God in songs of praise; though his work here may chiefly design the afflictions he lays on his people, and particularly which he had laid upon Job, which were so visible, and the hand of God in them was so clearly to be seen, that men easily beheld it and took notice of it.

> “which righteous men praise;”

Ver. 25. Every man may see it, etc.] Not only was to be seen by the wise and learned, the just and good, but by the common people; whether it is to be understood of the works of creation, or of the afflictive providences of God in general, or of Job’s afflictions in particular;

man may behold [it] afar off; as to time, from the creation of the world to the present time, as Jarchi; or as to place, from the heaven, so distant, where are the sun, moon, and stars; and which, though so far off, are easily beheld; or as to the manner of seeing them, not darkly, imperfectly, and in a confused manner, as things at a distance are seen, so some understand it;

but rather clearly and plainly, as things easy to be seen are clearly discerned at a distance; and it signifies that the work of God here meant is so visible, that he must be quite blind and stupid that cannot see it; it may be seen, as it were, with half an eye, and a great way off; he that runs may see and read.

Ver. 26. Behold, God [is] great, etc.] In his power and might, in his wisdom and knowledge, in his truth and faithfulness, in his love, grace, and mercy, and that to admiration; and it is worthy of notice and attention, which the word “behold”, prefixed hereunto, is expressive of: or is “much” or “many”[f1251]; as he is in his persons: for though his essence is one, his persons are more, they are three, Father, Son, and Spirit; in his perfections, of which there is a fulness; in his thoughts, counsels, purposes? and decrees, which respect other persons and things; in his works of creation, providence, and grace, and in the blessings of his goodness, which are so many as not to be reckoned up; and we know [him] not; God is to be known by the works of creation, and even by the very Heathen; though such is their inattention to them, that they are said not to know God; yea, even the wisest among them, by all their wisdom, knew not God, (<460121>1 Corinthians 1:21); for though they might know there was a God, they knew not who and what he was. God is known by his word among those who are favoured with a divine revelation of him, and especially by true believers in Christ, who know God in Christ, whom to know is life eternal; and yet these know but in part, there is no finding out the Almighty to perfection; God is not known clearly, fully, and perfectly, by any: or “we know [it] not”; the greatness of God; he is great, but we know not how great he is; his greatness is beyond all conception and expression; neither can the number of his years be searched out; years are ascribed to God, after the manner of men, otherwise, properly speaking, they are not applicable to him; by which time is measured, and which belongs not to the eternal God; however, the number of his years in an eternity past, and of those to come, cannot be searched out and reckoned up: it requires no great skill in arithmetic to reckon up the years of the oldest man that ever lived; yea, the months, the days, the hours, and minutes, of his life may be counted; but the years of the Most High cannot; this is a phrase expressive of the eternity of him which is, and was, and is to come, and who from everlasting to everlasting is God. He was before the world was, as the creation of it out of nothing shows. Jehovah the Father had a Son, and he loved him before the foundation of the world, and all his people in him; he made an everlasting choice of them in him, before the world began; he made an everlasting covenant with them in him, and gave them grace in him as early as that; he set him up as Mediator from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was; and will be the everlasting and unchangeable portion of his people to all eternity. Cocceius thinks that these words are expressive of the constant love of God to the church, and the continuance of his kingdom in it; and of his most fixed purpose of love to men, and indefatigable care of them.

Ver. 27. For he maketh small the drops of rain, etc.] Elihu proceeds to give instances and proofs of the greatness of God, and begins with rain, as Eliphaz does, (<180509>Job 5:9,10); a common phenomenon, what is very frequent, and well known in all ages and countries, and by all men, more or less; and yet there are some things relative to it which are beyond the comprehension of men, and show the greatness and incomprehensibleness of God: and the design of this, and all other instances of this kind, is to convince Job of his folly in searching out the causes and reasons of God's works of providence, when the common works of nature lie out of the reach of men; and to reconcile him to them, and bring him patiently to submit to the will of God, whose ways are past finding out; and some render the words, "he restrains the drops of rain" [f1252]; he withholds it from the earth, which causes a drought, and so brings on a famine; others, "he subtracts", or draws out, or draws up, the drops of water [f1253], which he exhales by the heat of the sun out of the earth and out of the sea; (see <19D507>Psalm 135:7) (<300508>Amos 5:8); and which are drawn up in small particles, but form large bodies of waters in the clouds; and which are let down again upon the earth in small drops, in an easy and gentle manner, and so soak into the earth and make it fruitful; which is what is meant by our version here: this is a wonderful instance of God's power, wisdom, and goodness, and is beyond our comprehension; for no mortal man can tell how the Almighty parts and divides those large quantities of water in the clouds, that sometimes hang over our heads, into millions and ten thousand times ten thousand millions of drops, even innumerable; and causes these waters in such a manner to descend on the earth; lets them not fall at once, or in waterspouts, which would wash away the inhabitants of cities and towns, the cattle of the field, and the produce of the earth, as at the general deluge;

they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof: the water, drawn up and formed into large bodies in the heavens, pours down rain in a gentle and plentiful manner, according to the quantity of vapours exhaled out of the earth and sea; if a small quantity is drawn up, a small quantity is let down; and if a large quantity is attracted, a large quantity, or a plentiful shower, is given: some think that a small rain is meant in the preceding clause, and a great rain in this; for there is the small rain and the great rain of his strength, (<18376>Job 37:6). The word translated “pour” has the signification of liquefying, melting, and dissolving, and of purging and purifying; and which is applicable to clouds which melt and dissolve gradually as they descend in drops upon the earth; and the water which they let down is of all the most clear and pure, as Galen and Hippocrates [f1254], those eminent physicians, have observed; and a late celebrated one tells us [f1255], that rain water is so truly distilled by nature, that the chemist, with all his distilling art, cannot produce purer water; for, though it is exhaled out of the dirty earth, out of miry places, bogs, and ditches, yet, being bound up in the clouds as in a garment, and passing through the atmosphere, it comes down to us pure as if it had been percolated or strained through a linen cloth; and though the water as drawn up out of the sea is salt, yet carried up into the air, and there, as in an alembic, distilled, it descends to us sweet and fresh, and has not the least brackishness in it.

Ver. 28. Which the clouds do drop [and] distil upon man abundantly.] Not upon the persons of men, which they take care as much as possible to shun and avoid, but upon the fields of men, and so for the profit and advantage of men; and this denotes both the gentle manner in which the clouds let down rain, and the liberal profusion of them; they let it down both in an easy and plentiful manner, and upon an abundance of men, or upon an abundance of fields and lands belonging to men; though sometimes rain falls upon the wilderness, where no man is, (<18826>Job 38:26). The Targum is, or at the prayer of a man that has great interest with God; that is famous for his faith and piety, as Elijah was, to whom perhaps the Targumist may have respect. The rain is an emblem of the word of God, the Gospel of Christ, which drops and distils on the souls of men like rain, and refreshes them, and makes them fruitful; and is dispensed by the ministers of it, who are compared to clouds, according to the measure of the gift of grace received by them, and that freely and fully as they have received it.

> “at the prayer of a son of a great man,”

Ver. 29. Also can [any] understand the spreadings of the clouds, etc.] Or "of a cloud" [f1256], a thick cloud, a single one; which sometimes at the beginning is very small, about the size of a man's hand, (<111844>1 Kings 18:44); and which in a little time spreads all over the heavens, and covers them with black clouds and darkness; none can understand, describe, and tell by what means so small a cloud at first appearance is spread to such a prodigious extent; and which is done partly for the use of God himself, to be a pavilion or tent around him, (<191811>Psalm 18:11 97:2); and partly for the use of men, either to let down ram on the several parts of the world, or to be a sort of an umbrella to men, to shelter them from scorching heat; nor can any understand how the clouds, stretched out to such a compass, are poised and balanced in the air, so as to retain their position as long as it is the pleasure of God; (see <183716>Job 37:16). Ben Gersom, who is followed by others [f1257], interprets this of the differences of the clouds, which are unaccountable, as to the form and colour of them being curious, and the matter which they contain or what issues from them; out of some rain, others hail, others snow and sleet, others wind, others thunder and lightning; and yet all arise from the same, even from vapours exhaled from the earth and sea; some become moist and cold, others hot and dry. As clouds are emblems of Gospel ministers, (<230506>Isaiah 5:6); this may lead us to observe the different gifts of grace bestowed on them, and the different uses they are of; some are Boanergeses, sons of thunder, (<410317>Mark 3:17); others Barnabases, sons of consolation, (<440436>Acts 4:36); and the extent of the Gospel ministry all over the world, which first began as a small cloud over the land of Judea, and then was spread throughout the Gentile world;

[or] the noise of his tabernacle; the tabernacle of God, which are the clouds, which are laid as the flooring of his palace, and are drawn about him as a tent or pavilion, (<19A403>Psalm 104:3 18:11), where he sits invisible, and from whence, as a general of an army, he issues out his orders, and sends forth his artillery, rain, hail, snow, thunder, and lightning, and stormy wind fulfilling his word; the noise hereof is either the noise of the waters in the clouds, the sound of an abundance of rain, (<111841>1 Kings 18:41); or of the blustering winds, by which the clouds are moved and portend rain; or of the thunder that bursts out of them with a vehement noise, and which is usually followed with rain; and the thunder of his power who can understand? (<182614>Job 26:14). This may be an emblem of the voice of God in his Gospel out of his tabernacle, the church, which the natural man understands not; or the voice of God in his providences, in which he speaks to men once and twice, and they perceive it not.

Ver. 30. Behold, he spreadeth his light upon it, etc.] Upon his tabernacle; that is, upon the clouds, which are his tabernacle; either the light of the sun, whereby the clouds are dispersed and blotted out; an emblem of the blotting out of sin, or the forgiveness of it, (<234422>Isaiah 44:22), which is like a clear shining after rain, (<102304>2 Samuel 23:4), or on a thin cloud, whereby the rainbow is formed, an emblem of peace and reconciliation by Christ; or lightning, which bursting out of the dark cloud is spread over it, when it seems to be all in flames. Cocceius renders it, "he spreads the light about himself"; God spreads it about himself, clothing himself with light as with a garment, and dwelling in light inaccessible to men: or he "spreads [it] upon him", upon man; causing his sun to shine on the just and unjust; or on it, the earth; so it was spread when first commanded to shine out of darkness, with which the earth in its primeval state was covered; and so it is spread every morning upon the earth; as soon as day breaks, the morning is spread upon the mountains, and in a short time it overspreads the whole hemisphere; an emblem this of the spread of the light of grace over the dark hearts of men, in conversion, which are like the earth in its chaotic state, or as in the night season covered with darkness; out of which they are called and brought by the grace of God, having the true light sprung and placed in their souls; which at first is but glimmering, and at best imperfect in the present state, yet is spreading and increasing, (<200418>Proverbs 4:18); and of the spread of the great and glorious light of the Gospel in the world, in the times of the apostles, and as it will be in the latter day glory; and covereth the bottom of the sea, or "the roots of the sea"[f1258]; though one would think they should be rather covered with water and with darkness, as they are; (see <183808>Job 38:8-10 <231109>Isaiah 11:9). This is to be understood either of the light of the sun, and the rays of it, which are so piercing and penetrating as to reach to the bottom of the sea, and cover it and exhale waters out of it; or of lightning, which is equally as piercing and penetrating, or more, and strikes to the very roots of the sea, and covers them, or rather discovers them, so that the channels of waters are seen, and the foundations of the world are discovered, (<191814>Psalm 18:14,15); the Targum of this verse is, and the rain is called light according to Ramban, because by the descent of it the day is enlightened, and the darkness of the clouds removed; and by this means the bottom of the sea is covered, so that it passes its bounds and covers the rocks, that is, the borders of it, as others explain it [f1259].

> "he spreads upon it rain, and covers the rocks or foundations of the sea;"

Ver. 31. For by them judgeth he the people, etc.] That is, by the clouds; which the Lord uses both in a way of judgment, as expressed in this clause; and in a way of mercy, as in the following; by these, and what issue out of them, as rain, hail, winds, thunder, and lightning, he sometimes punishes the inhabitants of the earth, as he did the old world by a deluge of water, which came partly from the fountains of the great deep, and partly from the windows of heaven, which destroyed man and beast, and the increase of the earth, (<010711>Genesis 7:11,23); he punished the Egyptians by a violent storm of hail, (<020923>Exodus 9:23); and slew many of the Canaanites with hailstones, (<061011>Joshua 10:11); Pharaoh and his host sunk like lead when he blew with his wind, (<021510>Exodus 15:10); and Sodom and Gomorrah, with the cities of the plain, were destroyed with thunder and lightning, fire and brimstone, from heaven, (<011924>Genesis 19:24); as the army of the Philistines were discomfited by thunder in the times of Samuel, (<090710>1 Samuel 7:10); and the captains of fifties, with their men, were consumed by lightning in the times of Elijah, (<120114>2 Kings 1:14); and as the heavens and the earth will be burnt with fire at the end of all things, (<401340>Matthew 13:40) (<610312>2 Peter 3:12);

he giveth meat in abundance; very plentifully, or to a multitude of creatures, both men and cattle; who have a liberal supply of food by means of the clouds and rain, which falling upon the earth make it fruitful, so that it gives bread to the eater, and seed to the sower; causes grass to grow up for the beasts of the field, and produces bread corn, oil, and wine, for the benefit of men; an emblem of the variety and plenty of spiritual food dispensed to the churches of Christ, through the ministry of the word, and by the ministers of it.

Ver. 32. With clouds he covereth the light, etc.] Either the lightning, which is hid and covered in the black dark cloud until it bursts out of it; or the light of the sun, which is wonderful, that waters naturally clear and transparent, when formed into clouds, should obstruct the rays of the sun and darken it; (see <263207>Ezekiel 32:7); and thus it was in the storm and tempest the Apostle Paul was in many days, which was so thick and dark, that the sun and stars did not appear of a long time, (<442720>Acts 27:20); and commandeth it [not to shine], by [the cloud] that cometh betwixt; that is, commands the sun that it shines not, or hinders it from shining, by reason of the intervening clouds; this is an emblem of sin interposing between God and his people, which causes him to hide his face from them and not shine upon them: sins are comparable to clouds for numbers, being more than can be told; and for their nature and quality, like clouds they rise out of the earthly and carnal heart of man; and which is also like a troubled sea which cannot rest; and which reach up unto heaven and bring down wrath and vengeance from thence on wicked men; and in God’s own people, like the clouds they intercept the light of his countenance, the bright shining of the sun of righteousness, the comfort, peace, and joy of the Holy Spirit: the words may be rendered, “with hands he covers the light, and commands [that it shine not] by [reason of] what comes between”: and they are understood by some, as by Schmidt particularly, of the eclipses of the sun and moon, when God as it were covers them with hands, and suffers them not to shine by intervening bodies; so the eclipse of the sun is occasioned by the moon’s coming between that and the earth, and the eclipse of the moon by the interposition of the earth between that and the sun; the Targum is, who comes between and intercedes for a sinful people, as Elijah did; or, as others, he commands the lightning that it harms not because of him that comes between and intercedes with his prayers.

> “because of rapine of hands he restrains rain, and commands it to descend because of him that prays,”

Ver. 33. The noise thereof showeth concerning it, etc.] The rain, that it is coming; it is a presage and prognostic of it, namely, the noise of the clouds in the air, the sound of abundance of rain there; or the noise of the winds, which is often a forerunner of it: or the noise of thunder when rain frequently follows, (<241013>Jeremiah 10:13);

the cattle also concerning the vapour; that is, the cattle likewise show signs of rain, being sensible of the vapours which rise up out of the earth, and are drawn up into the air and form clouds there; these, through their sharp sight, discern the vapours rising out of the earth insensible by men; or by their quick smell [f1260] or taste discern them, these leaving some tincture upon the grass they are feeding on; and which occasion some motions and gestures in them by which husbandmen, and those that are accustomed to them, know that the rain is at hand: and there are various things observable in brutes, fowls, and cattle, and other creatures, which are signs of approaching rain; as the cawing of crows, the croaking of frogs, the flying about of cranes and swallows, the motion of ants, the retire of cattle to places of shelter, and the like; Aben Ezra observes that sheep lying on their right side portends rain; the above things with others are most beautifully expressed by Virgil [f1261] and which with many others are collected together by Pliny [f1262]; and though there are various interpretations given of this passage, this seems to be the most agreeable, and which suits with our version; unless the following, which I only propose, should be more eligible, “he”, that is, God, “by [it]”, the rain, “declares his good will” to men, likewise to “the cattle, [and] also towards what rises up” out of the earth, the herbs and plants; all which receive much benefit by the clouds and rain.

CHAPTER 37

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 37

Elihu in this chapter proceeds to show the greatness of God as it appears in other of his works of nature, which greatly affected him, and to an attention to which he exhorts others, (<183701>Job 37:1,2); particularly thunder and lightning, the direction, extent, and order of which he observes, (<183703>Job 37:3,4); and then suggests that besides these there are other great things done by him, incomprehensible and unknown in various respects; as the snow, and rain, lesser and greater, which come on the earth at his command, and have such effect on men as to seal up their hands, and on the beasts of the field as to cause them to retire to their dens, and there remain, (<183705>Job 37:5-8); and then he goes on to take notice of wind, and frost, and the clouds, and dispersion of them; their use and ends, whether in judgment or mercy, (<183709>Job 37:9-13); and then calls on Job to consider these wondrous works of God, and remark how ignorant men are of the disposition of clouds for the rainbow; of the balancing of them; of the heat and quietness that come by the south wind, and of the firmness of the sky, (<183714>Job 37:14-21); and from all this he concludes the terrible majesty, unsearchable nature of God, the excellency of his power and justice; and that men therefore should and do fear him, who is no respecter of persons, (<183721>Job 37:21-23).

Ver. 1. At this also my heart trembleth, etc.] At the greatness and majesty of God, not only as displayed in those works of his before observed, but as displayed in those he was about to speak of: such terrible majesty is there with God, that all rational creatures tremble at it; the nations of the world, the kings and great men of the earth, and even the devils themselves, (<236402>Isaiah 64:2 <243309>Jeremiah 33:9 <590219>James 2:19). Good men tremble in the worship of God, and at the word of God; and even at the judgments of God on wicked men, and at the things that are coming on the churches of Christ. But Elihu has a particular respect to thunder and lightning, which are very terrible to many persons [f1263], both good and bad [f1264]. At the giving of the law, there were such blazes of lightning and claps of thunder, that not only all the people of Israel in the camp trembled, but Moses himself also exceedingly feared and quaked, (<021916>Exodus 19:16 <581221>Hebrews 12:21). It is very probable, that at this time Elihu saw a storm gathering, and a tempest rising; some flashes of lightning were seen, and some murmurs[f1265] of thunders heard, which began to affect him; since quickly after we read that God spoke out of the whirlwind or tempest, (<183801>Job 38:1); and is moved out of his place; was ready to leap out of his body. Such an effect had this phenomenon of nature on him; as is sometimes the case with men at a sudden fright or unusual sound, and particularly thunder[f1266].

Ver. 2. Hear attentively the noise of his voice, etc.] Of the voice of God in the clouds; and of thunder, which is his voice, (<184009>Job 40:9). Elihu being affected with it himself, exhorts the company about him to hearken and listen to it, and learn something from it; and the sound [that] goeth out of his mouth: as the former clause may have respect to loud thunder, a more violent crack or clap of it; so this may intend some lesser whispers and murmurs of it at a distance; or a rumbling noise in the clouds before they burst; since the word is sometimes used for private meditation. Now the voice of God, whether in his works of nature, or in the dispensations of his providence, or in his word; whether in the thunder of the law, or in the still sound of the Gospel, is to be attentively hearkened to; because it is the voice of God, the voice of the God of glory, majestic and powerful, and is attended with various effects; of which (see <192903>Psalm 29:3-9).

Ver. 3. He directeth it under the whole heaven, etc.] His voice of thunder, which rolls from one end of the heaven to the other: he charges the clouds with it, and directs both it and them where they shall go and discharge; what tree, house, or man, it shall strike; and where the rain shall fall when the clouds burst: yet Pliny[f1267] atheistically calls thunder and lightning chance matters. Thus the ministers of the word, who are compared to clouds, (<230506>Isaiah 5:6), are charged with it by the Lord: they are directed by him what they shall say, where they shall go and declare it, and he directs where it shall fall with power and weight; yea, he directs it into the very hearts of men, where it pierces and penetrates, and is a discerner and discoverer of their thoughts and intents; and his lightning unto the ends of the earth: it cometh out of the east, and shineth to the west, (<402427>Matthew 24:27); and swiftly move to the further parts of the earth: and such a direction, motion, and extent, has the Gospel had; the glorious light of it, comparable to lightning, it first broke forth in the east, where Christ, his forerunner and his disciples, first preached it, and Christian churches were formed; and from thence it spread into the western parts of the world, and before the destruction of Jerusalem it was preached unto all nations; it had a free course, ran, and was glorified; the sound of the voice of it went into all the earth, and the words and doctrines of the apostles unto the ends of the world.

Ver. 4. After it a voice roareth, etc.] After the lightning comes a violent crack or clap of thunder, which is like the roaring of a lion. Such is the order of thunder and lightning, according to our sense and apprehension of them; otherwise in nature they are together: but the reasons given why the lightning is seen before, and so the same in the flash and report of a gun, are, because the sense of seeing is quicker than the sense of hearing[f1268]; and the motion of light is quicker than that of sound; which latter is the truest reason[f1269]. The roaring voice of thunder may be an emblem of the thunder of the law; its dreadful volleys of curses, vengeance, and wrath on the breakers of it, as delivered out by Boanergeses, sons of thunder, (<411317>Mark 3:17): or the loud proclamation of the Gospel, made by the ministers of it; and the alarming awakening sound of the word, when attended with the Spirit and power of God, to sinners asleep and dead in trespasses and sins; upon which they awake, hear, and live;

he thundereth with the voice of his excellency: that is, God thunders with such a voice, an excellent and majestic one; for his voice of thunder is full of majesty, (<192904>Psalm 29:4). So is the voice of Christ in the Gospel; he spake when on earth as one having authority, and he comes forth and appears in it now with majesty and glory; and speaks in it of the excellent things which he has done, of the excellent righteousness he has wrought out, of the excellent sacrifice he has offered up, and of the excellent salvation he is the author of;

and he will not stay them when his voice is heard; either the thunder and the lightning, as some; which he does not long defer after he has given out the decree concerning them, the order and disposition for them: or rather the rain and hail; these are not stayed, but quickly follow the flash of lightning and clap of thunder: “for when he utters his voice [of thunder], there is a multitude of waters in the heavens”; and these quickly come down and are not stopped, (<241013>Jeremiah 10:13). The word for “stay” signifies “to supplant”, or “act deceitfully”; the name of Jacob is derived from this root, because he supplanted his brother, (<012526>Genesis 25:26); and so it may be rendered here, “he will not supplant”, or “deceive them [f1270], when his voice is heard”: that is, either he does not subvert them, the heavens and earth, but preserves them; though he makes them to tremble with his voice of thunder [f1271]: or he does not act the part of a secret, subtle, and deceitful enemy, when he thunders; but shows himself openly as a King, executing his decrees with authority [f1272]: or rather he deceives none with his voice; none can mistake it; all know it to be the voice of thunder when it is heard: so Christ’s sheep know his voice in the Gospel, and cannot be deceived; the voice of a stranger they will not follow, (<431004>John 10:4,5,27).

Ver. 5. God thundereth marvellously with his voice, etc.] Or “marvels” [f1273], or marvellous things, which may respect the marvellous effects of thunder and lightning: such as rending rocks and mountains; throwing down high and strong towers; shattering to pieces high and mighty oaks and cedars, and other such like effects, mentioned in (<192905>Psalm 29:5-9); and there are some things reported which seem almost incredible, were they not well attested facts; as that an egg should be consumed thereby, and the shell unhurt; a cask of liquor, the liquor in it spoiled, and the cask not touched; money melted in the purse, and the purse whole; the fetus in the womb killed, and the woman preserved; with other things of the like kind mentioned by various writers [f1274]; and which are to be accounted for only by the swift motion and piercing and penetrating nature of lightning. So the voice of God in the Gospel thunders out and declares many wonderful things; as the doctrines of the trinity of Persons in one God; of the everlasting love of the three Persons; of the Person of Christ, and the union of the two natures in him; of his incarnation, of redemption and salvation by him; of regeneration by the spirit of God; of union to Christ, and communion with him; and of the resurrection of the dead: and it produces marvellous effects, attended with a divine power; as quickening sinners dead in trespasses and sins; enlightening those who are darkness itself; bearing down all opposition before it; casting down the strong holds of sin and Satan, and reducing the most stubborn and obstinate to the obedience of Christ; great things doth he, which we cannot comprehend; or “know” [f1275]: great things in creation, the nature and causes of which lie greatly out of the reach of man; and which he rather guesses at than knows, and still less comprehends. Great things in providence; in sustaining all creatures and providing for them; and in the government of the world, and in his dispensations in it; his judgments being unsearchable, and his ways past finding out: and great things in grace; as the salvation of sinners by Christ, and the conversion of their souls by his Spirit; and even what is known of them is known but in part and very imperfectly. This is a transition to other great things done by the Lord, besides those before mentioned, and particular instances follow.

Ver. 6. For he saith to the snow, be thou [on] the earth, etc.] In the original it is, be thou earth: hence one of the Rabbins formed a notion, that the earth was created from snow under the throne of glory, which is justly censured by Maimonides[f1276]; for there is a defect of the letter b, as in (<143430>2 Chronicles 34:30); as Aben Ezra observes; and therefore rightly supplied by us, on the earth. This is one of the great and incomprehensible things of God. What is the cause of it, how it is generated, what gives it its exceeding whiteness and its form, we rather guess at than certainly know; and there are some things relative to it not easy to be accounted for: as that it should be generated in the lower region of the air, so near us, and yet be so cold; and be so cold in its own nature, yet be like a blanket warming to the earth; and that being so cold, it should fall in hot countries, as in many parts of Africa, as Leo Africanus asserts[f1277]; and though so easily melted, yet lies continually upon the top of a burning mountain, Mount Etna, as observed by Pineda and others. God has his treasures of it, and he brings it forth from thence; it is at his command, it goes at a word speaking; it is one of the things that fulfil his word, (<19E808>Psalm 148:8). And if what Pliny[f1278] says is true, that snow never falls upon the high seas or main ocean, the expression here is, with great exactness and propriety, be thou on the earth. However, this is certain, that to the earth only it is useful, warming, refreshing, and fructifying; it has a wonderful virtue in it to fatten the earth. Olaus Magnus[f1279] reports, that in the northern countries, where it falls in great plenty, the fields are more fruitful than any others, and sooner put forth their fruits and increase than other fields prepared and cultivated with the greatest labour and diligence: and that they are often obliged to drive off the cattle from them, lest they should eat too much and burst, the fields and meadows becoming so luxurious by it; and frequently they mow off the tops of herbs and grass with their scythes, to prevent their growing too thick. The word of God, as for its purity, so for its warming, refreshing, and fructifying nature, is compared unto it, (<235510>Isaiah 55:10,11);

likewise to the small rain, and to the great rain of his strength: that is, God says to these as to the snow, be upon the earth; and they presently are, whether lesser or larger showers: the lesser or more gentle, according to Seneca[f1280], fall in, the winter, and the larger in spring; the former when the north wind blows, the latter when the south; but whenever they come, they fall by the direction of God, and at his command. He and he only gives rain, the vanities of the Gentiles cannot; and these are sent to water and refresh the earth, and make it fruitful; for which reason also the word of God is compared thereunto, (<053212>Deuteronomy 32:12 <235510>Isaiah 55:10,11). The Targum is,

> “to the rain after rain in summer, to ripen the fruits; and to the rain after the rain, to cause the grass to bud in winter in his strength.”

So a shower of rain in the singular number signifies rain that falls in summer; and a shower of rain in the plural what falls in winter.

Ver. 7. He sealeth up the hand of every man, etc.] That is, by deep snows and heavy rains being on the earth; where, as travellers are stopped in their journeys, and cannot proceed, so various artificers are hindered from their work, and husbandmen especially from their employment in the fields; so that their hands are as it were shut up and sealed, that they cannot work with them. Sephorno interprets this of the fruits and increase of the earth being produced and brought to perfection by means of the snow and rain, and so gathered by and into the hands of men; whereby they are led to observe the work of God and his goodness herein, and so to love and fear him; which he takes to be the sense of the following clause, that all men may know his work; either their own work; what they have to do at home when they cannot work abroad; or that they may have leisure to reflect upon their moral ways and works, and consider how deficient they are: or rather the work of God; that they may know and own the snow and rain are his work, and depend upon his will; or that they may have time and opportunity of considering and meditating on the works of God, in nature, providence, and grace. Some choose to read the words, “that all men of his work may know”[f1281]; may know him the author of their beings, and the God of their mercies. For all men are the work of his hands; he has made them, and not they themselves; and the end of all God’s dealings with them is, that they may know him, fear, serve, and glorify him.

Ver. 8. Then the beasts go into dens, etc.] When snow and rains are on the earth in great abundance, then the wild beasts of the field, not being able to prowl about, betake themselves to dens; where they lie in wait, lurking for any prey that may pass by, from whence they spring and seize it; and remain in their places; until the snow and rains are finished. As for other beasts, Olaus Magnus[f1282] observes, that when such large snows fall, that trees are covered with them, and the tender branches bend under the weight of them, they will come and abide under them, as in shady places, in great security, sheltered from the cold wind. The former may put us in mind of great personages, comparable to beasts of prey for their savageness and cruelty, who, when the day of God’s wrath and vengeance is come, will flee to rocks and mountains, dens and caverns, there to hide themselves from it; (<660615>Revelation 6:15-17).

Ver. 9. Out of the south cometh the whirlwind, etc.] Or “from the chamber”[f1283]; from the chamber of the cloud, as Ben Gersom, from the inside of it; or from the treasury of God, who bringeth the wind out of his treasures; alluding to chambers where treasures are kept; or from the heavens, shut up and veiled around with clouds like a pavilion: but because we read of the chambers of the south, (<180909>Job 9:9); and the southern pole was like a secret chamber, shut up, unseen, and unknown very much to the ancients; hence we render it, and others interpret it, of the south; from whence in these countries came whirlwinds. Hence we read of the whirlwinds of the south, (<232101>Isaiah 21:1 <380914>Zechariah 9:14); and cold out of the north; cold freezing winds from thence; or “from the scatterers”[f1284]: Aben Ezra interprets them of stars, the same with the “Mazzaroth”, (<183832>Job 38:32); stars scattered about the Arctic or northern pole, as some: or rather the northern winds are designed which scatter the clouds, drive away rain, (<202523>Proverbs 25:23); and bring fair weather, (<183722>Job 37:22). Wherefore Mr. Broughton renders the word, and, in a marginal note,

> “fair weather winds;”

> “the scatterers of clouds[f1285].”

Ver. 10. By the breath of God frost is given, etc.] By the word of God, as the Targum; at his command it is, at his word it comes, and at his word it goes, (<19E715>Psalm 147:15-18); or by his will, as Ben Gersom interprets it, when it is his pleasure it should be, it appears; it may be understood of a freezing wind from the Lord, for a wind is sometimes expressed by the breath of his nostrils, (<191815>Psalm 18:15); and as the word "God" added to things increases the signification of them, as mountains of God are strong mountains; so the breath of God may signify a strong wind, as Sephorno notes, the north wind [f1286];

and the breadth of the waters is straitened; by the frost they are reduced and brought into a narrower compass; or made hard, as Mr. Broughton renders it; so hard as to walk upon, to draw carriages on, and lay weights and burdens very great upon; or become compact or bound together, like metal melted, poured out, and consolidated; though some think it refers to the thawing of ice by the south winds [f1287], when the waters return to their former breadth; which is done by the breath or commandment of God, as appears from the place before quoted from the psalmist, (<191815>Psalm 18:15); for it may be rendered, "and the breadth of the waters is pouring out", so the Targum, when thawed; or through the pouring down of rain, so the Syriac and Arabic versions, "he sends forth plenty of water".

Ver. 11. Also by watering he wearieth the thick cloud, etc.] By filling it with a multitude of water, it is as it were loaded and made weary with it; and especially by sending it about thus loaded from place to place before discharged, when it becomes as a weary traveller; and then by letting down the water in it, whereby it spends itself like one that is weary; an emblem of ministers that spend and are spent for the good of men: some render it by serenity or fair weather, and so Mr. Broughton, by causing a clear sky he dispels them;

> "by clearness he wearieth the thick vapours;"

he scattereth his bright cloud; thin light clouds that have nothing in them, and are soon dispersed and come to nothing, and are seen no more; all emblem of such as are clouds without water, (<650112>Jude 1:12); (see <381117>Zechariah 11:17); or "he scatters the cloud by his light" [f1288]; by the sun, which dispels clouds and makes a clear sky; an emblem of the blotting out and forgiveness of sins, and of restoring the manifestations of divine love, and the joys of salvation; (see <234422>Isaiah 44:22).

Ver. 12. And it is turned round about by his counsels, etc.] The cloud is, and that by the wind, which is turned about to all points of the compass, according to the will of God; by the counsels of him who sits at the helm, as the word signifies, and orders all things according to the counsel of his own will: to which owing every shifting of the wind, and the various motions of the clouds; that they may do whatsoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth; as all his creatures do; the several meteors in the air, clouds, stormy wind, fire, hail, snow, and vapour, all fulfilling his word; and which they do everywhere in the several parts of the world whither they are sent, (<19A725>Psalm 107:25-29 148:1-14). So ministers of the word drop down or withhold the rain of Gospel doctrine, and carry it into the several places of the world, as the Lord directs them; (see <230506>Isaiah 5:6 <441346>Acts 13:46 <402819>Matthew 28:19,20).

Ver. 13. He causeth it to come, etc.] The cloud, and rain by it;

whether for correction; for the reproof and chastisement of men for their sins, by suffering such quantities to fall as wash away, or corrupt and destroy, the fruits of the earth: or “for a tribe” [f1289], as the word sometimes signifies; the rain is sent, and comes only to a particular part or spot of ground, to one city and not to another, (<300407>Amos 4:7);

or for his land; some particular land he has a favour for, as the land of Canaan he cared for from one end of the year to another, and therefore sent on it rain in due season, though as yet it did not appear to be the object of his peculiar regard; or for the whole earth, which is his; and wherever rain comes seasonably and in proper quantity, it is for the benefit of it; though some think the land which no man has a property in but the Lord is meant, even the wilderness where no man is, (<183826>Job 38:26,27);

or for mercy; to some particular spot, and to some particular persons; and indeed it is a kindness and benefit both to good and bad men; hereby the earth is watered and made fertile and fruitful, to bring forth seed to the sower and bread to the eater, (see <400545>Matthew 5:45 <441417>Acts 14:17); the word of God is for the correction of some, and for the comfort of others, (<550316>2 Timothy 3:16); yea, the savour of death unto death to some, and the savour of life unto life to others, (<470216>2 Corinthians 2:16). The Targum paraphrases the words,

> “either a rain of vengeance on the seas and deserts, or an impetuous rain on the trees of the mountains and hills, or a still rain of mercy on the fruitful fields and vineyards.”

Ver. 14. Hearken unto this, O Job, etc.] Either to the present clap of thunder then heard; or rather to what Elihu had last said concerning clouds of rain coming for correction or mercy; and improve it and apply it to his own case, and consider whether the afflictions he was under were for the reproof and correction of him for sin, or in mercy and love to his soul and for his good, as both might be the case; or to what he had further to say to him, which was but little more, and he should conclude;

stand still; stand up, in order to hear better, and in reverence of what might be said; and with silence, that it might be the better received and understood:

and consider the wondrous works of God; not prodigies and extraordinary things, which are out of the common course of nature, such as the wonders in Egypt, at the Red sea, in the wilderness, and in the land of Canaan, but common things; such as come more or less under daily observation, for of such only he had been speaking, and continued to speak; such as winds, clouds, thunder, lightning, hail, rain, and snow; these he would have him consider and reflect upon, that though they were so common and obvious to view, yet there were some things in them marvellous and beyond the full comprehension of men; and therefore much more must be the works of Providence, and the hidden causes and reasons of them.

Ver. 15. Dost thou know when God disposed them? etc.] The clouds, that part of the wondrous works of God he was speaking of; when he decreed concerning them that they should be, when he put into them and stored them with rain, hail, snow, etc. disposed of them here and there in the heavens, and gave them orders to fall on this and the other spot of ground; wast thou present at all this, and knew what God was doing secretly in the clouds, and before heard what would break out of them, or fall from them? and if thou art ignorant of these things, canst thou imagine that thou shouldest be made acquainted with the secret springs of God’s providential dealings with the children of men?

and caused the light of his cloud to shine; either the lightning to break through the cloud, or rather the light of the sun to shine upon his cloud, prepared to receive the light reflected on it, and form the rainbow; which, as it is called his bow, the cloud in which it is may be called his cloud; which is one of the wondrous works of God, and is called by the Heathens the daughter of wonder[f1290]; formed in a semicircle, with various colours, and as a token that God will drown the earth no more; an emblem of the covenant of peace, and of Jesus Christ, said to be clothed with a cloud, and with a rainbow about his head, (<661001>Revelation 10:1).

Ver. 16. Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds? etc.] How those ponderous bodies, as some of them are very weighty, full of water, are poised, and hang in the air, without turning this way or the other, or falling on the earth;

the wondrous works of him which is perfect in knowledge; of God, who is a God of knowledge, of knowledges, (<090203>1 Samuel 2:3); who knows himself and all his works, all creatures and things whatever, (see <183604>Job 36:4); and this is another of his wondrous works, which none but he, whose knowledge is perfect, and is the author and giver of knowledge, can know, even the poising and balancing of the clouds in the air; we see they are balanced, but we know not how it is done.

Ver. 17. How thy garments [are] warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south [wind]?] One should think there is no great difficulty in accounting for this, that a man’s clothes should be warm, and he so hot as not to be able to bear them, but obliged to put them off in the summer season, when only the south wind blows, which brings heat, a serene sky, and fine weather, (<421255>Luke 12:55); and yet there is something in the concourse of divine Providence attending these natural causes, and his blessing with them, without which the garment of a man will not be warm, or at least not warming to him, (<370106>Haggai 1:6); or as Mr. Broughton renders the words; that is, how it is when the earth is still from the whirlwinds of the south; or when that wind does not blow which brings heat, but northerly winds in the winter time; that then a man’s garments should be warm, and keep him warm.

> “how thy garments are warm when the land is still from the south,”

Ver. 18. Hast thou with him spread out the sky? etc.] Wast thou concerned with him at the first spreading out of the sky? wast thou an assistant to him in it? did he not spread it as a curtain or canopy about himself, without the help of another? verily he did; (see <180908>Job 9:8) (<234424>Isaiah 44:24);

[which] is strong: for though it seems a fluid and thin, is very firm and strong, as appears by what it bears, and are contained in it; and therefore is called “the firmament of his power”, (<19F001>Psalm 150:1);

[and] as a molten looking glass; clear and transparent, like the looking glasses of the women, made of molten brass, (<023808>Exodus 38:8); and firm and permanent[f1291]; and a glass this is in which the glory of God, and his divine perfections, is to be seen; and is one of the wondrous works of God, made for the display of his own glory, and the benefit of men, (<191901>Psalm 19:1). Or this may respect the spreading out a clear serene sky, and smoothing it after it has been covered and ruffled with storms and tempests; which is such a wonderful work of God, that man has no hand in.

Ver. 19. Teach us what we shall say unto him, etc.] To this wonder working God, of whose common works of nature we know so little; how we should reason with him about his works of Providence, when we know so little of these:

[for] we cannot order [our speech] by reason of darkness; by reason of darkness in themselves, which is in all men naturally, and even in the saints in this state of imperfection; and by reason of the clouds and darkness which are about the Lord himself, who is incomprehensible in his nature and perfections; and by reason of the darkness cast about his providential dealings with men, so that they are unsearchable and past finding out; and the best of men are at a loss how to order their speech, or discourse with God concerning these things.

Ver. 20. Shall it be told him that I speak? etc.] And what I speak? there is no need of it, since he is omniscient, and knows every word that is spoken by men; or is anything I have said concerning him, his ways, and his works, worthy relating, or worthy of his hearing, being so very imperfect? nor can the things I have spoken of, though common things, be fully explained to any; or should it be told him, the Lord, that he, Elihu, had spoke as Job had done, and arraigned his justice, and complained of his dealings? God forbid; he would not have it said they were spoken by him for all the world: or "shall it be recorded unto him what I speak?" as Mr. Broughton, or that I speak; shall it be recorded in a book, and that sent to God; that I will speak in thy cause, and be an advocate for thee, and endeavour to justify thee in all thou hast said? no, by no means;

if a man speak, surely he shall be swallowed up; if he speaks of the being and perfections of God, he is soon lost; his essence, and many of his attributes, are beyond his comprehension; if he speaks of his works of nature and providence, he is presently out of his depth; there is a bathos, a depth in them he cannot fathom: if he speaks of his love, and grace, and mercy, in the salvation of man, he is swallowed up with admiration; he is obliged to say, what manner of love is this? it has heights he cannot reach, depths he cannot get to the bottom of, lengths and breadths immeasurable: or should he undertake to dispute with God, to litigate a point with him concerning his works, he could not answer him in one thing of a thousand; and particularly Elihu suggests, was he to undertake Job's cause, it would soon be lost and all over with him; so Mr. Broughton renders the words, "would any plead, when he should be undone?" who would engage in a cause he is sure would be lost, and prove his utter undoing?

Ver. 21. And now men see not the bright light which [is] in the clouds, etc.] Here Elihu returns to his subject, it may be, occasioned by black clouds gathering in the heavens, as a preparation for the whirlwind, storm, and tempest, out of which the Lord is said to speak in the next chapter. And this is to be understood, not of the lightning in the cloud, which is not to be seen until it breaks out of it; nor the rainbow in the cloud, formed by the rays of light from the sun, which disappears when the wind passes and clears the sky of the cloud in which it is; nor of the Galaxy, or Milky Way, as Sephorno, which is not to be seen in a cloudy night; but of the sun, which is the great light and a bright one, and shines brightly; yet sometimes not to be seen by men, because of interposing clouds, until they are cleared away by winds. Though rather this respects the sun shining in its brightness, and in its full strength, in the skies or ethereal regions, in a clear day, when men are not able to look full at it: and how much less then are they able to behold him who is light itself, and in whom is no darkness at all, nor shadow of turning; who dwells in light, which no mortal can approach unto; into whose nature and perfections none can fully look, or behold the secret springs of his actions, and the reasons of his dispensations towards men?

but the wind passeth and cleanseth them; the clouds, and clears the air of them, which obstruct the light of the sun: or "when a wind passeth and cleareth it"; the air, as Mr. Broughton, then the sun shines so brightly that it dazzles the eye to look at it.

Ver. 22. Fair weather cometh out of the north, etc.] Or "gold"[f1292], which some understand literally; this being found in northern climates as well as southern, as Pliny relates[f1293]; particularly in Colchis and Scythia, which lay to the north of Palestine and Arabia; and is thought by a learned man[f1294] to be here intended: though to understand it figuratively of the serenity of the air, bright and pure as gold, or of fair weather, which is golden weather, as Mr. Broughton renders it, seems best to agree with the subject Elihu is upon; and such weather comes from the north, through the north winds, which drive away rain, (<20523>Proverbs 25:23); with God [is] terrible majesty; majesty belongs to him as he is King of kings, whose the kingdom of nature and providence is; and he is the Governor among and over the nations of the world. His throne is prepared in the heavens; that is his throne, and his kingdom ruleth over all: and this majesty of his is “terrible”, commanding awe and reverence among all men, who are his subjects; and especially among his saints and peculiar people; and strikes a terror to others, even to great personages, the kings and princes of the earth; to whom the Lord is sometimes terrible now, and will be hereafter; (see <197612>Psalm 76:12) (<660615>Revelation 6:15-17); and to all Christless sinners, especially when he comes to judgment; (see <230219>Isaiah 2:19 <470511>2 Corinthians 5:11). Or “terrible praise” [f1295]; for God is “fearful in praises”, (<021511>Exodus 15:11); which may respect the subject of praise, terrible things, and the manner of praising him with fear and reverence, (<19A622>Psalm 106:22 2:11).

> “through the north the golden cometh,”

Ver. 23. [Touching] the Almighty, etc.] Or with respect to God, who is almighty; with whom nothing is impossible; who can do and does do all things he pleases, and more than we can ask or think; and who is all sufficient, as this word is by some rendered; has enough of every thing in himself and of himself to make him happy; and needs not any of his creatures, nor anything they can do or give him, but has a sufficiency for himself and them;

we cannot find him out; found he may be in his works, and especially in his Son, the express image of his person; in whom he makes himself known as the God of grace: but he is not to be found out to perfection; neither by the light of nature, which is very dim, and by which men grope after him, if haply they may find him; nor even by the light of grace in the present state: and there are many things in God quite out of the reach of man, and ever will be, fully to comprehend; as the modes of the subsistence of the three Persons in the Godhead; the eternity and immensity of God; with all secret things, which belong not to us to inquire curiously into;

[he is] excellent in power; or great and much in it; which is displayed in the works of creation and sustentation of the world; in the redemption and conversion of his people; in the support, protection, and preservation of them; and in the destruction of his and their enemies; and in judgment; in the government of the world in so righteous a manner; in the judgments he executes on wicked men; and as he will appear to be in the general judgment of the world, at the great day, which will be a righteous one;

and in plenty of justice; being most just, righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works; distributing justice to all, acting according to the rules of it, in all things and towards all persons; so that though he is great in power, he does not abuse that power, to do things that are not just;

he will not afflict; without a just cause and reason for it; nor willingly, but with reluctance; nor never beyond deserts, nor more than he gives strength to bear; and only for the good of his people, and in love to them. Some render it, “he will not answer” [f1296]; or give an account of his matters, or the reason of his dealings with men.

Ver. 24. Men do therefore fear him, etc.] Or should, because of his greatness in power, judgment, and justice; and because of his goodness, in not afflicting for his pleasure’s sake, but for the profit of men; and therefore they should reverence and adore him, submit to his will, patiently bear afflictions, serve him internally and externally, with reverence and godly fear;

he respecteth not any [that are] wise of heart; that are wise in a natural sense: these are not always regarded by God, or are his favourites; neither temporal blessings, nor special grace, or the knowledge of spiritual things, are always given to the wise and prudent, (<210911>Ecclesiastes 9:11 <401125>Matthew 11:25). Or that are wise in their own conceit; there is a woe to such; and there is more hope of a fool than of him, (<230521>Isaiah 5:21 <202612>Proverbs 26:12). Or he is not “afraid” of them [f1297], as some choose to render the word; he fears not to reprove them and correct them for their faults, or the schemes they form to counterwork him; for he can take them in their craftiness, and carry their counsel headlong. Or “every wise in heart shall not see him” [f1298]: the world by wisdom knows him not; nor can any look into his heart, his thoughts, purposes, and designs, and into the causes and reasons of his actions; nor have those that are truly wise perfect vision and knowledge of him now, (<461309>1 Corinthians 13:9,12).

CHAPTER 38

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 38

In this chapter the Lord takes up the controversy with Job; calls upon him to prepare to engage with him in it, and demands an answer to posing questions he puts to him, concerning the earth and the fabric of it, (<183801>Job 38:1-7); concerning the sea, compared to an infant in embryo, at its birth, in its swaddling bands and cradle, (<183808>Job 38:8-11); concerning the morning light, its spread and influence, (<183812>Job 38:12-15); concerning the springs of the sea, the dark parts of the earth, the place both of light and darkness, (<183816>Job 38:16-21); concerning the various meteors, snow, hail, rain, thunder, lightning, and the influences of the stars, (<183822>Job 38:22-38); and concerning provision for lions and ravens, (<183840>Job 38:40,41).

Ver. 1. Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, etc.] As soon as Elihu had done speaking, who saw the tempest rising, and gave hints of it, (<183702>Job 37:2,14); and hastened to finish his discourse. This was raised to give notice of the Lord being about to appear, and to display his majesty, and to command reverence and attention. The Targum calls it the whirlwind of distress, as it might be to Job; and a representation of the distressed and disturbed state and condition in which he was. The person that spoke out of it is Jehovah the Son of God, the eternal Word, who very probably appeared in an human form; there was an object seen, (<184205>Job 42:5); and spoke with an articulate voice to Job; and said; in answer to his frequent wishes and desires that the Lord would appear and take his cause in hand.

Ver. 2. Who [is] this, etc.] Meaning not Elihu the last speaker, as some think; and there are some who suppose not only that these words are directed to him, but all that is said in this and the following chapter: but it was Job the Lord spoke to and answered, as expressed in (<183801>Job 38:1); and these words are taken by Job to himself, (<184203>Job 42:3). Concerning whom the Lord inquires, not as ignorant of him, who he was; but wondering that such a man as he should talk as he did; and as angry with him, and rebuking him for it;

that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? either his own counsel, his sense and sentiments of things, which were delivered in such an obscure manner as not to be intelligible by those that heard them; whereby they were led, as Job’s friends were, into some mistaken notions of him: or rather the counsel of God, his works of providence, which are done according to the counsel of his will, and were misrepresented by Job, as not being wise and good, just and equitable; (see <183403>Job 34:3,5,37).

Ver. 3. Gird up now thy loins like a man, etc.] Like a man of valour that girds on his harness for battle: Job is bid to prepare for the controversy the Lord was entering into with him; and bring forth his strong reasons and most powerful arguments in his own defence. The allusion is to the custom in the eastern countries, where they wore long garments, to gird them about their loins, when they engaged in work or war. Job had blustered what he would do, and now he is dared to it; (see <182304>Job 23:4-6 31:37); for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me; put questions to him, to which he required a direct and positive answer. Jehovah takes the part of the opponent in this dispute, and gives that of the respondent to Job; since Job himself had put it to his option which to take, (<181322>Job 13:22).

Ver. 4. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? etc.] The earth has foundations, and such firm ones that it cannot be moved; but what are they, since it is hung in the air on nothing! No other than the power and will of God, who laid these foundations, and the Son of God, who has created and upholds all things by the word of his power, (<580103>Hebrews 1:3,10). Where was Job then? In a state of nothingness, a mere nonentity: he was not present when this amazing work of nature was done, and saw not how the Lord went about it; and yet takes upon him to dive into the secret works and ways of Providence, for which he is rebuked by this question and the following; declare, if thou hast understanding: Job had the understanding of a man in things natural and civil, and of a good man in things spiritual and divine; but he had no understanding of this, of what he is questioned about; could not declare in what place he was, and where he stood, when the earth was founded.

Ver. 5. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? etc.] Did God or a creature? The Lord, no doubt. He laid them out in his divine mind, and laid them forth by his divine power; who does all things by weight and measure. He fixed the dimensions of the earth, how long, how thick, and how broad it should be; he settled the borders and boundaries of it. This Job might know that the Lord did; but he laid them, and what they are that are laid, he knew not. Mathematicians pretend to give us the circumference and diameter of the earth; but in their accounts are not agreed, but widely differ; which shows they are at no certainty about them [f1299]; and Job and the men of his age might be still less knowing: though the words may be rendered, “for thou knowest” [f1300]; surely such a knowing man as thou art must needs know this and so are a severe sarcasm upon him; or who hath stretched the line upon it? The measuring line being formed according to rule, with exact symmetry and proportion. This may be the same with the circle of the earth, and the compass set upon the face of the deep or terraqueous globe, (<200827>Proverbs 8:27 <234022>Isaiah 40:22). And with the same exactness and just proportion are the ways and works of Providence, which Job ought to have acquiesced in as being well and wisely done.

Ver. 6. Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? etc.] Or the pillars of it, as Ben Gersom interprets it; (see <197503>Psalm 75:3); and which Aben Ezra understands of the mountains: but be they what they may, on what can they be fastened or sunk into, when the earth hangs on nothing, and there is nothing visible to support it, nothing but the mighty hand of God?

or who laid the corner stone thereof? which unites, cements, and keeps the fabric together, and is the ornament and beauty of it; but who can tell what that is? Aben Ezra interprets it of the point or centre of the earth.

Ver. 7. When the morning stars sang together, etc.] Either all the stars in a literal sense; for though, strictly speaking, there is but one morning star, yet all may be called so, because early created in the morning of the world; and are all stars of light, shine till the morning; and it is observed by some, that the nearer the morning the brighter they shine: and these in their way sing the praises of God, and set forth the glory of his perfections, and occasion songs of praise in men; (see <19E803>Psalm 148:3 19:1). Or figuratively, either angels, as most interpret them, comparable to stars for their glory, purity, and light, for their constancy, permanency, and numbers: or good men, particularly ministers of the word, and angels of the churches; who are stars in Christ’s right hand, (<660120>Revelation 1:20 2:1); but the principal morning star is Christ himself, (<662216>Revelation 22:16);

and all the sons of God shouted for joy; which are usually understood of angels also, so the Targum; who are the sons of God, not by birth, as Christ, nor by adoption, as saints; but by creation, as Adam, (<420338>Luke 3:38). And because they bear some likeness to God, as holy spirits, and honour and obey him in doing his will; though the character of sons of God, as distinct from the children of men, given to professors of religion, obtained before the times of Job; (see <010602>Genesis 6:2); and who might be said to sing together, and shout for joy, when they met for social worship; (see <180106>Job 1:6); and especially when any fresh discoveries were made to them of the Messiah, and salvation by him. Thus Abraham, one of these sons of God, saw Christ’s day and was glad, and shouted for joy, (<430856>John 8:56). For these words are not necessarily to be restrained to the laying of the foundation and cornerstone of the earth, as our version directs; though indeed the angels then might be present, being created as soon as the heavens were, and with the stars, as Capellus on this place observes; and rejoiced, when the foundations of the earth were laid, on beholding such a display of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God therein; and which may be said of them, in allusion to what is done at the laying of the foundation of any building of note; (see <150310>Ezra 3:10); for it may be repeated from (<183804>Job 38:4); “where wast thou when the morning stars”, etc. and so may refer to any rejoicing, whether of angels or men, before the times of Job, at which he was not present.

Ver. 8. Or [who] shut up the sea with doors, etc.] From the earth the transition is to the sea, according to the order of the creation; and this refers not to the state and case of the sea as at the flood, of which some interpret it, but as at its first creation; and it is throughout this account represented as an infant, and here first as in embryo, shut up in the bowels of the earth, where it was when first created with it, as an infant shut up in its mother’s womb, and with the doors of it; (see <180310>Job 3:10); the bowels of the earth being the storehouses where God first laid up the deep waters, (<193307>Psalm 33:7); and when the chaos, the misshapen earth, was like a woman big with child; when it brake forth out of the abyss, as the Targum, with force and violence, as Pharez broke out of his mother’s womb; for which reason he had his name given, which signifies a breach, (<013829>Genesis 38:29); so it follows,

[as if] it had issued out of the womb; as a child out of its mother’s womb; so the sea burst forth and issued out of the bowels of the earth, and covered it all around, as in (<19A406>Psalm 104:6); and now it was that the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, before they were drained off the earth; this was the first open visible production of the sea, and nay be called the birth of it; (see <010102>Genesis 1:2). Something like this the Heathen philosopher Archelaus had a notion of, who says[f1301], the sea was shut up in hollow places, and was as it were strained through the earth.

Ver. 9. When I made the cloud the garment thereof, etc.] For this newborn babe, the sea; and thick darkness a swaddling band for it; which was the case of the sea when it burst out of the bowels of the earth and covered it, for then darkness was upon the face of the deep, a dark, foggy, misty air, (<010102>Genesis 1:2); and this was before its separation from the land, and in this order it stands in this account; though since, clouds, fogs, and mists, which rise out of the sea, are as garments to it, and cover it at times, and the surrounding atmosphere, as it presses the whole terraqueous globe, and keeps the parts of the earth together, so the waters of the sea from spilling out; and these are the garments and the swaddling bands with which the hands and arms of this big and boisterous creature are wreathed; it is said of the infant in (<261604>Ezekiel 16:4) that it was neither “salted nor swaddled at all”; but both may be said of the sea; that it is salted is sufficiently known, and that it is swaddled is here affirmed; but who except the Lord Almighty could do this? and who has managed, and still does and can manage, this unruly creature, as easily as a nurse can turn about and swaddle a newborn babe upon her lap.

Ver. 10. And brake up for it my decreed [place], etc.] Or, as Mr. Broughton translates it, “and brake the earth for it by my decree”: made a vast chasm in the earth to hold the waters of the sea, which was provided as a sort of cradle to put this swaddled infant in; God cleaved the earth, raised the hills and sank the valleys, which became as channels to convey the waters that ran off the earth to their appointed place, which beautifully expressed in (<19A407>Psalm 104:7,8); and refers there, as here, to the work of creation on the second day, (<010109>Genesis 1:9,10)[f1302]; and set bars and doors; to keep it in its decreed appointed place, that the waters might not go over the earth; these are the shores, as the Targum, the cliffs and rocks upon them, the boundaries of the sea; to which may be added, and what is amazing, the sand upon the seashore is such a boundary to it that it cannot pass, (<240522>Jeremiah 5:22); but these would be insufficient was it not for the power and will of God, next expressed.

Ver. 11. And said, hitherto shalt thou come, but no further, etc.] The waters of the sea shall spread themselves to such and such shores, and wash them, but go no further; its rolling tides shall go up so far in rivers that go out of it, and then return, keeping exactly to time and place; this is said by Jehovah, the Word of God, and through his almighty power is tended to;

and here shall thy proud waves be stayed; so high and no higher shall they lift up themselves; so far and no farther shall they roll on, than to the boundaries fixed for them; and though they may toss up themselves as proud men toss up their heads, for which, reason pride is ascribed to them, yet they shall not prevail, (<240522>Jeremiah 5:22); all this may be accommodated to the afflictions of God's people, which are sometimes compared to the waves and billows of the sea, (<194207>Psalm 42:7 88:7); and these issue out of the womb of God's purposes and decrees, and are not the effects of chance; they are many, and threaten to overwhelm, but God is with his people in them, and preserves them from being overflowed by them; he has set the bounds and measures of them, beyond which they cannot go; (see <232708>Isaiah 27:8 43:2); and also to the world, and to the men of it, who are like a troubled sea, (<270702>Daniel 7:2,3 <235720>Isaiah 57:20); and who rise, and swell, and dash against the people of God, being separated from them who were originally mixed with them; but the Lord restrains their wrath and fury, and suffers them not to do his people any harm; whom he has placed in the munition of rocks out of their reach, that those proud waters cannot go over them as they threaten to do; (see <197610>Psalm 76:10 124:2-6).

Ver. 12. Hast thou commanded the morning since thy days; etc.] Job had lived to see many a morning, but it never was in his power to command one; he had been in such circumstances as to wish for morning light before it was, but was obliged to wait for it, could not hasten it, or cause it to spring before its time; (see <180703>Job 7:3,4); one of the Targums is, he was not, God was; he was before the first morning, and commanded it into being, (<010103>Genesis 1:3-5 <234313>Isaiah 43:13);

> “wast thou in the days of the first creation, and commandedst the morning to be?”

[and] caused the dayspring to know his place; the first spring of light or dawn of day; which though it has a different place every day in the year, as the sun ascends or descends in the signs of the Zodiac, yet it knows and observes its exact place, being taught of God.

Ver. 13. That it might take hold of the ends of the earth, etc.] As when the morning light springs forth, it quickly does, reaching in a short time the extreme part of the hemisphere; which, and what goes before, may be applied to the light of the Gospel, and the direction of that under divine Providence in the several parts of the world, and unto the ends of it; (see <191904>Psalm 19:4-6 <451018>Romans 10:18); that the wicked might be shaken out of it? the earth, by means of the light; which may be understood either of wicked men who have been all night upon works of darkness, and be take themselves on the approach of light to private lurking places, like beasts of prey, so that the earth seems to be, as it were, clear of them; or of their being taken up in the morning for deeds done in the night, and brought to justice, which used to be exercised in mornings, (<242112>Jeremiah 21:12 <19A108>Psalm 101:8); and so the earth rid of them: thus wicked men shun the light, of the Gospel, and are condemned by it; and in the latter day light and glory they will cease from the earth; (see <430319>John 3:19,20 <191016>Psalm 10:16 104:35).

Ver. 14. It is turned as clay [to] the seal, etc.] As the clay receives a different form by the impress of the seal upon it, so the earth appears in a different manner by the spring of morning light upon it; in the darkness of the night nothing of its form and beauty is to be seen; it is a mere “tohu” and “bohu”, like the chaos, (<010102>Genesis 1:2); its rising hills, and spreading dales, and beautiful landscapes, cannot be observed with pleasure; but when the light breaks forth in the morning, it is seen in all its beauty and glory: of the change the light of the Gospel makes in men, (see <470318>2 Corinthians 3:18); and they stand as a garment; or things stand upon it as a garment, as Mr. Broughton renders the words; herbs, plants, and trees, unseen in the night, stand up like a vesture to the earth in the morning light; and as they are clothed themselves, they are a garment to that, which now puts on another and beautiful habit; the pastures are clothed with flocks, and the valleys covered with corn, and the whole earth with light itself, as with a garment: and as beautifully do men made light in the Lord appear; (see <234110>Isaiah 41:10 <660304>Revelation 3:4,5 12:1).

Ver. 15. And from the wicked their light is withholden, etc.] Whose light is darkness, and whose day is the night, of which they are deprived when the morning light breaks forth; (see <182417>Job 24:17); it may be figuratively understood of the light of prosperity being removed from them, or the light of life, when they shall be sent into utter darkness; and the high arm shall be broken; their power weakened and made useless; even the power of such wicked men who have had a large share of it, and have used it in a tyrannical manner; and especially this will be their case at death; (see <231410>Isaiah 14:10,12).

Ver. 16. Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea? etc.] The subterraneous passages through which the waters flow into the sea and supply it; or the springs and fountains that rise up at the bottom of it [f1303]; and some tell us of springs of sweet water that rise there, even though the water at the bottom of the sea is saltier than on the surface [f1304]: some render it “the drops of the sea” [f1305]; hast thou considered them and counted them? art thou able to do it? no: others the “perplexities” of it [f1306], so the Targum, the word being used in this sense, (<021403>Exodus 14:3); the thickets of it; some speak of woods and forests in it, (see Gill on “<021019>Exodus 10:19”); others “rocks” and shelves [f1307], and others the “borders” of it [f1308]; and the sense then is, hast thou entered into and travelled through the main ocean, observed the forests in it, the shelving rocks and sandy mountains in it, and gone to the utmost borders of it?

or hast thou walked in the search of the depth? to find out the deepest place of it, where no sounding line can reach [f1309]; or walked in quest of the curiosities of it, animals, plants and minerals, unknown to men; or of the riches that lie at the bottom of it, for which now the diving bell is used, but not invented and known in the times of Job; and if Job had not done and could not do all this, how should he be able to enter into the secret springs of Providence, or trace the ways of God, whose way is in the sea, and whose paths are in the great waters, and his footsteps not known? (<197719>Psalm 77:19 <451133>Romans 11:33).

Ver. 17. Have the gates of death been opened unto thee? etc.] Meaning not by which death has entered into the world, and which have been the causes and occasion of it; as the sin of man, the appointment of God, and various providences, calamities and diseases; but by which men enter into the state of the dead. Men know not experimentally what death is, nor in what way they shall go out of the world, nor at what time, nor in what place; they know not what the state of the dead is, there is no correspondence between them and the living; they do not know either what they enjoy or endure, or who precisely and with certainty are in the separate abodes of bliss or misery; the gates of these dark and invisible regions to us have never been thrown open, for mortals to look into them; or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death? the same thing in other words; the Targum and Jarchi interpret this of hell.

Ver. 18. Hast thou perceived the breadth of the earth? etc.] Which may be put for all the dimensions of it, length, breadth, diameter, and circumference, but especially it regards the surface of it, and the measurement of that; hast thou gone over the whole face of the earth and measured it, all its parts, its hills and dales, rocks and mountains, and took a survey of all the cities, towns and villages, woods, forests, fountains, rivers, etc? no; if a man lived as long as Methuselah, and spent all his days in this way, he could never be able to do it; and some parts are inaccessible, and not to be measured by the most skilful geometer; declare, if thou knowest it all; the whole earth and every part of it, and all that is in it. Whether the other hemisphere and the antipodes were known in Job’s time is a question; however not America, or the new world, which is a late discovery; and even now, in our most exact maps of the world, some parts are marked with “terra incognita”, the unknown land.

Ver. 19. Where [is] the way [where] light dwelleth? etc.] Or the way to the place where it dwells, and what that is;

and [as for] darkness, where [is] the place thereof? where these were placed when they were first separated at the creation? where light goes and dwells, when it departs from us at sun setting? and where the darkness betakes itself, and makes its abode at sun rising? What is the chamber of the sun, and the tabernacle of it? from whence it sets out, and whither it returns? And though these questions may be answered by geographers and astronomers in their way; yet they seem to respect chiefly the disposal of light and darkness, in such a manner as to cause the revolution of them, and the inequality of days and nights in different seasons and climates; and which is not in the power of men to effect, but depends on the sovereign will of God.

Ver. 20. That thou shouldest take it to the bound thereof, etc.] Either darkness, or rather the light; take it as it were by the hand, and guide and direct its course to its utmost bound. This only the Lord can do and does: he has set a tabernacle for the sun, which goes forth at his command as a strong man to run a race; whose going forth is from the end of the heavens, and his circuit unto the ends of it: in which his course is so steered and directed by the Lord, that he never misses his way or errs from it; but keeps his path exactly, as well as knows its rising and setting, its utmost bounds; and that thou shouldest know the paths [to] the house thereof? from whence it sets out, and whither it returns; (see <191904>Psalm 19:4-6). And so the light and darkness of prosperity and adversity, as well as natural light and darkness, are of God, at his disposal, and bounded by him, and therefore his will should be submitted to; which is the doctrine the Lord would teach Job by all this.

Ver. 21. Knowest thou [it], because thou wast then born? etc.] When light and darkness were first separated, and had their several apartments assigned them; their laws and rules given them, and their bounds and limits set them? No; he was not: and, had he been the first man, could not have been early enough to have been present at the doing of this, and so come at the knowledge thereof; since man was not made until the sixth day of the creation; or [because] the number of thy days [is] great; reach to the beginning of time, and so as old as the creation. This was not the case. Some understand these words ironically; “thou knowest” the places and bounds of light and darkness, since thou art a very old man, born as soon as the world was. Whereas he was of yesterday, and knew nothing; which to convince him of is the design of this biting, cutting, expression. The Targum is,

> “didst thou know then that thou shouldest be born, and the number of thy days many?”

No, Job did not know when he was born, nor of whom, and in what circumstances, but by the relation of others; and much less could he know before he was born, that he should be, or how long he should live in the world: but God knows all this beforehand; when men shall come into the world, at what period and of what parents, and how long they shall continue in it.

Ver. 22. Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail?] The vapours raised, and clouds formed in the atmosphere, which is the storehouse of those meteors; and may be called treasures, because hidden in the clouds, and not seen by man until the fall of them; and because they are in the keeping, and at the command and direction of the Lord the proprietor of them; and because rich and enriching, especially snow, which falling keeps the earth warm, and makes it fruitful; and because of the abundance thereof which sometimes falls. Now we are not to imagine that the Lord has stores of these laid up in heaps, in times past for time to come; but that he can and does as easily and as soon produce them when he pleases, as one that has treasures laid up can bring them forth at once.

Ver. 23. Which I have reserved against the time of trouble, etc.] For the punishment or affliction of men; and is explained as follows, against the day of battle and war? as his artillery and ammunition to light his enemies with. Of hail we have instances in Scripture, as employed against the Egyptians and Canaanites, (<020925>Exodus 9:25 <061011>Joshua 10:11); and of a reserve of it in the purposes of God, and in prophecy against the day of battle with antichrist, (<661621>Revelation 16:21); and so Jarchi interprets it here of the war of Gog and Magog. And though there are no instances of snow being used in this way in Scripture, yet there is in history. Strabo [f1310] reports, that at Corzena and Cambysena, which join to Mount Caucasus, such snows have fallen, that whole companies of men have been swallowed up in them; and even armies have been overwhelmed with them, as the army of the Gauls [f1311]; and such quantities have been thrown down from mountains, on which they have been lodged, that towns, towers, and villages, have been laid prostrate by them [f1312]; and in the year 443, a vast snow destroyed many [f1313]. Frequently do we hear in our parts of the disasters occasioned by them. The Targum particularly makes mention of snow; and renders it, “which snow I have reserved”, etc. though absurdly applies it to punishment in hell.

Ver. 24. By what way is the light parted, etc.] That is, dost thou know by what way it is parted or divided? as at the first creation, when God divided the light from darkness, (<010104>Genesis 1:4); or at sun rising and sun setting; and so in the two hemispheres, when there is darkness on the one, and light on the other; or under the two poles, when there are interchangeably six months light and six months darkness. Or how it is parted in an unequal distribution of day and night, at different seasons and in different climates; or how on one and the same day, and at the same time, the sun shall shine in one part of the earth, and not another; and more especially if this had been now a fact, and known, that there should be darkness all over the land of Egypt, and light in Goshen. Some understand this of lightning, but that is later mentioned;

[which] scattereth the east wind upon the earth? that rising sometimes with the sun, or first spring of light; (see Jon 4:8); or which light spreads and diffuses itself “from the east”, as it may be rendered. The sun rises in the east, and in a very quick and surprising manner spreads and diffuses its light throughout the hemisphere. Or this may respect the east wind itself, which scatters the clouds; and either spreads them in the heavens over the earth, or disperses them and drives away rain [f1314], as the north wind does: or as Mr. Broughton renders the words, “and the east wind scattereth itself over the earth”; it blowing invisibly and without our knowledge, goes and returns as other winds do, (<430308>John 3:8).

Ver. 25. Who hath divided a watercourse for the overflowing of waters, etc.] For a very large shower of rain, as the Vulgate Latin version: for this is not to be understood of an aqueduct, channel, or canal made on earth, either for the draining of waters off of land overflowed thereby, or for the conveyance of it to different parts to overflow it; such as were cut out of the Nile in Egypt, for the overflowing of the land, to make it fruitful; such may be and have been made by men: but of a watercourse in the air or atmosphere, as a canal or channel, for the rain to come down upon the earth; and this is the work of God, and him only, who directs and steers the course of rain, that it falls regularly and gently, not in spouts and floods, but in drops larger or lesser, on what spot of ground, or part of the earth, he pleases: and if what Jarchi says true, that every drop has its course, its canal, through which it passes, it is still more wonderful;

or a way for the lightning of thunder: which generally go together, and are of God. His fire and voice, and for which he makes a way, by which they burst and break forth out of the cloud, and their course is directed by him under the whole heavens; (see <182826>Job 28:26 37:3). So the Gospel, compared to rain and lightning, has its direction and its course steered to what part of the world, he pleases; (see <191904>Psalm 19:4) (<441346>Acts 13:46,47 16:6-10).

Ver. 26. To cause it to rain on the earth, [where] no man [is]; [on] the wilderness, wherein [there is] no man.] Which is uninhabited by men, being so dry and barren; where there is no man to cultivate and water it, as gardens are; and where is no man to receive any advantage by the rain that comes upon it; and yet the Lord sends it for the use of animals that dwell there; which shows his care and providence with respect even to the wild beasts of the earth. This may be an emblem of the rain of the Gospel upon the Gentile world, comparable to a wilderness; (see <233501>Isaiah 35:1).

Ver. 27. To satisfy the desolate and waste [ground], etc.] Which is exceeding desolate, and therefore two such words are used to express it; which is so dry and thirsty that it is one of the four things that say not it is enough, (<203016>Proverbs 30:16); and yet God can and does give it rain to its full satisfaction, (<19A413>Psalm 104:13); so the Lord satisfies souls, comparable to dry and thirsty ground, by his word and ordinances, with the goodness and fatness of his house; (see <196301>Psalm 63:1-5 65:4); and to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth? grass for the cattle, and herb for the service of men, (<19A414>Psalm 104:14); of like use is the word in a spiritual sense for the budding and increase of the graces of the Spirit in the Lord’s people; (see <053202>Deuteronomy 32:2 <235510>Isaiah 55:10,11).

Ver. 28. Hath the rain a father? etc.] None but God; hence the Heathens themselves call God γετιος [f1315], and ομβριος [f1316]; (see <241422>Jeremiah 14:22); he that is our Father in heaven is the Father of rain, and him only; whatever secondary causes there be, God only is the efficient cause, parent, and producer of it: so the Gospel is not of men but of God, is a gift of his, comes down from heaven, tarries not for men, and is a great blessing, as rain is;

or who hath begotten the drops of the dew? which are innumerable; he that is the parent of the rain is of the dew also, and he only [f1317]; to which sometimes not only the word of God, and his free favour and good will, but the people of God themselves are compared for their number, influence, and use; (see <19B003>Psalm 110:3 <330507>Micah 5:7); and their new birth is similar to the generation of dew, it being not of the will of man, but of God, according to his abundant mercy, free favour, and good will, is from above, from heaven, and is effected silently, secretly, suddenly, at an unawares; (<430113>John 1:13 3:3,5,8).

Ver. 29. Out of whose womb came the ice? etc.] The parent of the rain and dew is the parent of the ice also, and he only; it is therefore called “his ice”, his child, his offspring, (<19E717>Psalm 147:17). Here the Lord is represented as a mother, and so he is by Orpheus [f1318] called “metropator”, or “mother-father”; and the hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it? this is of God, and by his breath; (see <183710>Job 37:10).

Ver. 30. The waters are hid as [with] a stone, etc.] The surface of the waters by frost become as hard as a stone, and will bear great burdens, and admit of carriages to pass over them [f1319] where ships went before; so that the waters under them are hid and quite out of sight: an emblem of the hard heart of man, which can only be thawed by the power and grace of God, by the south wind of the Spirit blowing, and the “sun of righteousness” rising on it; and the face of the deep is frozen; or bound together by the frost, as the Targum; it is taken, laid hold on, and kept together, as the word signifies, so that it cannot flow. Historians speak of seas being frozen up, as some parts of the Scythian sea, reported by Mela [f1320], and the Cimmerian Bosphorus, by Herodotus [f1321], and the northern seas by Olaus Magnus [f1322]; as that men might travel over them on foot or on horseback, from one country to another; and Strabo relates [f1323], that where a sea fight has been in the summer time, armies and hosts have met and fought in the winter. In Muscovy the ice is to six and ten feet deep [f1324]; in the year 401 the Euxine sea [f1325] was frozen over for the space of twenty days; and in the year 763 the seas at Constantinople were frozen one hundred miles from the shore, so thick as to bear the heaviest carriages [f1326].

Ver. 31. Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, etc.] Of which (see Gill on “<180909>Job 9:9”); and this constellation of the seven stars which is meant, rising in the spring, the pleasantnesses of the season, as the word may be rendered, may be intended here; which cannot be restrained or hindered from taking place in the proper course of the year; which is beautifully described in (<220212>Song of Solomon 2:12,13); and may in a spiritual sense relate to the effects of powerful and efficacious grace, the influences of which are irresistible, and cause a springtime in the souls of men, where it was before winter, a state of darkness, deadness, coldness, hardness, and unfruitfulness, but now the reverse. Some versions read, “the bands of the Pleiades” [f1327], as if the sense was, canst thou gather and bind, or cluster together, such a constellation as the seven stars be, as I have done? thou canst not; and so not stop their rising or hinder their influences, according to the other versions:

or loose the bands of Orion? of which (see Gill on “<180909>Job 9:9”) and (<300508>Amos 5:8). This constellation appears in the winter, and brings with it stormy winds, rain, snow, and frost, which latter binds up the earth, that seeds and roots in it cannot spring up; and binds the hands of men from working, by benumbing them, or rendering their materials or utensils useless; for which reasons bands are ascribed to Orion, and are such strong ones that it is not in the power of men to loose: the seasons are not to be altered by men; and, Job might be taught by this that it was not in his power to make any change in the dispensations of Providence; to turn the winter of adversity into the spring of prosperity; and therefore it was best silently to submit to the sovereignty of God, and wait his time for a change of circumstances.

Ver. 32. Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his season? etc.] Which are thought to be the same with “the chambers of the south”, (<180909>Job 9:9); the southern pole [f1328] with its stars, signified by chambers, because hidden from our sight in this part of the globe; and here by Mazzaroth, from, “nazar”, to separate, because separated and at a distance from us; some think [f1329] the twelve signs of the Zodiac are meant, each of which are brought forth in their season, not by men, but by the Lord; (see <234026>Isaiah 40:26); or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons? a constellation of many stars called its sons, of which (see <180909>Job 9:9). Schmidt conjectures that Jupiter and his satellites are meant; but rather what we call the greater and lesser Bear, in the tail of which is the north pole star, the guide of mariners, said [f1330] to be found out by Thales, by which the Phoenicians sailed, but is not to be guided by men; this, constellation is fancied to be in the form of a wain or wagon, and is called Charles’s wain; could this be admitted, there might be thought to be an allusion to it [f1331], and the sense be, canst thou guide and lead this constellation, as a wagon or team of horses can be guided and led? stars have their courses, (<070520>Judges 5:20); but are not steered, guided, and directed by men, but by the Lord himself.

Ver. 33. Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? etc.] Settled by the decree, purpose, and will of God, and are firm and stable; (see <19E806>Psalm 148:6 <243135>Jeremiah 31:35,36); the laws and statutes respecting their situation, motion, operation, influence, and use, which are constantly observed; these are so far from being made by men, and at their direction, that they are not known by them, at least not fully and perfectly;

canst thou set the dominion thereof in the earth? or over it; of the heavens over the earth; not such an one as judicial astrologers ascribe unto them, as to influence the bodies of men, especially the tempers and dispositions of their minds; to affect their wills and moral actions, the events and occurrences of their lives, and the fate of nations and kingdoms; their dominion is not moral and civil, but physical or natural, as to make the revolutions of night and day, and of the several seasons of the year; and to affect and influence the fruits of the earth, etc. (see <010116>Genesis 1:16 <053313>Deuteronomy 33:13,14 <280221>Hosea 2:21-23); but this dominion is solely under God, and at his direction, and is not of men’s fixing.

Ver. 34. Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds, that abundance of waters may cover thee?] Thy gardens, fields, and farms; canst thou, in a magisterial way, call to and demand of the clouds to let down rain in large quantities, sufficient to water them and make them fruitful? no, thou canst not: thou mayest cry and call as long as thou wilt, not a cloud will stir, nor a drop of water be let down; rain is to be had in a suppliant way, through the prayer of faith, as by Elijah, but not in a dictatorial authoritative way: the clouds and rain are only at the disposal of the Lord; ask of him, and he will give them; but they are not to be commanded, (<381001>Zechariah 10:1); (see <300508>Amos 5:8).

Ver. 35. Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we [are]?] Thy humble servants; we have been where thou didst send us, and have executed what we were bid to do, and are returned, and here we are waiting further orders; (see <400809>Matthew 8:9); no; lightnings are only at the command of God, and there have been some awful instances of it, (<031001>Leviticus 10:1 <041101>Numbers 11:1 16:35); but not in the power of men; indeed we have an extraordinary instance in Elijah, who, at the motion, and under the impulse of the spirit of prophecy in him, called for fire, or lightning, to consume captains with their fifties, and it came down on them, and consumed them, (<120110>2 Kings 1:10,12); but he is not to be imitated herein: when the disciples of Christ desired the same upon a provocation, they were severely reproved by him, (<420954>Luke 9:54,55); were these at the call and dispose of men, what dreadful things would be done in the world! for if good men, when provoked, would make use of such a power to destroy the lives of men, much more bad men; and our eyes would continually behold the flashes of lighting, and our ears hear the roarings of thunder, and the terrible effects thereof; but neither mercies nor judgments are at the command of men, but of God.

Ver. 36. Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts? etc.] That is, of man, in his heart, as explained in the next clause; such wisdom as to guide the stars, know the ordinances of heaven, set their dominion on earth, manage and direct the clouds and lightning; no such wisdom is put in man:

or who hath, given understanding to the heart? to understand all the above things, and answer to the several questions put in this chapter; though, as these clauses may respect much one and the same thing, they may be understood of wisdom and understanding in man, whether natural or spiritual; and seeing they are found there, the question is, who put them there, or how came they there? who gave them to him? the answer must be, God himself, and no other; man has his rational soul, his intellectual powers, the light of nature and reason in him; all his understanding in arts and sciences, trades and manufactures, is of the Lord, and not of himself or another, (see <183208>Job 32:8 <023601>Exodus 36:1,2) (<232823>Isaiah 28:23-29); all spiritual wisdom and understanding which lies in a man’s concern for his eternal welfare in the knowledge of himself, and of his state and condition by nature, and of the way of life and salvation by Christ, and of the truths and doctrines of the Gospel, is all of God and Christ, and by the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; no man, therefore, has any reason to glory in his wisdom and knowledge, of whatsoever kind, as though he had not received it; nor should he dare to arraign the wisdom of God in his providential dealings with men; since he that teaches man knowledge must needs know better than man how to govern the world he has made, and dispose of all things in it. The last clause is in the Vulgate Latin rendered, “who hath given to the cock understanding?” and so the Targums and other Jewish writers[f1332] interpret it; and they observe[f1333], that in Arabia a cock is called by the word that is here used; and in their morning prayers, and at hearing a cock crow[f1334], > “Blessed be the Lord, who giveth to the cock understanding to distinguish between the day and the night:”

but however remarkable the understanding of this creature is, which God has given it, and which is even taken notice of by Heathen writers [f1335]; that it should know the stars, distinguish the hours of the night by crowing, and express its joy at the rising of the sun and moon; yet such a sense of the text seems impertinent, as well as that of the Septuagint version, of giving to women the wisdom and knowledge of weaving and embroidery.

Ver. 37. Who can number the clouds in wisdom? etc.] Or has such wisdom as to be able to count them when the heavens are full of them; hence they are used to denote a great multitude, (<235508>Isaiah 55:8 <581201>Hebrews 12:1); or “declare” them [f1336], set forth and explain the nature of them, their matter, motion, and use; none can do this perfectly or completely. Aben Ezra interprets it, who can make them as sapphire? in which he is followed by Mr. Broughton and others [f1337]; the sapphire is a precious stone, very clear and lucid, of a sky colour. And then the sense is, who can make a clear and serene sky, when it is cloudy? None but the Lord; (see <183711>Job 37:11); or who can stay the bottles of heaven? or “barrels”, as Mr. Broughton; the clouds in which the rain is bottled or barrelled up; and when it is the pleasure of God to pour them out, who can stay, stop, or restrain them? or who can “cause [them] to lie down” [f1338]? that is, on the earth; to descend or “distil” on it, as the same translator. Who can do this, when it is the will of God to withhold them? To stop or unstop, those bottles, to restrain rain, or pour it forth, is entirely at his dispose, and not man’s; (see <183834>Job 38:34 <010802>Genesis 8:2 <300407>Amos 4:7).

Ver. 38. When the dust groweth into hardness, and the clods cleave fast together?] When the dust is attenuated, and ground, as it were, into powder; and the clods cleave together, as if glued, as in a drought for want of rain: or the bottles of heaven being unstopped and poured out; or as Mr. Broughton. Or rather, pouring on the dust with pouring; that is, pouring down rain, by unstopping the bottles of heaven. The dust, as meal, by water poured into it, cements, unites, and is compacted, and becomes earth, that may be cultivated; is clodded and cleaves together, and may be ploughed and sown.

> “sprinkling the dust with this sprinkling,”

Ver. 39. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion? etc.] From meteors the Lord passes to animals, beasts, and birds, wherefore some here begin the thirty ninth chapter, which only treats of such; and he begins with the lion, the strongest among beasts, and most fierce; cruel, and voracious; and asks, who hunts his prey for him? Not man, who cannot; and if he could, durst not: but the Lord does; and, according to some writers[f1339], he has provided a small creature, between a fox and a wolf, called a jackal; which goes before the lion, and hunts the prey for him. And could this be understood particularly of the old lion, as Cocceius and others, naturalists[f1340] observe, that young lions hunt for the old ones, when they are not able to go in search of prey; and when they have got it, either bring it to them, or call them to partake of it with them; or fill the appetite of the young lions, whose appetite is sharp and keen, and requires a great deal to fill it, and especially to satisfy a great many of them; herds of them, as Mr. Broughton renders the word, and which signifies a company; (see <19B30>Psalm 68:30). Men cannot feed them, but God can and does; there being some ends in Providence to be answered thereby, (see <19A421>Psalm 104:21); see also (<193408>Psalm 34:8-10).

Ver. 40. When they couch in [their] dens, [and] abide in the covert to lie in wait?] Which some understand of old lions, who, for want of strength, lie couchant in their dens, or in some covert place, waiting for any prey that passes by, to seize upon it. But the same pasture and places are used by younger lions, as well as old ones; who are emblems of wicked men, cruel persecutors, and bloodthirsty tyrants, who fill their palaces and kingdoms with murder and rapine; (see <191008>Psalm 10:8-10) (Na 2:11,12).

Ver. 41. Who provideth for the raven his food? etc.] Not man, but God; he feeds the ravens, creatures very voracious, mean, and useless, (<421224>Luke 12:24);

when his young ones cry unto God; cry for want of food; which is interpreted by the Lord as a cry unto him, and he relieves them, (<19E709>Psalm 147:9); when deserted by the old ones; either left in their nests through forgetfulness, as some[f1341]; or because they are not, till fledged, black like them, as others[f1342]; when God feeds them, as some say[f1343], with a kind of dew from heaven, or with flies that fly about them, and fall into their mouths; or with worms bred out of their dung but these things are not to be depended on; it may rather respect them when cast out of the nest by the old ones, when able to fly, which is testified by naturalists[f1344]; and with this agrees what follows:

they wander for lack of meat; being obliged to shift for themselves, when God takes care of them; which is an instance of his providential goodness; and how this is to be improved, (see <400626>Matthew 6:26 <421224>Luke 12:24).

CHAPTER 39

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 39

This chapter treats of various creatures, beasts and birds, which Job had little knowledge of, had no concern in the making of them, and scarcely any power over them; as of the goats and hinds, (<183901>Job 39:1-4); of the wild ass, (<183905>Job 39:5-8); of the unicorn, (<183909>Job 39:9-12); of the peacock and ostrich, (<183913>Job 39:13-18); of the horse, (<183919>Job 39:19-25); and of the hawk and eagle, (<183926>Job 39:26-30).

Ver. 1. Knowest thou the time when the wild goats of the rock bring forth? etc.] Which creatures are so called, because they dwell among the rocks [f1345] and run upon them; and though their heads are loaded with a vast burden of horns upon them, yet can so poise themselves, as with the greatest swiftness, to leap from mountain to mountain, as Pliny says [f1346]: and if they bring forth their young in the rocks, as Olympiodorus asserts, and which is not improbable, it is not to be wondered, that the time of their bringing forth should not be known by men, to whom the rocks they run upon are inaccessible;

[or] canst thou mark the time when the hinds do calve? that is, precisely and exactly, and so as to direct, order, and manage, and bring it about, as the Lord does: and it is wonderful that they should calve, and not cast their young before their time, when they are continually in flight and fright, through men or wild beasts, and are almost always running and leaping about; and often scared with thunder, which hastens birth, (<192909>Psalm 29:9); otherwise the time of their bringing forth in general is known by men, as will be observed in (<183902>Job 39:2).

Ver. 2. Canst thou number the months [that] they fulfil? etc.] Which some understand both of wild goats and hinds. Common goats fulfil five months, they conceive in November, and bring forth in March, as Pliny [f1347] observes; but how many the wild goats of the rock fulfil is not said by him or any other I know of: the same writer says [f1348] of hinds, that they go eight months; or knowest thou the time when they bring forth? naturalists[f1349] tell us, that the hinds conceive after the rise of the star Arcturus, which rises eleven days before the autumnal equinox; so that they conceive in September; and as they go eight months, they bring forth in April; but then the exact time to a day and hour is not known. Besides, who has fixed the time for their bringing forth, and carries them in it through so many dangers and difficulties? None but the Lord himself. Now if such common things in nature were not known perfectly by Job, how should he be able to search into and find out the causes and reasons of God's providential dealings with men, or what is in the womb of Providence?

Ver. 3. They bow themselves, etc.] That they may bring forth their young with greater ease and more safety: for it seems the hinds bring forth their young with great difficulty; and there are provisions in nature made to lessen it; as thunder, before observed, which causes them to bring forth the sooner; and there is an herb called "seselis", which it is said[f1350] they feed upon before birth, to make it the easier; as well as they use that, and another called "aros", after the birth, to ease them of their later pains;

they bring forth their young ones; renting and cleaving asunder the membrane, as the word signifies, in which their young is wrapped;

they cast out their sorrows; either their young, which they bring forth in pains and which then cease; or the secundines, or afterbirth, in which the young is wrapped, and which the philosopher says[f1351] they eat, and is supposed to be medical to them. None but a woman seems to bring forth with more pain than this creature; and a wife is compared to it, (<200519>Proverbs 5:19).

Ver. 4. Their young ones are in good liking, etc.] Plump, fat, and sleek, as fawns are:

they grow up with corn; by which they grow, or without in the field, as the word also signifies; and their growth and increase is very quick, as Aristotle observes[f1352];

they go forth, and return not unto them: they go forth into the fields, and shift and provide for themselves, and trouble their dams no more; and return not to them, nor are they known by them.

Ver. 5. Who hath sent out the wild ass free? etc.] Into the wide waste, where it is, ranges at pleasure, and is not under the restraint of any; a creature which, as it is naturally wild, is naturally averse to servitude, is desirous of liberty and maintains it: not but that it may be tamed, as Pliny [f1353] speaks of such as are; but it chooses to be free, and, agreeably to its nature, it is sent out into the wilderness as such: not that it is set free from bondage, for in that it never was until it is tamed; but its nature and inclination, and course it pursues, is to be free. And now the question is, who gave this creature such a nature, and desire after liberty? and such power to maintain it? and directs it to take such methods to secure it, and keep clear of bondage? It is of God;

or who hath loosed the bands of the wild ass? not that it has any naturally upon it, and is loosed from them; but because it is as clear of them as such creatures are, which have been in bands and are freed from them: therefore this mode of expression is used, and which signifies the same as before.

Ver. 6. Whose house I have made the wilderness, etc.] Appointed that to be his place of residence, as being agreeable to his nature, at a distance from men, and in the less danger of being brought into subjection by them. Such were the deserts of Arabia; where, as Xenophon [f1354] relates, were many of these creatures, and which he represents as very swift: and Leo Africanus [f1355] says, great numbers of them are found in deserts, and on the borders of deserts; hence said to be used to the wilderness (<240224>Jeremiah 2:24); and the barren land his dwellings; not entirely barren, for then it could not live there; but comparatively, with respect to land that is fruitful: or “salt land” [f1356]; for, as Pliny [f1357] says, every place where salt is, is barren.

Ver. 7. He scorneth the multitude of the city, etc.] Choosing rather to be alone in the wilderness and free than to be among a multitude of men in a city, and be a slave as the tame ass; or it despises and defies a multitude of men, that may come out of cities to take it, Leo Africanus says [f1358] it yields to none for swiftness but Barbary horses: according to Xenophon [f1359], it exceeds the horse in swiftness; and when pursued by horsemen, it will outrun them, and stand still and rest till they come near it, and then start again; so that there is no taking it, unless many are employed. Aristotle [f1360] says it excels in swiftness; and, according to Bochart [f1361], it has its name in Hebrew from the Chaldee word adp, “to run”. Or it may be rendered, “the noise of the city”, so Cocceius; the stir and bustle in it, through a multiplicity of men in business; neither regardeth he the crying of the driver; or “hears” [f1362]: he neither feels his blows, nor hears his words; urging him to move faster and make quicker dispatch, as the tame ass does; he being neither ridden nor driven, nor drawing in a cart or plough.

Ver. 8. The range of the mountains [is] his pasture, etc.] It ranges about the mountains for food; it looks about for it, as the word signifies, and tries first one place and then another to get some, it having short commons there; and he searcheth after every green thing; herb or plant, be it what it will that is green, it seeks after; and which being scarce in deserts and mountains, it searches about for and feeds upon it, wherever it can find it; grass being the peculiar food of these creatures, (see <180605>Job 6:5); and which is observed by naturalists [f1363].

Ver. 9. Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee, etc.] Whether there is or ever was such a creature, as described under the name of an unicorn, is a question: it is thought the accounts of it are for the most part fabulous; though Vartomannus [f1364] says he saw two at Mecca, which came from Ethiopia, the largest of which had a horn in his forehead three cubits long. There are indeed several creatures which may be called “monocerots”, who have but one horn; as the “rhinoceros”, and the Indian horses and asses [f1365]. The Arabic geographer [f1366] speaks of a beast in the Indies, called “carcaddan”, which is lesser than an elephant and bigger than a buffalo; having in the middle of the forehead an horn long and thick, as much as two hands can grasp: and not only on land, but in the sea are such, as the “nahr whal”, or Greenland whale [f1367]; but then they do not answer to the creature so called in Scripture: and, besides, this must be a creature well known to Job, as it was to the Israelites; and must be a strong creature, from the account that gives of it, and not to be taken as here. And Solinus [f1368] speaks of such “monocerots” or unicorns, which may be killed, but cannot be taken, and were never known to be in any man’s possession alive; and so Aelianus [f1369] says of the like creature, that it never was remembered that anyone of them had been taken. Some think the “rhinoceros” is meant; but that, though a very strong creature, and so may be thought fit for the uses after mentioned, yet may be tamed; whereas the creature here is represented as untamable, and not to be subdued, and brought under a yoke and managed; and besides, it is not very probable that it was known by Job. Bochart [f1370] takes it to be the “oryx”, a creature of the goat kind; but to me it seems more likely to be of the ox kind, to be similar to them, and so might be thought to do the business of one; and the rather, because of its great strength, and yet could not be brought to do it, nor be trusted with it: for the questions concerning it relate to the work of oxen; and as the wild ass is opposed to the tame one in the preceding paragraph, so here the wild ox to a tame one. And both Strabo[f1371] and Diodorus Siculus[f1372] relate, that among the Troglodytes, a people that dwelt near the Red sea, and not far from Arabia, where Job lived, were abundance of wild oxen or bulls, and which far exceeded the common ones in size and swiftness; and the creature called the seem in the original, has its name from height. Now the question is, could Job take one of these wild bulls or oxen, and tame it, and make it willing to do any work or service he should choose to put it to? No, he could not;

or abide by thy crib? manger or stall, as the tame or common ox will; who, when it has done its labour, is glad to be led to its stall and feed, and then lie down and rest, and there abide; (see <230103>Isaiah 1:3); but not so the wild ox.

Ver. 10. Canst thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? etc.] Put the yoke and harness upon him, and fasten it to the plough to draw it, that he may make furrows with it in the field, or plough up the ground as the tame ox does? thou canst not;

or will he harrow the valleys after thee? draw the harrow which is used after ploughing to break the clods, and make the land smooth and even? he will not: valleys are particularly mentioned, because arable land is usually in them; (see <196513>Psalm 65:13).

Ver. 11. Wilt thou trust him, because his strength [is] great? etc.] No; tame oxen are employed because they are strong to labour, (<19E414>Psalm 144:14); and they are to be trusted, in ploughing or treading out the corn, under direction, because they are manageable, and will attend to business with constancy; but the wild ox, though stronger, and so fitter for labour, is yet not to be trusted, because unruly and unmanageable: if that sort of wild oxen called “uri” could be thought to be meant, for which Bootius[f1373] contends, Caesar’s account of them would agree with this character of the “reem”, as to his great strength: he says of them[f1374], they are in size a little smaller than elephants, of the kind, colour, and shape of a bull; they are of great strength and of great swiftness, and not to be tamed; or wilt thou leave thy labour to him? to plough thy fields, to harrow thy lands, and to bring home the ripe corn? as in (<183912>Job 39:12); thou wilt not.

Ver. 12. Wilt thou believe him that he will bring home thy seed? etc.] Draw in the cart, and bring home the ripe sheaves of corn, as the tame ox does? no; thou knowest him too well to believe he will bring it home in safety; and gather [it into] thy barn; to be trodden out, which used to be done by oxen in those times: if therefore Job could not manage such unruly creatures as the wild ass and the wild ox, and make them serviceable to him, how unfit must he be to govern the world, or to direct in the affairs of Providence?

Ver. 13. [Gavest thou] the goodly wings unto the peacocks? etc.] Rather "ostriches", as the Vulgate Latin and Tigurine versions render it; some render it, "the wing of those that exult is joyful", so Montanus; that is, of the ostriches; who, in confidence of their wings, exult and glory over the horse and his rider, (<183918>Job 39:18); for peacocks are not remarkable for their wings, but for their tails; whereas the wings of the ostrich are as sails unto them, as several writers observe [f1375]; and with which they rather run, or row, than fly: hence it is called by Plautus [f1376] "passer marinus", the sea sparrow: and the feathers of it are more goodly than those of the wings of the peacock; and besides, it is a question whether the peacock was where Job lived, and in his times; since it is originally from the Indies, and from thence it was brought to Judea in the times of Solomon; and was not known in Greece and Rome [f1377] until later ages. Alexander the Great, when he first saw them in India, was surprised at them; and yet Solon [f1378] speaks of them in his time as seen by him, which was at least two hundred years before Alexander; though at Rome not common in the times of Horace [f1379], who calls a peacock "rara avis"; and speaks of them as sold for a great price; but ostriches were well known in Arabia, where Job lived, as is testified by Xenophon [f1380], Strabo [f1381], and Diodorus Siculus [f1382]. Moreover, what is said in the following verses is only true of the ostrich, and that only is spoken of here and there, as it follows;

or wings and feathers unto the ostrich; or whose wings and feathers are like the storks; and so Bochart renders the words, truly they have "the wing and feather of the stork"; the colours of which are black and white, from whence it has its name πελαγρος [f1383] in Greek; and so Leo Africanus [f1384] says of the ostriches, that they have in their wings large feathers of a black and white colour; and this was a creature well known in Arabia[f1385], in which Job lived.

Ver. 14. Which leaveth her eggs in the earth, etc.] Lays them and leaves them there. Aelianus, agreeably to this, says[f1386], that it builds a low nest in the ground, making a hollow in the sand with its feet; though he seems to be mistaken as to the number of its eggs, which he makes to be more than eighty; more truly Leo Africanus[f1387], who reckons them ten or twelve; which, he says, it lays in the sand, and each of them are of the size of a cannon ball, and weigh fifteen pounds, more or less. Hence, with the Arabs, it is called because of the large eggs it lays; and with them it is a proverb, > “meaner, or of a lesser account, than the eggs of an ostrich,”

> “the mother of eggs,”

because its eggs are neglected by it[f1388];

and warmeth them in the dust; not that she leaves them to be warmed by the hot sand, or by the heat of the sun upon them, by which they are hatched, as has been commonly said, for thereby they would rather be corrupted and become rotten; but she herself warms them and hatches them, by sitting upon them in the dust and sand: and for this the above historian is express, who says[f1389], the female lighting on these eggs, whether her own or another’s, sits on them and heats them. Concerning the ostrich hatching its eggs, Vansleb[f1390], from an Arabic manuscript, relates what is incredible, that they are hatched by the male and female with their eye only; that one or other of them keep continually looking at them until they are all hatched; and this I observe is asserted also by another writer[f1391].

Ver. 15. And forgetteth that the foot may crush them, etc.] The foot of the traveller, they being laid in the ground, where he may walk, or on the sand of the seashore, where he may tread and trample upon them unawares, and crush them to pieces; to prevent which this creature has no foresight; or that the wild beast may break them; supposing they may be, though not where men walk, yet where wild beasts frequent, they may be as easily broken by the one as the other; against which it guards not, having no instinct in nature, as some creatures have, to direct to the preservation of them.

Ver. 16. She is hardened against her young ones, as though [they were] not hers, etc.] Hence said to be cruel, (<250403>Lamentations 4:3); not against the young ones she hatches, for Aelianus[f1392] reports her as very tender of her young, and exposing herself to danger for the preservation of them; but being a very forgetful creature, having laid its eggs in the sand, where it leaves them, forgets where it has laid them; and finding other eggs sits on them and hatches them, and regards the young as its own, and is hardened against its true and real young, as not belonging to her;

her labour is in vain without fear; in laying her eggs and leaving them in the dust, without fear of their being crushed and broken, which yet they are, and so her labour is in vain; or her labour in hatching the eggs of others, without any fear or care of their belonging to others, which yet they do, and so she labours in vain.

Ver. 17. Because God hath deprived her of wisdom, etc.] Or “made her to forget”[f1393] what she had; an instance of her forgetfulness is mentioned (<183915>Job 39:15); and so Leo Africanus[f1394] says of it, that it is of a very short memory, and presently forgets the place where its eggs are laid; neither hath he imparted to her understanding; many instances are given of its stupidity by historians, as that it will take anything that is offered to it to eat, stones, iron, etc.[f1395]; that it will thrust its head and neck into a thicket, fancying: it is hid and covered, and that none can see it; which Pliny[f1396] remarks as an instance of its foolishness; though Diodorus Siculus[f1397] takes this to be a point of prudence, for the preservation of those parts of it which are weakest. Strabo gives[f1398] another instance of its stupidity, its being so easily deceived by sportsmen, who, by putting the skin of an ostrich on their hands, and reaching out fruits or seeds to it, it will receive them of them, and be taken. Others observe the smallness of their heads, and so of their brains, as an argument of their want of understanding; and it has been remarked, as a proof of their having but few brains, that Heliogabalus, the Roman emperor, had six hundred heads of ostriches dressed at once for his supper, for the sake of their brains[f1399].

Ver. 18. What time she lifted up herself on high, etc.] It is sometimes eight foot high[f1400]; when alarmed with approaching danger she raises up herself, being sitting on the ground, and erects her wings for flight, or rather running;

she scorneth the horse and his rider; being then, as Pliny[f1401] says, higher than a man on horseback, and superior to a horse in swiftness; and though horsemen have been able to take wild asses and goats, very swift creatures, yet never ostriches, as Xenophon relates[f1402] of those in Arabia; and this creature has another method, when pursued, by which it defies and despises, as well as hurts and incommodes its pursuers, which is by casting stones backward at them with its feet as out of a sling[f1403].

Ver. 19. Hast thou given the horse strength? etc.] Not only to bear burdens and draw carriages, but for war; for it is the war horse that is here spoken of, as what follows shows, and his strength denotes; not strength of body only, but fortitude and courage; for which, as well as the other, the horse is eminent, and both are the gift of God, and not of men;

hast thou clothed his neck with thunder? or with strength, as the Targum; the horse having particularly great strength in its neck, as well as in other parts; or with strength of voice, as Ben Gersom explains it; and it has been generally understood of the neighing of horses, which comes through and out of their neck, and makes a vehement sound: some render it, “with a mane”[f1404]; and could it be made to appear that the word is so used in any other place, or in any other writings, or in any of the dialects, it would afford a very good sense, since a fine large mane to a horse is a great ornament and recommendation: the Septuagint render it by “fear”, and Jarchi interprets it of “terror”; and refers to the sense of, he word in (<262735>Ezekiel 27:35); and it may signify such a tremor as thunder makes, from whence that has its name; and it may be observed that between the neck and shoulder bone of an horse there is a tremulous and quavering motion; and which is more vehement in battle, not from any fearfulness of it, but rather through eagerness to engage in it; and therefore Schultens translates the words, “hast thou clothed his neck with a cheerful tremor?”

Ver. 20. Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? etc.] Which is frightened at every noise, and at any approach of men; but not so the horse; or canst thou move him, or cause him to skip and jump, or rather leap like a grasshopper? that is, hast thou given, or canst thou give him the faculty of leaping over hedges and ditches, for which the horse is famous? so Neptune’s war horses are said[f1405] to be ευσκαρψμοι, good leapers;

the glory of his nostrils [is] terrible: which may be understood of his sneezing, snorting, pawing, and neighing, when his nostrils are broad, spread, and enlarged; and especially when enraged and in battle, when he foams and fumes, and his breath comes out of his nostrils like smoke [f1406], and is very terrible.

Ver. 21. He paweth in the valley, etc.] Where armies are usually pitched and set in battle army, and especially the cavalry, for which the valley is most convenient; and here the horse is impatient of engaging, cannot stand still, but rises up with his fore feet and paws and prances, and, as the word signifies, digs the earth and makes it hollow, by a continual striking upon it; so generally horses are commonly described in this manner [f1407];

and rejoiceth in [his] strength; of which he is sensible, and glories in it; marches to the battle with pride and stateliness, defying, as it were, the enemy, and as if sure of victory, of which he has knowledge when obtained; for Lactantius says [f1408] of horses, when conquerors they exult, when conquered they grieve; it has its name in the Hebrew language from rejoicing [f1409];

he goeth on to meet the armed men; without any fear or dread of them, as follows.

Ver. 22. He mocketh at fear, and is not affrighted, etc.] At those things which cause fear and fright to men; as arms, though ever so terrible, and armies, though never so numerous;

neither turneth he back from the sword; the naked sword, when it is drawn against him, and ready to be thrust into him; the horse being so bold and courageous was with the Egyptians a symbol of courage and boldness [f1410].

Ver. 23. The quiver rattleth against him, etc.] The quiver is what arrows are put into and carried in, and seems here to be put for arrows, which being shot by the enemy come whizzing about him, but do not intimidate him; unless this is to be understood of arrows rattling in the quiver when carried by the rider “upon him”, so some render the last word; and thus Homer [f1411] and Virgil [f1412] speak of the rattling quiver and sounding arrows in it, as carried on the back or shoulder; but the first sense seems best, in which another poet uses it [f1413];

the glittering spear and the shield; the lance or javelin, as Mr. Broughton renders it, and others; that is, he does not turn back from these, nor is he frightened at them when they are pointed to him or flung at him; so Aelianus[f1414] speaks of the Persians training their horses and getting them used to noises, that in battle they might not be frightened at the clashing of arms, of swords and shields against each other; in like manner as our war horses are trained, not to start at the firing of a gun, or the explosion of a cannon.

Ver. 24. He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage, etc.] Being so eager for the battle, and so full of fierceness and rage, he bounds the plain with such swiftness that he seems rather to swallow up the ground than to run upon it; neither believeth he that [it is] the sound of the trumpet; for joy at hearing it; or he will not trust to his ears, but will see with his eyes whether the battle is ready, and therefore pushes forward. Mr. Broughton and others read it, “he will not stand still at the noise of the trumpet”; and the word signifies firm and stable, as well as to believe; when he hears the trumpet sound, the alarm of war, as a preparation for the battle, he knows not how to[f1415] stand; there is scarce any holding him in, but he rushes into the battle at once, (<240806>Jeremiah 8:6).

Ver. 25. He saith among the trumpets, ha, ha, etc.] As pleased with the sound of them, rejoicing thereat, and which he signifies by neighing; and he smelleth the battle afar off; which respects not so much the distance of place as of time; he perceives beforehand that it is near, by the preparations making for it, and particularly by what follows; so Pliny[f1416] says of horses, they presage a fight. The thunder of the captains, and the shouting; they understand an engagement is just about to start by the loud and thundering voice of the captains, exhorting and spiralling up their men, and giving them the word of command; and by the clamorous shout of the soldiers echoing to the speech of their captains; and which are given forth upon an onset, both to animate one another, and intimidate the enemy. Bootius[f1417] observes, that Virgil[f1418] and Oppianus[f1419] say most of the same things in praise of the horse which are here said, and seem to have taken them from hence; and some[f1420] give the horse the preference to the lion, which, when it departs from a fight, never returns, whereas the horse will. This is an emblem both of good men, (<381003>Zechariah 10:3); and of bad men, (<240806>Jeremiah 8:6).

Ver. 26. Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom, etc.] With so much swiftness, steadiness, and constancy, until she has seized her prey. The Vulgate Latin version and some others read, “does she become feathered”, or “begin to have feathers?” and so Bochart: either when first fledged; or when, as it is said[f1421] she casts her old feathers and gets new ones, and this every year. Now neither her flight nor her feathers, whether at one time or the other, are owing to men, but to the Lord, who gives both;

[and] stretch her wings towards the south? Being a bird of passage, she moves from colder climates towards the winter, and steers her course to the south towards warmer ones[f1422]; which she does by an instinct in nature, put into her by the Lord, and not through the instruction of man. Or, as some say, casting off her old feathers, she flies towards the south for warmth; and that her feathers may be cherished with the heat, and grow the sooner and better. Hence it is, perhaps, as Aelianus reports[f1423], that this bird was by the Egyptians consecrated to Apollo or the sun; it being able to look upon the rays of it wistly, constantly, and easily, without being hurt thereby. Porphyry[f1424] says, that this bird is not only acceptable to the sun; but has divinity in it, according to the Egyptians; and is no other than Osiris, or the sun represented by the image of it[f1425]. Strabo[f1426] speaks of a city of the hawks, where this creature is worshipped. It has its name in Greek from the sacredness of it; and according to Hesiod[f1427], is very swift, and has large wings. It is called ωκυπτερος, swift in flying, by Manetho[f1428]; and by Homer, ωκιστος πετεηνων, the swiftest of fowls[f1429]. It has its name from hxn, to “fly”, as Kimchi observes[f1430]. Cyril of Jerusalem, on the authority of the Greek version, affirms[f1431], that by a divine instinct or order, the hawk, stretching out its wings, stands in the midst of the air unmoved, looking towards the south. All accounts show it to be a bird that loves warmth, which is the reason of the expression in the text.

Ver. 27. Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, etc.] No; but by an instinct which God has placed in it, and a capacity he has given it above all other birds. They take a circuit in their flight, and bend about before they soar aloft: but the eagle steers its course directly upwards towards heaven, till out of sight; and, as Apuleius says[f1432], up to the clouds, where it rains and snows, and beyond which there is no place for thunder and lightning; and make her nest on high? so the philosopher says[f1433]; eagles make their nests not in plains, but in high places, especially in cragged rocks, as in (<183928>Job 39:28).

Ver. 28. She dwelleth and abideth on the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and the strong place.] Where she and her young are safe: so Pliny[f1434] says, eagles make their nests in rocks, even in the precipices of them, as the philosopher quoted in the preceding verse; and here on the tooth, edge, or precipice of the rock, which is inaccessible, and so like a strong fortified place.

Ver. 29. From thence she seeketh the prey, etc.] From the high rock; from whence she can look down into valleys, and even into the sea; and spy what is for her purpose, and descend and seize upon them; as lambs, fawns, geese, shellfish, etc. though they may lie in the most hidden and secret places. Wherefore in the original text it is, "she diggeth the prey or food"[f1435]; as treasure hid in secret is dug or diligently searched for; and for which she is qualified by the sharpness of her sight, as follows:

[and] her eyes behold afar off; from the high rocks and higher clouds, even from the high sky, as Aelianus[f1436] expresses it; and who observes that she is the most sharp sighted of all birds; and so, Homer[f1437] says, some affirm.

Ver. 30. Her young ones also suck up blood, etc.] As well as herself, being brought up to it by her. The eagle cares not for water, but drinks the blood of her prey; and so her young ones after her, as naturalists report[f1438]. And Aelianus says[f1439] the same of the hawk, that it eats no seeds, but devours flesh and drinks blood, and nourishes her young ones with the same.

And where the slain are, there is she; where there has been a battle, and carcasses left on the field, the eagles will gather to them. This is particularly true of that kind of eagles called vulture eagles, as Aristotle[f1440] and Pliny[f1441] observe; (see <402428>Matthew 24:28). Now since Job was so ignorant of the nature of these creatures, and incapable of governing and directing them; and what they had of any excellency were of God, and not of him, nor of any man; how unfit must he be to dispute with God, and contend with him about his works of providence? which to convince him of was the design of this discourse about the creatures; and which had its intended effect, as appears in the next chapter.

CHAPTER 40

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 40

In this chapter Job is called upon to give in his answer, (<184001>Job 40:1,2), which he does in the most humble manner, acknowledging his vileness and folly, (<184003>Job 40:3-5); and then the Lord proceeds to give him further conviction of his superior justice and power, (<184006>Job 40:6-9); and one thing he proposes to him, to humble the proud, if he could, and then he would own his own right hand could save him, (<184010>Job 40:10-15); and observes to him another instance of his power in a creature called behemoth, which he had made, and gives a description of, (<184015>Job 40:15-24).

Ver. 1. Moreover the Lord answered Job, etc.] The Lord having discoursed largely of the works of nature, in order to reconcile the mind of Job to his works of providence, stopped and made a pause for a little space, that Job might answer if he thought fit; but he being entirely silent, the Lord began again:

and said; as follows:

Ver. 2. Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct [him]? etc.] Is he capable of it? He ought to be that takes upon him to dispute with God, to object or reply to him; that brings a charge against him, enters the debate, and litigates a point with him; which Job wanted to do. But could he or any other instruct him, who is the God of knowledge, the all wise and only wise God; who gives man wisdom, and teaches him knowledge? What folly is it to pretend to instruct him! Or can such an one be “instructed?” as the Targum: he is not in the way of instruction; he that submits to the chastising hand of God may be instructed thereby, but not he that contends with him; (see <199412>Psalm 94:12). Or should he be one that is instructed? no, he ought to be an instructor, and not one instructed; a teacher, and not one that is taught; he should be above all instruction from God or man that will dispute with the Almighty, The word for instruct has the signification of chastisement, because instruction sometimes comes that way; and then the sense either is, shall a man contend with the Almighty that chastises him?

Does it become a son or a servant to strive against a parent or a master that corrects him? Or does not he deserve to be chastised that acts such a part? Some derive the word from one that signifies to remove or depart, and give the sense, shall the abundance, the all sufficiency of God, go from him to another, to a man; and so he, instead of God, be the all sufficient one? Or rather the meaning of the clause is, has there not been much, enough, and more than enough said, Job, to chastise thee, and convince thee of thy mistakes? must more be said? is there any need of it?

he that reproveth God, let him answer it; he that reproves God, for his words, or works, or ways, finding fault with either of them, ought to answer to the question now put; or to any or all of those in the preceding chapters, and not be silent as Job now was.

Ver. 3. Then Job answered the Lord, etc.] Finding that he was obliged to answer, he did, but with some reluctance:

and said; as follows:

Ver. 4. Behold, I am vile, etc.] Or “light” [f1442]; which may have respect either to his words and arguments, which he thought had force in them, but now he saw they had none; or to his works and actions, the integrity of his life, and the uprightness of his ways, which he imagined were weighty and of great importance, but now being weighed in the balances of justice were found wanting; or it may refer to his original meanness and distance from God, being dust and ashes, and nothing in comparison of him; and so the Septuagint version is, “I am nothing”; (see <234017>Isaiah 40:17); or rather to the original vileness and sinfulness of his nature he had now a sight of, and saw how he had been breaking forth in unbecoming expressions concerning God and his providence: the nature of man is exceeding vile and sinful; his heart desperately wicked; his thoughts, and the imaginations of them, evil, and that continually; his mind and conscience are defiled; his affections inordinate, and his understanding and will sadly depraved; he is vile in soul and body; of all which an enlightened man is convinced, and will acknowledge;

what shall I answer thee? I am not able to answer thee, who am but dust and ashes; what more can I say than to acknowledge my levity, vanity, and vileness? he that talked so big, and in such a blustering manner of answering God, as in (<181322>Job 13:22 31:35-37); now has nothing to say for himself;

I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; impose silence upon himself, and as it were lay a restraint upon himself from speaking: it looks as if there were some workings in Job’s heart; he thought he could say something, and make some reply, but durst not, for fear of offending yet more and more, and therefore curbed it in; (see <193901>Psalm 39:1).

Ver. 5. Once have I spoken; but I will not answer, etc.] Some think this refers to what he had just now said of his vileness, he had owned that, and that was all he had to say, or would say, he would give no other answer; Jarchi says, some suppose he has respect to his words in (<180922>Job 9:22);

yea, twice; but I will proceed no further; the meaning seems to be, that he who had once and again, or very often, at least in some instances, spoken very imprudently and indecently, for the future would take care not to speak in such a manner: for this confession was not quite free and full; and therefore the Lord takes him in hand again, to bring him to make a more full and ingenuous one, as he does in (<184201>Job 42:1-6).

Ver. 6. Then answered the Lord unto Job out of the whirlwind, etc.] Some think that the whirlwind ceased while the Lord spake the words in (<184002>Job 40:2); which encouraged Job to make the answer he did; but others are of opinion that it continued, and now increased, and was more boisterous than before. The Targum calls it the whirlwind of tribulation: comfort does not always follow immediately on first convictions; Job, though humbled, was not yet humbled enough: God will have a fuller confession of sin from him: it was not sufficient to say he was vile, he must declare his sorrow for his sin, his abhorrence of it, and of himself for it, and his repentance of it; and that he had said things of God he ought not to have said, and which he understood not; and though he had said he would answer no more, God will make him say more, and therefore continued the whirlwind, and to speak out of it; for he had more to say to him, and give him further proof of his power to his full conviction;

and said; as follows.

Ver. 7. Gird up thy loins now like a man: I will demand of thee, and, declare thou unto me, etc.] And prepare to give an answer to what should be demanded of him. The same way of speaking is used in (<183803>Job 38:3);

Ver. 8. Wilt thou also disannul my judgment? etc.] The decrees and purposes of God concerning his dealings with men, particularly the afflictions of them, which are framed with the highest wisdom and reason, and according to the strictest justice, and can never be frustrated or made void; or the sentence of God concerning them, that is gone out of his mouth and cannot be altered; or the execution of it, which cannot be hindered: it respects the wisdom of God in the government of the world, as Aben Ezra observes, and the particular dealings of his providence with men, which ought to be submitted to; to do otherwise is for a man to set up his own judgment against the Lord's, which is as much as in him lies to disannul it; whereas God is a God of judgment, and his judgment is according to truth, and in righteousness, and will take place, let men do or say what they please;

wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous? Is there no other way of vindicating thine own innocence and integrity, without charging me with unrighteousness; at least saying such things as are judged by others to be an arraignment of my justice, wisdom, and goodness, in the government of the world? Now though Job did not expressly and directly condemn the Lord, and arraign his justice, yet when he talked of his own righteousness and integrity, he was not upon his guard as he should have been with respect to the justice of God in his afflictions; for though a man may justify his own character when abused, he should take care to speak well of God; and be it as it will between man and man, God is not to be brought into the question; and though some of his providences are not so easily reconciled to his promises, yet let God be true and every man a liar.

Ver. 9. Hast thou an arm like God? etc.] Such power as he has, which is infinite, almighty, and uncontrollable, and therefore there is no contending with him; as he has an arm on which good men may lean on and trust in, and by which they are supported, protected, and saved, so he has an arm to crush like a moth all that strive with him or against him; or canst thou thunder with a voice like him? thunder is his voice; (see <183704>Job 37:4,5 <192903>Psalm 29:3), etc. and is expressive of his power, (<182614>Job 26:14); and his powerful voice may be observed in calling all things out of nothing into being in creation; in commanding and ordering all things in providence according to his pleasure; and in quickening sinners through his Gospel, by his Spirit and grace in conversion, and will be in calling men out of their graves and summoning them to judgment at the last day. God can both overpower and out voice men, and therefore it is in vain to oppose him and contend with him.

Ver. 10. Deck thyself now [with] majesty and excellency, etc.] With excellent majesty, as I am decked and clothed, (<199301>Psalm 93:1); and array thyself with glory and beauty; appear in the most glorious and splendid manner thou canst, make the best figure thou art able, put on royal robes, and take thy seat and throne, and sit as a king or judge in state and pomp, and exert thyself to do the following things; or take my seat and throne as the judge of the whole earth, and try if thou canst govern the world better than I do; for these and the expressions following are said in an ironic manner.

Ver. 11. Cast abroad the rage of thy wrath, etc.] Work thyself up into a passion, at least seemingly; put on all the airs of a wrathful and enraged king on a throne of state, whose wrath is like the roaring of a lion, and as messengers of death; pour out menaces plentifully, threatening what thou wilt do; and try if by such means thou canst humble the spirit of a proud man, as follows;

and behold everyone [that is] proud, and abase him; look sternly at him, put on a fierce, furious, and menacing countenance, and see if thou canst dash a proud man out of countenance, and humble him before thee, as I am able; among the many instances of divine power the Lord settles upon this one, and proposes it to Job to try his skill and power upon, the humbling of a proud man.

Ver. 12. Look on everyone [that is] proud, [and] bring him low, etc.] As the Lord often does; (see <230211>Isaiah 2:11,12); this is the same as before; and tread down the wicked in their place; the same with the proud, for pride makes men wicked; it is a sin, and very odious in the sight of God, and is highly resented by him; he resists the proud: now Job is bid, when he has brought proud men low, and laid their honour in the dust, to keep them there, to trample upon them, and tread them as mire in the street; and that in their own place, or wherever he should find them; the Septuagint render it “immediately”; (see <232803>Isaiah 28:3).

Ver. 13. Hide them in the dust together, etc.] Either in the dust of death, that they may be seen no more in this world, in the same place and circumstances where they showed their pride and haughtiness; or in the dust of the grave, and let them have an inglorious burial, like that of malefactors thrown into some common pit together; as, when multitudes are slain in battle, a large pit is dug, and the bodies are cast in together without any order or decency; or it may be rendered “alike”[f1443], let them be treated equally alike, no preference given to one above another;

[and] bind their faces in secret; alluding, as it is thought, to malefactors when condemned and about to be executed, whose faces are then covered, as Haman’s was, (<170708>Esther 7:8); or to the dead when buried, whose faces are bound with napkins, as Lazarus’s was, (<431144>John 11:44); the meaning of all these expressions is, that Job would abase and destroy, if he could, every proud man he met with, as God does, in the course of his providence, sooner or later. There had been instances of divine power in this way before, or in the times of Job, which might come to his knowledge; as the casting down of the proud angels out of heaven, (<610204>2 Peter 2:4); and of casting proud Adam out of paradise, (<010324>Genesis 3:24); the drowning the proud giants of the old world, (<010723>Genesis 7:23); and of dispersing the proud builders of Babel, (<011108>Genesis 11:8); and of destroying Sodom and Gomorrah by fire, (<011924>Genesis 19:24,25), one of whose reigning sins was pride, (<261649>Ezekiel 16:49); and of drowning proud Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea, (<021504>Exodus 15:4): which last seems to have been done much about the time Job lived.

Ver. 14. Then will I also confess unto thee that thine own right hand can save thee.] From all his enemies temporal and spiritual, and out of all evils and calamities whatsoever; and that he stood in no need of his help and assistance, yea, that he was a match for him, and might be allowed to contend with him; but whereas he was not able to do the above things proposed to him, it could not be admitted that his own right hand could save him; and therefore ought quietly to submit to the sovereignty of God over him, and to all the dispensations of his providence, and be humbled under his mighty hand, since no hand but his could save him; as no man’s right hand can save him from temporal evils and enemies, and much less from spiritual ones, or with an everlasting salvation; nor any works of righteousness done by him, only the arm of the Lord has wrought salvation, and his right hand only supports and saves. Two instances are given in this and the following chapter, the one of a land animal, the other of a sea animal, as is generally supposed; or it may be of amphibious ones, that live both on land and water.

Ver. 15. Behold, now behemoth, etc.] The word is plural, and signifies beasts, and may be used to denote the chiefest and largest of beasts, and therefore is commonly understood of the elephant; and certain it is that a single beast is described in the following account, and so the word is rendered, (<19732>Psalm 73:22); The word is here rendered by the Septuagint ψηρια, "beasts"; which is the word used by the Greeks[f1444] for elephants as "belluae", a word of the same signification, is by the Latins[f1445]: and so the Sabines called an elephant "barrus", and the Indians "barro"[f1446], r [b, a "beast"; and it may be observed, that ivory is called "shenhabbim", (<111022>1 Kings 10:22); that is, "shenhabehim", "behem" or "behemoth"[f1447], the tooth of the beast: and it may be also observed, that Seneca[f1448] says, that the Nile produces beasts like the sea; meaning particularly the crocodile and hippopotamus. Bochart dissents from the commonly received opinion of the elephant being meant; and thinks the "hippopotamus", or river horse, is intended so called from its having a head like a horse; and is said to have a mane, and to neigh like one, and to bear some resemblance to it in its snout, eyes, ears, and back[f1449]. And the reasons that celebrated author has given for this his opinion have prevailed on many learned men to follow him; and there are some things in the description of behemoth, as will be observed, which seem better to agree with the river horse than with the elephant. It is an amphibious creature, and sometimes lives upon the land, and sometimes in the water; and by various[f1450] writers is often called a beast and four footed one:

which I made with thee; or as well as thee; it being equally the work of my hands, a creature as thou art: or made on the continent, as than art, so Aben Ezra; and made on the same day man was made; which those observe, who understand it of the elephant; or, which cometh nearest to thee, the elephant being, as Pliny[f1451] says, the nearest to man in sense; and no beast more prudent, as Cicero[f1452] affirms. But the above learned writer, who interprets it of the river horse, takes the meaning of this phrase to be; that it was a creature in Job's neighbourhood, an inhabitant of the river Nile in Egypt, to which Arabia joined, where Job lived; which is testified by many writers[f1453]: and therefore it is thought more probable that a creature near at hand, and known should be instanced in, and not one that it may be was never seen nor known by Job. But both Diodorus Siculus[f1454] and Strabo[f1455] speak of herds of elephants in Arabia, and of that as abounding: with them; and of various places called from them, and the hunting of them, and even of men from eating them;

he eateth grass as an one; which is true both of the elephant and of the river horse: that a land animal should eat grass is not so wonderful; but that a creature who lives in the water should come out of it and eat grass is very strange and worthy of admiration, it is observed: and that the river horse feeds in corn fields and on grass many writers [f1456] assure us; yea, in the river it feeds not on fishes, but on the roots of the water lily, which fishermen therefore use to bait their hooks with to take it. Nor is it unlike an ox in its shape, and in some parts of its body: hence the Italians call it “bomaris”, the “sea ox”; but it is double the size of an ox [f1457]. Olaus Magnus [f1458] speaks of a sea horse, found between Britain and Norway; which has the head of a horse, and neighs like one; has cloven feet with hoofs like a cow; and seeks its food both in the sea and on the land, and grows to the bigness of an ox, and has a forked tail like a fish.

Ver. 16. Lo now, his strength [is] in his loins, etc.] The strength of the elephant is well known, being able to carry a castle on its back, with a number of men therein; but what follows does not seem so well to agree with it; and his force [is] in the navel of his belly; since the belly of the elephant is very tender; by means of which the rhinoceros, its enemy, in its fight with it, has the advantage of it, by getting under its belly, and ripping it up with its horn [f1459]. In like manner Eleazar the Jew killed one of the elephants of Antiochus, by getting between its legs, and thrusting his sword into its navel [f1460]; which fell and killed him with the weight of it. On the other hand, the “river horse” is covered with a skin all over, the hardest and strongest of all creatures [f1461], as not to be pierced with spears or arrows [f1462]; and of it dried were made helmets, shields, spears, and polished darts [f1463]. That which Monsieur Thevenot [f1464] saw had several shot fired at it before it fell, for the bullets hardly pierced through its skin. We made several shot at him, says another traveller [f1465], but to no purpose; for they would glance from him as from a wall. And indeed the elephant is said to have such a hard scaly skin as to resist the spear [f1466]: and Pliny [f1467], though he speaks of the hide of the river horse being so thick that spears are made of it; yet of the hide of the elephant, as having targets made of that, which are impenetrable.

Ver. 17. He moveth his tail like a cedar, etc.] To which it is compared, not for the length and largeness of it; for the tail both of the elephant and of the river horse is short; though Vartomannus [f1468] says, the tail of the elephant is like a buffalo’s, and is four hands long, and thin of hair: but because of the smoothness, roundness, thickness, and firmness of it; such is the tail of the river horse, being like that of a hog or boar [f1469]; which is crooked, twisted, and which it is said to turn back and about at pleasure, as the word used is thought to signify. Aben Ezra interprets it, “maketh to stand”: that is, stiff and strong, and firm like a cedar. One writer[f1470] horse of the Nile, as havina scaly tail; but he seems to confound it with the sea horse. Junius interprets it of its penis, its genital part; to which the Targum in the King’s Bible is inclined: and Cicero[f1471] says, the ancients used to call that the tail; but that of the elephant, according to Aristotle[f1472], is but small, and not in proportion to the size of its body; and not in sight, and therefore can hardly be thought to be described; though the next clause seems to favour this sense:

the sinews of his stones are wrapped together; if by these are meant the testicles, as some think, so the Targums; the sinews of which were wreathed, implicated and ramified, like branches of trees, as Montanus renders it. Bochart interprets this of the sinews or nerves of the river horse, which having such plenty of them, are exceeding strong; so that, as some report, this creature will with one foot sink a boat[f1473]; I have known him open his mouth, says a traveller[f1474], and set one tooth on the gunnel of a boat, and another on the second strake from the keel, more than four feet distant, and there bite a hole through the plank, and sink the boat.

Ver. 18. His bones [are as] strong pieces of brass: his bones [are] as bars of iron.] Than which nothing is stronger. The repetition is made for greater illustration and confirmation; but what is said is not applicable to the elephant, whose bones are porous and rimous, light and spongy for the most part, as appears from the osteology[f1475] of it; excepting its teeth, which are the ivory; though the teeth of the river horse are said to exceed them in hardness[f1476]; and artificers say[f1477] they are wrought with greater difficulty than ivory. The ancients, according to Pausanias[f1478], used them instead of it; who relates, that the face of the image of the goddess Cybele was made of them: and Kircher[f1479] says, in India they make beads, crucifixes, and statues of saints of them; and that they are as hard or harder than a flint, and fire may be struck out of them. So the teeth of the morss, a creature of the like kind in the northern countries, are valued by the inhabitants as ivory[f1480], for hardness, whiteness, and weight, beyond it, and are dearer and much traded in; (see Gill on “<184020>Job 40:20”); but no doubt not the teeth only, but the other bones of the creature in the text are meant.

Ver. 19. He [is] the chief of the ways of God, etc.] Or the beginning of them, that is, of the works of God in creation; which must be restrained to animals, otherwise there were works wrought before any of them were created. There were none made before the fifth day of the creation, and on that day was the river horse made; in which respect it has the preference to the elephant, not made till the sixth day. But if this phrase is expressive of the superior excellency of behemoth over other works of God, as it seems to be, it must be limited to the kind of which it is; otherwise man is the chief of all God's ways or works, made either on the fifth or sixth day: and so as the elephant may be observed to be the chief of the beasts of the earth, or of land animals, for its largeness and strength, its sagacity, docility, gentleness, and the like; so the river horse may be said to be the chief of its kind, of the aquatic animals, or of the amphibious ones, for the bulk of its body, which is not unlike that of the elephant, as says Diodorus Siculus[f1481]; and it has been by some called the Egyptian elephant[f1482]; and also from its great sagacity, of which instances are given by some writers[f1483]. However, it is one of the chief works of God, or a famous, excellent, and remarkable one, which may be the sense of the expression; (see <042420>Numbers 24:20). It might be remarked in favour of the elephant, that it seems to have its name from Plat, the first and chief; as the first letter in the Hebrew alphabet is called "aleph"; unless it should have its name from this root, on account of its docility;

he that made him can make his sword to approach [unto him]; not the sword of God, as if this creature could not be killed by any but by him that made it; for whether the elephant or river horse be understood, they are both to be taken and slain: but the sword of behemoth is that which he himself is furnished with; which some understand of the trunk of the elephant, with which he defends himself and annoys others; but that has no likeness of a sword. Bochart[f1484] renders the word by "harpe", which signifies a crooked instrument, sickle or scythe; and interprets it of the teeth of the river horse, which are sharp and long, and bent like a scythe. That which Thevenot[f1485] saw had four great teeth in the lower jaw, half a foot long, two whereof were crooked; and one on each side of the jaw; the other two were straight, and of the same length as the crooked, but standing out in the length: see the figure of it in Scheuchzer[f1486]; by which it also appears to have six teeth. Another traveller says[f1487], of the teeth of the sea horse, that they are round like a bow, and about sixteen inches long, and in the biggest part more than six inches about: but another relation[f1488] agrees more nearly with Thevenot and Scheuchzer; that four of its teeth are longer than the rest, two in the upper jaw, one on each side, and two more in the under; these last are four or five inches long, the other two shorter; with which it mows down the corn and grass in great quantities: so that Diodorus Siculus[f1489] observes, that if this animal was very fruitful, and brought forth many young and frequently, the fields in Egypt would be utterly destroyed. This interpretation agrees with what follows.

Ver. 20. Surely the mountains bring him forth food, etc.] Grass, which grows on mountains, and is the food of the river horse as well as of the elephant; and therefore is furnished with teeth like a scythe to mow it down; and it is not a small quantity that will suffice it, mountains only can supply it; and marvellous it is that a creature bred in a river should come out of it to seek its food on mountains. There is a creature in the northern parts, as in Russia, Greenland, etc. which is called morss and sea morss, and by the description of it is much like the river horse, of the size of an ox, and having an head like one, with two large long teeth standing out of its upper jaw, and an hairy skin[f1490], said to be an inch thick, and so tough that no lance will enter it[f1491]; it comes out of the sea, and by its teeth gets up to the tops of mountains, and having fed on grass rolls itself down again into the sea; and this it does by putting its hinder feet to its teeth, and so falls from the mountain with great celerity, as on a sledge[f1492];

where all the beasts of the field play; skip and dance, and delight in each other, being in no fear of behemoth; whether understood of the elephant or river horse; since neither of them are carnivorous creatures that feed on other animals, but on grass only; and therefore the beasts of the field may feed with them quietly and securely. Pliny[f1493] says of the elephant, that meeting with cattle in the fields, it will make signs to them not to be afraid of it, and so they will go in company together.

Ver. 21. He lieth under the shady trees, in the covert of the reed, and fens.] This may be thought to agree very well with the river horse, the inhabitant of the Nile, where reeds in great plenty grew, and adjoining to which were fenny and marshy places, and shady trees; and, as historians relate[f1494], this creature takes its lodging among high reeds, and in shady places; yea, the reeds and sugar canes, and the leaves of the papyrus, are part of the food on which it lives; and hence the hunters of them sometimes cover their bait with a reed to take them; though it must be allowed that the elephant delights to be about rivers, and in clayey and fenny places[f1495], and therefore Aelianus[f1496] says it may be called the fenny animal.

Ver. 22. The shady trees cover him [with] their shadow, etc.] Under which it lies, as in (<184021>Job 40:21); which is thought not so well to agree with the elephant, since, according to Aelianus[f1497] and other writers, it lies not down, at least but rarely, but sleeps standing; it being very troublesome to it to lie down and rise up again; and besides it is represented by some authors[f1498] as higher than the trees, and therefore this is supposed to agree better with the river horse; especially since it follows, the willows of the brook compass him about; or the willows of the Nile, as some choose to render it; which would put it out of all doubt that the river horse is intended, if it could be established, it being an inhabitant of that river; and yet the above writer[f1499] speaks of elephants, when grown old, seeking large thick and shady woods to take up their abode in.

Ver. 23. Behold, he drinketh up a river, [and] hasteth not, etc.] The elephant is indeed a very thirsty animal, and drinks largely; the philosopher[f1500] says it drinks nine Macedonian bushels at a feeding, and that it will drink fourteen Macedonian measures of water at once, and eight more at noon; but to drink up a river seems to be too great an hyperbole; wherefore the words may be rendered, “Behold, let a river oppress him”, or “bear” ever so hard upon him, and come with the greatest force and pressure on him[f1501], “he hasteth not” to get out of it; or he is not frightened or troubled, as the Targum; which agrees with the river horse, who walks into the river, and proceeds on in it, with the greatest ease and unconcernedness imaginable; now and then lifting up his head above water to take breath, which he can hold a long time; whereas the elephant cannot wade in the water any longer than his trunk is above it, as the philosopher observes[f1502]; and Livy[f1503] speaks of fear and trembling seizing an elephant, when about to be carried over a river in boats;

he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan in his mouth; so bold and confident he is, and not at all disturbed with its rapidity; or “though Jordan”, or rather any descending flowing stream, “gushes into his mouth”, so Mr. Broughton: for perhaps Jordan might not be known by Job; nor does it seem to have any connection with the Nile, the seat of the river horse; which has such large holes in its nostrils, and out of which, water being swallowed down, he can throw it with great force. Diodorus Siculus[f1504] represents it as lying all day in the water, and employing itself at the bottom of it, easy, careless, and unconcerned.

Ver. 24. He taketh it with his eyes, etc.] Or "can men take him before his eyes?" so Mr. Broughton; and others translate it to the same purpose; no, he is not to be taken openly, but privately, by some insidious crafty methods; whether it be understood of the elephant or river horse; elephants, according to Strabo[f1505] and Pliny[f1506] were taken in pits dug for them, into which they were decoyed; in like manner, according to some [f1507], the river horse is taken; a pit being dug and covered with reeds and sand, it falls into it unawares;

[his] nose pierceth through snares; he discerns them oftentimes and escapes them, so that he is not easily taken in them. It is reported of the sea morss[f1508], before mentioned, (see Gill on "<184020>Job 40:20"), that they ascend mountains in great herds, where, before they give themselves to sleep, to which they are naturally inclined, they appoint one of their number as it were a watchman; who, if he chances to sleep or to be slain by the hunter, the rest may be easily taken; but if the watchman gives warning by roaring as the manner is, the whole herd immediately awake and fall down from the mountains with great swiftness into the sea, as before described; or, as Mr. Broughton, "cannot men take him, [to pierce] his nose with many snares?" they cannot; the elephant has no nose to be pierced, unless his trunk can be called so, and no hook nor snare can be put into the nose of the river horse. Diodorus Siculus[f1509] says, it cannot be taken but by many vessels joining together and surrounding it, and striking it with iron hooks, to one of which ropes are fastened, and so the creature is let go till it expires. The usual way of taking it now is, by baiting the hook with the roots of water lilies, at which it will catch, and swallow the hook with it; and by giving it line enough it will roll and tumble about, until, through loss of blood, it faints and dies. The way invented by Asdrubal for killing elephants was by striking a carpenter's chopping axe into his ear[f1510]; the Jews[f1511] say a fly is a terror to an elephant, it enters into his nose and torments him grievously.

CHAPTER 41

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 41

A large description is here given of the leviathan, from the difficulty and danger of taking it, from whence it is inferred that none can stand before God, (<184101>Job 41:1-10); from the several parts of him, his face, teeth, scales, eyes, mouth and neck, flesh and heart, (<184111>Job 41:11-24); and from various wonderful terrible things said of him, and ascribed to him, (<184125>Job 41:25-34).

Ver. 1. Canst thou draw out leviathan with an hook? etc.] That is, draw it out of the sea or river as anglers draw out smaller fishes with a line or hook? the question suggests it cannot be done; whether by the "leviathan" is meant the whale, which was the most generally received notion; or the crocodile, as Bochart, who has been followed by many; or the "orca", a large fish of the whale kind with many teeth, as Hasaeus, it is not easy to say "Leviathan" is a compound word of than the first syllable of "thanni", rendered either a whale, or a dragon, or a serpent, and of "levi", which signifies conjunction, from the close joining of its scales, (<184115>Job 41:15-17); the patriarch Levi had his name from the same word; (see <012934>Genesis 29:34); and the name bids fairest for the crocodile, and which is called "thannin", (<262903>Ezekiel 29:3,4 32:2). Could the crocodile be established as the "leviathan", and the behemoth as the river horse, the transition from the one to the other would appear very easy; since, as Pliny says [f1512], there is a sort of a kindred between them, being of the same river, the river Nile, and so may be thought to be better known to Job than the whale; though it is not to be concealed what Pliny says [f1513], that whales have been seen in the Arabian seas; he speaks of one that came into the river of Arabia, six hundred feet long, and three hundred and sixty broad. There are some things in the description of this creature that seem to agree best with the crocodile, and others that suit better with the whale, and some with neither;

or his tongue with a cord [which] thou lettest down? into the river or sea, as anglers do, with lead to it to make it sink below the surface of the water, and a quill or cork that it may not sink too deep; but this creature is not to be taken in this manner; and which may be objected to the crocodile being meant, since that has no tongue[f1514], or at least so small that it is not seen, and cleaves close to its lower jaw, which never moves; and is taken with hooks and cords, as Herodotus[f1515], Diodorus Siculus[f1516], and Leo Africanus[f1517], testify; but not so the whale.

Ver. 2. Canst thou put an hook into his nose? etc.] Or a rush, that is, a rope made of rushes; for of such ropes were made, as Pliny[f1518] affirms; or bore his jaw through with a thorn? as men do herrings, or such like small fish, for the convenience of carrying them, or hanging them up to dry; the whale is not to be used in such a manner: but the Tentyritae, a people in Egypt, great enemies to crocodiles, had methods of taking thorn in nets, and of binding and bridling them, and carrying them as they pleased[f1519].

Ver. 3. Will he make many supplications unto thee? etc.] To cease pursuing him, or to let him go when taken, or to use him well and not take away his life; no, he is too spirited and stouthearted to ask any favour, it is below him; will he speak soft [words] unto thee? smooth and flattering ones, for the above purposes? he will not: this is a figurative way of speaking.

Ver. 4. Will he make a covenant with thee? etc.] To live in friendship or servitude, as follows;

wilt thou take him for a servant for ever? oblige him to serve thee for life, or reduce him to perpetual bondage; signifying, that he is not to be tamed or brought into subjection; which is true of the whale, but not of the crocodile; for several authors[f1520] speak of them as making a sort of a truce with the priests of Egypt for a certain time, and of their being tamed so as to be handled, and fed, and brought up in the house.

Ver. 5. Wilt thou play with him as [with] a bird? etc.] In the hand or cage: leviathan plays in the sea, but there is no playing with him by land, (<19A426>Psalm 104:26); or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? or young girls, as Mr. Broughton renders it; tie him in a string, as birds are for children to play with? Now, though crocodiles are very pernicious to children, and often make a prey of them when they approach too near the banks of the Nile, or whenever they have an opportunity of seizing them[f1521]; yet there is an instance of the child of an Egyptian woman that was brought up with one, and used to play with it[f1522], though, when grown up, was killed by it; but no such instance can be given of the whale of any sort.

Ver. 6. Shall thy companions make a banquet of him? etc.] The fishermen that join together in catching fish, shall they make a feast for joy at taking the leviathan? which suggests that he is not to be taken by them, and so they have no opportunity or occasion for a feast: or will they feed on him? the flesh of crocodiles is by some eaten, and said[f1523] to be very savoury, but not the flesh of the whale; shall they part him among the merchants? this seems to favour the crocodile, which is no part of merchandise, and to be against the whale, which, at least in our age, occasions a considerable trade for the sake of the bone and oil: but perhaps, in those times and countries in which Job lived, the use of them might not be known.

Ver. 7. Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons? or his head with fish spears?] This seems not so well to agree with the whale; whose skin, and the several parts of his body, are to be pierced with harpoons and lances, such as fishermen use in taking whales; and their flesh to be cut in pieces with their knives: but better with the crocodile, whose skin is so hard, and so closely set with scales, that it is impenetrable; (see Gill on “<262904>Ezekiel 29:4”). Or if the words are rendered, as by some, “wilt thou fill ships with his skin? and the fishermen’s boat with his head”[f1524]? it makes also against the whale; for this is done continually, ships of different nations are loaded every year with its skin, flesh, and the bones of its head.

Ver. 8. Lay thine hand upon him, etc.] If thou canst or darest. It is dangerous so to do, either to the whale or crocodile; remember the battle; or “look for war”, as Mr. Broughton renders it; expect a fight will ensue, in which thou wilt have no share with this creature:

do no more; if thou canst by any means escape, take care never to do the like again; or thou wilt never do so any more, thou wilt certainly die for it.

Ver. 9. Behold, the hope of him is in vain, etc.] Of getting the mastery over him, or of taking him; and yet both crocodiles and whales have been taken; nor is the taking of them to be despaired of; but it seems the “orca”, or the whale with many teeth, has never been taken and killed[f1525]; shall not [one] be cast down even at the sight of him? the sight of a whale is terrible to mariners, lest their ships should be overturned by it; and some have been so frightened at the sight of a crocodile as to lose their senses: and we read of one that was greatly terrified at seeing the shadow of one; and the creature before mentioned is supposed to be much more terrible [f1526].

Ver. 10. None [is so] fierce that dare stir him up, etc.] This seems best to agree with the crocodile, who frequently lies down and sleeps on the ground [f1527], and in the water by night [f1528]; (see <262903>Ezekiel 29:3); when it is very dangerous to arouse him; and few, if any so daring, have courage enough to do it: though whales have been seen lying near shore asleep, and looked like rocks, even forty of them together [f1529]; who then is able to stand before me? This is the inference the Lord draws from hence, or the use he makes of it; that if this creature is so formidable and terrible, that it is dangerous to arouse and provoke him, and there is no standing before him or against him; then how should anyone be able to stand before the Lord, who made this creature, whenever he is angry? (see <197607>Psalm 76:7).

Ver. 11. Who hath prevented me, that one should repay [him]? etc.] First given me something that was not my own, and so laid me under an obligation to him to make a return. The apostle seems to have respect to this passage, (<451135>Romans 11:35);

[whatsoever is] under the whole heaven is mine; the fowls of the air, the cattle on a thousand hills, the fulness of the earth; gold, silver: precious stones, etc. All things are made by him, are his property and at his dispose; and therefore no man on earth can give him what he has not a prior right unto; (see <192401>Psalm 24:1 50:10-12).

Ver. 12. I will not conceal his parts, etc.] The parts of the leviathan; or “his bars”, the members of his body, which are like bars of iron:

nor his power; which is very great, whether of the crocodile or the whale:

nor his comely proportion; the symmetry of his body, and the members of it; which, though large, every part is in just proportion to each other.

Ver. 13. Who can discover the face of his garment? etc.] Or rather uncover it? Not the sea, which Mr. Broughton represents as the garment of the whale; who can strip him of it, or take him out of that, and bring him to land? which, though not impossible, is difficult: but either the garment of his face, the large bulk or prominence that hangs over his eyes; or rather his skin. Who dare venture to take off his skin, or flay him alive? or take off the scaly coat of the crocodile, which is like a coat of mail to him, and which he never of himself casts off, as serpents do?

[or] who can come [to him] with his double bridle? either go within his jaws, which, when opened, are like a double bridle; or go near and open his jaws, and put a curb bridle into them, and lead, direct, and rule him at pleasure. This is not to be done either to the whale or crocodile; yet the Tentyritae had a way of getting upon the back of the crocodile; and by putting a stick across its mouth, as it opened it to bite them, and so holding both the ends of it with the right and left hands, as with a bridle, brought them to land, as Pliny[f1530] relates; and so the Nereides are represented as sitting on the backs of whales by Theocritus[f1531].

Ver. 14. Who can open the doors of his face? etc.] Of his mouth, the jaws thereof, which are like a pair of folding doors: the jaws of a crocodile have a prodigious opening. Peter Martyr[f1532] speaks of one, whose jaws opened seven feet broad; and Leo Africanus[f1533] affirms he saw some, whose jaws, when opened, would hold a whole cow. To the wideness of the jaws of this creature Martial[f1534] alludes; and that the doors or jaws of the mouth of the whale are of a vast extent will be easily believed by those who suppose that was the fish which swallowed Jonah; his teeth are terrible round about; this may seem to make against the whale, the common whale having none; though the "ceti dentati" are a sort of whales that have many teeth in the lower jaw, white, large, solid, and terrible[f1535]. Olaus Magnus[f1536] speaks of some that have jaws twelve or fourteen feet long; and teeth of six, eight, and twelve feet; and there is a sort called "trumpo", having teeth resembling those of a mill[f1537]. In the spermaceti whale are rows of fine ivory teeth in each jaw, about five or six inches long[f1538]. But of the crocodile there is no doubt; which has two rows of teeth, very sharp and terrible, and to the number of sixty[f1539].

Ver. 15. [His] scales [are his] pride, shut up together [as with] a close seal.] This is notoriously true of the crocodile, whose back and tail are covered with scales, which are in a measure impenetrable and invincible: which all writers concerning it, and travellers that have seen it, agree in; (see Gill on "<262904>Ezekiel 29:4"); but the skin of the whale is smooth; the outward skin is thin, like parchment, and is easily pulled off with the hand; and its under skin, though an inch thick, is never stiff nor tough, but soft [f1540]: though, if Nearchus [f1541] is to be credited, he reports, that one was seen fifty cubits long, with a scaly skin all over it a cubit thick; and such, it is said, were by a storm brought into our river Trent some years ago, and cast ashore, which had scales upon their backs very hard, as large and thick as one of our shillings [f1542]. But Aben Ezra interprets this of the teeth of the leviathan, and in which he is followed by Hasaeus; which are strong like a shield, as the words used signify; so Mr. Broughton, but then this is as applicable, or more so, to the scales of the crocodile; which are so close as if they were sealed together, and are like a shield, its defence, and in which it prides itself.

> “the strong shields have pride:”

Ver. 16. One is so near to another, that no air can come between them.] This shows that it cannot be understood of the skin of the whale, and the hardness and strength of that, which is alike and of a piece; whereas those scales, or be they what they may, though closely joined, yet are distinct: those who interpret this of whales that have teeth, and these of the teeth, observe, that as they have teeth to the number of forty or fifty in the lower jaw, in the upper one fire holes or sockets into which they go; and they are so very close that no wind or air can come between them [f1543].

Ver. 17. They are joined one to another, etc.] One scale to another, or “a man in his brother” [f1544]: which may seem to favour the notion of the whale’s teeth in the sockets, which exactly answer to one another; but the next clause will by no means agree with them;

they stick together, that they cannot be sundered: whereas they easily be, at least by the creature itself; but the scales of a crocodile are so closely joined and sealed together, that there is no parting them.

Ver. 18. By his neesings a light doth shine, etc.] The philosopher [f1545] observes, that those who look to the sun are more apt to sneeze: and it is taken notice of by various writers [f1546], that the crocodile delights to be sunning itself, and lying yawning in the sun and looking at it, as quoted by Bochart; and so frequently sneeze: which sneezings, through the rays of the sun, may seem to shine and give light. Though as, in sneezing, water is thrown out through the nostrils, it may be observed of the whale, that it has mouths or holes in its front, through which, as through pipes, it throws out showers and floods of water, as Pliny[f1547] relates; which, by means of the rays of the sun, as in a rainbow, appear bright and glittering;

and his eyes [are] like the eyelids of the morning: the break and dawn of day; a very beautiful expression, the same we call "peep of day": Pindar[f1548] has "the eye of the evening"; break of day, as Ben Gersom says, is about an hour and the fifth part of an hour before the sunrising. The eyes of the crocodile were, with the Egyptians, an hieroglyphic of the morning[f1549]: wherefore this seems better to agree with the crocodile than the whale, whose eyes are not much bigger than those of a bullock; and has eyelids and hair like men's eyes; the crystal of the eye is not much bigger than a pea[f1550]; its eyes are placed very low, almost at the end of the upper lip, and when without its guide, dashes itself against rocks and shoals[f1551]. Though that sort of whales called "orcae" are said to have eyes a foot long, and of a red rosy colour, such as the morning is described by[f1552]; and a northern writer[f1553] tells us that some whales have eyes, whose circumference will admit fifteen or twenty men to sit therein; and in others it exceeds eight or ten cubits; and that the pupil is a cubit, and of a red and flaming colour; which, at a distance, in dark seasons, among the waves, appears to fishermen as fire kindled. And Thevenot[f1554] says of crocodiles, that their eyes are indifferently big, and very darkish.

Ver. 19. Out of his mouth go burning lamps, [and] sparks of fire leap out.] Which, though hyperbolical expressions, have some foundation for them in the latter; in the vast quantities of water thrown out by the whale, through its mouth or hole in its frontispiece, which in the sun may look like lamps and sparks of fire, as before observed; and especially in the "orcae", or whales with teeth, which eject in the same way an oily mucus, or the fat liquor of the brain, commonly called spermaceti, which may appear more bright and glittering. Ovid[f1555] says much the same of the boar as is here said of the leviathan.

Ver. 20. Out of his nostrils goeth forth smoke, as [out] of a seething pot or caldron.] In which flesh or anything else is boiling. It is observed that there is a likeness between the crocodile and the river horse, and particularly in their breathing[f1556]: and of the former it is remarked[f1557], that its nostrils are very large and open, and that they breathe out a fiery smoke, as out of a furnace.

Ver. 21. His breath kindles coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth.] Hyperbolical expressions, which the above observations may seem to justify.

Ver. 22. In his neck remaineth strength, etc.] This is thought to be an argument against the whale, which is said to have no neck: but whatever joins the head and body may be called the neck, though ever so small; and the shorter the neck is, the stronger it is. It is also said by some, that the crocodile has no neck also; but the philosopher [f1558] is express for it, that it has one and moves it: and Pliny [f1559] speaks of it as turning its head upwards, which it could not do without a neck; and sorrow is turned into joy before him; or leaps and dances before him; it departs from him: he is not afraid of anything, though ever so threatening. Or sorrow and distress at the sight of him, in men and fishes, make them leap, and hasten to get out of the way of him and escape him.

Ver. 23. The flakes of his flesh are joined together, etc.] The muscles of his hefty are not flaccid and flabby, but solid and firmly compacted; they are firm in themselves; they cannot be moved; that is, not very easily, not without a large sharp cutting knife, and that used with much strength.

Ver. 24. His heart is as firm as a stone; yea, as hard as a piece of the nether [millstone].] Which must be understood not of the substance but of the qualities of it, being bold, courageous, undaunted, and unmerciful; which is true both of the whale and crocodile, and particularly of the crocodile: Aelianus [f1560] relates of one sort of them that they are unmerciful, though elsewhere [f1561], he represents them as fearful.

Ver. 25. When he raiseth up himself, etc.] Not out of the waters, but above the surface of them, so as that his large bulk, his terrible jaws and teeth, are seem;

the mighty are afraid; not only fishes and other animals, but men, and these the most stouthearted and courageous, as mariners and masters of vessels;

by reason of breakings they purify themselves: either because of the breaches of the sea made through the lifting up of this creature, threatening the overturning of vessels; or of the breaches of men’s hearts through fear, they are thrown into a vomiting, and purging both by stool and urine, which are often the effects of fear, so Ben Gersom; or they acknowledge themselves sinners, or expiate themselves, endeavouring to do it by making confession of sin, declaring repentance for it, praying for forgiveness of it, and promising amendment; which is frequently the case of seafaring men in distress; (see Jon 1:4-17).

Ver. 26. The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold, etc.] It is either broken by striking at him, or however cannot pierce him and stick in him; but since a sword is not used in fishery, rather the harpagon or harpoon may be meant, which cannot enter into the crocodile, being so fenced with scales; but the whale being struck with it, it enters deep into his flesh, and is wounded by it; wherefore this and what follows in the next verses seems best to agree with the crocodile, or some other fish;

the spear, the dart, nor the habergeon; that is, neither of these can fasten upon him or enter into him: and yet it is certain that the whale, after he has been struck and wounded by the harping-iron, men approach nearer to him and thrust a long steeled lance or spear under his gills into his breast, and through the intestines, which dispatches him: darts are not made use of in the whale fishery; and as for crocodiles, as Peter Martyr says [f1562], they are not to be pierced with darts: the habergeon, or coat of mail, being a defensive piece of armour, seems not to be designed, as being never used in taking such creatures; rather therefore a javelin or hand dart may be intended; since, as Bochart observes, in the Arabic language such an one is expressed by this word.

Ver. 27. He esteemeth iron as straw, etc.] You may as well cast a straw at him as a bar of iron; it will make no impression on his steeled back, which is as a coat of mail to him; so Eustathius affirms [f1563] that the sharpest iron is rebounded and blunted by him;

[and] brass as rotten wood; or steel, any instrument made of it, though ever so strong or piercing.

Ver. 28. The arrow cannot make him flee, etc.] The skin of the crocodile is so hard, as Peter Martyr says, that it cannot be pierced with arrows, as before observed; therefore it is not afraid of them, nor will flee from them;

slingstones are turned with him into stubble; are no more regarded by him than if stubble was cast at him; not only stones out of a sling, but out of an engine; and such is the hardness of the skin of the crocodile, that, as Isidore says[f1564], the strokes of the strongest stones are rebounded by it, yea, even it is said to withstand against musket shot[f1565].

Ver. 29. Darts are counted as stubble, etc.] Darts being mentioned before, perhaps something else is meant here, and, according to Ben Gersom, the word signifies an engine out of which stones are cast to batter down walls; but these are of no avail against the leviathan;

he laugheth at the shaking of a spear; at him, knowing it cannot hurt him; the crocodile, as Thevenot says[f1566], is proof against the halberd. The Septuagint version is, "the shaking of the pyrophorus", or torch bearer; one that carried a torch before the army, who, when shook, it was a token to begin the battle; which the leviathan being fearless of laughs at it; (see Gill on "Obadiah 1:18").

Ver. 30. Sharp stones [are] under him, etc.] And yet give him no pain nor uneasiness;

he spreadeth sharp pointed things upon the mire; and makes his bed of them and lies upon them; as sharp stones, as before, shells of fishes, broken pieces of darts, arrows, and javelins thrown at him, which fall around him: this does not so well agree with the crocodile, the skin of whose belly is soft and thin; wherefore dolphins plunge under it and cut it with a thorn, as Pliny[f1567] relates, or with spiny fins[f1568]; but with the whale, which lies among hard rocks and sharp stones, and large cutting pieces of ice, as in the northern seas.

Ver. 31. He maketh the deep to boil[f1569] like a pot, etc.] Which is all in a from through the violent agitation and motion of the waves, caused by its tossing and tumbling about; which better suits with the whale than the crocodile, whose motion in the water is not so vehement;

he maketh the sea like a pot of ointment; this also seems to make against the crocodile, which is a river fish, and is chiefly in the Nile. Lakes indeed are sometimes called seas, in which crocodiles are found; yea, they are also said to be in the seas, (<263202>Ezekiel 32:2); and Pliny[f1570] speaks of them as common to the land, river, and sea; and the Nile is in the Alcoran[f1571] called the sea, and its ancient name was "Oceames" with the Egyptians, that is, in Greek, "ocean", as Diodorus Siculus[f1572] affirms; and so it is thought to be the Egyptian sea in (<231115>Isaiah 11:15). It is observed that they leave a sweet scent behind them; thus Peter Martyr[f1573], in his account of the voyages of Columbus in the West Indies, says, they sometimes met with crocodiles, which, when they fled or took water, they left a very sweet savour behind them, sweeter than musk or castoreum. But this does not come up to the expression here of making the sea like a pot of ointment; but the sperm of the whale comes much nearer to it, which is of a fat oily nature, and like ointment, and which the whale sometimes throws out in great abundance, so that the sea is covered with it; whole pails full may be taken out of the water; it swims upon the sea like fat; abundance of it is seen in calm weather, so that it makes the sea all foul and slimy [f1574]: and there are a sort of birds called "mallemuck", which fly in great numbers and feed upon it [f1575]. I cannot but remark what the bishop of Bergen observes [f1576] of the sea serpent, that its excrements float on the water in summertime like fat slime.

Ver. 32. He maketh a path to shine after him, etc.] Upon the sea, by raising a white from upon it, through its vehement motion as it passes along, or by the spermaceti it casts out and leaves behind it. It is said [f1577] that whales will cut and plough the sea in such a manner, as to leave a shining glittering path behind them, the length of a German mile, which is three of ours;

[one] would think the deep [to be] hoary; to be old and grey headed, or white like the hair of the head of an old man, a figure often used of the sea by poets [f1578]; and hence "Nereus" [f1579], which is the sea, is said to be an old man, because the froth in the waves of it looks like white hair.

Ver. 33. Upon the earth there is not his like, etc.] As to form and figure; in most creatures there is some likeness between those in the sea and on the land, as sea horses, calves, etc. but there is no likeness between a whale and any creature on earth; there is between the crocodile and the lizard; nor is any like the whale for the largeness of its bulk; the Targum is, but on the sea, as Aben Ezra notes; but rather the sense is, there is no power on earth that he obeys and submits to, as the Tigurine version; though the meaning seems to be, that there is none like him, for what follows:

> "his dominion is not on the earth,"

who is made without fear; yet this agrees not neither with the crocodile, which Aelianus [f1580] says is fearful; nor with the whale, which will make off and depart at the shoutings of men, blowing of trumpets, and making use of any tinkling instruments, at which it is frightened, as Strabo [f1581], Philostratus[f1582], and Olaus Magnus[f1583], relate. It is observed[f1584]; of their valour, that if they see a man or a long boat, they go under water and run away; and are never known to endeavour to hurt any man, but when in danger; though a voyager[f1585] of our own says,

> "we saw whales in Whale-sound, and lying aloft on the water, not fearing our ships, or aught else."

The Targum is,

> "he is made that he might not be broken;"

or bruised, as Bochart; as reptiles usually may, among whom the crocodile may be reckoned, because of its short legs; and yet is made with such a hard scaly skin, that it cannot be crushed, bruised, and broken. Aben Ezra observes that some say, the word "hu", that is, "he", is wanting, and should be supplied, "he", that is, "[God], made him without fear"; or that he might not be bruised; wherefore Cocceius interprets the following words entirely of God.

Ver. 34. He beholdeth all high [things], etc.] Or "who beholdeth all high [things]"; even he that made leviathan, that is, God, as the above interpreter: he does that which Job was bid to do, and could not; beholds everyone that is proud, and abases him, (<184011>Job 40:11,12); and therefore he ought to acknowledge his sovereignty and superiority over him, and submit to him;

he [is] a king over all the children of pride: the proud angels that fell, and all the proud sons of men; proud monarchs and potentates of the earth, such as Nebuchadnezzar and others, (<270431>Daniel 4:31-33). But interpreters generally understand all this either of the crocodile, or of a fish of the whale kind. Bochart observes, that the crocodile, though it has short legs, will behold, and meet unterrified, beasts abundantly taller than itself, and with one stroke of its tail break their legs and bring them low; and will destroy not only men, but all sorts of beasts, as elephants, camels, horses, oxen, boars, and every animal whatsoever. But others apply this to the whale, which beholds the tossing waves of the sea, which mount up to heaven; the clouds of heaven on high over it; the lofty cliffs or shores, and ships of the greatest bulk and height; and which, when it lifts up itself above the water, equals the high masts of ships, and is abundantly superior to all the tribes of watery animals, or the beasts of the sea. But this seems not wholly to come up to the expressions here used. Upon the whole, as there are some things that agree with the crocodile, and not the whale; and others that agree with the whale, of one sort or another, and not with the crocodile; it is uncertain which is meant, and it seems as if neither of them were intended: and to me very probable is the opinion of Johannes Camerensis[f1586], and to which the learned Schultens most inclines, that the leviathan is the dragon of the land sort, called leviathan, the piercing serpent, as distinct from the dragon in the sea, (<232701>Isaiah 27:1); which agrees with the description of the leviathan in the whole: as its prodigious size; its terrible countenance; its wide jaws; its three forked tongue; its three rows of sharp teeth; its being covered all over, back and belly, with thick scales, not to be penetrated by arrows and darts; its flaming eyes, its fiery breath, and being most terrible to all, and fearless of every creature; it will engage with any, and conquer and kill an elephant[f1587]; hence in Ethiopia dragons have no other names than elephant-killers: and so it may be said to be king over all the children of pride; of all which proof may be given from various writers, as Pliny[f1588], Aelianus[f1589], Philostratus[f1590], and others; and particularly the dragon Attilius Regulus, the Roman general, killed near Bagrade in Africa, is a proof itself of almost all the above articles, as Osorius[f1591] has described it; nor is it any objection that the leviathan is represented as being in the sea, since the dragon, even the land dragon, will plunge into rivers, and is often found in lakes called seas, and in maritime places, and will go into the sea itself, as Pliny[f1592] and Philostratus[f1593] relate. To which may be added, that this creature was found among the Troglodytes[f1594] who lived near the Red sea, and not far from Arabia, where Job dwelt, and so might be well known by him: and besides, of all creatures, it is the most lively emblem of the devil, which all the ancient Christian writers make leviathan to be; and Satan is expressly called the dragon in (<661203>Revelation 12:3,9). So Suidas[f1595] says, the devil is called a dragon in Job. But be the leviathan what it may, it certainly is an illustrious instance of the power of God in making it; and therefore Job and every other man ought to submit to him that made it, in all things, and be humble under his mighty hand; owning freely, that it is his right hand, and his only, and not man’s, that can save, either in a temporal or spiritual sense; for which end this and the behemoth are instanced in.

CHAPTER 42

INTRODUCTION TO JOB 42

This chapter contains Job’s answer to the last speech of the Lord’s, in which he acknowledges his omnipotence, and his certain performance of his purposes and pleasure; owns his own folly and ignorance, and confesses his sins; for which he abhorred himself, and of which he repented, (<184201>Job 42:1-6); it also gives an account of the Lord’s decision of the controversy between Job and his friends, blaming them and commending him above them; and ordered them to take sacrifices and go to Job and offer them, who should pray for them and be accepted, which was done, (<184207>Job 42:7-9); and it closes with a relation of the great prosperity Job was restored unto, in which he lived and died, (<184210>Job 42:10-17).

Ver. 1. Then Job answered the Lord, and said.] For though he had said he would answer no more, (<184005>Job 40:5); yet he might mean not in the manner he had, complaining of God and justifying himself; besides he might change his mind without any imputation of falsehood or a lie; (see <242009>Jeremiah 20:9); to which may be added, that he had then said all he had to say, and did not know he should have more: he then confessed as much as he was convinced of, but it was not enough; and now through what the Lord had since said to him he was more convinced of his ignorance, mistakes, and sins, and had such a sight of God and of himself, that he could not forbear speaking; moreover an injunction was laid upon him from the Lord to speak again, and therefore he was obliged to give in his answer; (see <184007>Job 40:7).

Ver. 2. I know that thou canst do every [thing], etc.] As the works of creation, and the sustentation of them, show; so the Targum, and can manage, every creature made by him, even such as were not tractable by men, such as behemoth and leviathan, the creatures last instanced in; and was able to abase and bring low the proud, which Job could not do; and could also save him by his right hand, and bring him out of his low estate in which he was, and raise him to great prosperity again, which Job always despaired of till now; and though he had a theoretical knowledge of the omnipotence of God before, (see <180904>Job 9:4-10); yet not a practical experimental knowledge of it; at least not to such a degree as he now had, working upon his heart, bowing his will, and bringing him to a resignation to the will of God; he not only knew he could do all things, but that he had a right to do what he pleased; and that whatever he did he did well and wisely, and in a righteous manner, of which before he seemed to have some doubt. And that no thought can be withholden from thee; either no thought of men, good or bad, of God or of themselves, and so is an acknowledgment of the omniscience of God, and may be an appeal to that; that God, who knows the secrets of men's hearts, knew what thoughts Job now had of God; of the wisdom, righteousness, and goodness of God in the dispensations of his providence, different from what he had before; (see <432117>John 21:17); or rather it may be understood of every thought of God's heart, of every secret purpose and wise counsel of his; which, as they are all well known to him, and cannot be withheld from having effect, or the performance of them hindered, Job now saw and was fully assured that all that had befallen him was according to the sovereign and inscrutable purposes of God, and according to the wise counsels of his will; he knew that not only God could do everything, but that he also did whatever he pleased.

> “thou sustainest all things,”

Ver. 3. Who [is] he that hideth counsel without knowledge? etc.] It maybe understood, and supplied, as it is by Cocceius, "thou didst say"; as the Lord had said, or to this purpose, (see Gill on "<183802>Job 38:2"); to which Job here replies, I am the foolish man that has done it, I own it with sorrow, shame, and confusion: or it may be interpreted as condemning every other man that should act the like part. Schultens understands this as spoken by Job of God, and renders the words, the counsels, purposes, and decrees of God are sealed up by him, among his treasures, in the cabinet of his own breast, and are not to be unsealed and unlocked by creatures, but are impenetrable to them, past finding out by them, and not to be searched and pried into; and so the secret springs of Providence are not to be known, which Job had attempted, and for which he condemns himself;

> "who is this that seals up counsel, which cannot be known?"

therefore have I uttered that I understood not; concerning the providential dealings of God with men, afflicting the righteous, and suffering the wicked to prosper, particularly relating to his own afflictions; in which he arraigned the wisdom, justice, and goodness of God, as if things might have been better done than they were; but now he owns his ignorance and folly, as Asaph did in a like case, (<197322>Psalm 73:22);

things too wonderful for me, which I knew not; things out of his reach to search into, and beyond his capacity to comprehend; what he should have gazed upon with admiration, and there have stopped. The judgments of God are a great deep, not to be fathomed with the line of human understanding, of which it should be said with the apostle, “O the depth”, (<451133>Romans 11:33), etc. Job ought to have done as David did, (<19D101>Psalm 131:1); of which he was now convinced, and laments and confesses his folly.

Ver. 4. Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak, etc.] Not in the manner he had before, complaining of God and justifying himself, but in a way of humble entreaty of favours of him, of confession of sin before him, and of acknowledgment of his wisdom, goodness, and justice in all his dealings with him, which before he arraigned;

I will demand of thee; or rather “I will make petition to thee”, as Mr. Broughton renders it; humbly ask a favour, and entreat a gracious answer; for to demand is not so agreeable to the frame and temper of soul Job was now in;

and declare thou unto me; or make him know what he knew not; he now in ignorance applies to God, as a God of knowledge, to inform him in things he was in the dark about, and to increase what knowledge he had. He was now willing to take the advice of Elihu, and pursue it, (<183431>Job 34:31,32).

Ver. 5. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, etc.] From his ancestors, who in a traditionary way had handed down from one to another what they knew of God, his will and worship, his works and ways; and from those who had the care of his education, parents and tutors, who had instilled the principles of religion, and the knowledge of divine things, into him very early; and from such as might instruct in matters of religion in a public manner; and both by ordinary and extraordinary revelation made unto him, as was sometimes granted to men in that age in which Job lived; (see <180416>Job 4:16,17 33:14-16). Though he had heard more of God through his speaking to him out of the whirlwind than ever he did before, to which he had attentively listened; and the phrase, hearing by or with the hearing of the ear, denotes close attention; (see <264405>Ezekiel 44:5);

but now mine eye seeth thee; thy Shechinah, as Jarchi; thy divine glory and Majesty; the Logos, the Word or Son of God, who now appeared in an human form, and spake to Job out of the whirlwind; and whom he saw with the eyes of his body, as several of the patriarchs had seen him, and which is the sense of an ancient writer [f1596]; though no doubt he saw him also with the eyes of his understanding, and had a clearer sight of his living Redeemer, the Messiah, than ever he had before; and saw more of God in Christ, of his nature, perfections, and glory, than ever he had as yet seen; and what he had heard of him came greatly short of what he now saw; particularly he had a more clear and distinct view of the sovereignty, wisdom, goodness, and justice of God in the dealings of his providence with the children of men, and with himself, to which now he humbly submitted.

Ver. 6. Wherefore I abhor [myself], etc.] Or all my words, as Aben Ezra; all the indecent expressions he had uttered concerning God; he could not bear to think of them; he loathed them, and himself on account of them: sin is abominable in its own nature, and makes men so; it is loathsome to God, and so it is to all good men when they see it in its proper light; am especially when they have a view of the purity and holiness of God, to which that is so very contrary, and also of his grace and goodness in the forgiveness of it; (see <230603>Isaiah 6:3,5) (<261663>Ezekiel 16:63 20:41); and repent in dust and ashes; which was an external ceremony used by mournful and penitent persons; (see <180208>Job 2:8 Jon 3:6); and is expressive of the truth and sincerity of repentance; and never do any more truly mourn for sin and repent of it, are more ashamed of it, or have a more godly sorrow for it, or more ingenuously confess it, and heartily forsake it, than those who with an eye of faith behold God in Christ as a sin forgiving God; or behold their sins through the glass of pardoning grace and mercy; (see <381210>Zechariah 12:10 <420737>Luke 7:37,47 <540113>1 Timothy 1:13).

Ver. 7. And it was [so], etc.] What follows came to pass:

that after the Lord had spoken these words unto Job; which he spake to him out of the whirlwind, and after he had heard Job's confession, and the declaration he made of his humiliation and repentance:

the Lord said to Eliphaz the Temanite; who with his two friends were still present and heard the speeches of the Lord to Job, and the acknowledgment he had made of sin; though some[f1597] think that, when the dispute ended between Job and them, they returned to their own country, where Eliphaz is now supposed to be, and was bid with his two friends to go to Job again, which they did, as is concluded from the following verses: but no doubt they stayed and heard what Elihu had to say; and the voice of the Lord out of the whirlwind would command their attention and stay; and very desirous they must be to know how the cause would go, for or against Job; the latter of which they might expect from the appearance of things. Now the Lord directs his speech to Eliphaz, he being perhaps the principal man, on account of his age, wisdom and wealth, and being the man that led the dispute, began it, and formed the plan to go upon, and was the most severe on Job of any of them; wherefore the Lord said to him, my wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends; who were Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite; who gave into the same sentiments with Eliphaz, and went upon the same plan, speaking wrong things of God, charging Job falsely, and condemning him; which provoked the Lord, and caused his wrath to be kindled like fire against them, of which there were some appearances and breakings forth in his words and conduct towards them; for ye have not spoken of me [the thing that is] right, as my servant Job [hath]; they had said many right things of God, and Job had said many wrong ones of him, and yet upon the whole Job had said more corrcet things of God than they; their notion, and which they had expressed, was, that God deals with men in this life according to their outward behaviour; that God did not afflict good men, at least not sorely, nor long; and that wicked men were always punished now: from whence they drew this inference, that Job, being so long and so greatly afflicted, must be a bad man, or God would never have dealt with him after this manner. Job, on the other hand, affirmed, that wicked men enjoyed great prosperity, which good men did not; and therefore the love and hatred of God were not known by these things; and men’s characters were not to be judged of by these outward things; in which he was doubtless right: some render the words “have not spoken unto me”[f1598], before him, in his presence; for they were all before God, and to him they all appealed, and he heard and observed all that was said, and now passed judgment. No notice is taken of Elihu, nor blame laid on him; he acting as a moderator, taking neither the part of Job, nor of his friends, but blaming both: nor did he pretend to charge Job with any sins of his former life as the cause of his calamities; only takes up some indecent, unguarded, and extravagant expressions of his in the heat of this controversy, and rebukes him for them; and throughout the whole vindicates the justice of God in his dealings with him.

Ver. 8. Therefore take unto you now seven bullocks, and seven rams, etc.] Creatures used in sacrifice before the giving of the Levitical law, (<010404>Genesis 4:4 8:20 15:9); and the same number of the same creatures were offered by Balaam in the country of Moab, not far from where Job lived, nor at any great distance of time from his age, (<042301>Numbers 23:1,2); and among the Gentiles in later times [f1599]. And these were typical of Christ, being strong creatures, especially the bullocks, and which were used for labour; and the number seven may point at the perfection of Christ's sacrifice; to which these men were directed in their sacrifices to look for the complete atonement of their sins: now though they were not at their own dwellings, and could not take these out of their own herds and flocks, and Job had none, yet they could purchase them of others; and which having done, they are bid to do as follows:

and go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt offering; that is, by Job, who was to offer it for them in their name, and at whose hands the Lord would accept it, and for his sake. Job, as the head and master of his family, was wont to sacrifice, as every such man did before the Aaronic priesthood took place, (<180105>Job 1:5). Now this was doing Job a great deal of honour, both by calling him his servant, as before in (<184207>Job 42:7), and twice more in this; which was plainly giving the cause on his side; confirming the character he always bore, and still retained; and declaring he had other thoughts of him than his friends had; as well by sending them to him with their sacrifices to offer for them; which was saying, that they had sinned, and must offer sacrifice, and that Job was in the right; and therefore must offer the sacrifice for them. This was putting them on a great piece of self-denial; that men, who were older than Job, great personages, heads of families, and who had been wont to offer sacrifices in them, yet are now sent to Job to offer them for them; a man now in mean circumstances, and who in they had treated with great contempt; and he in his turn had used them as roughly. And it was also a trial of Job's grace, and of his forgiving spirit, to do this for them, and pray to God on their behalf: and the Lord's design in it was, to exercise the graces of them both, and to reconcile them to one another, and to himself; and my servant Job shall pray for you; that their sacrifice might be accepted, and their sin pardoned. In this Job was a type of Christ, as he was in many other things; see the notes on (<181609>Job 16:9-13 30:8-10). There is an agreement in his name; Job, whether it signifies love or hatred, desired or hated, in both ways the etymology of it is given; it agrees with Christ, who is beloved of God and man, and the desire of all nations; who hates iniquity, and was hated for his inveighing against it. Job was a type of him in his threefold state; before his low estate, in it, and after it; (see <501706>Philippians 2:6-10). In his temptations by Satan, and sufferings from men; and particularly in his office as a priest, who both offered himself a sacrifice for his people, and offers their services and sacrifices of prayer and praise to God; and who prayed for his disciples, and for all the Father has given him, for transgressors and sinners, and even for his enemies that used him ill; for him will I accept; or his face, that is, hear his prayer, and grant what is asked by him; as well as accept his sacrifice;

lest I deal with you [after your] folly; as all sin is, being committed against God, a breach of his law, and injurious to men themselves; (see <053206>Deuteronomy 32:6 4:6 <200836>Proverbs 8:36). Though here it seems to be restrained to their particular sin and folly in their dispute with Job; want of wisdom in them was discerned by Elihu, (<183207>Job 32:7,9). So it follows:

in that ye have not spoken of me [the thing which is] right, like my servant Job; and if by neglect of his advice, which would have been another instance of their folly, they had provoked the Lord to deal with them as their sin deserved, it must have gone hard with them. The Targum is,

> “lest I should do with you “what would be” a reproach”

(or disgrace); would put them to shame, and make them appear ignominious to men; as by stripping them of their substance and honour, and reducing them to the condition Job was in.

Ver. 9. So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, [and] Zophar the Naamathite, went, etc.] Having taken the above creatures for sacrifice, as directed, they went to Job with them; and did according as the Lord commanded them; offered them by Job for a burnt offering, and desired him to pray for them. This they did, both as to matter and manner, as the Lord ordered them; and they did it immediately, without consulting flesh and blood, the pride and other passions of their hearts; and they all united in it, and served the Lord with one consent, which showed them to be good men;

the Lord also accepted Job; the sacrifice he offered; perhaps by sending fire from heaven, which consumed the burnt offering: or “the face of Job”; he heard his prayer for his friends, and granted his request for them: or “the person of Job”, as Mr. Broughton renders it; Job in this was a type of Christ also, who is always heard in his intercession and mediation for his people. God has respect to his person, which always acceptable to him, and in whom he is well pleased; and he has respect to his offering and sacrifice, which is of a sweet smelling savour to him. And the persons of his people are accepted in him the Beloved, and all their services and sacrifices of prayer and praise, (<400317>Matthew 3:17 <490106>Ephesians 1:6 <600205>1 Peter 2:5). The Targum is,

> “they did as the Word of the Lord spake unto them, and the Word of the Lord accepted the face of Job.”

Ver. 10. And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, etc.] Not literally, in such sense as Lot’s captivity was turned, (<011412>Genesis 14:12); for Job’s person was not seized on and carried away, though his cattle were: nor spiritually, being delivered from the captivity of sin; that had been his case many years ago, when first converted: but it is to be understood of his restoration from afflictions and calamities to a happy state; as of the return of his substance, his health and friends, and especially of his deliverance from Satan, in whose hands he had been some time, and by him distressed both in body and mind. But now his captivity was turned, and he was freed from all his distresses; and even from those which arose from the dealings of God with him, which he was now fully satisfied about; and this was done, when he prayed for his friends; as he was directed to do. A good man will not only pray for himself, as Job doubtless did, but for others also; for his natural and spiritual friends, yea, for unkind friends, and even for enemies likewise: and the prayer of an upright man is very acceptable to the Lord; and many mercies and blessings come by it; and even prayer for others is profitable to a man’s self; and sometimes he soon reaps the benefit of it, as Job now did. For when and while he was praying, or quickly upon it, there was a turn in his affairs: he presently found himself in better health; his friends came about him, and his substance began to increase; Satan had no more power over him, and the presence of God was with him. All which was of the Lord; and he enjoyed it in the way of prayer, and as the fruit of that;

also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before: or added to him double. Which chiefly respects his substance; his cattle, as appears from (<184212>Job 42:12), and might be true both with respect to things temporal and spiritual. “Double” may denote an abundance, a large measure of good things; (see <380912>Zechariah 9:12).

Ver. 11. Then came there unto him all his brethren, and all his sisters, etc.] Which may be taken not in a strict sense, but in a larger sense for all that were related to him; the same with his kinsfolks, (<181914>Job 19:14);

and all they that had been of his acquaintance before; that knew him, visited him, conversed with him, and kept up a friendly correspondence with him; the circle of his acquaintance must have been large, for wealth makes many friends: now these had been shy of him, and kept at a distance from him, during the time of his affliction and distress; (see <181913>Job 19:13,14,19); but hearing he was in the favour of God, and the cause was given on his side, and against his friends, and his affairs began to take a more favourable turn, they came to him again, and paid him a friendly visit, even all of them;

and did eat bread with him in his house: expressing their joy for his recovery, and renewing their friendship with him: this was done either at their own expense or at Job’s, for he might not be so poor at the worst as he is by most represented; for he had still an house of his own, and furniture in it, and servants to wait upon him, as appears from (<181915>Job 19:15,16); nor do we read of anything being taken out of his house from him; he might still have gold and silver, and so could entertain his friends: and being a man of an excellent spirit received them kindly, without upbraiding them with their unkindness in deserting him when afflicted; and they bemoaned him; shook their heads at him, pitying his case, that is, which he had been in; for this they might do, though things were now better with him, and might express themselves in such manner as this, and besides, though things began to mend with him, he was not come at once to the pitch of happiness he arrived unto; so that there might be still room for bemoaning, he being comparatively in poor circumstances to what he was before;

> “Poor man, what hast thou endured? what hast thou gone through by diseases of body, loss of substance, and vexation from friends?”

and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him; the evil of afflictions, of body and estate; which, though by means of Satan and wicked men, was according to the will of God, and might be said to be brought on him and done to him by the Lord, (<300306>Amos 3:6); and they congratulated him upon his deliverance from them;

every man also gave him a piece of money, or a “lamb”; which some understand in a proper sense, as being what might serve towards making up his loss of sheep, and increasing his stock of them; but others with us take it for a piece of money, in which sense it is used in (<013319>Genesis 33:19 <062432>Joshua 24:32), compared with (<440716>Acts 7:16); which might have the figure of a lamb impressed upon it; as we formerly had a piece of money called an angel, having the image of one stamped on it; and it was usual with the ancients both to barter with cattle instead of money before the coining of it, and when it was coined to impress upon it the figure of cattle; hence the Latin word “pecunia”, for money, is from “pecus”, cattle[f1600]; this piece of money in Africa is the same with the Jewish “meah”[f1601], which weighed sixteen barley corns; the value of a penny;

and everyone earring of gold; or a jewel set in gold; such used to wear in Arabia, as appears from, (<070824>Judges 8:24); however Job could turn them into money, and increase his stock of cattle thereby. Though, perhaps, these presents were made him, not so much to enrich him, but as tokens of renewing their friendship with him; it being then usual in the eastern countries, as it is to this day, that whenever they pay visits, even to the greatest personages, they always carry presents with them; (see <090907>1 Samuel 9:7).

Ver. 12. So the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning, etc.] Which verified the words of Bildad, (<180806>Job 8:6,7); though they were spoken by him only by way of supposition. All blessings are of the Lord, temporal and spiritual; and sometimes the last days of a good man are his best, as to temporal things, as were David’s, and here Job’s; though this is not always the case: however, if their last days are but the best in spiritual things, that is enough: if they have more faith, hope, love, patience, humility, and self-denial, and resignation of will to the will of God; are more holy, humble, spiritually and heavenly minded; have more light and knowledge in divine things; have more peace and joy, and are more fruitful in every good work, and more useful; and often they are in their very last moments most cheerful and comfortable: the best wine is reserved till last; for he had fourteen thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses: just double the number of each of what he had before, (<180103>Job 1:3).

Ver. 13. He had also seven sons, and three daughters.] The same number of children, and of the same sort he had before, (<180102>Job 1:2); and according to Nachman the very same he had before, which the additional letter in the word "seven" is with him the notification of; so that the doubting of what he had before, (<184210>Job 42:10); respects only his substance, and particularly his cattle; though the Targum says he had fourteen sons, and so Jarchi [f1602]; others think these may be said to be double to Job in their good qualities, external and internal, in their dispositions, virtues, and graces; and others, inasmuch as his former children were not lost, but lived with God, and would live for ever, they might now be said to be double; and so they consider this as a proof of the immortality of the soul, and of the resurrection of the body; but these senses are not to be trusted to; whether these children were by a former wife or another is uncertain.

Ver. 14. And he called the name of the first Jemima, etc.] That is, the name of the first and eldest daughter was called by Job Jemima; which either signifies "day", so the Targum interprets it, and most do, and so is the same with Diana; or, as Spanheim [f1603] observes, it may be the same with the Arabic word "jemama", which signifies a turtle or dove [f1604]; and who also observes that a country in Arabia is so called, and perhaps from her; and which seems to be confirmed by the Arabic geographer [f1605], who speaks of a queen called Jamama, who dwelt in a city of the country he describes as being on the north of Arabia Felix, and also speaks of a way from thence to Bozrah in Edom;

and the name of the second, Kezia; or Cassia; an aromatic herb of a very fragrant smell, as we render the word, (<194508>Psalm 45:8); and from this person the above learned writer conjectures Mount Casius in Arabia might have its name; and the name of the third, Kerenhappuch; which signifies an horn or vessel of paint, such as the eastern women used to paint their faces, particularly their eyes with, (<240430>Jeremiah 4:30); and as Jezebel did, (<120930>2 Kings 9:30); or “the ray of a precious stone”; some say the carbuncle [f1606] or ruby; according to the Targum, the emerald; in (<132902>1 Chronicles 29:2), the word is rendered “glittering stones”. Now these names may have respect to Job’s daughters themselves, to their external beauty, afterwards observed, so the Targum,

> “he called the one Jemima, because her beauty was as the day; the other he called Kezia, because she was precious like cassia; and another he called Kerenhappuch, because great was the brightness of the glory of her countenance, as the emerald.”

The complexion of the first might be clear as a bright day, though like that but of a short duration; (see <220610>Song of Solomon 6:10); the next might have her name from the fragrancy and sweetness of her temper; and the third, as being so beautiful that she needed no paint to set her off, but was beauty and paint herself; or her beauty was as bright and dazzling as a precious stone; (see <250407>Lamentations 4:7). Or these may respect their internal qualities, virtues, and graces; being children of the day, and not of the night; having a good name, which is better than all spices; and possessed of such graces as were comparable to jewels and precious stones. Though it might be, that Job, in giving them these names, may have respect to the change of his state and condition; his first daughter he called Jemima, or “day”, because it was now day, with him: he had been in the night and darkness of adversity, temporal and spiritual, but now he enjoyed a day of prosperity, and of spiritual light and joy; the justness of his cause appeared, his righteousness was brought forth as the light, and his judgment as noonday; and the dispensations of divine Providence appeared to him in a different light than he had seen them in: his second daughter he called Kezia, or Cassia, an herb of a sweet smell, in opposition to the stench of his ulcers and of his breath, which had been so very offensive, and from which he was now free; and may denote also the recovery of his good name, better than precious ointment, in which cassia was an ingredient: his youngest daughter he called Kerenhappuch, the horn of paint, in opposition to his horn being defiled in the dust, and his face foul with weeping, (<181615>Job 16:15,16); or if Kerenhappuch signifies the horn turned, as Peritsol interprets it, it may have respect to the strange and sudden turn of Job’s affairs: and it is easy to observe, that men have given names to their children on account of their present state and condition, or on account of the change of a former one; (see <014151>Genesis 41:51,52 <021803>Exodus 18:3,4).

Ver. 15. And in all the land were no women found [so] fair as the daughters of Job, etc.] Either in the whole world, which is not improbable: or it may be rather in the land or country in which they dwelt; and which may be gathered from their names, as before observed. The people of God, and children of Christ, the antitype of Job, are all fair, and there is no spot in them; a perfection of beauty, perfectly comely, through the comeliness of Christ put upon them, and are without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; and their father gave them inheritance among their brethren; which was done not on account of their beauty or virtue; nor is this observed so much to show the great riches of Job, that he could give his daughters as much as his sons, as his impartiality to his children, and his strict justice and equity in distributing his substance to them all alike, making no difference between male and female. And so in Christ, the antitype of Job, there is neither male nor female, no difference between them, (<480328>Galatians 3:28): but being all children, they are heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, and equally partake of the same inheritance with the saints in light, (<450817>Romans 8:17 <510112>Colossians 1:12).

Ver. 16. After this lived Job an hundred and forty years, etc.] Not after he had arrived to the height of his prosperity; not after the birth of his children, and they were grown up, and had their portions given them, which must take in a considerable number of years; but after his afflictions were over, and his prosperity began: and if his years were doubled, as some think, though that is not certain, then he must be seventy years of age when he was so sorely afflicted and must live to the age of two hundred and ten; which is the common notion of the Jewish writers[f1607]: however, he must be fifty or sixty years of age at that time, since his former children were grown up and were for themselves; and it is said[f1608], his afflictions continued seven years. So that it is not at all improbable that he lived to be about two hundred years of age; and which was a singular blessing of God to him, if you compare his age with that of Jacob, Joseph, Moses, and Joshua, between the two former and the two latter he may be supposed to live; and saw his sons, and his sons’ sons, [even] four generations; Joseph saw but the third, Job the fourth, he was a great-great-grandfather. This was no doubt a pleasant sight to him, to see such a numerous offspring descending from him; and especially if they were walking in the ways of God, as probably they were, since no doubt he would take all the care of their education that in him lay. This is the great blessing promised to the Messiah, the antitype of Job, (<235310>Isaiah 53:10); see also (<235921>Isaiah 59:21).

Ver. 17. So Job died, etc.] As every man does, though he lived so long, and as Methuselah the oldest man did, (<010527>Genesis 5:27); and though a good man, the best of men die as well as others: so Job died, as a good man, in the Lord, in faith and hope of eternal life and happiness; and so he died in all his outward prosperity and happiness, having great substance and a numerous offspring; and full of days; lived out all his days, the full term of life in common, and longer than it was usual for men to live. He had a long life to satisfaction, as is promised, (<199116>Psalm 91:16). He lived as long as he desired to live, was quite satisfied with living; not that he loathed life, as he once did, and in that sense he did, and from such principles and with such views as he then had, (<180715>Job 7:15,16). But he had enough of life, and was willing to die; and came to his grave, as Eliphaz said, “like a shock of corn in his season”, (<180526>Job 5:26). Adrichomius [f1609], from certain travellers, speaks of the sepulchre of Job, in the form of a pyramid, in the plains of the land of Uz, to the east of the city Sueta, shown to this day, and had in great honour by Greeks and others; and which is more probable than what some say [f1610], that his grave is in Constantinople, where there is a gate called Job’s gate, from thence: but the Job there buried was a general of the Saracens, who died besieging that city with a numerous army, and was there buried, A. D. 675 [f1611]. There is a fragment at the end of the Septuagint and Arabic versions of this book, said to be translated from a Syriac copy, which gives a very particular account of Job’s descent as,

[being] old; as he might be truly called, being two hundred years of age or thereabout:

> “that he dwelt in the land of Ausitis, on the borders of Idumaea and Arabia; that his name was first Jobab; that he married an Arabian woman, and begot a son, whose name was Ennon; that his father was Zare, a son of the sons of Esau; that his mother was Bosorra (or Bosra); and that he was the fifth from Abraham. And these are > the kings that reigned in Edom, which country he reigned over; the first was Balac, the son of Beor, the name of whose city was Dennaba; after Balac, Jobab, called Job; after him Asom, who was governor in the country of Theman; after him Adad, the son of Barad, who cut off Midian in the field of Moab, the name of whose city was Gethaim. The friends that came to him (Job) were Eliphaz, of the sons of Esau, the king of the Themanites; Baldad, king of the Sauchseans; and Sophar, king of the Minaeans.”

The substance of this is confirmed by Aristaeus, Philo, and Polyhistor[f1612], ancient historians.

FOOTNOTES

Ft1 -- T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 14. 2.

Ft2 -- Ibid. fol. 15. 1.

Ft3 -- Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 22.

Ft4 -- Prooem. in Job, Quaest. Heb. in Lib. Paralipom. fol. 82.

Ft5 -- T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 11. 1. & Sanhedrin, fol. 106. 1.

Ft6 -- Hist. Job, p. 61.

Ft7 -- In voce ιωβ.

Ft8 -- Onomastic. Sacr. p. 293, 852.

Ft9 -- Comment. in Job, i. 1. p. 6.

Ft10 -- Apud Euseb. Praepar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 25. p. 430.

Ft11 -- Ut supra. (Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 22.)

Ft12 -- T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 20. 3, 4. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 15. 2.

Ft13 -- T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 20. 3, 4. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 15. 2. Bereshit Rabba, sect. 57. fol. 50. 4. Seder Olam Rabba, c. 3. p. 8. Juchasin, fol. 9. 2. Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 1.

Ft14 -- Mensal. Colloqu. c. 32. p. 361.

Ft15 -- Origen contr. Cels. l. 6. p. 305.

Ft16 -- Theologoumen. l. 3. c. 4. p. 188.

Ft17 -- Ut supra, (Mensal. Colloqu.) c. 31. p. 359.

Ft18 -- T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 20. 4. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 14. 2. & 15. 1. Jarchi in Job, 31. 35.

Ft19 -- Vid. Origen. in Job, fol. 1. & Dickinson. Physic. vet. & vera, c. 19. sect. 27. p. 303.

Ft20 -- Geograph. l. 5. c. 19.

Ft21 -- Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 75. 2.

Ft22 -- rs απεχομενος, Sept. "recedens a malo", V. L. Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, etc.

Ft23 -- Heraclides de Politiis ad calcem Aelian. Var. Hist. p. 439.

Ft24 -- Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 50.

Ft25 -- Leo African. Descript. Africae, l. 9. p. 745.

Ft26 -- Hinckelman. Praefat. ad Alkoran.

Ft27 -- Vid. Homer. Odyss. 14. ver. 100, etc. Virgil. Aeneid. l. 7. ver. 537. Justin e Trogo, l. 44. c. 4. Theocrit. Idyll. 11. ver. 34. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 4. Fab. 17. & l. 13. Fab. 8.

Ft28 -- Apud Euseb. Evangel. Praepar. l. 9. c. 25. p. 430.

Ft29 -- Semedo's History of China, par. 1. c. 13.

Ft30 -- wpyqh "cum circulssent, vel circulum fecissent", Vatablus; "circulum absolverent", Bolducius.

Ft31 -- µyhla wkrb "benedixerint Deo", V. L. Piscator.

Ft32 -- µymyh lk "cunctis diebus", Pagninus, Montanus; "singulis diebus illis", Junius & Tremellius; "omnibus diebus illis", Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft33 -- "Singulis annis", Schmidt, Schultens; see 1 Sam. xx. 7.

Ft34 -- Contr. Cels. l. 6.

Ft35 -- In Ioc.

Ft36 -- In voce σατανας.

Ft37 -- In 2 Reg. Quaest. 37.

Ft38 -- So Rambam and Ben Melech.

Ft39 -- ydb[l[Æbl tmçh "nunquid posuisti cor tuum super servum meum", Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt.

Ft40 -- yk "nam", Piscator.

Ft41 -- "Atqui", Schmidt.

Ft42 -- µnj “gratis”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius Piscator, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft43 -- Urp “erupit”, Montanus, Piscator; “eruperit”, Junius & Tremellius; “prorupit”, Schultens, Ft44 -- jlç “mitte”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Schmidt.

Ft45 -- an “quaeso”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Bolducius.

Ft46 -- al µa “si non”, Schultens.

Ft47 -- “Nisi in faciem tuam benedicet tibi”, Piscator, Schmidt.

Ft48 -- “Si non in faciem tuam valere te jussurus sit”, Schultens.

Ft49 -- “Si non super facies tuas benedixerit tibi”, Montanus.

Ft50 -- Ebr. Comment. p. 127.

Ft51 -- µhydy l[“ad manus eorum”, Mercerus.

Ft52 -- “Suis locis”, Vatablus, Schmidt; so Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Bar Tzemach.

Ft53 -- “More solito”, Schultens.

Ft54 -- abç lptw “et delapsa est Seba”, Montanus, Bolducius; “et irruit Sheba”, Schmidt, Cocceius.

Ft55 -- Geograph. l. 16. p. 536.

Ft56 -- Histor. Jobi, c. 3. sect. 12. p. 44, etc.

Ft57 -- µyçar hçlç wmç “posuerunt tria capita”, Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt; “duces”, Pagninus, Vatablus.

Ft58 -- wjçpyw “et diffuderunt se”, Mercerus, Schmidt “effuderunt se”, Cocceius.

Ft59 -- Cyropaedia, l. 3. c. 11.

Ft60 -- Apud. Euseb. Praepar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 25. p. 431.

Ft61 -- zl[m ta “pallium suum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schultens; “tunicam suam”, Munster, Cocceius, Schmidt, Jo. Henric. Michaelis.

Ft62 -- κειρασψαι τε κομην, etc. Odyss. 4. ver. 198. & Odyss. 24. ver. 46.

Ft63 -- hlpt ˆtn alw και ουκ εδωκεν αφροσυνην, Sept. “nec attribuit insulsitatem”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius.

Ft64 -- hlpt “insulsum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Bolducius.

Ft65 -- wtmt του τελειοτητος, Polychronius in Drusius; “perfectionem suam”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus.

Ft66 -- w[lbl “ad deglutiendum eum”, Montanus; “ad illum absorbendum”, Schultens; “ut absorberem eum”, Michaelis.

Ft67 -- µnj διακενης, Sept. “frustra”, V. L. Junius & Tremellius,

Ft68 -- Ebr. Comment. p. 582.

Ft69 -- rw[d[b rw[“cutim super cute”, Schultens.

Ft70 -- Vid Bartholin. Anatomia Reform. l. 1. c. 1. & 9.

Ft71 -- So Gussetius and Genevenses, in ib. p. 630.

Ft72 -- Ækrby “benedicet tibi”, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft73 -- “Te valere jubebit”, Schultens.

Ft74 -- wçpn ta “animum ejus”, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocccius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft75 -- Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 22. p. 398.

Ft76 -- [r ˆyjçb “nicere malo”, Pagninus, Montanus, Piscator, Schmidt; “maligno”, Cocceius, Michaelis, “pessimo”, Junius & Tremellius, Schultens.

Ft77 -- Vid. Reiskii dissert. de Morbo Jobi, in Thesaur. Dissert. Philolog. par. 1. p. 556.

Ft78 -- Origen contr. Cels. l. 6. p. 305. So Michaelis in Lowth. Praelect. de Sacr. Poes. Heb. p. 182, 201, 202.

Ft79 -- Delaney’s Life of King David, vol. 2. p. 147.

Ft80 -- De simpl. Med. ad Paternian. apud Schenchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 661.

Ft81 -- T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 20. 3.

Ft82 -- µyhl a Ærb “benedic Deo”, Montanus, Piscator, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft83 -- “Benedicendo et moriendo”, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius, Broughton.

Ft84 -- “Supplica Deo”, Tigurine version; so some in Munster.

Ft85 -- “Valere jubeas numen et morere”, Schultens; “valedic Deo”, so some in Mercer.

Ft86 -- Iliad 24. ver. 527-530.

Ft87 -- Vid. Spanhem. Hist. Jobi, c. 11. sect. 3. etc.

Ft88 -- Apud Adrichom. Theatrum. T. S. p. 21.

Ft89 -- So Aristeas, Philo and Polyhistor apud Euseb. Praepar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 25. p. 431.

Ft90 -- wl dwnl “verbum” dwn “migrare, et sese movere significat”, Mercerus, so Ben Melech.

Ft91 -- dam bakh ldg yk “quod creverat dolor valde”, Pagninus, Montanus; so Mercerus Schultens, Michaelis, and the Targum.

Ft92 -- “Opponitur verbum” l lq “verbo” dbk; “significat se pronunciasse diem inglorium”, Codurcus.

Ft93 -- ˆ[yw “et respondit”, Pagninus, Montanus, Schmidt, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft94 -- “Clamavitquo”, Mercerus; “nam proloquens”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft95 -- rbg hrh “in lucem editus est vir”, Mercerus; “creatus, progenitus”, Drusius, so the Targum; “conceptus et natus est vir, vel mas”, Michaelis; so Ben Melech.

Ft96 -- rma hlylhw “et nox quae dixit”, Mercerus, Gussetius, Schultens.

Ft97 -- Æçj “horrens”, Caligo, Schultens.

Ft98 -- whçrdy la “ne requirat”, Montanus, etc.

Ft99 -- whlagy “vindicassent”, Junius & Tremellius; “vendicent”, Cocceius; “vindicent”, Schultens.

Ft100 -- µwy yryrmk “tanquam amaritudines dici”, Schmidt, Michaelis; “velut amarulenta diei”, Schultens; so the Targum.

Ft101 -- “Velut amari diei”, Mercerus; “tanquam amari diei”, Montanus.

Ft102 -- djy la “non sit una inter dies”, Pagninus; “ne adunatur in diebus”, Montanus.

Ft103 -- “Nehemiah fuisset gavisa”, Junius & Tremellius; “ne gaudeat”, Vatablus, Beza, Mercerus, Piscator, Drusius, Broughton, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft104 -- dwmlg “orba”, Syr. “desolata”, Ar. “vasta”, Schmidt.

Ft105 -- “Sterilis”, Schultens; “effoetus”, apud Arab. in ib. See Hottinger. Smegma Orientale, l. 1. c. 7. p. 136.

Ft106 -- Diodor. Sic. l. 3. p. 148. Strabo, Geograph. l. 17. P. 565.

Ft107 -- Herodot. Melpomene, sive, l. 4. c. 184. Mela de Situ Orbis, l. 1. c. 8. Solin. Polyhistor, c. 44. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 5. c. 8.

Ft108 -- ˆtywl “Leviathanem”, Schmidt, Michaelis. Mr. Broughton renders the words, “who hunt Leviathan.”

Ft109 -- Vid. Aben Ezram & Gersom in loc. R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 1. 1. Aruch in voce tywl. So the word is used, T. Hieros. Moed Katon, fol. 80. 4.

Ft110 -- rjç yp[p[“palpebras aurorae”, Montanus, Mercerus, etc.

Ft111 -- ynjb “ventris mei”, Mercerus, Piscator, Schmidt, Schuitens, Michaelis; “uteri mei”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius.

Ft112 -- µjrm εν κοιλια, Sept. “in vulva”, V. L. “aut, in utero”, Beza, Mercerus, Cocceius, Junius, Michaelis; so R. Abraham Peritzol, and Simeon Bar Tzemach.

Ft113 -- Homer. Iliad. 9. Vid. Barthii Animadv. ad Claudian. in Nupt. Honor. ver. 341.

Ft114 -- Kipping. Antiqu. Roman. l. 1. c. 1. sect. 10.

Ft115 -- Pineda, Bolducius, Patrick, Caryll, Schultens, and others.

Ft116 -- Relation of a Voyage to Egypt, p. 91.

Ft117 -- lpgk “sicut abortivus qui ex utero excidit, aut in terram cadit”, Michaelis.

Ft118 -- Vansleb, ut supra, (Relation of a Voyage to Egypt,) p. 90.

Ft119 -- jky[ygy “labores roboris”, Michaelis.

Ft120 -- “Labores violentiae”, Schmidt.

Ft121 -- çgn “exactoris”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, etc.

Ft122 -- “Grandia cum parvis Orcus metit”. Horat. Ep. l. 2. ep. 2. ver. 178. “----Mista senum ac juvenum densantur funera”. Horat. Carmin. l. 1. Ode. 28.

Ft123 -- ^ty hml “quare dat”, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft124 -- So Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. vid. Schultens in loc.

Ft125 -- So Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. vid. Schultens in loc.

Ft126 -- µynwmjmm “e thesauris”, Cocceius; “ex imis terrae latebris”, Mercerus: “ex locis absconditis”, Schmidt.

Ft127 -- lyg yla µyjmçh “qu laetantur ad choream usque”, Schultens, “quasi ad tripudium”, Michaelis.

Ft128 -- Antiqu. l. 13. c. 8. sect. 4. Ed. Hudson.

Ft129 -- rbgl “emphatice ponitur saepe, ut notetur praepollentia”, Coccei. Lexic in rad rbg.

Ft130 -- hrtsn “tecta”, Cocceius; “velo septa est”, Schultens.

Ft131 -- ymjl ynpl “ante cibum meum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “ante panem meum”, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft132 -- halt Æyla rbd hsnh “num suscipiemus verbum ad te, qui impatiens es?” Schmidt; “qui jam dum lassatus”, Michaelis.

Ft133 -- “Contra te”, Piscator.

Ft134 -- “Forsitan moleste accipies”, V. L. “fatisces”, Schultens.

Ft135 -- trsy, “corripuisti”, Mercerus, Michaelis; “castigasti”, Codurcus, Drusius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft136 -- lçwk “offendentem”, Cocceius; “impingentem”, Drusius, Schmidt, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft137 -- Defatigaris, Cocceius.

Ft138 -- alt aegre tulisti, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus; “impatienter fers”, Schmidt, Michaelis, Piscator.

Ft139 -- lhbt “consternaris”, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft140 -- Ætary alh “adeone nihil pietas tua?” Schultens.

Ft141 -- Montanus, Mercerus, Piscator, some in Vatablus; so Ben Gersom and Bar Tzemach.

Ft142 -- So some in Michaelis.

Ft143 -- R. Simeon Bar Tzemach.

Ft144 -- “Rugitu leonis et voce ferocis leonis”, etc. Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so some in R. Someon Bar Tzemach.

Ft145 -- R. Obadiah Sephorno.

Ft146 -- çyl “leo major”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Schmidt; “leo strenuns et fortis”, Michaelis; “robustior leo”, Schultens.

Ft147 -- Origin. l. 12. c. 3.

Ft148 -- Geograph. l. 16. p. 533.

Ft149 -- De Animal. l. 7. c. 47. & l. 17. c. 42.

Ft150 -- Apud Strabo, l. 15. p. 485.

Ft151 -- aybl ynb “filii leaenae”, Bochart, Schultens.

Ft152 -- bngy “furtive”, V. L. Montanus, Cocceius, Drusius; “furtivum verbum venit”, Schultens.

Ft153 -- “Clanculum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “clam”, Beza.

Ft154 -- “Subito”, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft155 -- T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 89. 2.

Ft156 -- In David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 217. 3.

Ft157 -- jwr “ventus”, Vatablus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Broughton.

Ft158 -- “Obstupui, steteruntque comae----”. Virgil. Aeneid. l. 2. ver. 774. & l. 3. ver. 48. “arrectaeque horrore comae”. Aeneid. 4. ver. 286. & l. 12. ver. 888.

Ft159 -- Vid. Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. p. 665.

Ft160 -- qdxy hwlam çwnah “an mortalis a Deo justificabitur?” Codurcus’ Bolducius, Deodatus, Gussetius, Ebr. Comment. p. 709. “Num mortalis a numine justus erit?” Schultens; so Mr. Broughton, “can the sorrowful man be holden just before the Puissant?”

Ft161 -- rbg rhjy whç[m “an quisquam vir a factore suo mundus habebitur?” Codurcus; “an a conditore suo purus erit vir?” Schultens; so Mr. Broughton, “can the human being be clear before him that was his Maker?”

Ft162 -- ˆymay al “non posuit stabilitatem”, Mercerus, Vatablus; “firmitatem”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft163 -- So Mr. Broughton.

Ft164 -- hlht “vanitatem”, Codurcus; “omissionem, lapsationemve”, Schultens.

Ft165 -- “Gloriationem”, Montanus.

Ft166 -- Sic Beza & Belg. nov. vers.

Ft167 -- “Lumen”, Pagninus, Mercerus; “lucem”, Junius & Tremellius; so R. Levi Ben Gersom, Sephorno, and others; “lucem exactissimam”, Vatablus; “clear light”, Broughton.

Ft168 -- Arrian. Epictet. l. 1. c. 1.

Ft169 -- Theodor. Gadareus, apud Sueton. Vit. Tiber. c. 57.

Ft170 -- µwakdy “conterent eos”, Montanus, Mercerus, Michaelis, Schultens; “sub trinitas personarum”, Schmidt; “angeli”, Mercerus; so Sephorno and R. Simeon Bar Tzemach; “calamitates”, Vatablus; so some in Bar Tzemach.

Ft171 -- ç[ynpl “conam verme”, Coceius; so the Targum and Bar Tzemach.

Ft172 -- “Antequam tinea”, Junius & Tremellius; “citius quam tinea”, Piscator.

Ft173 -- σητος τροπον, Sept. “instar tineae”, Noldius, Schmidt; so Aben Ezra and Broughton.

Ft174 -- “Donec fuerit Arcturus”, Pagninus, Vatablus; so some in Aben Ezra, Ben Melech.

Ft175 -- µyçm ylbm “propter non ponentem”, Montanus; “sub. manum”, Codurcus; “cor”, R. Levi, Jarchi, Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis.

Ft176 -- µb “cum ipsis”, Piscator; so some in Mercerus and Drusius, and Mr. Broughton.

Ft177 -- Schmidt; “quae fuerat”, Beza.

Ft178 -- Ænw[çyh “si est correspondens tibi”, Bolducius.

Ft179 -- “Ecce est qui respondeat tibi”, Schultens.

Ft180 -- hnpt oθη, Sept. “obtueberis”, Montanus; “respicies”, Vatablus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft181 -- hanq “zelus”, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft182 -- wjwn “pulchritudini ejus”, V. L. “commodam ejus”, Cocceius; “amoenam”, Schultens.

Ft183 -- Schmidt.

Ft184 -- µynxm “de lanceis”, Bolducius. hnx “est et elypeus, umbo”, Codurcus.

Ft185 -- µymx “comatus”, Cocceius, Schmidt; “horridus”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft186 -- Sitientes, V. L. “sitibundi”, Montanus, Bolducius; so Simeon Bar Tzemach.

Ft187 -- Hinckelman. Praefat. ad Alcoran. p. 28, 29.

Ft188 -- yk “quia”, Pagninus, Montanus; “etenim”, Beza, Mercerus; “nam”, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens; so Broughton; “sane”, Bolducius.

Ft189 -- ˆwa “iniquitas”, Pagninus, Montanus, Munster, Bolducius, Schmidt, Michaelis; “improbitas”, Codurcus.

Ft190 -- lm[“perversitas”, Pagninus; “improbitas”, Schultens.

Ft191 -- yk “sed”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius Schmidt, so Broughton.

Ft192 -- Pçr ynb, “tilii prunae”, Montanus, Vatablus, Piscator, Cocceius, Bolducius, Schmidt.

Ft193 -- Hinckelman. Praefat. ad Alcoran. p. 29. So Schultens renders it, “tela corusea”.

Ft194 -- µlwa “profecto”, Junius & Tremellius; “enimvero”, Piscator, Cocceius, Schultens; “certe”, Mercerus, Vatablus, Beza; “verum, enimvero”, Schmidt, Michaelis; so Broughton.

Ft195 -- ytrbd µyça “ponam eloquium meum”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus; “deponerem verba mea, i.e. dirigerem”, Vatablus; “dirigerem sermonem meum”, Beza, Michaelis; “dispose my talk unto God”, Broughton.

Ft196 -- “Enucleatius disseram de Deo, et de Numine instruam sermocinationem meam”, Schultens.

Ft197 -- Leuwenhoeck apud Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 667.

Ft198 -- twxwj “in geuere significat loca quae sunt foris”, Piscator; “exteriora”, Mercerus; “open fields”, Broughton; “faciem viarum”, Beza.

Ft199 -- “Super faciem platearum”, Pagninus, Mercerus, Boldueius, Cocceius, Schultens; “super facies platearum”, Montanus, Schmidt; “super plateas”, Vatablus, Michaelis.

Ft200 -- µyrdq “denigrati”, Montanus, Bolducius; “atrati”, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis; “pullati”, Pagninus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus, Beza; “sordidati”, Schultens.

Ft201 -- Aben Ezra, Jarchi, & R. Simeon Bar Tzemach.

Ft202 -- hyçt “quicquam”, Pagninus, Vatablus, Drusius, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “quicquam rei”, Cocceius, Michaelis; so Kimchi in Sepher Shorash, rad. çy.

Ft203 -- “Consistentiam”, Montanus; “nihil solidi”, Tigurine version.

Ft204 -- “Sapientiam”, Schmidt; so Aben Ezra & Syr. ver. “astu”, Codurcus.

Ft205 -- µmr[b “per suam ipsorum astutiam”, Schultens.

Ft206 -- µyltpn “intorquentium”, Schmidt; “tortuosorum”, Schultens.

Ft207 -- hrhmn “festinata, ab origine festinandi”, Schultens.

Ft208 -- wççmy hlylk “tanquam noctum palpant”, Schultens.

Ft209 -- wçnpy “incurrent”, V. L. “incurrunt”, Vatablus, Mercerus.

Ft210 -- So some in Michaelis.

Ft211 -- “A gladio oris eorum”, V. L. “a gladio qui ex ore eorum”, De Dieu, Schultens.

Ft212 -- ldl “tenai”, Montanus, Vatablus, Junius, Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft213 -- ydç σαδδαι, Symmachus; Saddai, Montanus, Drusius; “omnisufficientis”, Cocceius.

Ft214 -- “Alii a mamma deducunt quae” dç, Ebraeis, “q. mammosum dieas, quod omnia alat”, Drusius.

Ft215 -- rswm νουψετημα, Sept. “eruditionem”, Cocceius.

Ft216 -- ολιγωρει.

Ft217 -- Assembly’s Annotations.

Ft218 -- hnyprt “sanabunt”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft219 -- brj ydym “de manu gladii”, V. L. “e manibus gladii”, Pagninus & Montanus, etc.

Ft220 -- jwçb “dum pervagabitur”, Vatablus; “quum grassatur”, Cocceius, Godurcus; “grassabitur”, Grotius; so Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom, and R. Jonah, in Ben Melech.

Ft221 -- “Ridebis ventos hoc munere teetus et imbres”, Martial.

Ft222 -- See Egmont and Heyman’s Travels, vol. 2. p. 156.

Ft223 -- Ælha µwlç yk “quod pax tentorium tuum”, Montanus, Bolducius; so Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft224 -- T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 34. 1. Yebamot, fol. 62. 2. & 63. 1. Sanhedrin, fol. 76. 2.

Ft225 -- ajjt al “non errabis, i.e. non eris erro et palans”, Codurcus; “non aberrabis”, Beza, Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft226 -- “Nec votis frustrabere”, Schultens.

Ft227 -- br “multum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Mercerus, Piscator, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft228 -- rbq ylaawbt “ingredieris in sepulchrum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius, Michaelis; “intrabis ad tumulum”, Schultens.

Ft229 -- jlkb “in summa senectute”, Michaelis; “in decrepita senectue”, Schultens.

Ft230 -- <Arabic> p. 232. “austero et tetrico (corrugato) vultu fuit”, Golius, col. 2057. Castell. col. 1733. So Hinckelman. Praefat. ad Alcoran. p. 29. Hottinger. Smegina Oriental. l. 1. c. 7. p. 162. Thesaur. Philolog. l. 2. c. 1. p. 507, 508.

Ft231 -- twl[k “sicut ascendere”, Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt, Michaelis; “sicut ascendit”, Pagninus, Mercerus.

Ft232 -- Æl [d “scito tibi”, Montanus, Mercerus, etc.

Ft233 -- ˆ[yw “tunc respondit”, Drusius.

Ft234 -- lqçy lwqç “librando, libraretur”, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft235 -- yç[k “ira mea”, Pagninus, Montanus, Drusius, Schmidt, etc. so the Targum and Sept.

Ft236 -- “Querela mea”, Vatablus, Mercerus.

Ft237 -- “Impatientia”, Belgae, Castalio.

Ft238 -- µymy “marium”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft239 -- dbky “copiosior et gravior est”, Michaelis; so Schultens.

Ft240 -- w[l yrbd ˆk⊣[“propterea verba mea aestuantia sunt”, Schultens.

Ft241 -- Ethiopic. l. 9. c. 19.

Ft242 -- Sepher Shorash, rad. µlj; so Ben Melech.

Ft243 -- Hottinger. Smegma Oriental. l. 1. c. 7. p. 152. Hinckeman. Praefat. ad Alcoran. p. 29.

Ft244 -- R. Issac in Kimchi ibid. Ben Melech & Ben Gersom in loc; so some in Bar Tzemach; “saliva sanitatis”, Gussetius, p. 260.

Ft245 -- twmlj ryrb “in saliva somnolentiae”, Schultens.

Ft246 -- Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 670.

Ft247 -- Jarchi & R. Mesallem in ib.

Ft248 -- ymjl ywdk “ut fastidia pannis mei”, Cocceius.

Ft249 -- “Velut excrement um panis”, Neuman. apud Michael.

Ft250 -- awbt “ut veniat”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Schmidt, Michaelis; “utinam veniret”, Schultens.

Ft251 -- ynakdy “me conterat”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Schmidt; so Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft252 -- hdlsaw “calefaciam”, Pagninus, Bolducius; “flagrem”, Vatablus; “exaestuo”, Junius & Tremellius; “urar”, Drusius, Mercerus; so Gersom, Kimchi, Peritsol, & Ben Melech.

Ft253 -- ηλλομην, Sept. “saltarem prae gaudio”; so some in Munster.

Ft254 -- “Et pede terram quatium cum exultatione”, Schultens.

Ft255 -- “Consolidescam”, Montanus; “corroboror”, Beza; so Aben Ezra.

Ft256 -- Vatablus, Tigurine version, Michaelis.

Ft257 -- So Vatablus, Mercerus, Codurcus, Cocceius.

Ft258 -- ljya yk οτι υπομενω, Sept. “ut sustineam”, V. L.

Ft259 -- “Ut durem”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft260 -- yb ytrz[“defensio mea penes me”, Junius et Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft261 -- hyçwt “lex”, Mercerus; so Peritsol.

Ft262 -- So Cocceius and Schultens.

Ft263 -- So De Dieu.

Ft264 -- sml “liquefacto”, Vatablus, Mercerus, Beza; so Ben Gersom.

Ft265 -- “Cujus liquescit benignitas”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, “qui misericordia erga amicum contabescit”, Schultens.

Ft266 -- Mercerus, Vatablus, so Ben Gersom. Some interpret it as a charge that he forsakes both mercy and the fear of the Lord; so R. Simeon Bar Tzemach, Sephorno, and Ben Melech.

Ft267 -- So Pagninus & Beza.

Ft268 -- wrb[y “praetereunt”, Mercerus, Schmidt; “transeunt”, Piscator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft269 -- So Michaelis.

Ft270 -- glç µl[ty wmyl[“super quibus accumulatur nix”, Beza, “tegit se, q. d. multa nive teguntur”, Drusius; “the frost is hidden by the snow”, so Sephorno; or rather “the black and frozen waters”.

Ft271 -- Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 29.

Ft272 -- wl µtyyh ht[yk “certe nunc fuistis illi”, Bolducius; so Michaelis; “certe nunc estis similes illi”, Pagninus, Vatablus, Mercerus.

Ft273 -- yl wbh “date mihi”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft274 -- rx dym “e manu tribulatoris, vel tribulationis”, Vatablus.

Ft275 -- κρατων της γλωσσης, Aelian. Var. Hist. l. 2. c. 2.

Ft276 -- So Aquila apud Drusium.

Ft277 -- wxr jn hm “quid duritiei habent verba rectitudinis”, Schmidt; so Luther.

Ft278 -- jwrl “ad respirium”, Schultens.

Ft279 -- Pa “iram”, Vatablus, Mercerus, Cocceius; so Jarchi and Sephorno.

Ft280 -- wrkt “epulamini”, Piscator; so Beza, Gussetius.

Ft281 -- wlyawh ht[w “sed nunc placeat vebis”, Schmidt.

Ft282 -- µkynp l[“coram facie vestra”, Bolducius, Schultens; Ben Melech interprets it, “by your life if I lie”, as being an oath.

Ft283 -- hlw[yht la “non erit iniquitas”, Beza, Mercerus; “nulla”, Schultens.

Ft284 -- çwnal “mortali”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “misero et aerumnoso homini”, Michaelis.

Ft285 -- abx “militia”, Montanus, Tigurine version, Schultens; so V. L. Targum.

Ft286 -- Vid. Gataker. Anotat. in M. Antonin. de seipso, p. 77, 78.

Ft287 -- “Conditio servilis”, Schmidt.

Ft288 -- Paçy “anhelabit”, Montanus, Bolducius; “anhelat”, Beza, Tigurine version, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft289 -- wl[p “opus suum”, Beza Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft290 -- Vid. Misn. Ediot, c. 2. sect. 10. & R. Simeon Bar Tzemach, in loc.

Ft291 -- awç yjry “menses vacuos”, V. L. so Tigurine version, Michaelis.

Ft292 -- ytljnh “accepi hereditate”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius; so Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft293 -- yl wnm “constituerunt mihi”, Pagninus, Bolducius; “mihi paraverunt”, Mercerus; so Schmidt, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft294 -- ytrmaw “tum dixi”, Beza, Piscator, Mercerus.

Ft295 -- So Saadiah Gaon.

Ft296 -- br[ddmw “tum admensus est versperam”, Schmidt; “extendit”, Schultens; “et cor”, Mercerus; so Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom, and Bar Tzemach.

Ft297 -- yt[bç “satior”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft298 -- So Sephorno and Bar Tzemach.

Ft299 -- samy “liquefit”, Junius & Tremellius; “colliquefacta est”, Piscator, Mercerus.

Ft300 -- Hinckelman. Praefat. ad Alcoran. p. 30.

Ft301 -- δρομεως, Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion in Drusius.

Ft302 -- jwr “hali us”, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft303 -- So Beza, Vatablus, Drusius, Michaelis.

Ft304 -- yar ˆy[Heb. “oculus visus”, Drusius, Piscator; “aspectus”, Mercerus; so Simeon Bar Tzemach.

Ft305 -- “Ocuium perspicacissimum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft306 -- Posthac, Tigurine version.

Ft307 -- “Etiam oculis tuis ad me respicientibus, me non fore amplius”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft308 -- “Linquenda tellus et domus”, etc. Horat. Carmin. l. 2. Ode 14.

Ft309 -- yna µg “etiam ego”, Vatablus, Beza, Piscator, Bolducius, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens; “vicissim”, Noldius, p. 222.

Ft310 -- rxb “in angustia”, Junius & Tremellius, Schmidt; “in arcto”, Cocceius; “in angusto”, Schultens.

Ft311 -- “De angustia”, Vatablus, Drusius, Mercerus, Piscator.

Ft312 -- rmb “de amaritudine”, Drusius, Piscator, Mercerus.

Ft313 -- hjyça “meditabor et eloquar”, Michaelis.

Ft314 -- açy “ardebit”, Pagninus; so Kimchi in Sepher Shorash. & Ben Melech in loc.

Ft315 -- ytwmx[m “prae ossibus meis”, Montanus, Tigurine version, Bolducius, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens; so Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis.

Ft316 -- “Aspernor vitam”, Piscator; so Jarchi & Ben Gersom.

Ft317 -- ytsam “tabui”, Cocceius; “ulceratus tabesco”, Schultens.

Ft318 -- ynmm ldj “cessa a me”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt.

Ft319 -- lbh “halitus”, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft320 -- So Simeon Bar Tzemach, Sephorno, Mercerus, Diodati, Schultens.

Ft321 -- Schultens.

Ft322 -- Æbl wyla tyçt ykw “et quod intendas cor tuum”.

Ft323 -- “Adversus eum”. ibid.

Ft324 -- Vid. Noldii Ebr. Partic. Concord. p. 57.

Ft325 -- wndqptw “et tamen, nihilominus visitas eum”, Michaelis.

Ft326 -- ynmm h[çt “respicis a me?” Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis; “avertis oculum a me?” Schultens.

Ft327 -- Vatablus, Drusius, Schmidt; so Sept. Syr. & Ar.

Ft328 -- Æl l[pa hm “quid faciam aut facere possum tibi”, Michaelis; “debeam”, Schmidt.

Ft329 -- µdah rxn “custos hominum”. V. L. Pagninus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus.

Ft330 -- “Observator”, Schultens.

Ft331 -- “Sospitatur”, Codurcus; “servator”, Drusius, Schmidt, Michaelis. Vid. Witsii Oeconom. Foeder. l. 4. c. 3. sect. 30.

Ft332 -- Æl [npml “in occursum tibi”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius.

Ft333 -- Æyl[επι σοι, Sept. “et tibi”, Beza, Grotius.

Ft334 -- açt “tolles”, Montanus, Beza, Drusius, Mercerus, Michaelis.

Ft335 -- ryb[t “transire facies”, Pagninus, Montanus, Drusius.

Ft336 -- So Junius & Tremellius.

Ft337 -- hla llmt “nugaberis haec”, Cocceius; “talia”, Tigurine version; “talk after this sort?” Broughton.

Ft338 -- µa “quandoquidem”, Michaelis; “quia”, Vatablus; “etiamsi”, V. L.

Ft339 -- µ[çp dyb “in manu iniquitatis suae”, V. L. so Montanus, Cocceius.

Ft340 -- “In manum transgressionis ipsorum”, Piscator, Beza, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens; “in potestatem defectionis ipsorum”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft341 -- So Munster

Ft342 -- mjlçyw “et dimisit eos”, Drusius; “e mundo”, Pagninus, Vatablus; so Gersom.

Ft343 -- rjçt “mane quaesieris”, Pagninus, Piscator, Mercerus.

Ft344 -- So Schmidt in loc.

Ft345 -- Gersom, Simeon Bar Tzemach, Sephorno.

Ft346 -- Æqdx twn “pulchritudinent justitiae tuae”, Bolducius.

Ft347 -- hyhw “etsi fuerit”, so some in Michaelis.

Ft348 -- επαμεροι, Pindar. Pythia, Ode 8.

Ft349 -- hagyh “an attollit se”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius; “an superbiet”, so some; Beza, Schultens.

Ft350 -- Nat. Hist. l. 13. c. 11.

Ft351 -- wja “carectum”, V. L. “ulva”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft352 -- Sic Bar Tzemach & Belgae.

Ft353 -- zlsk jwqy rça “quem abominabitur spes ejus”, Montanus; “fastidit”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “cum taedio rejectabit”, Schultens.

Ft354 -- “Quippe abominabitur spem suam”, Schmidt.

Ft355 -- çybk[tyb “domus araneae, vel aranei”; Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft356 -- qyzjy “roborabit in eam”, Montanus, Bolducius; “firmat se”, Vatablus; so the Targum and Ben Gersom.

Ft357 -- bwjr “succosus”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schultens; “viridis quidem et succi plenus”, Michaelis.

Ft358 -- l[“supra”, Junius & Tremellius, Mercerus, Codurcus; “super”, Montanus, Piscator, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft359 -- Saadiah Caon, R. Levi, Ben Gersom.

Ft360 -- Vatablus, Beza, Diodati, Cocceius, Gussetius, p. 247.

Ft361 -- µynba tyb “domum lapidum”, Montanus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens; so Tigurine version, Codurcus, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft362 -- lg l[“juxta fontem”, Pagninus, Mercerus; so Vatablus, Piscator, Gersom, and Bar Tzemach.

Ft363 -- zn[lby µa “num absorbebitur a loco suo?” Beza; “num absorbebit cum quisquam e loco suo”, Diodatus.

Ft364 -- rja rp[m “de pulvere alio”, Montanus, Bolducius, Cocceius; so the Targum; “de terra alia”, Pagninus, Mercerus.

Ft365 -- samy “abominatur”, Vatablus; “aversatur”, Beza, Mercerus, Drusius, Piscator.

Ft366 -- dyb qyzjy al “nec apprehendit manum”, Pagninus, Vatablus, Mercerus, Piscator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft367 -- wnnya “non erit”, Pagninus, Mercerus, Drusius, Michaelis.

Ft368 -- Pla ynm tja “una vice ex millibus”, Schmidt.

Ft369 -- “Ad rem unam ex mille”, Beza; “ad unum argumentum ex mille argumentis”, Vatablus; so Castalio, Bar Tzemach.

Ft370 -- µlçyw “et pacem habuit”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius; “et pace frueretur”, Cocceius.

Ft371 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 83. Wernerus, Palmerius, Theophanes “a aurus”, in Bolduc. in loc.

Ft372 -- Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 673.

Ft373 -- Antiqu. l. 9. c. 10. sect. 4.

Ft374 -- Euterpe, sive, l. 2. c. 149.

Ft375 -- µymç hjn “inclinat coelum”, Piscator.

Ft376 -- µy ytmb l[“super excelsa maris”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc. “summitates maris”, Tigurine version; “celsos vertices maris”, Schultens.

Ft377 -- Orus Apollo, apud Bolduc.

Ft378 -- Cicero de Natura Deorum, l. 2.

Ft379 -- “Legitur et” b[“pro” µy i.e. “super excelsas nubes”, Vatablus.

Ft380 -- Sophoclis Oedipus, Tyran. ver. 1147.

Ft381 -- Aeneid. l. 1. Vid. Horat. Carmin. l. 3. Ode 27. Epod. 15.

Ft382 -- “----pleiadum choro Scindente nubes”. Horat. Carmin. l. 4. Ode 14.

Ft383 -- So Beza, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius.

Ft384 -- wpa byçy al hwla “Deus non revocabit furorem suum”, Pagninus, Beza.

Ft385 -- bhr yrz[“adjutores superbiae”, Montanus, Vatablus, Drusius, Junius & Tremellius, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft386 -- So Jarchi.

Ft387 -- yjpçml “in jus me vocanti”, Cocceius; “ei qui mecum judicatur”, i.e. “parti meae adversae”, Gussetius, p. 880.

Ft388 -- ynn[yw ytarq µa “etiamsi clamavi et respondit mihi”, Schmidt.

Ft389 -- ˆyzay yk “quod exauditurus esset”, Schmidt.

Ft390 -- hr[çb “in turbine ardenti”, Schultens.

Ft391 -- Travels, par. 2. B. 1. c. 12. p. 54. B. 3. c. 5. p. 135.

Ft392 -- Travels. par. 1. B. 2. c. 34. p. 177.

Ft393 -- Uyma “robustissimus est”, V. L.

Ft394 -- ayh tja “unum est”, Munster, Mercerus, Schmidt.

Ft395 -- “Perinde est”, Cocceius.

Ft396 -- “Singulare enimvero id!”, Schultens.

Ft397 -- Urynm “cursore”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, etc.

Ft398 -- hba twyna “navibus desiderii”, Mercerus, Drusius, Schmidt; so Ben Gersom.

Ft399 -- “Naves inimicitiarum, i.e. “piraticae, vel hostiles”; as some in Drusius; so Broughton.

Ft400 -- “Navibus Ebeh”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Bolducius, Codurcus.

Ft401 -- Lexic. Arab. p. 2.

Ft402 -- “Naves arundinis”, Michaelis, “navibus papyraceis”, Schultens, Ikenius, in ib.

Ft403 -- lka l[çwjy “involans in escam”, Junius & Tremellius; “involat in escam”, Piscator, Schultens.

Ft404 -- ynp hbz[a “relinquam facies meas”, Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt.

Ft405 -- hgylba “confirmabo vel roborabo cor meum”, Mercerus; so R. R.

Ft406 -- ynqnt al yk “quod non mundabis me”, Montanus, Bolducius, Beza.

Ft407 -- [çra ykna “impius sum”, V. L. Pagninus; so Schmidt.

Ft408 -- “Ego impius ero”, Montanus, Mercerus, Bolducius; “ego reus ero”, Codurcus; “equidem improbus ero”, Schultens.

Ft409 -- “Discubuimus, pueris aquam nivalem in manus infundentibus”, Petronius in Satyr.

Ft410 -- rbb Smegmate, Codurcus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schmidt; so the Targum, and Mr. Broughton.

Ft411 -- wdjy “pariter”, Junius & Tremellius, Drusius.

Ft412 -- jykwm “arguens”, Montanus, Bolducius, Drusius; “redarguens”, Vatablus, Mercerus.

Ft413 -- “Arbiter”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft414 -- Thalia, sive, l. 3. c. 8.

Ft415 -- So some in Caryll.

Ft416 -- ydm[ykna ˆk al “non sic ego apud me”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Vatablus, Mercerus, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft417 -- “Quia non probus ego apud me”, Bolducius; “quod non sim rectus apud me”, Cocceius.

Ft418 -- yyjb yçpn hjqn “fastidit anima mea vitam meam”, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft419 -- “Excisa est anima mea in vita mea”, Pagninus, Vatablus; so Ben Gersom & Ben Melech.

Ft420 -- So Junius & Tremellius.

Ft421 -- yjyç “meditationem meam”, Schindler, col. 1823. “my sighing”, Broughton.

Ft422 -- yl[“intra me”. Vid. Noldium, p. 701.

Ft423 -- rmb “in vel de a maritudine”, Mercerus.

Ft424 -- yn[yçrt la “neque judices me improbum”, Vatablus; so Schultens.

Ft425 -- qç[t “est opprimere vim injustam alicui facere”, Schmidt.

Ft426 -- [ygy “laborem”, Pagninus, Montanus, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft427 -- Æypk “volarum tuarum”, Montanus, Bolducius.

Ft428 -- Æt[d l[“in notitia tua est”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Beza; so Michaelis.

Ft429 -- So Bolducius, Drusius, Schmidt, Michaelis, and Bar Tzemach.

Ft430 -- ynwbx[“elaboraverunt me”, Tigurine version, Montanus, Vatablus, Drusius, Codurcus, Mercerus, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft431 -- “Nervis colligarunt”, Schultens.

Ft432 -- yn[lbtw “et degluties me”, Montanus, Bolducius; “et tamen absorbeas me”, Schmidt; “absorbes me”, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft433 -- So Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus, Cocceius.

Ft434 -- “Absorbes me?” Beza, Mariana.

Ft435 -- an “nunc”, Drusius; so the Targum.

Ft436 -- ynbyçt “reducturus”, Schmidt, Schultens; “reduces me?” V. L. Beza, Michaelis; “redire facies me?” Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius.

Ft437 -- “Sic semen maris dicitur” πιτυα, Aristot. de Gen. Animal. l. 1. c. 20. “coagulum”. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 7. c. 15. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 3. c. 16.

Ft438 -- Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 681.

Ft439 -- De Anima Mundi, p. 18.

Ft440 -- De Antro Nymph.

Ft441 -- Timaeus Locrus, ib. p. 15.

Ft442 -- Ebr. Comment. p. 555, 556.

Ft443 -- µyyj “vitas”, Montanus, Bolducius.

Ft444 -- Ætdqp “providentia tua”, Tigurine version, Munster, Michaelis.

Ft445 -- So Coceeius, Schmidt.

Ft446 -- yntrmç “observasti me”, Beza, Mercerus; “tum observas me”, Schmidt.

Ft447 -- “Custodisti me”, Drusius.

Ft448 -- “Custodies me”, Vatablus.

Ft449 -- Ebr. Comment. p. 923.

Ft450 -- ynqnt “mundabis”, Mercerus; “mundes”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius; “purges me”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft451 -- zwlq “contumeliis”, Tigurine version; “ignominia”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Vatablus, Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis.

Ft452 -- yyn[harw “et videns afflictionem”, Beza, Vatablus, Mercerus, Piscator.

Ft453 -- “Et spectator adflictionis meae”, Schultens.

Ft454 -- “Satiare ignominia”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft455 -- hagyw “attollit sese”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Mercerus.

Ft456 -- So Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Bolducius.

Ft457 -- So Jarchi and Nachmanides; to which sense the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions incline.

Ft458 -- bçtw “et reverteris”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Vatablus, Mercerus; so Beza.

Ft459 -- yb “adversum me”, Beza; “contra me”, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft460 -- ydgn “coram me”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Mercerus, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft461 -- ydm[“adversus me”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schultens; so Vatablus.

Ft462 -- ym[“mecum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Morcerus, Schmidt; “apud me”, Beza, Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft463 -- abx “militia”, Montanus, Bolducius; “exercitus”, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft464 -- [wga “expirabo”, Montanus; “expirassem”, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft465 -- So Vatablus, Piscator, and some in Mercerus.

Ft466 -- ymy j[m alh “nonne parum dies mei?” Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt; “paucum quid”, Vatablus, Beza, Mercerus.

Ft467 -- “An non param, vel paucitas dierum meorum cessabit?” Cocceius; “annon pauxillulum dierum meorum deficiet?” Schultens.

Ft468 -- µyrds alw “et non ordines”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Mercerus; “sine ordinibus”, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft469 -- [ptw “splendet”, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft470 -- µyrbd brh “an abundans verbis”, Beza; “an multus verbis”, Mercerus, so Kimchi & Ben Melech; and most Hebrew writers take br for an adjective.

Ft471 -- µytpç çya “vir labiorum”, Montanus, Beza, Drusius, Vatablus, Mercerus, Bolducius, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft472 -- So Ben Melech.

Ft473 -- Æydb “jactantias tuas”, Cocceius.

Ft474 -- “Tuane argumenta mortales consternabunt?” Codurcus.

Ft475 -- yjql “doctrina aut oratio mea et sententia mente accepta”, Michaelis; so Cocceius; “id quid ab aliis acceptum”, Drusius.

Ft476 -- Vid. Schultens in loc.

Ft477 -- Æm[μετα σου, Sept. “tecum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Vatablus, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis; “tibi”, V. L. “ad te”, Piscator.

Ft478 -- hyçwtl “sapientiae”, de Dieu, Schmidt, Michaelis; so the Targum.

Ft479 -- “Viro sapientiae”, Drusius.

Ft480 -- “Secundum legem vel ordinationem”, Vatablus.

Ft481 -- Ænw[m hwla Æl hçy yk “oblivisci facit te Deus, aliquid de iniquitate tua”, some in Mercer so Gersom & Ben Melech, & Gussetius, p. 510.

Ft482 -- “Quod obliviscatur tibi Deus ab iniquitate tua”, Piscator; Vid. Gusset ib.

Ft483 -- “Quod oblitus tui est propter iniquitatem tuam”, Pagninus, Mercerus.

Ft484 -- So some in Ben Melech.

Ft485 -- Simonides, apud Cicero, de Nat. Deor. l. 1.

Ft486 -- µymç yhbg “altior est altissimis coelis”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft487 -- “Quid oceano longius inveriri potest”, Cicero. Orat. 36.

Ft488 -- Pwljy µa “si permutet proprie”, Mercerus, Heb. “si mutabit locum”, Piscator.

Ft489 -- “Si transmeabit”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “si pervadat”, Cocceius; “si transiverit”, Michaelis.

Ft490 -- “Si abierit”, Schmidt.

Ft491 -- “Si subverterit omnia”, V. L.

Ft492 -- awç ytm “homines vanitatis”, Vatablus, Drusius, Bolducius, Mercerus, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft493 -- Ænwbty alw “et non cousiderat”, Cocceius; “et non advertit”, Schmidt.

Ft494 -- bwbn “concavus”, Montanus; “cavus”, Drusius; “vacuus”, Pagninus, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Michaelis.

Ft495 -- bbly “fiat vel fit cordatus”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Broughton, Beza.

Ft496 -- “In superbiam erigitur”, V. L. “audaciam sumit”, Schmidt.

Ft497 -- “Pullus onager homo nascitur”, Cocceius, Schmidt; “nascatur”, Schultens.

Ft498 -- “Expande ad eum manus tuas”, De Dieu.

Ft499 -- hp[t “tenebresces”, Montanus, Drusius, Mercerus; to the same sense, Tigurine version, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens; so Ben Melech.

Ft500 -- tjjbw “et confides”, Mercerus, Piscator, Schmidt; “et habebis fiduciam”, V. L.

Ft501 -- µybr “magnates”, Vatablus, Bolducius.

Ft502 -- µhnm dba swnmw “et refugium peribit ab eis”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius; “perfugium”, Junius & Tremellius; “effugium”, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft503 -- “Spes vel expectatio eorum est, vel erit efflatio animae”, Mercerus, Cocceius.

Ft504 -- Golii Lex. Ar. Col. 1743. Vid. Lud. Capell. in loc.

Ft505 -- µkwmk bbl yl µg “etiam mihi cor sicut vobis”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens; so Broughton.

Ft506 -- µkm ykna lpn al “non cadens ego a vobis”, Montanus, Vatablus, Bolducius, Beza, Mercerus, Michaelis; “prae vobis”, Schmidt.

Ft507 -- hla wmk ˆya ym taw “et cum quo non sicut haec?” Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Mercerus; and to the same sense Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft508 -- wh[rl “amico suo”, Pagninus, Mercerus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Broughton.

Ft509 -- µymt qydx “justus perfectus”, Pagninus, Montanus; “justus absolutus”, Mercerus; so Broughton.

Ft510 -- lgr yd[wml ˆwkn “destinatus vacillantibus pede”, Schmidt; so Michaelis.

Ft511 -- zwb dypl “ad calamitatem contumelia”, Cocceius; “ad infortunium vilis habetur”, Gussetius, p. 674.

Ft512 -- wdyb hwla aybh “quique deum portant [vel] portat in manu sua”, Tigurine version, Munster; so Bolducius, De Dieu, Schultens.

Ft513 -- Schmidt, etc.

Ft514 -- Ural jyç “virgultum terrae”, Pagninus, Schmidt; so Drusius and Michaelis.

Ft515 -- hla lkb “ex omnibus istis”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schmidt, Schultens, Michaelis; “per omnia haec”, Cocceius; so Broughton.

Ft516 -- çya rçb lk jwr “spiritus omnis carnis viri?” Pagninus, Montanus, Schmidt, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft517 -- Vatablus, Drusius, Junius et Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schultens; so Broughton.

Ft518 -- çya l[“super virum”, Montanus, Mercerus, Bolducius; “super viro”, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft519 -- µymb rx[y “detinebit in aquis”, Montanus, Bolducius; “si contineat, vel cohibeat, q. d. imperium exerceat in aquas”, Michaelis.

Ft520 -- Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 90, 92.

Ft521 -- µynhk “sacerdotes”, V. L. Montanus, Tigurine version, Bolducius, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft522 -- Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft523 -- µynmanl “veracibus”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Schultens; “fidis”, Mercerus, Piscator; “fidelibus”, Bolducius.

Ft524 -- “Dicendi peritis”, Beza; eloquentibus, Junius & Tremellius; so Kimchi, Ramban, Ben Gersom, Ben Melech, Sephorno.

Ft525 -- µynqz “seniorum”, Cocceius, Michaelis; “senatorum”, Schultens.

Ft526 -- µ[j “gustum”, Drusius, Schultens.

Ft527 -- hpr µyqypa jyzmw “et zonam potentium laxat”, Tigurine version, Piscator, Beza, Schmidt; so Jarchi, Ben Gersom, Bar Tzemach, & Ben Melech.

Ft528 -- jjç “extendit”, Tigurine version, Drusius, Mercerus; “expandit”, Beza, Junius & Tremellus, Piscator, Schmidt; “expandens”, Schultens.

Ft529 -- µjnyw “et ducit eas”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft530 -- Kimchi, Ben Melech, Bar Tzemach.

Ft531 -- yçar “capitum”, Montanus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft532 -- rwa alw Æçj wççmy “palpant tenebras et non lucem”, Vatablus, Mercerus, Drusius, Schultens.

Ft533 -- hla lk “omnia haec”, V. L. Tigurine version, Beza, Michaelis; so Vatablus, Mercerus, Piscator, Codurcus.

Ft534 -- “Alia omnia”, Schmidt.

Ft535 -- “Omnia”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Bolducius, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft536 -- µlwa “ideo, propterea”, Pineda.

Ft537 -- ydç la “pro Omnipotente--pro Deo”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft538 -- þja “lubet”, Schultens.

Ft539 -- rqç ylpj “incrustatores fuci”, Schultens.

Ft540 -- lla yapr “curatores idoli”, Bolducius; so Ramban; “medici idoli”, Pineda; so some in Drusius.

Ft541 -- Jarchi & Bar Tzemach.

Ft542 -- jykwy jkwh “arguiendo arguet”, Pagninus, Montanus, Munster, Bolducius, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt; “redarguendo redarguet”, Michaelis.

Ft543 -- µynp “faciem ejus”, V. L. Munster, Piscator; “personam ipsius”, Beza, so the Targum.

Ft544 -- wtaç “celsitudo ejus”, Montanus, Vatablus, Bolducius; “sublimitas ejus”, Beza, Mercerus.

Ft545 -- “Elevatio, erectio”, Drusius.

Ft546 -- So some in Jarchi & Bar Tzemach.

Ft547 -- µkynwdz “sententiae vestrae memorabiles”, Schultens.

Ft548 -- So the Tigurine version, “meminisse oportebat vos similea esse cineri”.

Ft549 -- µkybg rmj ybgl “eminentiae vestrae, eminentiae luteae”, Beza; so Bolducius.

Ft550 -- So Cocceius, Beza.

Ft551 -- yngm “desistite a me”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft552 -- hm yl[rb[yw “ut transeat praeter me aliquid, vel a me”, Schmidt.

Ft553 -- “Super quocunque eventu”, Schultens.

Ft554 -- “Non sperabo”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus. So Cocceius, Schultens, Gussetius, p. 420.

Ft555 -- wynp-la “ad facies ejus”, Montanus, Bolducius; so Vatablus, Schultens.

Ft556 -- jwkwa “arguam”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Schmidt, Schultens; “probabo”, Piscator.

Ft557 -- “An non sperem in eum?” so some in Munster; so Junius & Tremellius, Beza, Codurcus.

Ft558 -- “In eo tamen sperabo”, Schmidt, Piscator, Michaelis.

Ft559 -- “Ipsum expectabo”, Drusius.

Ft560 -- [wmç w[mç “audite audiendo”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, etc.

Ft561 -- jpçm “judicium”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft562 -- qdxa yna yk “quod ego justus sum”, Schmidt; “me justum esse, vel fore”, Schultens.

Ft563 -- [wgaw çyrja ht[yk “nune enim silebo et expirabo”, Cocceius; so Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft564 -- hmk “vox pertinet ad mulitudinem et magnitudinem”, Pineda.

Ft565 -- So Ben Melech interprets these words.

Ft566 -- yl “sunt mihi”, Beza, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft567 -- ynçyrwt “haereditare me facis”, Beza, Schmidt, Michaelis; so Junius and Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schultens; so the Targum and Ben Melech.

Ft568 -- “Calce tinxisti pedes meos”, Gussetius, p. 550. so some in Ben Melech.

Ft569 -- R. Levi, Ben Gersom, & Bar Tzemach.

Ft570 -- Hist. Animal. l. 5. c. 32.

Ft571 -- Nat. Hist. l. 11. c. 35.

Ft572 -- µymy rxq “brevis dierum”, Montanus, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens; so Beza, Vatablus, Drusius, Mercerus.

Ft573 -- zgr [bç “satur commotione”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft574 -- “Saturus tremore”, Montanus; “satur trepidi tumultus”, Schultens.

Ft575 -- Æyny[tjqp “super illo acuis oculos tuos”, Cocceius; “super hune apertos vibras oculos”, Schultens.

Ft576 -- ˆty ym “quis potest facere?” V. L. “dabit”, i.e. “faciet”, Vatablus; “sistet aut efficiet”, Michaelis; “quis efficiet?” Cocceius.

Ft577 -- d j a a l “nonne tu qui solus est?” V. L. “annon unus?” sc. Mediator, Cocceius.

Ft578 -- µyxwr j “exacte praefiniti sunt”, Tigurine version.

Ft579 -- wq j “statuta ejus”, V. L. Mercerus, Schmidt.

Ft580 -- “Stata tempora”, Beza.

Ft581 -- Consolat. ad Marciam, c. 20.

Ft582 -- l d j yw “donec desinat, sc. esse vel vivere”, Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft583 -- wyl [m h [ç “respice [aliorsum] ab eo”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis; so De Dieu, Schultens.

Ft584 -- “Et cesset”, Mercerus; “et desinat a malo suo”, Pagninus.

Ft585 -- “Et cesset afflictio”, Drusius; so the Targum.

Ft586 -- hx ry “grato animo excipiet”, Tigurine version; “velit”, Montanus, Bolducius; “acceptum habeat”, Piscator; De Dieu, Michaelis.

Ft587 -- Pyl j y “mutabit se”, Drusius; “conditionem suam”, Piscator.

Ft588 -- “Renovat se”, Schmidt.

Ft589 -- Nat. Hist. apud Pinedam in loc.

Ft590 -- Servius in Virgil. Aeneid. l. 3. p. 681. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 16. c. 33.

Ft591 -- wtqnwy “sugensque ejus surculus”, Schultens.

Ft592 -- So Piscator and Cocceius.

Ft593 -- “Mutat terra vices-----nos ubi decidimus”, Horat. Carmin. l. 4. Ode 7.

Ft594 -- So the Tigurine version, Vatablus, and some in Drusius; and some Hebrews in Ramban and Bar Tzemach.

Ft595 -- çl j yw “exciditur”, Beza, Piscator, Mercerus; so Kimchi & Ben Gersom.

Ft596 -- çyaw “et vir”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Schmidt; “at vir”, Cocceius.

Ft597 -- ytlb d[“donec atteratur eoelum”, V. L. so some in Bar Tzemach, though disapproved of by him as ungrammatical.

Ft598 -- yabx “quibus nunc milito”, V. L. “militiae maae”, Montanus, Tigurine version, Drusius, Codurcus, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft599 -- Pskt “perdere desiderabis?” Pagninus, Vatablus.

Ft600 -- ht[yk “at nunc”, Piscator.

Ft601 -- ytajj l[rwmçt al “non differes punitionem meam”, Pagninus, Ft602 -- Jarchi, Gersom, Bar Tzemach.

Ft603 -- So Schultens.

Ft604 -- “Nec serves, id est, observes peccatum meum”; some in Mercerus.

Ft605 -- ynw[l[lpjtw “assuis iniquitati meae”, Piscator; “et adjungis ad iniquitatem meam”, Beza.

Ft606 -- lwby “marceseit”, Tigurine version, Mercerus; “emarcescit”, Schultens.

Ft607 -- “Diffluit”, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft608 -- “Gutta cavat lapidem”, Ovid. de Ponto, l. 4.

Ft609 -- <Arabic> “effudit”, Golius, col. 1182. Castel. col. 2590.

Ft610 -- “Sic”, Vatablus, Drusius, Mercerus, Schultens; “ita”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; it answers to ˆk, Aben Ezra, Gersom.

Ft611 -- Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 2. p. 5.

Ft612 -- wdbky πολλων γενομενων, Sept. “multiplicabuntur”, Vatablus, Bolducius.

Ft613 -- “Multi vel graves sunt”, Drusius; “graves erunt et onusti”, Mercerus.

Ft614 -- wr[xy ολιγοι γενωνται, Sept. “minuuntur, numero pauci sunt”, Drusius.

Ft615 -- Ebr. Comment. p. 605.

Ft616 -- lbat “emarcida luget”, Schultens.

Ft617 -- [rgt “tulisti”, V. L. “traheres”, Cocceius; “multiplicasti”, so some in Bar Tzemach.

Ft618 -- “Imminues”, Montanus; “imminuisti”, Bolducius; “diminuis”, Schmidt; “minuis”, Schultens.

Ft619 -- Æyp Ænw[Play “docuit iniquitas tua os tuum”, V. L. Pagninus, Bolducius; “docebit”, Montanus; “docet”, Piscator, Cocceius; so Tigurine version.

Ft620 -- So Mercerus, and some in Vatablus, Schmidt, Jarchi, & Bar Tzemach.

Ft621 -- hwla dwsb “in secreto Dei”, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius. Schultens.

Ft622 -- la twmwjnt “consolationes istorum virorum”, Vatablus; “consolationes istae”, so some in Drusius.

Ft623 -- ˆwmz “collimant”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius; so Broughton.

Ft624 -- ˆymay al “non posuit stabilitatem”, Pagninus; “immutabilitatem, sive perfectionem absolutam”, Vatablus; “firmum opus non produxit”, Tigurine version; “non crediturns esset firmitatem”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft625 -- µydjp lwq “sonitus timorum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius; to the same sense Codurcus, Junius & Tremellius, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft626 -- “Vastatorem invasurum eum”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft627 -- So Noldius in Ebr. Concord. Part. p. 87.

Ft628 -- wdyb “suis factis”, Tigurine version; “per manum suam”, Schmidt.

Ft629 -- rawxb “erecto collo”, V. L. Piscator; “duro collo”, Drusius, Michaelis; “cum cervice”, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft630 -- wyngm ybg yb[b “cum erassitie umbonum clypeorum suorum”, Cocceius; so Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft631 -- So the Annotator of the Assembly of Divines.

Ft632 -- wlyj “ejus robur”, Mercerus; “potentia ejus”, Drusius.

Ft633 -- µwqy al “neque resurgent opes ejus”, Schmidt.

Ft634 -- µlnm Ural hjy alw “nec mittet in terra radicem suam”, V. L. “et non pangetur in terram prosperitas eorum”, Schultens.

Ft635 -- h[tn awçb “per vanitatem deceptus”, Beza; so Tigurine version.

Ft636 -- wmwy alb “ante diem suam”, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft637 -- almt “complebitur”, Montanus; “implebitur”, Schultens.

Ft638 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 16. c. 25. l. 17. c. 2. 24.

Ft639 -- dwmlg “solitarium”, Montanus; and to the same sense Vatablus, Beza, Tigurine version, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, Cocceius.

Ft640 -- lm[ymjnm “consolatores molestiae”, Vatablus, Drusius, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis; “molesti”, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Codurcus, Tigurine version; “molestissimi”, Schultens.

Ft641 -- jwr yrbdl “verbis venti”, Beza, Bolducius, Mercerus, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft642 -- Æxyrmy hm “quid exacerbat te”, Junius & Tremellius; so Codureus, Schultens.

Ft643 -- hrbda µkk “sicut vos loqui deberem?” Schmidt.

Ft644 -- “Etiam ego ut vos loquerer?” Cocceius; so Broughton.

Ft645 -- µylmb µkyl[hrybja “nectere deberem nexus contra vos verbis?” Schmidt.

Ft646 -- “Adjungerem me super vos in sermonibus”, Montanus, Bolducius; so Vatablus, Cocceius.

Ft647 -- “Vobis enim aptum sermonem accommodarem”, Tigarine version; so Codurcus.

Ft648 -- yçarħ[yna “et caput meum quassarem super vobis”, Cocceius; “movere deberem super vos caput meum?” Schmidt.

Ft649 -- So Tigurine version and Bar Tzemach, κινησας ρα καρη, Hom. II. 17. v. 200.

Ft650 -- Æl jy ynm hm “quid a me abit”, Junius & Tremellius, Schultens.

Ft651 -- “Dolor meus”, V. L. so Aben Ezra & Cocceius.

Ft652 -- ytd[“meam congregationem”, Pagninus; “conventum meum”, Montanus, Bolducius.

Ft653 -- Vid. Drusium in loc.

Ft654 -- “Stupefe isti”, Tigurine version; so Jarchi.

Ft655 -- hprjb “cum opprobrio”, Beza, Vatablus, Drusius; so Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens; “with reproaches”, Broughton.

Ft656 -- ˆwalmty “impleverunt sese”, De Dieu.

Ft657 -- Vid. De Dieu in loc.

Ft658 -- ynrygsy “vinctum me tradidit”, Grotius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft659 -- ynjry “divertere fecit a vita”, Pagninus; “declinare me facit”, Beza, Drusius, Mercerus.

Ft660 -- ynxpxpy “confregit me”, V. L. Pagninus; “minutatim confregit me”, Tigurine version; so Schultens, Jarchi, & Ben Gersom.

Ft661 -- “Ejus magnates”, Comment. Ebr. p. 773. wybr “ejus magni”, Montanus.

Ft662 -- ydlg ylI[“super laceram cutem”, Schultens; “cutis eaque laesa et ulceribus percussa”, Stockius, p. 188. dlg “cutim percusiit”, Hottinger. Smegma Orient. p. 135. Stockius, ib.

Ft663 -- hrmrmj “intumuit”, V. L. Tigurine version; “fermentescit”, Schultens.

Ft664 -- ydhç “oculatus meus testis”, Schultens.

Ft665 -- Ebr. Comment. p. 320, 321.

Ft666 -- rpsm twnç “anni numeri”, Montanus, Vatablus, Bolducius; “numbered days”, Broughton; so Tigurine version.

Ft667 -- Pineda.

Ft668 -- yjwr “spiritus meus”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, etc.

Ft669 -- “Anima mea”, Piscator, Schmidt.

Ft670 -- ˆlt “pernoctat”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft671 -- an hmyç “pone nunc”, Montanus; “poae quaeso”, Pagninus, Piscator, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt; “sub cor tunm”, Vatablus.

Ft672 -- Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft673 -- yrxy “cogitationes meae”, Pagninus, Bolducius, Codurcus, so Ben Gersom.

Ft674 -- bda Pysy “addet fortitudinem”, Pagninus, Montanus.

Ft675 -- wrb[“transierunt”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft676 -- wqtn “evulsae sunt”, Pagninus, Montanus, Piscator; “radicitus evulsae sunt”, Michaelis.

Ft677 -- yçrwm “possessiones”, Montanus, Vatablus, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt; “haereditariae possessiones”, Schultens; so Drusius & Michaelis.

Ft678 -- Ebr. Part. Concord. No. 1931.

Ft679 -- bwrq “propinquam”, Pagninus, Montanus; so Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, etc.

Ft680 -- Ib. p. 642.

Ft681 -- tjçl “foveam”, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version, Drusius, etc.

Ft682 -- ytarq “vocavi”, Montanus; “clamavi”, Mercerus.

Ft683 -- Schultens.

Ft684 -- rbdn rhaw “et postea loquamur”, Piscator, Mercerus, Cocceius.

Ft685 -- wnybt “diserte agatis”, Schultens.

Ft686 -- wnymjn “immundi”, Drusius, Piscator, Michaelis; so Broughton.

Ft687 -- “Clausi sumu”, Montanus; “obturati sumus”, Hebraei, in Mercer.

Ft688 -- So the Targum.

Ft689 -- wçpn “animam suam”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft690 -- µg “attamen, nihilominus”, Cocceius, Schultens; so the Targum.

Ft691 -- wylgrb tçrb jlç yk “nam it cum reti in pedibus suis”, Cocceius.

Ft692 -- hkbç l[“in perplexo”, Cocceius.

Ft693 -- µymx “sitibundos”, Montanus; “sitibundus”, Tigurine version.

Ft694 -- “Horridus”, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft695 -- ˆwmj “absconditus”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, etc.

Ft696 -- wlbj “funis ejus”, Montanus, Tigurine version, Mercerus, Drusius, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft697 -- whxph “dispergent eum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Mercerus, Piscator, Schmidt.

Ft698 -- b[r “fames”, Beza.

Ft699 -- w[lxl “costae ejus”, Montanus, Vatablus, Grotius, Schultens.

Ft700 -- wrw[ydb “vectes cutis suae”, Tigurine version, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft701 -- “Ramos cutis”, Montanus, Vatablus, Drusius, Mercerus, Schmidt; “ramos corporis ipsius”, Cocceius.

Ft702 -- lkay “comedet”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus.

Ft703 -- twm rwkb “primogenita mors”, V. L.

Ft704 -- Michaelis.

Ft705 -- De Dieu.

Ft706 -- Ethic. l. 3. c. 9.

Ft707 -- twhlb Ælml “ad regem caliginum”, Cocceius.

Ft708 -- Schmidt.

Ft709 -- “Instar regis”, Schultens; “quasi rex”, V. L.

Ft710 -- So Syr. Ar & Schmidt.

Ft711 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 35. c. 35.

Ft712 -- Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 709, 710.

Ft713 -- Vid. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 35. c. 15. Theocrit. Idyll. 25. ver. 95. Homer. Odyss. 22. prope finem.

Ft714 -- Vid. Menochium de Repub. Heb. l. 8. c. 6. col. 792.

Ft715 -- hwpdhy “expellent eum”, Pagninus, Montanus; so Tigurine version, Vatablus, Mercerus, Drusius, Schultens, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft716 -- whdny “excommunicabunt cum”, Schmidt, Michaelis; so Codurcus.

Ft717 -- Schultens.

Ft718 -- la [dy al “quem non agnoscit Deus fortis”, Junius.

Ft719 -- ˆwygt “defatigabitis”, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft720 -- ynnwakdt “obtundetis”, Vatablus, Piscator, Schmidt; so Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft721 -- yl wrkht “indurastis facies vestras contra me”, Vatablus; so Broughton.

Ft722 -- “Erubescitis subsannare me”, Pagninus.

Ft723 -- Drusius; so Schultens.

Ft724 -- So Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft725 -- ˆylt yta “mecum maneat”, Beza; to the same sense Mercerus, Schmidt, Junius and Tremellius, Piscator, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft726 -- yntw[“pervertit me”, Montanus, Mercerus; so Vatablus, Drusius, Schultens.

Ft727 -- smj “violentiam”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, etc. “injuriam”, Montanus.

Ft728 -- wlsyw “aggerant”, Cocceius, Schultens; “straverunt”, Montanus, Schmidt; a hlsm “via strata et elevata”, Mercerus, Drusius.

Ft729 -- yl[“super me”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft730 -- wldj “desierunt”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Mercerus, Drusius, Piscator, Schmidt, Michaelis; “cessant”, Schultens.

Ft731 -- ybwrq “propinqui mei”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft732 -- De loc. Heb. fol. 89. M.

Ft733 -- yrg “peregrini”, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft734 -- Apud Rabbinos, passim.

Ft735 -- yjwr “spiritus meus”, Junius & Tremellius, Vatablus, Schmidt, Schultens; “anima mea”, Cocceius.

Ft736 -- ytçal “propter uxorem meam”, Schmidt.

Ft737 -- R. Levi Ben Gersom; so some in Vatablus.

Ft738 -- ytwnjw “deploro”, Cocceius; “et miserans lugeo”, Schmidt; “et miseret me”, Michaelis; “comploro”, Schultens.

Ft739 -- µylyw[“iniqui”, Pagninus, Montanus; “homines nequam”, Tigurine version; so Ben Gersom.

Ft740 -- “Clientes egentissimi”, Schultens.

Ft741 -- ydws ytm “viri secreti mei”, Montanus; “homines secreti mei”, Cocceius, Schmidt; “viri arcani mei”, Beza, Mercerus; “homines arcani mei consilii”, Michaelis.

Ft742 -- jzw “et quem”, V. L. “et hie seu is quem”, Mercerus, Drusius.

Ft743 -- yrçbbw yrw[b “cuti meae ut carni meae”, Tremellius, in one edition of his version.

Ft744 -- Ben Gersom.

Ft745 -- ylm “res meae”, Polychronius apud Pinedam in loc.

Ft746 -- Nat. Hist. l. 13. c. 11. Alex. ab Alex. l. 2. c. 30. Pausaniae Messenica, sive, l. 4. p. 266. & Boeotica, sive, l. 9. p. 588.

Ft747 -- Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 28. & 29.

Ft748 -- See a Journal from Cairo, etc. in 1722, p. 45, 46. and Egmont and Heyman’s Travels, vol. ii. p. 171, 181.

Ft749 -- Antiqu. Eccles. Orient. p. 147.

Ft750 -- Apud Montfaucon, tom. 2. p. 205.

Ft751 -- Prodrom. Copt. c. 8. p. 201, 207.

Ft752 -- Vide Hottinger. Praefat. ad Cipp. Hebr. p. 6, 7, 8. Wagenseil Carmin. Lipman. Confut. p. 429, etc.

Ft753 -- ynaw “nempe ego”, Nold. Ebr. Concord. Partic. p. 696. No. 1750.

Ft754 -- Huet. Alnetan. Quaest. l. 2. c. 13. p. 234.

Ft755 -- Martin. Sinic. Hist. l. 4. p. 131.

Ft756 -- µwqy rp[l[ˆwrjaw “qui postremus ex palvere (terra) surget”, Nold. ib.

Ft757 -- “Novissimus”, i.e. “miserrimus et abjectus”, Bolducius; “sic ultimus miserorum”, Ciceron. Orat. pro Flacco 24.

Ft758 -- “Supra pulverem”, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft759 -- “Adhibebit suam vim pulveri”, Tigurine version.

Ft760 -- yrçbm “e carne mea”, Tigurine version, Mercerus, Piscator, Cocceius, Schmidt, Schultens; so Gussetius, p. 446.

Ft761 -- “Suidas in voce” ιωβ, & Sept. in ch. xlii. 17.

Ft762 -- rz “alienus”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus; “extraneus”, Drusius.

Ft763 -- yqjb “in sinu meo”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft764 -- rbd çrç “radix verbi”, Montanus, Mercerus, Schmidt, Michaelis; “radix sermonis”, Cocceius; “fundamenta negotii salutis”, Tigurine version.

Ft765 -- brj twnw[“iniquitates gladii”, Montanus, Schmidt, Michaelis; so Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft766 -- ynwbyçy “reducunt me, q. d. in scenam”; Cocceius, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius.

Ft767 -- Ben Gersom, Bar Tzemach, Sephorno; and so Montanus.

Ft768 -- Ebr. Comment. p. 246.

Ft769 -- Schmidt.

Ft770 -- ytmlk rswm “correctionem ignominiae meae”, Pagninus, Montanus; so Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft771 -- ytnybm “ex intelligentia mea”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus, Drusius, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft772 -- d[ynm “ab aeterno”, Junius & Tremellius, Drusius, Codurcus, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft773 -- bwrqm “de propinquo”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft774 -- Heraclitus apud Strabo. Geograph. l. 16. p. 539.

Ft775 -- Strabo, ib.

Ft776 -- Pineda in loc.

Ft777 -- σκιας οναρ ανψρωποι, Pindar. Pythia, Ode 8.

Ft778 -- µyld wxry wynb “filii ejus placabunt, mendici”, Montanus.

Ft779 -- So the English annotator.

Ft780 -- wymwl[“ejus occultis”, Montanus, Vatablus, Schmidt.

Ft781 -- h[r “malum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, etc.

Ft782 -- wmjl “panis ejus”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Schmidt.

Ft783 -- Nat. Hist. l. 11. c. 37.

Ft784 -- Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 711. Philosoph. Transact. abridged, vol. 2. p. 819.

Ft785 -- µyntp çar “caput aspidum”, V. L. Montanus.

Ft786 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 11. c. 37. Aelian. Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 4.

Ft787 -- Philosoph. Transact. ut supra. (abridged, vol. 2. p. 819.)

Ft788 -- Ib. c. 62.

Ft789 -- Scheuchzer, ut supra, (Physic. Sacr. vol. 4.) p. 712.

Ft790 -- whnby alw “et non aedificabit eam”, Pagninus, Montanus; “et non aedificat eam”, Cocceius, Schultens; “non autem”, Beza; “sed non”, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft791 -- wlkal dyrç ˆya “non erit superstes haeres qui ejus bonis fruetur”; so some in Mercer. Drusius.

Ft792 -- wb jlçy “mittet in eum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Schmidt; so Mercerus, Piscator.

Ft793 -- wmwj lb "in cibum illius", Tigurine version.

Ft794 -- Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom, Bar Tzemach; "in carne ejus", Pagninus, Montanus; "super carnem ejus", Beza; "in carnem ejus", Drusius, Mercer, Schmidt.

Ft795 -- Ælhy "abibit e vivis"; so some in Michaelis; "abit", Schultens.

Ft796 -- Jarchi, Sephorno, and others.

Ft797 -- Sepher Shorash. rad. lby.

Ft798 -- wrma tljn "haereditas eloquii ejus", Pagninus, Montanus; "verborum ejus", V. L. "impie dictorum ejus", Codurcus.

Ft799 -- tazyhtw "et hoc erit consolationes vestrae", Beza, Mercerus; so Jarchi; "idque pro consolatione vobis", Tigurine version; "pro consolationibus vestris", Schultens.

Ft800 -- rxqt "abbreviabitur", Montanus, Vatablus, "abbreviaretur", Drusius, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft801 -- yjyç "precatio mea", Drusius.

Ft802 -- yla wnp "respicite ad me", Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, etc.

Ft803 -- wqt["durant", Mercerus, Cocceius, Michaelis; "edurant", Schultens.

Ft804 -- µwlç "pax", Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Schultens.

Ft805 -- bwjb "in bono", Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, etc.

Ft806 -- wlby "vetustate terent", Montanus; "veterascunt", Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus; "vetusti fiunt", Cocceius; "ad senectam deterunt", Schultens.

Ft807 -- [grb "quiete", Pagninus; "in quiete", Vatablus.

Ft808 -- lwaç "ad inferna", V. L. "ad infernum", Cocceius; "in infernum", Schmidt.

Ft809 -- hm “quis est?” V. L.

Ft810 -- ˆbtk wyhy “ut sint velut palea”, Tigurine version; so Broughton, “quoties sunt”, Junius & Tremellius; “quoties fiunt”, Piscator, Michaelis.

Ft811 -- wtbng “furatus est eam”, Montanus; “suffuratur”, Vatablus; “furatur”, Drusius, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft812 -- Nachmanides, Jarchi, Ben Gersom, Bar Tzemach.

Ft813 -- Beza, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft814 -- [dyw wyla µlçy “redderet illi, et (hoc) sciret”, Beza; “retribueret ipsi potius, et sentiret”, Cocceius.

Ft815 -- wyrk wny[wary “videret ejus oculi exitium suum”, Beza, Cocceius.

Ft816 -- htçy “biberet”, Beza, Cocceius.

Ft817 -- So Schultens.

Ft818 -- wxxj “integro numero calculis ducti sunt”, Cocceius; “cumulatam sortem habuerint”, Schultens.

Ft819 -- wmt µx[b “in fortitudine perfectionis suae”, Pagninus; so Junius and Tremellius, Piscator; “in fortitudine integritatis suae”, Montanus, Bolducius; so Drusius, Mercerus.

Ft820 -- So Schmidt.

Ft821 -- See Kimchi, Sepher Shorash. rad. ˆj[, and Jarchi and Ben Melech in loc.

Ft822 -- wynyj[“muletralia ejus”, Montanus, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus, Bolducius, Drusius, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft823 -- hbwj “bonum”, Pagninus, Mercerus; so Junius & Tremellius, Piscator & Bar Tzemach; “de bono”, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft824 -- Bar Tzemach.

Ft825 -- wrmat yk “vos dicere”, Junius & Tremellius; “nempe vos dicturos”, Piscator; so Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft826 -- bydn “liberalis”, Montanus; “boni et liberalis hominis”, Tigurine version; “ingenui”, Schultens.

Ft827 -- dçjy “prohibebitur”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius; so Beza, Vatablus, Mercerus; “subtrahitur”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius; “subdueitur”, Schultens.

Ft828 -- twrb[“irarum”, Pagninus, Tigurine version, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft829 -- awhw “et ipse”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft830 -- twrbql “ad sepulchra”, V. L. Montamus, Vatablus, Drusius, Beza, Mercerus, Michaelis, Schultens; “in sepulchra”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft831 -- çydg l[“super acervo”, Montanus, Codurcus; so Bolducius, Mercerus.

Ft832 -- Vid. David de Pomis Lexic. fol. 14. 3.

Ft833 -- dwqçy “festinabit”, Pagninus; so some in Vatablus, and Ben Melech.

Ft834 -- “Vigilabit”, V. L. Tigurine version, Montanus; “vigilat”, Michaelis, Schultens; “erit tanquam vigil”, Bolducius.

Ft835 -- “Vigilabitur”, Beza; “vigilatur”, Cocceius; so Calovius.

Ft836 -- yk “immo”, Beza; “profecto”, Schultens.

Ft837 -- lykçm.

Ft838 -- qdxt yk “quod justifices te”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft839 -- “Quum Justus es apud teipsum”, Schmidt; “quod tibi justus esse videris”, Michaelis.

Ft840 -- Ætarymh “an de religione tua”, Junius & Tremellius; “ob timorem tuum”, so some in Drusius; “num ob pietatem tuam”, others in Michaelis.

Ft841 -- αναριψμητοι, Sept.

Ft842 -- Æytwnw[l Õq ˆya “non est finis iniquitatibus tuis”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft843 -- Æyja lbjt ηνεχυραζες τους αδελφους σου, Sept. “capies in pignus fratres tuos”, Montanus.

Ft844 -- µynp awçn “acceptus faciebus”, Montanus; “vel facie”, Vatablus, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Drusius, Mercerus.

Ft845 -- Jarchi, Ramban, Bar Tzemach, Sephorno.

Ft846 -- [wrz çya “viro brachii”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Vatablus, Drusius, etc.

Ft847 -- µymç hbg “sublimitas coelorum”, Bolducius; “altitudo coeli”, Michaelis; “altitudo coelorum”, Schultens.

Ft848 -- µybkwk çar “capat stellarum”, Montanus, Bolaucius, Mercerus, Cocceius; “verticem stellarum”, V. L. Tigurine version, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft849 -- Cosmotheoros, l. 2. p. 125, 137.

Ft850 -- (The Dog Star is the brighest star in the heavens when viewed from the earth. It has a visual magnitude of -1.4 and is 8.7 light years from the earth. It is in the constellation Sirius. The closest star to the earth is α Centaurus and has a visual magnitude of 0 and is 4.3 light years from the earth. It is several times fainter the the Dog Star but is still quite bright compared to neighbouring stars. 1969 Oberserver’s Handbook, p. 74, 75. The Royal Astonomical Society of Canada, Toronto, Ontario. Editor)

Ft851 -- Peritzol.

Ft852 -- ˆwa ytm “viri iniquitatis”, Montanus, Mercerus; so Drusius, Michaelis.

Ft853 -- rwmçt µlw[jrah “profecto viam seculi servas”, Schultens.

Ft854 -- t[alw “ante tempus suum”, V. L. Mercerus; “ante tempus”, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft855 -- “Sine mora”, Cocceius; “in momento”, Codurcus.

Ft856 -- wjmq “corrugati sunt”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Bolducius, Cocceius.

Ft857 -- µdysy qxwy rhn “fundamentum eorum ut flumen diffluxit”, Tigurine version; “fluvius effusus fundamentum eorum”, Codurcus, Beza; to the same sense Drusius, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft858 -- wml ydç l[py hmw “et quid fecerat omnipotens illis?” Piscator.

Ft859 -- Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom, Sephorno, et alii.

Ft860 -- wnmyq djkn al µa “annon exscinditur qui insurgit contra nos”, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft861 -- Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom, Bar Tzemach.

Ft862 -- rxb rp[l[tyçw “pone aurum super pulverem”, Codurcus; “in pulvere aurum”, Cocceius; “abjice humi aurum”, Beza; so Grotius.

Ft863 -- rypwa µyljn ryxbw “et inter saxa torrentium Ophir”, Codurcus.

Ft864 -- “Pro rupe aurum Ophirinum”, Junius & Tremellius; so Schultens.

Ft865 -- Geograph. l. 11. p. 344.

Ft866 -- Pet. Martyr. Decad. 3. l. 4.

Ft867 -- Æyrxb “lectissimum aurum tuum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Vatablus, Schmidt, Schultens; so R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 23. 2.

Ft868 -- Æl twp[wt Pskw “et argentum fortitudinum tibi”, Montanus, Cocceius, Schmidt.

Ft869 -- wlypçh yk “quum humiliaverint”, Montanus, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft870 -- µyny[jç “demissum oculis”, Montanus, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “humilem oculis”, Vatablus.

Ft871 -- yqn ya jlmy “innocens insulam liberabit”, Montanus; so Pagninus, Vatablus.

Ft872 -- Concordant. Ebr. Part. p. 25. No. 135.

Ft873 -- yqn ya “non innocentem”, Drusius, Piscator, Michaelis; “non insontem”, Schultens; to the same sense Beza, Mercerus, Codurcus, Junius, & Tremellius.

Ft874 -- yrm “exacerbatio”, Montanus, Vatablus, Schmidt; “exasperatio”, Mercerus, Drusius; “pertinacia”, Bolducius; “contumacia habetur”, Cocceius; “rebellionem haberi”, Junius & Tremellius; “rebellio est”, Piscator, Codurcus.

Ft875 -- ydy “manus mea”, Montanus, Vatablus, Mercerus, Drusius, Michaelis.

Ft876 -- twjkwt “increpationibus”, V. L. and so Montanus, Beza, Mercerus, Drusius, Schultens.

Ft877 -- yb µçy “ipse apponeret ad me animum”, Junius & Tremellius; so Piscator, Cocceius, & Aben Ezra.

Ft878 -- Schultens.

Ft879 -- yjpçm “a judicante me”, Beza, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Vatablus, Cocceius.

Ft880 -- wnnyaw “et non ipse”, Montanus, Drusius, Bolducius.

Ft881 -- ˆymy Pj[y “operiet dextram”, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius; so Cocceius, Drusius, Schmidt, Schultens, & Broughton.

Ft882 -- yk “quia”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis; “nam”, Tigurine version, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft883 -- ytnpx “abscondi”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Bolducius; “recondidi”, Tigurine version, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, Mercerus, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens; so Broughton.

Ft884 -- Sophorno.

Ft885 -- djab awhw “sed si ipse contra unum agit”, Junius & Tremellius; so Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft886 -- yqj µylçy yk “quia perfecit necessaria mea”, Vatablus; so Nachmanides, Ben Gersom, Sephorno.

Ft887 -- ynlyhbh “me attonitum reddidit”, Vatablus; “consternavit me”, Drusius, Mercerus, Cocceius, Michaelis; “externavit me”, Schultens.

Ft888 -- Æçj ynpm “propter tenebras”, Pagninus, Piscator, Cocceius; so V. L. “a tenebris”, Drusius; “a praesentibus, tenebris”, Beza.

Ft889 -- Aben Ezra, Nachmanides, & Simeon Bar Tzemach.

Ft890 -- ydçm [wdm “quinam ab omnipotente”, Beza; so Junius & Tremellius.

Ft891 -- “Quare ab omnipotente non sunt recondita in poenam stata tempora”, Schultens.

Ft892 -- Dion. Halicarnass. & Festus apud Sanctium in loc. Vid. Rycquium de Capitol. Roman. c. 14. Ovid. Fasti, l. 2.

Ft893 -- wgyçy “attigerunt”, Pagninus, Bolducius; “attingunt”, Vatablus.

Ft894 -- rwç “pro bove foemina, vacca”, Bolducius.

Ft895 -- Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom, Bar Tzemach.

Ft896 -- wlylb “migma suum”, Bolducius; “farraginem ejus [vel] suam”, Tigurine version, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft897 -- ουκ αυτων Sept. “non suum”, V. L. so the Targum, and Aben Ezra, Grotius, Codurcus.

Ft898 -- wçqly [çr µrkw “et in vinea (aliena) vindemiant impii”, Tigurine version; “vineasque vindemiant impii”, Castalio.

Ft899 -- dçm “per devastationem”, some in Munster; “post vastationem”, Tigurine version; so Nachmanides & Bar Tzemach.

Ft900 -- yn[l[“super inopem”, Cocceius, Schultens; so Ben Gersom.

Ft901 -- rm[waçn µyb[rw “et famelici gestant manipulum”, Tigurine version, Mercerus; so Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft902 -- µtrwç ˆyb “inter ordines”, Mercerus, Piscator, Cocceius; so Sephorno, and some in Eliae Tishbi, p. 241.

Ft903 -- wryhxy “meridiati sunt”, V. L. so Bolducius, Schultens.

Ft904 -- Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom, Sephorno, Bar Tzemach.

Ft905 -- De Virgin, Veland. c. 17.

Ft906 -- wml wmtj εσφραγισαν εαυτους, Sept. “includunt sese”, some in Mercerus; so Drusius; “semet sigillant”, Schultens.

Ft907 -- Pariter, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft908 -- twmlx twhlb ryky “agnoscit terrores umbrae mortis”, Mercerus, Cocceius; so Codurcus, Schmidt.

Ft909 -- µym ynp l[“super faciem aquarum”, Mercerus, Bolducius, Beza, Drusius, Schultens.

Ft910 -- b “deficit”; so some in Simeon, Bar Tzemach.

Ft911 -- wajj lwaç “ad infernum usque peccarunt”, Schmidt; “usque ad sepulchrum”, Mercerus; some in Drusius.

Ft912 -- µjr “misericordia”, V. L. “miseratio”, Montanus, Bolducius; so Tigurine version, Grotius.

Ft913 -- wqtm “dulcescit ei”, Beza, Piscator; “suavis”, Cocceius; so Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft914 -- hrq[h[r “consociat ei sterilem”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft915 -- Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Piscator, Mercerus, Drusius.

Ft916 -- wyyjb ˆymay “non fidit suae vitae”, Tigurine version, Piscator; so V. L.

Ft917 -- wl ˆty “dat ei”, Piscator, Mercerus, i.e., Deus, Beza, Drusius, Michaelis.

Ft918 -- whyny[w “et ejus”, Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Beza, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft919 -- wnnyaw “et non ipse”, Montanus, Bolducius; “et non sunt”, Schultens.

Ft920 -- wxpqy “claudentur”, Pagninus, Montanus; “clauduntur”, Piscator.

Ft921 -- lal “ad nihilum”, Pagninus, Montanus; so Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft922 -- lyhay alw “et non ponet tabernaculum”, Montanus, Bolducius; so Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft923 -- “Non expandet lumen suum in modum tentorii”, Complutenses apud Bolduc.

Ft924 -- Lewenhoeck apud Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 721. Vid. Philosoph. Transact. abridged, vol. 2. p. 912, 913.

Ft925 -- Nat. Hist. l. 7. c. 7.

Ft926 -- trz[hm “cui auxiliatis es”, Pagninus, Montanus; so Tigurine version.

Ft927 -- hyçwt “essentiam”, Montanus.

Ft928 -- “Qua nam re adjuvisti?” Vatablus; “quid auxiliatus es?” Drusius.

Ft929 -- wllwjy “gemunt”, V. L. “cruciabuntur”, Bolducius; “cruciantur, dolore contremiscunt”, Michaelis; “intremiscunt”, Schultens. Vid. Windet. de Vita Funct. Stat. p. 90.

Ft930 -- Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 724.

Ft931 -- Gregory’s Notes and Observations, etc. c. 12. p. 55.

Ft932 -- “Terra pilae similis nullo fulcimine nixa”, Ovid. Fast. 6.

Ft933 -- “Circumfuso pendebat in aere tellus, ponderibus librata suis----”, Ovid. Metamorph. l. 1. Fab. 1.

Ft934 -- Ben Gersom & Bar Tzemach in loc.

Ft935 -- Æçj µ[rwa tylkt d[“usque ad finem lucis cum tenebris”, Cocceius, Michaelis; so Targum & Sept.

Ft936 -- µyh [gr “pacavit mare”, Bolducius; “quiescit mare ipsum”, Vatablus; so Sept. and Ben Gersom.

Ft937 -- So Dickinson. Physic. Vet. & Vera, c. 9. sect. 23. p. 137.

Ft938 -- jyrb çjn “serpentem vectem”, Pagninus, Cocceius; “oblongum instar vectis”, Schmidt; “oblongum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “longa trabe rectior”. Vide Metamorph. l. 3. Fab. 1. ver. 78.

Ft939 -- “Fugacem”, Montanus, Vatablus; “fugiens”, Codurcus.

Ft940 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 25.

Ft941 -- wlçm taç Pswyw “et addidit assumere suam parabolam”, Pagninus, Montanus.

Ft942 -- yçpn rmh “affecit amaritudine animam meam”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Michaelis; so Sept.

Ft943 -- ymym “propter dies meos”, Munster; “[vel] propter dies vitae meae”, Michaelis; “de diebus meis”, Schultens.

Ft944 -- ybya [çrk yhy “erit ut impius inimieus meus”, Pagninus, Montanus, Boldacius; so Junius & Tremellius, Broughton, & Ramban.

Ft945 -- Schultens.

Ft946 -- Simeon Bar Tzemach.

Ft947 -- la dyb “manum Dei”, Beza, Cocceius; “de manu Dei”, Mercerus, Piscator, Drusius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft948 -- “In plaga Dei fortis versans”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft949 -- wlbht lbh “vanitate vanescitis”, Pagninus, Junius & Tremellius, Michaelis, Schultens; “[vel] evanescitis”, Montanus, Bolducius, Beza, Mercerus, Drusius, Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft950 -- ç[k “quasi Arcturi”, Junius & Tremellius; so Aben Ezra.

Ft951 -- Psayw “nihil secum auferet”, V. L.

Ft952 -- Thevenot’s Travels into the Levant, par. 2. B. 1. ch. 12. p. 54.

Ft953 -- Thevenot’s Travels into the Levant, par. 2. B. 3. ch. 5. p. 135.

Ft954 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 33. c. 3.

Ft955 -- Peter Martyr. Decad. 3. l. 8.

Ft956 -- axwm “exitus”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius, Michaelis; “egressio”, Vatablus.

Ft957 -- Hieron. de loc. Heb. fol. 90. A.

Ft958 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 28.

Ft959 -- Ut supra, (Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 33.) c. 4.

Ft960 -- P. Martyr. Decad. 1. l. 10.

Ft961 -- rp[m “e pulvere”, V. L. Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft962 -- Nat. Hist. l. 34. c. 1, 2.

Ft963 -- rg µ[m “qui accolas non fert”, Tigurine version; “dimisso accola”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “ut non sit accola”, Mercerus.

Ft964 -- Vid. Senecae Nat. Quaest. l. 5. c. 15.

Ft965 -- P. Martyr, Decad 1. l. 1.

Ft966 -- Caesar. Comment. Bell. Civil. l. 3. c. 48.

Ft967 -- Nat. Hist. l. 37. c. 9.

Ft968 -- Ruaeus de Gemmis, l. 2. c. 2.

Ft969 -- jy[“ad id alludit aquiae Graecum vocabulum” αετος, Bochart. Hierozoic par. 1. l. 1. c. 9. col. 59. Broughton renders it “a kite”.

Ft970 -- wyl[“super eam”, Schultens.

Ft971 -- ψç ynb “filii superbiae”, Montanus, Beza, Bolducius, Vatablus.

Ft972 -- Nat. Hist. l. 33. c. 4. “----Montem rumpit aceto”, Juvenal. Sat. 10. v. 153.

Ft973 -- Ibid.

Ft974 -- Philos. Transaet. abridged, vol. 2. p. 469.

Ft975 -- Horat. Sermon. l. 1. Satyr. 2. v. 90.

Ft976 -- Palaephat. de Incredib. c. 10.

Ft977 -- ykbm “a fletu”, Montanus, Bolducius, Junius & Tremellius, Michaelis, Schultens; so Broughton; “a stillatione”, Vatablus, Mercerus, Drusius.

Ft978 -- hkr[“ordinem ejus”, Montanus, Bolducius.

Ft979 -- rwgs συγκλεισμον, Sept. “conclusum”, Tigurine version; “clausum”, Bolducius.

Ft980 -- hyt j tƶty al “non dabitur pro ea”, V. L. Montanus, Schultens.

Ft981 -- Nat. Hist. l. 37. c. 6.

Ft982 -- hlst “verbum significat sternere”, Michaelis.

Ft983 -- Ut supra, (Nat. Hist. l. 37.) c. 2.

Ft984 -- Ib. c. 5.

Ft985 -- tykwkz υαλος, Sept. “vitrum”, V. L. Tigurine version, Cocceius.

Ft986 -- Ut supra, (Nat. Hist.) l. 36. c. 26. Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 2. c. 10. sect. 2.

Ft987 -- Hist. l. 5. c. 7.

Ft988 -- Neri Praefat. ad. lib. de re vitriaria.

Ft989 -- Var. Hist. l. 12. c. 3.

Ft990 -- Abulpharag. Hist. Dynast. p. 33.

Ft991 -- Vid. Fabritii Bibliothec. Gr. l. 3. c. 22. sect. 11. 15.

Ft992 -- Diodor. Sic. l. 2. p. 102. Herodot. Thalia, sive, l. 3. c. 24.

Ft993 -- Ut supra. (Nat. Hist. l. 36. c. 26.)

Ft994 -- Leo African. Descript. Africae, l. 3. p. 273.

Ft995 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 28.

Ft996 -- Ib. l. 37. c. 6.

Ft997 -- Ib. c. 7.

Ft998 -- περι λιψων, p. 240.

Ft999 -- Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 6. col. 681, etc.

Ft1000 -- Of fishing for pearls in this way, see the Account of it in Vartoman. Navigat. l. 3. c. 2. in P. Martyr. Decad. 3. l. 2. and Oviedo de Occident. Ind. c. 4. and with nets, Aelian. de Animal. l. 15. c. 8. Vid. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 9. c. 35.

Ft1001 -- Ut supra. (Oviedo de Occident. Ind. c. 4.)

Ft1002 -- P. Martyr, Decad. 3. l. 10.

Ft1003 -- See Chambers's Dictionary on the word "Pearl".

Ft1004 -- Hist. Ethiop. l. 1. c. 7.

Ft1005 -- Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 172.

Ft1006 -- Geograph. l. 16. p. 529.

Ft1007 -- Apud Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 37. c. 8.

Ft1008 -- Apud ib.

Ft1009 -- Vid. Castel. Lex. Heptaglott. col. 686, 693.

Ft1010 -- Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 29.

Ft1011 -- De Vest. Sacerdot. Heb. p. 649.

Ft1012 -- Apud Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 37. c. 5.

Ft1013 -- Heliodor. Ethiop. l. 8. 1. & 9. 6.

Ft1014 -- Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr p. 747.

Ft1015 -- Apud Braunium de Vest. Sacerdot. Heb. p. 649, 650.

Ft1016 -- µymçh "caeli", Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft1017 -- hdmb “in mensura”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Bolducius, Beza.

Ft1018 -- “Exodus mensura”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus.

Ft1019 -- twlwq “vocum”, Piscator, Mercerus, Drusius.

Ft1020 -- Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 43.

Ft1021 -- Nat. Quaest. l. 2. c. 13. 31.

Ft1022 -- rmayw ειπε δε, Sept. “dixit autem”, Tigurine version, Beza; “dixit vero”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft1023 -- taç Pswyw “addidit assumere”, Montanus, Bolducius, Mercerus; “addidit tollere”, Drusius.

Ft1024 -- yprj ymyb “in autumno dierum mearum”, Hottinger. Thesaur. Phiolog. p. 507. “in diebus autumnitatis meae”, Schultens; so the word signifies in Arabic, vid. Golium, col. 1415. Lud. Capell. in loc.

Ft1025 -- dwsb “in societate Dei”, Pagninus, Beza; “societas Dei”, i.e. “con gregatio”, Bolducius; so Jarchi.

Ft1026 -- yr[n “juvenes mei”, Tigurine version; “vel famuli vel filii”, Mercerus, Drusius; so Jarchi.

Ft1027 -- Fortunat. Schacch. Elaeochrysm. Myroth. l. 2. c. 79. p. 715.

Ft1028 -- tlqyl[“super civitatem”, Pagninus, Montanus, Schmidt; “super urbe”, Schultens.

Ft1029 -- Norden’s Travels in Egypt and Nubia, vol. 2. p. 140, 141, 158. See Joseph. Antiqu. l. 18. c. 5. sect. 6.

Ft1030 -- wabjn “occultabatur”, Drusius; “occultabat se”, Piscator.

Ft1031 -- yt[dy “quem non cognoveram”, Junius & Tremellius, Michaelis; “ignotissimi”, Schultens.

Ft1032 -- So Rufus Virginius used to call the villa where he dwelt, “Senectutio suae Nidulum”, Plin. l. 6. Ep. 10.

Ft1033 -- lwjk “sicut phoenix”, Pagninus; so Mercerus, Piscator.

Ft1034 -- Herodot Euterpe, sive l. 2. c. 73. Pompon. Mela de situ Orbis, l. 6. c. 58. Tacit. Annal. l. 6. c. 28.

Ft1035 -- Solin. Polyhistor. c. 46.

Ft1036 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 2.

Ft1037 -- Bereshit Rabba, sect. 19. fol. 15. 2. Yalkut in loc. par. 1. fol. 152. 2.

Ft1038 -- Vid. Texelii Phoenix. l. 2. c. 1. p. 140.

Ft1039 -- De Resurrectione, c. 13. Vid. Clement. Rom. Ep. 1. ad Corinth. p. 60. & Felli Not. in ib.

Ft1040 -- Vid. Tentzelii Dissert. de Phoenice, etc. sect. 5.

Ft1041 -- ωσπερ στελεχος φοινικος, Sept. “sicut palma”, V. L.

Ft1042 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 13. c. 4.

Ft1043 -- Ib. l. 16. c. 44.

Ft1044 -- Vid. Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. l. vol. 4. p. 757.

Ft1045 -- Acharnes Act. 1. Sc. 1. & Scholia in ib.

Ft1046 -- Jarchi, Ben Gerson, Bar Tzemach, Schmidt, Schultens.

Ft1047 -- Nat. Hist. l. 13. 4.

Ft1048 -- Palladius apud Scheuchzer, ut supra (Physic. Sacr. l. vol. 4.), p. 759.

Ft1049 -- µym yla jwtp “aperta ad aquas”, Montanus, Bolducius, Mercerus, Cocceius, Schmidt, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1050 -- yryxqb “in messe mea”, Montanus, Tigurine version; “in segete mea”, Cocceius; so the Targum.

Ft1051 -- Vid. Scheuchzer, ut supra. (Physic. Sacr. l. vol. 4. p. 759.)

Ft1052 -- çdj “nova”, Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1053 -- Scheuchzer, ut supra. (Physic. Sacr. l. vol. 4. p. 759.)

Ft1054 -- wnymay a l “non tamen sibi sumebant audaciam”, Michaelis; “neque tam audaces fiunt”, Reimar apud Schultens.

Ft1055 -- dwdgb “in agmine”, Montanus, Bolducius; “in turma”, Mercerus, Drusius, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1056 -- r çak “quando”, Junius & Tremellius, Drusius; “quum vel quando”, Schmidt.

Ft1057 -- yb l k µ [“super canes”, Noldius, p. 739. No. 1825.

Ft1058 -- De Lapidibus, Hypoth. ver. 53, 54.

Ft1059 -- Iliad. 10. ως κυνες περι μηλα, etc. v. 183. & Iliad 12. v. 303.

Ft1060 -- χ αμιν εστι κυων φιλοποιμνιος, etc. Idyll. 5. v. 106. & Idyll. 6. v. 9, 10.

Ft1061 -- hyx µyq r [h “qui rodebant in solitudine”, V. L. “rodentes siccitatem”, Schultens.

Ft1062 -- Diodorus Siculus, l. 3. p. 175.

Ft1063 -- jyç yl [“super virgulto”, Montanus, Schultens; “super arbustum”, Bochart.

Ft1064 -- In symposio septem sap.

Ft1065 -- “-----me pascunt olivae. Me cichorea levesque malvae”. Carmin. l. 1. Ode. 31. & Epod. Ode. 2.

Ft1066 -- Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 760.

Ft1067 -- lbid. vid. Reinesium de Lingua Punic. c. 9. S. 20, 21.

Ft1068 -- T. Bab. Kiddushin, fol. 66. 1.

Ft1069 -- David de Pomis Lexic. fol. 80. 3.

Ft1070 -- µm j l “panis eorum”, Montanus, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1071 -- Lexic. col. 1775.

Ft1072 -- Pet. Martyr. de Angleria, decad. 1. l. 1.

Ft1073 -- Olaus Magnus, de Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 12. c. 4.

Ft1074 -- Diod. Sic. l. 3. p. 159.

Ft1075 -- “Ad calefaciendum se”, Pagninus; so Kimchi, Sepher Shorash rad, µmj.

Ft1076 -- Hillerus apud Schultens in loc.

Ft1077 -- µymtr çrç “radix genistarum”, Michaelis, Schultens; so some in Mercerus, Drusius, & Gussetius, p. 839.

Ft1078 -- Nat. Hist. l. 37. c. 8.

Ft1079 -- Apotelesm. l. 5. v. 183.

Ft1080 -- µylj n “torrentium”, Tigurine version, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft1081 -- wqhny “clamabant”, Vatablus, Mercerus; so Ben Gerson; “gemebant”, Michaelis; so Broughton.

Ft1082 -- lwrj tjt “sub carduis”, Vatablus.

Ft1083 -- “Sub sentibus”, V. L. “sub vepreto aliquo”, Tigurine version; “sub vepribus”, Cocceius; “sub spina”, Noldius, p. 193. Schultens.

Ft1084 -- wjpsy “pungebantur”, Junius & Tremellius; “se ulcerant”, Gussetius, p. 565. so Ben Gersom; “they smarted”, Broughton.

Ft1085 -- Nat. Hist. l. 16. c. 24.

Ft1086 -- “Juniperi gravis umbra----” Virgil. Bucolic. Eclog. 10.

Ft1087 -- µç ylb “absque nomine”, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; so Beza, Mercerus, Piscator, Drusius, Michaelis, Cocceius.

Ft1088 -- See Weemse’s Observat. Natural. c 3.

Ft1089 -- wakn “contriti”, Montanus, Bolducius; so the Targum.

Ft1090 -- “Flagellati”, Schultens.

Ft1091 -- hjrp “pullities”, Schultens.

Ft1092 -- “Flos”, Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft1093 -- Misn. Sanhedrin, c. 1. sect. 7.

Ft1094 -- wml “adversus illos”, Beza, Schmidt, Michaelis; so Noldius, p. 514.

Ft1095 -- haç tjt “pro desolatione”, Pagninus, Montanus; “propter vestalionem”, Noldius, p. 3. No. 1864.

Ft1096 -- So some in Bar Tzemach in loc.

Ft1097 -- twhlb yl[Æphh “conversus est contra me, sicut terrores”, Schmidt; “in meros terrores, vel cum terroribus”, Michaelis.

Ft1098 -- “Eversio”, Schultens.

Ft1099 -- ytbdn “principalem meam”, Mercerus; “meam principem”, Vatablus, Piscator; “meam spontaneam”, Pagninus, Montanus, Michaelis; “meam ultroneam”, Drusius; “generosum meam spiritum”, Schultens.

Ft1100 -- Schmidt.

Ft1101 -- yt[çy “salus mea”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft1102 -- In Tishbi, p. 67. So Lud. Capellus in loc.

Ft1103 -- Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p 764.

Ft1104 -- yqr[w “et rodentia mea”, Schultens; “fugientia membra mea”, so some in Michaelis.

Ft1105 -- Vid. Bar Tzemach in loc.

Ft1106 -- Vid. Jarchi & Bar Tzemach in loc.

Ft1107 -- Jarchi, Ben Gersom, and Bar Tzemach.

Ft1108 -- Æpht “mutatus es”, V. L. Tigurine version; “versus es”, Beza, Piscator; so Drusius, Cocceius, Vatablus, Michaelis, Mercerus, Schultens.

Ft1109 -- Æa “verum”, Mercerus; profecto, Drusius, Bolducius; “sane”, Tigurine version.

Ft1110 -- [wç ˆhl wdypb µa “aut clamant aliqui post obitum suum?” Tigurine version; “si in contritione ejus eis clamor?” Montanus, Bolducius.

Ft1111 -- Junius & Tremellius.

Ft1112 -- µwy hçql “ob durum die”, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius; “cui dura crant tempora”, Junius & Tremellius; “ei cui durus dies”, Cocceius.

Ft1113 -- hmx[“restagnavit”, some in Mercerus.

Ft1114 -- ytykb al µa “si non deflevi”, Tigurine version; “si non flevi”, Piscator.

Ft1115 -- ynmdq “occurrerunt mihi”, Piscator, Cocceius.

Ft1116 -- “Incursarunt me”, Schultens.

Ft1117 -- hmj alb “non propter solem”, Vatablus; “non a sole”, Junius & Tremellius, Drusius, Mercerus; “non ob solem”, Piscator.

Ft1118 -- Apud Bartholin. de Cruce, sect. 12. p. 107.

Ft1119 -- (See Gill on “<182721>Job 27:21”).

Ft1120 -- Musaeus de Heron. & Leand. v. 92, etc.

Ft1121 -- Aelian. Var. Hist. l. 13. c. 24.

Ft1122 -- Tertullian. Apolog. c. 46.

Ft1123 -- rknw “et abalienatio”, Munster; “et alienatio”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius, Schmidt.

Ft1124 -- qdx ynzamb “in bilancibus justitiae”, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius, so Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1125 -- Comment. Ebr. p. 338.

Ft1126 -- yaxay “germina mea”, Beza, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1127 -- Odyss. 7. v. 107. & Odyss. 20. v. 109.

Ft1128 -- So T. Bab Sotah, fol. 10. 1. & Luther, Schmidt apud Stockium, p. 414.

Ft1129 -- Iliad. 3. v. 57.

Ft1130 -- In voce λαινον.

Ft1131 -- In Homer. ibid.

Ft1132 -- dja µjrb εν τη αυτη κοιλια, Sept. “in utero uno”, Munster; so Beza, Drusius, Michaelis.

Ft1133 -- Saturnal. l. 1. c. 11.

Ft1134 -- Vid. Hackman. Praecidan. Sacr. p. 193.

Ft1135 -- De Civitate Dei, l. 4. c. 21.

Ft1136 -- Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 29. p. 424.

Ft1137 -- Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 10.

Ft1138 -- Saturnal. l. 1. c. 21.

Ft1139 -- “Illi ad surgentem conversi limina solem”, Virgil. Aeneid. 12.

Ft1140 -- Bibliothec. l. 1. c. 10.

Ft1141 -- Clio, sive, l. 1. c. 131.

Ft1142 -- De la Valle Itinerar. par. 2. c. 9. apud Spanheim. Hist. Job. c. 6. sect. 14. No. 6. p. 108, 109.

Ft1143 -- So Schultens, “quis”; and Ikenius, apud ib.

Ft1144 -- jral “ad semitam seu viam”, Mercerus; “versus viam”, Piscator, Michaelis; Ærdl, Ben Gersom.

Ft1145 -- µdak “ut homo”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Bolducius, Mercerus, Drusius, Schmidt; “more hominum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Aben Ezra.

Ft1146 -- yl [mç yl ˆty ym “quis dabit mihi audientem me?” Montanus; “utinam sit mihi auditor”, Tigurine version.

Ft1147 -- ywt ˆh “en scopum meum”, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft1148 -- “Ecce signum meum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Beza, Bolducius; so Ben Gersom.

Ft1149 -- “En Signaturam meam”, Schultens.

Ft1150 -- ybyr çya “vir litis meae”, Montanus, Beza, Bolducius, Drusius, Michaelis; so Vatablus, Mercerus.

Ft1151 -- twrj[“diademata”, Montanus; “corollas”, Tigurine version; “coronas”, Vatablus, Piscator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft1152 -- ^wykby “defleant”, Pagninus, Montanus; “flent”, Beza, Piscator, Cocceius, etc.

Ft1153 -- hjk “robur ejus”, Montanus, Bolducius, Mercerus, Drusius; “vim ejus”, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens; Psk ylb “sine, vel absque argento”, Mercer, Drusius, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1154 -- ytjph “afflixi”, V. L. “dolore affeci”, Pagninus; so Broughton.

Ft1155 -- Bar Tzemach, et alii.

Ft1156 -- hçab “herba foetens”, Montanus, Bolducius; “spina foetida”, Drusius; “vitium frugum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “labrusca”, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1157 -- qydx awj yk “quod ille (tantum) justus in oculis suis”, Schmidt.

Ft1158 -- T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 20. 4. Hieron. Quaest. seu Traditiones in Gen. fol. 69. D. so Bolducius.

Ft1159 -- Jarchi, Bar Tzemach, etc.

Ft1160 -- T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 20. 4.

Ft1161 -- Jarchi, Aben Ezra. Ben Gersom.

Ft1162 -- µymyl “diebus”, Beza, Montanus, Mercerus; “quod ad dies”, Schultens.

Ft1163 -- µymyl yna ry[x “minimus ego diebus”, Montanus; “parvus diebus sum”, Mercerus.

Ft1164 -- <Arabic> “recessit suo loco”, Castel. col. 1036.

Ft1165 -- Sephorno.

Ft1166 -- So Vatablus, Beza.

Ft1167 -- µybr πολυχρονιοι, Sept. “longaevi”, V. L. Mr. Broughton renders it, “as men of not great time may be wise, as the old understand the right.”

Ft1168 -- µkytwnwbt d[“usque ad intellignetias vestras”, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius, Schultens; “usque ad sensa vestra”, Beza, Junius & Tremellius.

Ft1169 -- µylm ytlm “plenus sum sermonibus”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft1170 -- ynjb jwr “spiritus ventris mei”, Beza, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1171 -- htpy al “quod non est apertum”, Pagninus, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1172 -- µyçdj twbak “sicut utres vino nova repleti”, Piscator.

Ft1173 -- ynaçy “comburet me”, Pagninus.

Ft1174 -- ykjb “in palato meo”, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version, Beza, Schultens; so Mr. Broughton.

Ft1175 -- ytxrq “excisus”, Montanus, Munster, Mercerus, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft1176 -- Pj “tectus”, Montanus, Bolducius.

Ft1177 -- “Mundus”, Beza; “nitidus”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “tersus”, Codurcus, Cocceius.

Ft1178 -- twawnt “vacillationes”, Cocceius; “aut mutationes”, Michaelis.

Ft1179 -- yk “sed”, Beza, Piscator.

Ft1180 -- hnrwçy al µytçbw “secundo non revidet”, Schmidt & Maius apud Michaelis; “et secunda vice non videbit illud”, Schultens.

Ft1181 -- µrsmb “disciplinam eorum”, Tigurine version; “castigationem eorum”, Beza, Vatablus, Drusius, Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1182 -- hç[m “opere”, Pagninus, Montanus, Mercerus, etc.

Ft1183 -- Æçjy “ut prohibeat”, Mercerus, Piscator.

Ft1184 -- Tigurine version.

Ft1185 -- hwat lkam “cibum desiderii”, Vatablus, Drusius, Michaelis; “cibum appetentiae”, Mercerus.

Ft1186 -- wyl[“pro eo”, V. L. Pagninus, Mercerus.

Ft1187 -- ʯlm “eloquens”, Pagninus, Montanus; “orator”, Tigurine version, Bolducius.

Ft1188 -- rpk “propitiationem”, Beza, Pagninus, Montanus, Munster, Bolducius, Vatablus; “expiationem”, Tigurine version; “lytrum”, Cocceius; “satisfactionem”, Schmidt.

Ft1189 -- wh[dp “redime eum”, Pagninus, Montanus etc.

Ft1190 -- l[rçy “cantabit super vel coram”, Schultens.

Ft1191 -- rsayw “et dicat”, V. L. Beza, Montanus, Mercerus, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1192 -- çlç µym[p “bis aut ter”, Tigurine version; “bis et ter”, Beza; “bis, ter”, Mercerus, Cocceius.

Ft1193 -- byçhl “ut avertat”, Beza, Mercerus, Piscator, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1194 -- yxj “sagitta mea”, Montanus, Schultens, Michaelis.

Ft1195 -- bbl yçna “viri cordis”, Pagninus, Montanus, Michaelis.

Ft1196 -- Jarchi, Bar Tzemach, in loc. so Cocceius, Schmidt, and Schultens.

Ft1197 -- çbjy “obligabit”, Montanus; so Junius and Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

Ft1198 -- “An nasum osor judicii fraenabit?” Schultens.

Ft1199 -- rqj al “absque inquisitione”, Beza, Mercerus; “sine investigatione”, Michaelis; so Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1200 -- dm[yw “et stare faciet”, Pagninus, Montanus, V. L. so Mercerus, Drusius, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1201 -- µyar µwqmb “in loco videntium”, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Piscator, Michaelis; “in loco spectantium”, Beza, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1202 -- lbja al “non corrumpam”, Montanus, Mercerus, Piscator.

Ft1203 -- “Non disrumpam”, Beza.

Ft1204 -- “Non pignerabo”, Cocceius; “non pigneratus eram”, Schultens. Vid. Gusset. Ebr. Comment. p. 238.

Ft1205 -- Tigurine version, Vatablus, Junius and Tremellius.

Ft1206 -- hnmlçy Æm[mh “ecce de tuo rependit illud”, Schultens.

Ft1207 -- Junius and Tremellius, Grotius.

Ft1208 -- wrmay “dicent”; Junius and Tremellius, Piscator, Vatablus, Mercerus, Drusius, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens: so Broughton.

Ft1209 -- yba “pro” ayba “adducam”, so some in Codurcus: “haec autem in medio affero”, Tigurine version; “adduco”, Schultens.

Ft1210 -- P. Abraham Peritsol, Simeon Bar Tzemach, Sephorno.

Ft1211 -- Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Ben Gersom.

Ft1212 -- Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Vatablus, Drusius, Cocceius; so V. L.

Ft1213 -- Hodge’s Elihu.

Ft1214 -- So Hieron. Trad. Heb. fol. 75. I.

Ft1215 -- Psy “addet”; Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius, Cocceius, so in the next clauses.

Ft1216 -- ytajjm “de expiatione mea”, Mercerus, etc. “in expiando peccatum”, Grotius; hajj “pro piaculo venit”, Cocceius; so Simeon Bar Tzemach in loc.

Ft1217 -- “Supplicio meo”, Junius & Tremellius; “mucta pro illo aut poena”, Cocceius; “ex poena peccati mei”, Drusius; so Ben Gersom.

Ft1218 -- “Subaudi relicto”, so Mercerus, Drusius; “remisso et per poenitentiam diluto”, Munster.

Ft1219 -- “Absque peccato”, i.e. “ita vivendo ut non perccom”; so some in Michaelis.

Ft1220 -- yç[“factores mei”; Drusius, Mercerus, Piscator, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens; so Broughton.

Ft1221 -- awç “falsitatem”, Beza; “mendacium”, Pagninus, Montanus.

Ft1222 -- “Quod temerarium est”, Cocceius.

Ft1223 -- hnrwçy al “non intuatur illud”, Pagninus, Montanus; “non videt illud”, Cocceius; so Michaelis and Schultens.

Ft1224 -- wl llwjt “et expectabis eum”, Montanus; “expecta eum”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Mercerus; so Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1225 -- çpb “in copia”, Montanus; “ad auctum valde”, Cocceius; “prosperitatem”, De Dieu; so Patrick.

Ft1226 -- Tigurine version, Mercerus, Piscator; so Ben Gersom.

Ft1227 -- Psyw “et addidit”, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius, Mercerus, Michaelis.

Ft1228 -- yk “quia”, Pagninus, Montanus; “nam”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft1229 -- µylm hwlal dw[“adhue Deo sermones”, Montanus; “habit enim Deus adhue quod dicet”, Castalio; so some in Michaelis.

Ft1230 -- qwjrml “ei, vel de eo qui est longinquus”; so Aben Ezra, Bar Tzemach.

Ft1231 -- Æm[tw[r µymt “scientiae perfectae tecum”; so some in Bar Tzemach.

Ft1232 -- yn[ylbtb “funibus paupertatis”, Mercerus, Drusius; “funibus inopiae”, Cocceius.

Ft1233 -- wrbgty yk “quum invalescunt”, Mercerus; “quum invaluerunt”, Munster, Piscator; so Drusius, Panginus, Bolducius.

Ft1234 -- “Quia superbierunt”, Tigurine version; so Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1235 -- rswml “ad correptionem”, Montanus; “ad correctionem”, Beza, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1236 -- “Ad eruditionem”, Cocceius.

Ft1237 -- wdk[yw w[mçy µa “si audierint et fecerint”, Codurcus

Ft1238 -- R. Simeon, Bar Tzemach.

Ft1239 -- ypnjw “et hypocritae”, Montanus; “et loripedes”, Schultens.

Ft1240 -- Pa wmyçw “ponent nasum”, Montanus; “ponunt nasum”. Schultens.

Ft1241 -- µçpn “anima eorum”, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, etc.

Ft1242 -- Schmidt, Michaelis.

Ft1243 -- talm [çr ˆyry “et litem improbi implevisti”, Schultens.

Ft1244 -- qpçb “complosione manuum”, Tigurine version; so some in Munster.

Ft1245 -- rxb al “non munitionem”, Tigurine version.

Ft1246 -- Vid. Aben Ezra, Bar Tzemach, Sephorno.

Ft1247 -- “In angustia”, Mercerus, Drusius, Piscator; “in arcto”, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1248 -- “Num aequalis esset imploration tua non in arcto et omnes contentiones virium”, Cocceius.

Ft1249 -- yn[m “prae afflictione”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “prae miseria ex adflictione”, Michaelis.

Ft1250 -- wkrd wyl[dqp ym “quis visitavit super illum viam ejus”, Montanus, Michaelis; “cum eo”, Tigurine version.

Ft1251 -- aygç πολυς, Sept. “multus”, Mercerus, Drusius.

Ft1252 -- µym ypjn [rgy “aufert stillas pluviae et prohibebit”, Pagninus; so Vatablus, Tigurine version, Targum, & Ben Gersom.

Ft1253 -- “Attrahit”, Codurcus; “subtrahit”, i.e. “a mare”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Schultens.

Ft1254 -- Apud Pinedam in loc.

Ft1255 -- Boerhaav. Elem. Chem. p. 600. apud Schultens in loc.

Ft1256 -- b[“nubis”, Montanus, Tigurine version, Mercerus, Piscator, Schultens.

Ft1257 -- yçrpm “differentias”, Pagninus; “varietates”, Vatablus.

Ft1258 -- µyh yçrç “radices maris”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft1259 -- In Bar Tzemach in loc.

Ft1260 -- Vid. Democrit. Fragment. & Rendtorf. Not. in ib. apud Fabritii Bibliothec. Gr. l. 4. c. 29. p. 338, 362.

Ft1261 -- “Aut illum surgentem vallibus imis”, c. Georgic, l. 1. v. 374, etc. Bacon’s Nat. Hist. cent. 9. p. 208.

Ft1262 -- Nat. Hist. l. 18. c. 35. Vid. Democrit. Fragm. ut supra, p. 335, 358, 362, 366.

Ft1263 -- ----κραδιη δε μοι εξω, etc. Homer. Il. 10. v. 94, 95.

Ft1264 -- As it was to Augustus Caesar, who always carried about with him the skin of a sea calf, as a preservative; and, on suspicion of a storm rising, would betake himself to some secret and covered place: and to Tiberius, who wore his laurel to secure him from it: and to Caligula, who, on hearing it, would get out of bed and hide himself under it. Sueton. Vit. August. c. 90. Tiber. c. 69. & Caligul. c. 51. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 15. c. 30. Vid. Virgil. Georgic. l. 1. v. 330, 331.

Ft1265 -- “Tonitruorum unum genus grave murmur----aliud genus est acre quod crepitum magis dixerint”. Senecae Quaest. Nat. c. 2. c. 27.

Ft1266 -- “Attonitos, quorum mentes sonus ille coelestis loco pepulit”. Ibid.

Ft1267 -- Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 43.

Ft1268 -- Senec. Nat. Quaest. l. 2. c. 12. so Aristot. Meteorolog. l. 2. c. 9.

Ft1269 -- The noise is commonly about seven or eight seconds after the flash, that is, about half a quarter of a minute; but sometimes much sooner, in a second or two, or less than so, and almost immediately upon the flash: this is when the explosion is very near us. Philosoph. Transact. abridged, vol. 2. p. 183. see vol. 4. p. 398.

Ft1270 -- µbq[y alw “non supplantabit ea”, Munster; so Schmidt, Michaelis, Gussetius, p. 633.

Ft1271 -- So Schmidt.

Ft1272 -- So Gussetius.

Ft1273 -- twalpn “mirabilia”, Pagninus, Montanus.

Ft1274 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 51. Senec. Nat. Quaest. l. 2. c. 31.

Ft1275 -- [rn alw “et nesciemus”, Pagninus, Montanus; so Schultens.

Ft1276 -- Moreh Nevochim, par. 2. c. 26.

Ft1277 -- Descriptio Africae, l. 1. c. 27, 28. l. 2. c. 27, 46, 69.

Ft1278 -- Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 103.

Ft1279 -- De Ritu Gent. Septentr. l. 19. c. 15.

Ft1280 -- Nat. Quaest. l. 4. c. 4.

Ft1281 -- yçna lk whç[m “omnes homines operis ipsius”, Schmidt, Michaelis; so Schultens.

Ft1282 -- Ut supra. (De Ritu Gent. Septentr. l. 19. c. 15.)

Ft1283 -- rdjh ˆm “de penetali”, Montanus; so Junius and Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1284 -- µyrzmm “a dispergentibus”, Montanus, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “a sparsoribus”, Schultens.

Ft1285 -- So David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 7. 3.

Ft1286 -- “Induroque nives”, etc. Ovid.

Ft1287 -- “----cum vere reverso Bistoniae tepuere nives”, etc. Statii Theb. l. 2.

Ft1288 -- wrwa ˆn[ypy “dispellit nubem luce sua”, Munster.

Ft1289 -- jbçl “in una tribu”, V. L. “uni tribui”, Tigurine version.

Ft1290 -- Apollodorus, l. 1. p. 5.

Ft1291 -- χαλκεος ουρανος. Pindar. Nem. Ode 6.

Ft1292 -- bhz “aurum”, Pagninus, Montanus, etc.

Ft1293 -- Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 11. & l. 33. c. 3, 4.

Ft1294 -- Reland. de Paradiso, s. 9, 10. p. 22, 23, 24. And, in the countries farthest north were mines of gold formerly, as Olaus Magnus relates, though now destroyed. De Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 6, 11. Vid. l. 3, 5.

Ft1295 -- dwh arwn φοβερος αινος, Symmachus, “formidolosa laudatio”, V. L. “terribilem laude”, Vatablus.

Ft1296 -- hg[y al “non respondebit”, Tigurine version; so some in Mercerus and Drusius.

Ft1297 -- hary al “non timebit”, Osiander.

Ft1298 -- “Non videbit eum omuis sapiens corde”; so some in Drusius.

Ft1299 -- The mathematicians in Aristotle’s time reckoned the breadth of the earth a little less than forty myriads of furlongs, and the length of it seventy myriads. Aristot. de Mundo, c. 3. Vid. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 108, 109. According to the moderns, the circumference of the earth is 25,031.5 of our statute miles, and its diameter 7967 such miles. See Chamber’s Dictionary on the word “Earth”.

Ft1300 -- yk “quadoquidem”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; “quia”, Michaelis; “nam”, Schultens; so Broughton.

Ft1301 -- Laert. Vit. Philosoph. l. 2. p. 99.

Ft1302 -- Or determined, that is, appointed for it its convenient, proper, and fixed place; so David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 203. 1.

Ft1303 -- According to Dr. Plot, the principal fountains have their origin, and are supplied with water through subterraneous passages from the sea. De Origine Fontium, etc. apud Act. Erudit. Lips. A. M. 1685. p. 538. See Gen vii. 11.

Ft1304 -- Vid. Scheucbzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 803.

Ft1305 -- µy ykbn “guttas maris”, Tigurine version, Grotius.

Ft1306 -- “Perplexitates maris”, Munster.

Ft1307 -- “Scopulos maris”, Michaelis; “salebrosa maris”, Schultens.

Ft1308 -- So Jarchi.

Ft1309 -- For though the greatest depth of the sea is said by Fabianus (apud Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 2, c. 102.) to be fifteen furlongs, or near two miles, this must be understood of that part of it which is fathomable and nearer land. But such as those, called Bathea Ponti, the depths of the Pontus, and are almost three hundred furlongs from the continent, they are said (Plin. ib.) to be of an immense depth, and the bottom not to be found. And if the Sardinian sea, the deepest in the Mediterranean (Aristot. Meteorolog. l. 2, c. 1.) is a thousand orgies or fathoms deep, (Posidonius apud Strabo. Geograph. l. 1, p. 37.) that is, one mile and a fifth, what must the depth of the vast ocean be?

Ft1310 -- Geograph. l. 11. p. 363.

Ft1311 -- Cicero de Divinatione, l. 1.

Ft1312 -- Olaus Magu. de Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 2. c. 13.

Ft1313 -- Whiston’s Chronolog. Tables, cent. 20.

Ft1314 -- “Agente nimbos ocyor euro”. Horat. Carmin. l. 2. Ode 16.

Ft1315 -- Aristot. de Mundo, c. 7.

Ft1316 -- Pausan. Attica, sive, l. 1. p. 60.

Ft1317 -- Though a certain poet (Alcman Lyricus apud Macrob. Saturnal. l. 7. c. 16.) says that dew is the offspring of the air and of the moon; but these can only at most be reckoned but secondary causes. The Arabs speak of an angel over dew. Abulpharag, Hist. Dynast. p. 75.

Ft1318 -- Apud Clement. Stromat. l. 5. p. 608.

Ft1319 -- “Nunc hospita plaustris”, etc. Virg. Georgic. l. 3. v. 362.

Ft1320 -- De Situ Orbis, l. 3. c. 5.

Ft1321 -- Melpomene, sive, l. 4. c. 20. Vid. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 7. c. 12.

Ft1322 -- De Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 1. c. 13.

Ft1323 -- Geograph. l. 7. p. 211. Vid. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 1. c. 22.

Ft1324 -- Scheuchzer. Phys. Sacr. vol 4. p. 810.

Ft1325 -- Universal History, vol. 16. p. 489.

Ft1326 -- Universal History, vol. 17. p. 45.

Ft1327 -- hmyk twnd[m δεσμον πλειαδος, Sept. “nexus stellarum”, Schmidt; so Jarchi and Targum.--According to the Talmud, the word signifies an hundred stars. Vid. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 58. 2.

Ft1328 -- David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 77. 3.

Ft1329 -- Vatablus, Codurcus, Schultens; so Suidas in voce μαζουραψ.

Ft1330 -- Callimachus apud Laert. Vit. Thalet. p. 16.

Ft1331 -- Vid. Hinckelman. Praefat. ad Alkoran. p. 29, 30.

Ft1332 -- Jarchi, Ramban, Simeon Bar. Tzemach.

Ft1333 -- Vajikra Rabba, s. 25. fol. 166. 1. Vid. T. Roshhashanah, fol. 26. 1.

Ft1334 -- Seder Tephillot. fol. 2. 2. Ed. Basil. & Bab. Beracot, fol. 60. 2.

Ft1335 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 21. Aelian. de Animal. l. 4. c. 29.

Ft1336 -- rpsy “enarrabit”, V. L. “vel explicabit”, Mercerus, Schmidt.

Ft1337 -- Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Vid. Ravii Orthograph. Ebr. p. 22.

Ft1338 -- bykçy “cubare faciet”, Drusius, Schmidt; “quiescere”, Montanus; “descendere”, Pagninus, so Aben Ezra; “effundit humi”, Schultens.

Ft1339 -- Thevenot’s Travels, part 2. c. 13.

Ft1340 -- Aelian. de Animal. l. 9. c. 1.

Ft1341 -- Plin. apud Servium in Virgil. Georgic. l. 1. p. 189.

Ft1342 -- Pirke Eliezer, c. 21.

Ft1343 -- Hieron. in <19E709>Psalm 147:9.

Ft1344 -- Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 3. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 12.

Ft1345 -- “----Amantis saxa capellae”. Ovid. Epist. 15. v. 55.

Ft1346 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 53. Aelian. de Animal. l. 14. c. 16.

Ft1347 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 50.

Ft1348 -- Ib. c. 32.

Ft1349 -- Ib. & l. 2. c. 47. Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 6. c. 29. Solinus, c. 31.

Ft1350 -- Cicero de Natura Deoram, l. 2. Plin. Nat. Hist. c. 8. 32. Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 5.

Ft1351 -- Aristot. ib.

Ft1352 -- Ib. (Aristot. Hist. Animal.) l. 6. c. 29.

Ft1353 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 44.

Ft1354 -- De Expedition. Cyri, l. 1.

Ft1355 -- Descriptio Africae, l. 9. p. 752.

Ft1356 -- hjlm “salsuginem”, Montanus; “salsuginosam terram”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

Ft1357 -- Nat. Hist. l. 31. c. 7.

Ft1358 -- Ut supra. (Descriptio Africae, l. 9. p. 752.)

Ft1359 -- Ut supra. (De Expedition. Cyril, l. 1.)

Ft1360 -- Hist. Animal. l. 6. c. 36.

Ft1361 -- Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 1. c. 9. col. 63.

Ft1362 -- [mçy al “non audiet”, Pagninus, Montanus.

Ft1363 -- Oppiani Cyneget. l. 3.

Ft1364 -- Navigat. l. 1. c. 19.

Ft1365 -- Vid. Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 26.

Ft1366 -- Nub. Clim. 1. par. 8.

Ft1367 -- Ludolf. Ethiop. Hist. l. 1. c. 10. Of this narhual, or sea unicorn, see the Philosoph. Transact. abridged, vol. 9. p. 71, 72.

Ft1368 -- Polyhistor. c. 65.

Ft1369 -- De Animal. l. 16. c. 20.

Ft1370 -- Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 27. col. 969, etc.

Ft1371 -- Geograph. l. 16. p. 533.

Ft1372 -- Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 175.

Ft1373 -- Animadvers. Sacr. l. 3. c. 1. s. 14.

Ft1374 -- Comment. de Bello Gall. l. 6. c. 27.

Ft1375 -- Xenophon. de Expedit. Cyri, l. 1. Aelian. de. Animal. l. 2. c. 77.

Ft1376 -- Persa, Act. 2. Sc. 2. v. 17.

Ft1377 -- Aelian. de Animal. l. 5. c. 21.

Ft1378 -- Laert. Vit. Solon. l. 1. c. 2.

Ft1379 -- Sermon. l. 2. Sat. 2. v. 25, 26. Vid. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 20. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 13.

Ft1380 -- Ut supra. (Xenophon. de Expedit. Cyri, l. 1.)

Ft1381 -- Geograph. l. 16. p. 531.

Ft1382 -- Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 133.

Ft1383 -- Suidas in voce πελαγρος.

Ft1384 -- Descriptio Africae, l. 9. p. 766.

Ft1385 -- Diodor. Sicul. ut supra. (Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 133.)

Ft1386 -- De Animal. l. 14. c. 17.

Ft1387 -- Ut supra. (Descriptio Africaae, l. 9. p. 766.)

Ft1388 -- Hottinger. Smegm. Orient. l. 1. c. 7. p. 128.

Ft1389 -- Descript. Africae, ut supra. (l. 9. p. 766.) Vid. Aelian. l. 4. c. 37.

Ft1390 -- Relation of a Voyage to Egypt, p. 64.

Ft1391 -- Coelius, l. 10. c. 5. apud Sanctium in loc.

Ft1392 -- Ut supra. (Vid. Aelian. l. 4. c. 37.)

Ft1393 -- hçh “oblivisci fecit eum”, Montanus, Mercerus, Drusius, Cocceius, Michaelis, Schultens.

Ft1394 -- Ut supra. (Desciptio. Africae, l. 9. p. 766.)

Ft1395 -- Aelian. ut supra. (de Animal. l. 5. c. 21.) Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 1.

Ft1396 -- Ibid. (Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 1.)

Ft1397 -- Ut supra. (Diodor. Sicul. Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 133.)

Ft1398 -- Geograph. l. 16. p. 531.

Ft1399 -- Lamprid. Vit. Heliogab. c. 20, 30.

Ft1400 -- Philosoph. Transact. abridged, vol. 2. p. 360.

Ft1401 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 1.

Ft1402 -- De Expedit. Cyri, l. 1.

Ft1403 -- Plin. ut supra. (Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 1.) Aelian. de Animal. l. 4. c. 37.

Ft1404 -- Bochart, Bootius, etc.

Ft1405 -- Homeri Iliad. 13. v. 31.

Ft1406 -- “Iguescunt patulae nares”. Claudian. in 4. Consul. Honor.

Ft1407 -- “Cavatque tellurem”. Virgil. Georgic. l. 3. v. 87.

Ft1408 -- Institut. l. 3. c. 8.

Ft1409 -- çwç “gavisus est”. Vid. Buxtorf. in voce sws.

Ft1410 -- Clement. Alex. Stromat. l. 5. p. 567.

Ft1411 -- Iliad. 1. v. 4.

Ft1412 -- “Pharetramqne sonantem”. Aeneid. 9. v. 666.

Ft1413 -- “----audito sonitu per inane pharetrae”. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 6. v. 230.

Ft1414 -- De Animal. l. 16. c. 25.

Ft1415 -- “Stare loco nescit”. Virgil. Georgic. l. 3. v. 84. “Ut fremit acer equus”, etc. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 3. Fab. 10. v. 704.

Ft1416 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 42.

Ft1417 -- Animadvers. Sacr. l. 3. c. 6. s. 1.

Ft1418 -- Georgic. l. 3.

Ft1419 -- Cyneget. l. 1.

Ft1420 -- Horus Aegypt. apud Steeb. Coelum Sephirot. Heb. c. 6. s. 1. p. 106.

Ft1421 -- Aelian. de Animal. l. 12. c. 4.

Ft1422 -- Ibid. l. 2. c. 43. Plin. l. 10. c. 8.

Ft1423 -- De Animal. l. 7. c. 9. & l. 10. c. 14.

Ft1424 -- De Abstinentia, l. 4. s. 9.

Ft1425 -- Kircher. Prodrom. Copt. p. 232.

Ft1426 -- Geograph. l. 17. p. 562.

Ft1427 -- Opera & Dies, l. 1. v. 208.

Ft1428 -- Apotelesm. l. 5. v. 176.

Ft1429 -- Iliad. 15. v. 238. Odyss 13. v. 87.

Ft1430 -- Sepher Shorash. rad. hxn.

Ft1431 -- Cateches. 9. s. 6.

Ft1432 -- Florida 1.

Ft1433 -- Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 32.

Ft1434 -- Nat. Hist. l. 10. 3.

Ft1435 -- lka rpj “fodit escam”; Montanus, Mercerus.

Ft1436 -- De Animal. l. 2. c. 26. & l. 1. c. 42. Aristot. & Plin. ut supra. (Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 32. Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 3.)

Ft1437 -- Iliad. 17. v. 674, 675. so Diodor. Sic. l. 3. p. 145.

Ft1438 -- Aristot. de Animal. l. 8. c. 3. 18. Aelianus, l. 2. c. 26.

Ft1439 -- Ib. l. 10. c. 14.

Ft1440 -- Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 32.

Ft1441 -- Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 3.

Ft1442 -- ytlq “levis sum”, Cocceius, Michaelis; “leviter locutus sum”, V. L.

Ft1443 -- djy “pariter”, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Cocceius, Schultens.

Ft1444 -- Suidas in voce ψηρια. Plutarch in Eumenc.

Ft1445 -- Terent. Eunuch. Act. 3. Sc. 1. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 3.

Ft1446 -- Isidor. Origin. l. 12, c. 2. Vid. Horat. Epod. 12. v. 1.

Ft1447 -- Hiller. Oaomastic, Sacr. p. 434.

Ft1448 -- Nat. Quaest. l. 4. c. 2.

Ft1449 -- Vid. lsidor. Origin. l. 12. c. 6. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 25. Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 2. c. 7.

Ft1450 -- Herodot. Euterpe, sive, l. 2. c. 71. Plin. ib. Ammian, Marcellin. l. 22. Leo African. Descript. African, l. 9. p. 758.

Ft1451 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 1.

Ft1452 -- De Natur. Deor. l. 1.

Ft1453 -- Solin. Polyhist. c. 45. Aelian. de Animal. l. 5. c. 53. Philo de Praemiis, p. 924. Plin. Afric. ut supra. (Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 1.)

Ft1454 -- Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 136. & l. 3. p. 173, 174, 175.

Ft1455 -- Geograph. l. 16. p. 531, 533.

Ft1456 -- Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 31. Aelian. Plin. Solin. Ammian. ut supra.

Ft1457 -- Ludolf. Ethiop. Hist. l. 1. c. 11.

Ft1458 -- De Ritu Septent. Gent. l. 21. c. 26.

Ft1459 -- Aelian. de Amimal. l. 17. c. 44. Plin. l. 8. c. 10, 20. Vid. Solin. c. 38. Diodor. Sic. l. 3. p. 167. & Strabo. Geograph. l. 16. p. 533.

Ft1460 -- Joseph. Ben Gorion. Hist. Heb. l. 3. c. 20. 1 Maccab. vi. 46.

Ft1461 -- Diodor. Sic. ut supra. (l. 3. p. 167) Plin. l. 8. c. 25.

Ft1462 -- Ptolem. Geograph. l. 7. c. 2. Fragment. Ctesiae ad Calcem Herodot. p. 701. Ed. Gronov. Boius apud Kircher. China cum Momument. p. 193.

Ft1463 -- Herodot. ut supra. (p. 701) Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 2. c. 7. Plin. l. 11. c. 39.

Ft1464 -- Travels, part 1. c. 72.

Ft1465 -- Dampier’s Voyages, vol. 2. part 2. p. 105.

Ft1466 -- Heliodor. Ethiop. Hist. l. 9. c. 18.

Ft1467 -- Nat. Hist. l. 11. c. 39. Vid. Vossium in Melam. de Situ Orbis, l. 1. c. 5. p. 28.

Ft1468 -- Navigat. l. 4. c. 9.

Ft1469 -- Aristot. Plin. Solin. & Isidore ut supra. ((see <184016>Job 40:16).)

Ft1470 -- Nicet. Choniat. apud Fabrit. Gr. Bibliothec. vol. 6. p. 410.

Ft1471 -- Epist. l. 9. ep. 22.

Ft1472 -- Hist. Amimal. l. 2. c. 1.

Ft1473 -- Apud Hierozoic, par. 2. l. 5. c. 14. col. 758.

Ft1474 -- Dampier's Voyages, vol. 2. part 2. p. 105.

Ft1475 -- In Philosoph. Transact. vol. 5. p. 155, 156.

Ft1476 -- Odoardus Barbosa apud Bochart. ut supra. (Apud Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 14. col. 758.)

Ft1477 -- Diepenses apud ib.

Ft1478 -- Arcadica, sive, l. 8. p. 530.

Ft1479 -- China cum Monument. p. 193.

Ft1480 -- Olaus Magnus, ut supra, (De Ritu. Septent. Gent.) l. 2. c. 19. Voyage to Spitzbergen, p. 115.

Ft1481 -- Ut supra. (Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 136. & l. 3. p. 173. 174. 175.)

Ft1482 -- Achilles Tatius, l. 4.

Ft1483 -- Ammian. Marcellin. Plin. Solin. ut supra. Vid. Plin. l. 28. c. 8.

Ft1484 -- Ut supra, (Apud Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 14.) col. 760.

Ft1485 -- Travels, part 1. c. 72.

Ft1486 -- Physic. Sacr. tab. 532.

Ft1487 -- Dampier's Voyages, vol. 2. part 2. p. 105.

Ft1488 -- Capt. Rogers apud Dampier, ib. p. 106.

Ft1489 -- Ut supra. (Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 136. & l. 3. p. 173. 174. 175.)

Ft1490 -- Olaus Magus ut supra, (De Ritu. Septent. Gent.) l. 21. c. 19. Vid. Bochart. ut supra, (Apud Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 14.) col. 763. Eden’s Travels, p. 318.

Ft1491 -- See the North West Fox, p. 232. Voyage to Spitzbergen, p. 115, 120. Supplement, p. 194.

Ft1492 -- Olaus Magnus, ut supra, (De Ritu. Septent. Gent. l. 21. c. 19.) & Eden’s Travels, ut supra. (p. 318.)

Ft1493 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 7.

Ft1494 -- Ammian. Marcellin. l. 22. Bellonius & Achilles Tatius apud Bochart ut supra. (Apud Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 14. col. 760.)

Ft1495 -- Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 46. Plin. l. 8. c. 10. Aelian. de Animal. l. 9. c. 56.

Ft1496 -- lbid. l. 9. c. 24.

Ft1497 -- Ibid. (Aelian. de Animal.) c. 31.

Ft1498 -- Ibid. l. 7. c. 6.

Ft1499 -- Ibid. c. 2.

Ft1500 -- Aristot. ut supra. (l. 9. c. 56.)

Ft1501 -- Vid. Bochart. ut supra, (Apud Hierozic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 14.) col. 766.

Ft1502 -- Aristot. ut supra. (l. 9. c. 56.) Vid Aelian. l. 7. c. 15.

Ft1503 -- Hist. l. 21. c. 28.

Ft1504 -- Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 31. Isidor. Origin. l. 12. c. 6.

Ft1505 -- Geograph. l. 15. p. 484.

Ft1506 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 8. See Ovington’s Voyage to Surat, p. 192, 193.

Ft1507 -- Apud Bochart. ut supra, col. 768.

Ft1508 -- Eden’s Travels, p. 318. Supplement to the North East Voyages, p. 94.

Ft1509 -- Bibliothec, l. 1. p. 32.

Ft1510 -- Orosii Hist. l. 4. c. 18. p. 62. Liv. Hist. l. 27. c. 49.

Ft1511 -- T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 77. 2. & Gloss. in ib.

Ft1512 -- Nat. Hist. l. 28. c. 8.

Ft1513 -- Ib. l. 32. c. 1.

Ft1514 -- Diodor. Sicul. l. 1. p. 31. Herodot. Euterpe, sive, l. 2. c. 68. Solin. c. 45. Plutarch. de Is. & Osir. Vid. Aristot. de Animal. l. 2. c. 17. & l. 4. c. 11. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 11. c. 37. Thevenot, ut supra. (Travels, part 1. c. 72.) Sandys's Travels, l. 2. p. 78.

Ft1515 -- Ut supra, (Herodot. Euterpe, sive, l. 2.) c. 70.

Ft1516 -- Ut supra. (Diodor. Sicul. l. 1. p. 31.)

Ft1517 -- Descriptio Africae, l. 9. p. 762. See Sandy's Travels, ut supra, (l. 2.) p. 79.

Ft1518 -- Nat. Hist. l. 19. c. 2.

Ft1519 -- Strabo. Geograph. l. 17. p. 560. Aelian. de Animal. l. 10. c. 21. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 25.

Ft1520 -- Herodot, ut supra, (Euterpe, sive, l. 2.) c. 69. Aelian. l. 8. c. 2. & l. 10. c. 21. Solin. c. 45. Plin. l. 8. c. 46.

Ft1521 -- Aelian. l. 10. c. 21.

Ft1522 -- Maxim. Tyr. Sermon. 38.

Ft1523 -- Leo Africanus & Aelian. ut supra. (l. 10. c. 21.)

Ft1524 -- Vid. Schultens in loc.

Ft1525 -- Vid. Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 846.

Ft1526 -- Scheuchzer. ib.

Ft1527 -- Plin. l. 8. c. 25. Solin. c. 45.

Ft1528 -- Ammian. Marcellin. l. 22.

Ft1529 -- See the North-West Fox, p. 205.

Ft1530 -- Ut supra. (Plin. l. 8. c. 25.)

Ft1531 -- Idyll. 19.

Ft1532 -- Decad. 5. c. 9.

Ft1533 -- Descript. Africae, l. 9. p. 763. So Sandys's Travels, l. 2. p. 78. Edit. 5.

Ft1534 -- Epigram. l. 3. cp. 64.

Ft1535 -- Vid. Plin. l. 9. c. 5, 6. and Philosoph. Transact. vol. 3. p. 544. Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 848.

Ft1536 -- De Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 21. c. 8.

Ft1537 -- Philosoph. Transact. abridged, vol. 2. p. 847, 848.

Ft1538 -- Philosoph. Transact. abridged, vol. 7. part 3. p. 425.

Ft1539 -- Aelian. l. 10. c. 21.

Ft1540 -- Voyage to Spitzbergen, p. 146, 147, 152.

Ft1541 -- Apud Arrian. in Indicis.

Ft1542 -- Vid. Wesley's Dissertations on Job, dissert. 38. p. 290.

Ft1543 -- Vid. Scheuchzer. ut supra. (Physic. Sacr. vol. 4. p. 848.)

Ft1544 -- whyjab çya "vir in fratre suo"; Montanus.

Ft1545 -- Problem. s. 33. qu. 4.

Ft1546 -- Aelian. l. 3. c. 11. Leo African. Descriptio African, l. 9. p. 761. Pet. Martyr. Decad. 3. c. 4.

Ft1547 -- Nat. Hist. l. 9. c. 4, 6.

Ft1548 -- Olymp. Ode 3. v. 36.

Ft1549 -- Hor. Hiereglyph. apud Scheuchzer. vol. 4. p. 849.

Ft1550 -- Voyage to Spitzbergen, p. 145.

Ft1551 -- Aelian. l. 2. c. 13. Plin. l. 9. c. 62.

Ft1552 -- Hasacus apud Schultens in loc.

Ft1553 -- Olaus Magnus de Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 21. c. 5, 8. so Albertus Magnus de Animal. l. 24. c. 1.

Ft1554 -- Travels, ut supra, (part. 1.) p. 245.

Ft1555 -- “Fulmen ab ore venit; frondesque adflatibus ardent”. Metamorph. c. 8. Fab. 4.

Ft1556 -- Plin. l. 48. c. 8. Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 8. c. 2.

Ft1557 -- Achilles Statius & Eustathius, apud Scheuchzer: ut supra. (vol. 4. p. 849.)

Ft1558 -- Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 9. c. 6. & Part. Animal l. 4. c. 11.

Ft1559 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 25.

Ft1560 -- De Animal. l. 12. c. 41.

Ft1561 -- Ibid. l. 10. c. 24.

Ft1562 -- Apud Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 17. col. 785.

Ft1563 -- Apud ibid. (Bochard. Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 17. col. 785.)

Ft1564 -- Origin. l. 12. c. 6.

Ft1565 -- Mandelsloe in Harris’s Voyages, etc. vol. 1. p. 759.

Ft1566 -- Travels, part 1. b. 2. c. 72. p. 245.

Ft1567 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 25.

Ft1568 -- Sandys’s Travels, l. 2. p. 78.

Ft1569 -- “Fervetque----aequor”. Virgil. Georgic. l. 1. v. 327.

Ft1570 -- Nat. Hist. l. 32. c. 11.

Ft1571 -- Schultens in Job, xiv. 11.

Ft1572 -- Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 17.

Ft1573 -- Decad. 3. l. 4.

Ft1574 -- Voyage to Spitzbergen, p. 148, 149.

Ft1575 -- Vid. Scheuchzer. ut supra, (vol. 4.) p. 852. & Voyage to Spitzbergen, p. 167.

Ft1576 -- Pantoppidan’s History of Norway, part 2. p. 204.

Ft1577 -- Vid. Scheuchzer. ibid. (vol. 4.) p. 853.

Ft1578 -- πολιης αλος, Homer. Iliad. 1. v. 350. πολιης ψαλασσης, Iliad. 4. v. 248. “incanuit unda”, Catullus.

Ft1579 -- Phurnutus de Natura Deorum, p. 63.

Ft1580 -- De Animal. l. 10. c. 24.

Ft1581 -- Geograph. l. 15. p. 499.

Ft1582 -- Vit. Apollon. l. 3. c. 16.

Ft1583 -- De Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 21. c. 3, 6.

Ft1584 -- Voyage to Spitzbergen, p. 153.

Ft1585 -- Baffin in the North-West Fox, p. 150.

Ft1586 -- Apud Pinedam, in v. 1.

Ft1587 -- Isidor. Origin l. 12. c. 4.

Ft1588 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 14.

Ft1589 -- De Animal. l. 2. c. 21. & l. 10. c. 48. & l. 15. c. 21. & l. 16. c. 39.

Ft1590 -- Vit. Apollon. l. 3. c. 2. Vid. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 3. Fab. 1.

Ft1591 -- Hist. l. 4. c. 8.

Ft1592 -- Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 13.

Ft1593 -- Ut supra. (Vit. Apollon. l. 3. c. 2. Vid. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 3. Fab. 1.)

Ft1594 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 11, 12. & l. 31. c. 2.

Ft1595 -- In voce δρακων, & in voce θελιω.

Ft1596 -- Euseb. Demonstr. Evangel. l. 1. c. 5. p. 11.

Ft1597 -- Vid. Spanhem. Hist. Jobi, c. 8. s. 1, 2.

Ft1598 -- y l a "ad me", Mercerus, Drusius, Cocceius; "coram me", V. L. "apud me", Tigurine version.

Ft1599 -- "----Septem mactare juvencos", etc. Virgil. Aeneid. 6. v. 38, 39.

Ft1600 -- Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 18. c. 3. & l. 33. c. 3. Alex. ab. Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 4. c. 15.

Ft1601 -- T Bab. Roshhashanah, fol. 26. 1.

Ft1602 -- Vid. Balmes. Gram. Strat. 26.

Ft1603 -- Hist. Jobi, c. 12. s. 7.

Ft1604 -- Golii Lexic. Arab. col. 2767, 2768.

Ft1605 -- Geograph. Nub. Climat. 2. par. 6.

Ft1606 -- Hiller. Onomastic. Sacr. p. 356.

Ft1607 -- T. Bava Bathra, fol. 15. 1. Seder Olam Rabba, c. 3.

Ft1608 -- Suidas in voce ιωβ.

Ft1609 -- Theatrum Terrae S. p. 93.

Ft1610 -- Juchasin, fol. 9. 2.

Ft1611 -- Schindler. Lexic. Pentaglott. col. 64.

Ft1612 -- Apud Euseb. Praepar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 25.

PSALMS

INTRODUCTION TO PSALMS

The title of this book may be rendered “the Book of Praises”, or “Hymns”; the psalm which our Lord sung at the passover is called an “hymn”, (<402630>Matthew 26:30); and the one hundred forty fifth Psalm is entitled hlht, “an Hymn of David”; and the psalms in general are called “hymns” by Philo the Jew[f1], and songs and hymns by Josephus[f2]; and to these several names of this book the apostle manifestly refers in (<490519>Ephesians 5:19) (<510316>Colossians 3:16). The Jews divided the writings of the Old Testament into three parts: the first division is the Law, or five books of Moses; the second is the Prophets, former and latter; and the third, the “Hagiographa”, or holy writings; to which division Christ has a regard in (<422444>Luke 24:44); and because the book of Psalms stand first in the last division, the whole goes by its name. This book by the Apostle Peter is entitled as here, (<440120>Acts 1:20); the title in the Syriac version is, with which agrees the Arabic version. As to the divine authority of it, that it was written by inspiration of God, we have not only the testimony of David, who says, “the Spirit of God spake by me”, (<102302>2 Samuel 23:2); but the testimonies of Christ and his apostles, (<402243>Matthew 22:43 <440116>Acts 1:16 4:24,25); and, as Aben Ezra[f3] observes the whole of it was spoken çdwqh jwrb, “by the Holy Ghost”. Concerning the penman or amanuensis, employed by the Spirit of God in writing it, there are different opinions. The Jews make mention of ten, which are differently reckoned by them. According to Jarchi[f4], they were Adam, Melchizedek, Abraham, Moses, David, Solomon, Asaph, and the three sons of Korah. According to Kimchi[f5], they were Adam, the first, Melchizedek, Abraham, Asaph, Heman, Jeduthun, Moses, and the three sons of Korah; Asir, Elkanah, and Abiasaph. Some ascribe all the Psalms to David[f6], and think that those which are said to be a psalm of Asaph, or of Heman, etc. should be rendered “a psalm to Asaph”, etc. and only signify that they were psalms delivered to them, to be sung in a public manner. But the truest opinion seems to be, that the greater part of them were written by David, and for the most part those that have no title; and the rest by those whose names they bear. Some were written at and after the Babylonish captivity, as (<19C601>Psalm 126:1-6) and (<19D701>Psalm 137:1-9). The manner or form in which they were written was metre[f7], though some deny it that the Jews had metre: as appears by the different accentuation of them from other writings, and from their being sung vocally and on musical instruments. Josephus[f8], the Jewish historian, says, that that is, some of three feet, and others of five feet: for the Psalms of David are thought to be of the “lyric” kind; and Gomarus, in his Lyra, has given many instances out of them, which are of the “iambic”, “trochaic” kind, etc. though the Jews for many years have lost the knowledge of the sacred poetry. R. Benjamin[f9] indeed says, that in his time there were at Bagdad R. Eleazar and his brethren, who knew how to sing the songs, as the singers did when the temple was standing. The subject matter of this book is exceeding great and excellent; many of the psalms respect the person, offices, and grace of Christ; his sufferings and death, resurrection, ascension, and session at the right hand of God; and so are exceeding suitable to the Gospel dispensation. The whole book is a rich mine of grace and evangelical truths, and a large fund of spiritual experience; and is abundantly suited to every case, state, and condition, that the church of Christ, or particular believers, are in at any time.

> “the Book of the Psalms of David, King and Prophet,”

> “David being free from war, and enjoying a profound peace, composed songs and hymns to God, of various metre; some trimeter, and some pentameter;”

PSALM 1

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 1

This psalm, though without a title, may reasonably be thought to be a psalm of David; since the next psalm, which is also without a title, is ascribed to him, (<440425>Acts 4:25); and since both are joined together as one psalm by the Jews[f10]; (see Gill on "<441333>Acts 13:33"); and since this is the general preface to the whole book, which is chiefly of David's penning, it is entitled, in the metaphrase of Apollinarius,

"a Song of David, the Prophet and King."

Ver. 1. Blessed [is] the man, etc.] This psalm begins in like manner as Christ's sermon on the mount, (<400503>Matthew 5:3); setting forth the praises and expressing the happiness of the man who is described in this verse and (<190102>Psalm 1:2). The words may be rendered, "O, the blessednesses of the man", or "of this man"[f11]; he is doubly blessed, a thrice happy and blessed man; blessed in things temporal and spiritual; happy in this world, and in that to come. He is to be praised and commended as a good man, so the Targum:

> "the goodness, or, Oh, the goodness of the man;"

or as others,

> "Oh, the right goings or happy progress, or prosperous success of the man[f12]," who answers to the following characters; which right walking of his is next observed, and his prosperity in (<190103>Psalm 1:3). Some have interpreted this psalm of Christ, and think it is properly spoken of him[f13]; that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly: all men are by nature and practice ungodly, without God, without the true knowledge, fear, and worship of God and are at enmity against him. It is a character that belongs to God's elect as well as others, while in a state of nature; and is sometimes used illustrate the love of Christ in dying for them, and the grace of God in the justification of them, (<450405>Romans 4:5 5:6). But here it describes not such who are wicked in heart and life in common only, but the reprobate part of mankind, profligate and abandoned sinners, such as Jude speaks of, (<650104>Jude 1:4); and for whom the law is made, and against whom it lies, (<540109>1 Timothy 1:9). The word [f14] here used signifies such who are restless and continually in mischief; who are like the troubled sea, which cannot rest, ever casting up mire and dirt: they are always disquieted themselves, and are ever disquieting others; nor do they cease from being so till they are laid in their graves. And to these "counsel" is ascribed, which supposes capacity and wisdom; as, generally speaking, such are wise and prudent in natural and civil things, and are wise to do evil, though to do good they have no knowledge: and counsel implies consultation and deliberation; they act deliberately in sinning, they cast about in their minds, form schemes, and contrive ways and means how to accomplish their vicious purposes; and sometimes they enter into a confederacy, and consult together with one consent, and their counsel is generally against the Lord, though it does not prosper and prevail; and against his Christ, his people, truths and ordinances: it takes in both their principles and practices; and the sum of their counsel is to indulge themselves in sin, to throw off all religion, and to cast off the fear and worship of God, (<182114>Job 21:14,15). Now "not to walk" herein is not to hearken to their counsel, to give into it, agree with it, pursue it, and act according to it; and happy is the man, who, though he may fall in the way of it, and may have bad counsel given him by ungodly men, yet does not consent to it, take it, and act upon it. This may be applied to the times of the Messiah, and the men of the age in which he lived; and the rather, since the next psalm, in which mention is made of the counsel of the ungodly, manifestly belongs unto them. The men of that generation were a set of ungodly men, who consulted against Christ to take away his life; and blessed is the man, as Joseph of Arimathea, who, though he was in that assembly which conspired against the life of Christ, did not walk in, nor consent unto, their counsel and their deeds, (<422351>Luke 23:51);

nor standeth in the way of sinners; all men are sinners through Adam's disobedience, and their own actual transgressions, and such were the elect of God, when Christ died for them; and indeed are so after conversion, for no man lives without sin. But here it intends notorious sinners, who are open, bold, and daring in iniquity; the word [f15] signifies such, who in shooting miss the mark, and go aside from it, as such sinners do from the law of God; proceed from evil to evil, choose their own ways, and delight in their abominations. Now their "way" is not only their "opinion", as the nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful; by whom may be meant proud and haughty persons, in opposition to the humble and lowly, as in (<200334>Proverbs 3:34); such who are proud of their natural abilities, knowledge, and wisdom, of their honours and riches, or of their own righteousness, and despise others; or such who are desperate in wickedness, of whom there is no hope; (see <200907>Proverbs 9:7,8); and Deists and atheists, who scoff at divine revelation, and mock at a future state, at death, hell, and judgment, as in (<232814>Isaiah 28:14,15 <610303>2 Peter 3:3). Now happy is the man that does not sit or keep company with such persons; who comes not into their secret and into their assembly; does not associate himself with them, nor approve of their dispositions, words, principles, and actions; (see <192604>Psalm 26:4,5). Such were the Scribes and Pharisees in Christ's time; they derided him and his doctrines, scoffed at him when he hung upon the cross, and despised him and his apostles, and his Gospel; but there were some that did not join with them, to whom he, his ministers, and truths, were precious and in high esteem, and to whom he was the power and wisdom of God.

Syriac version renders it, their corrupt sentiments, but their sinful course of life; which is a way of darkness, a crooked path, and a road that leads to destruction and death: and happy is the man that does "not stand" in this way, which denotes openness, impudence, and continuance; who, though he may fall into this way, does not abide in it; (see <450601>Romans 6:1,2). The Pharisees in the time of Christ, though they were not openly and outwardly sinners, yet they were secretly and inwardly such, (<402328>Matthew 23:28); and the way they stood in was that of justification by the works of the law, (<450931>Romans 9:31,32): but happy is the man, as the Apostle Paul and others, who stands not in that way, but in the way Christ Jesus, and in the way of life and righteousness by him;

Ver. 2. But his delight [is] in the law of the Lord, etc.] Not the law of nature, which was inscribed on Adam's heart in innocence, but now greatly impaired by sin, and become very imperfect and very insufficient to make men happy, or to lead them to true felicity; nor the law of Moses, which is a fiery law, and works wrath, accuses of sin, pronounces guilty, curses and condemns to death; and therefore cannot be delighted in by a sensible sinner, unless as it is in the hands of Christ, and as fulfilled by him, who is the end of it; and as it is written on the heart of a regenerate man, who, so far as it is, delights in it after the inward man, and serves it with his spirit: but rather the Scriptures, as much and as many parts of them as were written in David's time; particularly the five books of Moses, which are called the Law and the Testimony of the Lord; which being inspired by God, were profitable and delightful to read, and to hear explained; and as they were David’s delight, and the men of his council, (<19B924>Psalm 119:24); so they were the delight of every good man, there being many things in them concerning the Messiah, his grace and kingdom; (see <422444>Luke 24:44 <442622>Acts 26:22,23). Moreover the word hrwt, here used, signifies “doctrine”, and may intend the evangelic doctrine, as it does in (<191907>Psalm 19:7); which is a psalm concerning the doctrine of the apostles that went into all the world; and in like sense is the word used in (<230203>Isaiah 2:3 42:4); of the doctrine of the Messiah, that is, the Gospel; and is the same with the law, or doctrine of faith, in (<450327>Romans 3:27). And this may be called the doctrine of the Lord, because he is the author of it; it came by him, he revealed it; and because he is the subject of it; it is concerning him, his person, office, grace, and righteousness; and so far as it was published in the times of David, it was a joyful sound, good news and glad tidings, and the delight of good men; and in his law doth he meditate day and night; as Joshua was directed to do, and David did, (<060108>Joshua 1:8 <19B997>Psalm 119:97). This is to be understood of a diligent reading and serious consideration of it; and of the employment of the thoughts, and of deep study upon it, in order to find out the sense and meaning of it; and which is to be done constantly, every day, as often as there is leisure and opportunity for it; or, as Kimchi on the place observes, whenever a man is free from the business of life; unless this should be taken figuratively, of the day of prosperity and night of adversity, whether in things temporal or spiritual, which are each of them proper seasons to meditate in, upon the word of God and Gospel of Christ.

Ver. 3. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, etc.] Or, “for then shall he be”, etc. as Alshech renders the words; and the Hebrew “vau” is often used for “then”[f16]. As (<190101>Psalm 1:1,2) describe the man who is blessed, this points at his blessedness, and shows and proves him to be an happy man; for he is comparable to a “tree”: not to a dry tree, or a tree without fruit, or whose fruit is withered, but to a fruitful tree, a green and flourishing one; green olive tree, or a palm tree, or a cedar in Lebanon; to which David compares himself and the righteous, (<195208>Psalm 52:8 92:12); and here such an one is compared to a tree “planted”; not to one that grows of itself, a wild tree, a tree of the wood; but to one that is removed from its native place and soil, and planted elsewhere; and so designs such who are broken off of the wild olive tree, and are grafted into the good olive tree; who are planted in Christ Jesus, and in the church, the house of the Lord; of which transplantation the removal of Israel into Canaan’s land was an emblem, (<198008>Psalm 80:8); and such a spiritual plantation is of God the husbandman; whose planting the saints are efficiently, (<236021>Isaiah 60:21 61:3) (<401513>Matthew 15:13). And it is owing to the word, the ingrafted word, (<590121>James 1:21), which is the means of this ingrafture, and to the ministers of it instrumentally; some of whom plant, and others water, (<460306>1 Corinthians 3:6,7). Moreover, the happy man before described is like a tree that is situated “by the rivers of water”, or “divisions”[f17] and rivulets of water; which running about the plants, make them very fruitful and flourishing; (see <263104>Ezekiel 31:4); and which may intend the river of the love of God, and the streams of it, the discoveries and applications of it to regenerate persons; and also the fulness of grace in Christ, who is the fountain of gardens, the well of living waters and streams from Lebanon, to revive, refresh, supply, and comfort his people, (<220415>Song of Solomon 4:15); as well as the graces of the Spirit of God, which are near the saints, and like rivers of water flow out of them that believe in Christ, (<430738>John 7:38); to which may be added the word and ordinances of the Gospel, which are the still waters, to which they are invited and led, and by which and with which they are greatly refreshed, and made fruitful. Arama interprets it of the waters of the law; it is best to understand it of the Gospel; (see <235501>Isaiah 55:1); it follows, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; and so appears to be a tree of righteousness, filled with the fruits of righteousness, the graces of the Spirit, and good works; which are brought forth by him under the influence of grace, as he has opportunity, and according to the measure of grace bestowed. His leaf also shall not wither; neither tree, nor fruit, nor leaf shall wither, but shall be always green; which is expressive of the saints’ perseverance: the reasons of which are, they are ingrafted in Christ the true vine, and abide in him, from whom they have their sap, nourishment, and fruit, (<431501>John 15:1,2); they are rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith of him; and so they hold fast the profession of it without wavering; and whatsoever he doth shall prosper; meaning not so much in things temporal, of which Arama interprets it, for in these the good man does not always succeed, but in things spiritual: whatever he does in faith, from love, to the glory of God, and in the name of Christ, prospers; yea, those things in which he is concerned, that are adverse, and seem for the present to be against him, in the issue work for good to him: in short, such a man is blessed with grace here, and glory hereafter; and therefore must needs be an happy man.

Ver. 4. The ungodly [are] not so, etc.] They are not as the good man is; their manner and course of life are different; they walk in the counsel of ungodly men, like themselves, and take counsel against the Lord, his Anointed, and his people: they stand in the way of sinners, and steer their conversation according to the course of the world, and sit in the seat of the scornful; laugh at divine revelation, lampoon the Scriptures, deride good men, make a jest of religion and a future state: they have no delight in the law of the Lord, they cast it away from them, and despise it; and are so far from a constant meditation on it, that they never read it, nor so much as look into it, nor is it ever in their thoughts. They are not like to a tree, as described in (<190103>Psalm 1:3): if they are like to trees, it is to dry trees, and not green ones, to trees without any sap, moisture, and verdure, and which are only fit fuel for the fire; to the trees of the wood, to wild olive trees; to trees on an heath, in a desert, in parched land, and not to trees by rivers of water, but to trees that have no root, and are without fruit, (<650112>Jude 1:12). And though they may be in a seeming prosperous condition for a time, may be in great power, riches, and honour, and spread themselves like a green bay tree; yet suddenly they are cut down as the grass, and wither as the green herb; and even their outward prosperity destroys them; so that not anything they have or do in the issue prospers: and therefore they are not blessed or happy as the good man is; yea, they are wretched and miserable, nay, cursed; they are cursed now, and will be hereafter; they are cursed in their basket and store, their blessings are curses to them; the law pronounces them cursed; and they will hear, “go ye cursed”, at the day of judgment, (see <402541>Matthew 25:41). The Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, and Arabic versions, repeat the words “not so”, and read “not so the ungodly, not so:” which seems to be done for the confirmation of the truth of it:

but [are] like the chaff which the wind driveth away; they are like chaff, which has no root, moisture, greenness, nor fruitfulness; they have nothing in them solid and substantial; they are destitute of all that is good; are vain and empty; without the knowledge of God and Christ; without faith in Christ and love to him; and are sensual, not having the Spirit, his graces and fruits: they are like chaff for lightness, vain in their imaginations, light in their principles, frothy in their words, and unstable in all their ways: they are never long in any position, unsettled, disquieted, and tossed to and fro; and there is no peace unto them: they are like chaff, useless and unprofitable, nothing worth, fit only for everlasting burnings, which will be their case. For when Christ will gather his wheat, the righteous, which are of value, into his garner, the heavenly glory, he will burn the chaff, the wicked, with unquenchable fire. They are now like chaff, driven and carried about with every wind of doctrine, with divers and strange doctrines, and entertain every light and airy notion; and are easily drawn aside and carried away by the force of their own lusts, and with every temptation of Satan, who works effectually in then: and particularly they are like chaff before the wind of terrible judgments and calamities in this life, and of the awful judgment hereafter, when they will be driven away from the presence of the Lord into everlasting destruction. The metaphor is often used in this sense; (see <182117>Job 21:17 <231713>Isaiah 17:13,14 29:3 <281303>Hosea 13:3); and denotes the secret, sudden, sure, and easy ruin of the ungodly, which comes upon them like a whirlwind, in an instant, which they cannot avoid; and they can no more stand before God and against him, than chaff before the wind. It follows,

Ver. 5. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, etc.] Neither in temporal judgment, when God comes forth in a way of wrath and sore displeasure; for who can stand before him when he is angry? what are chaff and stubble, thorns and briers, to consuming fire? nor in the last and great day of judgment, so the Targum and Kimchi interpret the words; for that day will burn like an oven the wicked, who will be as stubble, and leave neither root nor branch, (<390401>Malachi 4:1): when the great day of the Lamb’s wrath is come, who will be able to stand? (<450616>Romans 6:16,17); there will be no standing for the wicked when he appears; they will all stand before the judgment seat of Christ, to take their trial and hear their sentence, (<470510>2 Corinthians 5:10); but they shall not stand in the same place with the righteous, not at Christ’s right hand, but at his left; they shall not stand with an holy confidence, with intrepidity, and without shame, as the blessed man will; they will not stand, but fall in judgment; they will not be acquitted and discharged, but be condemned to everlasting punishment, (<402530>Matthew 25:30); and this sense the Targum on the place expresses, “the ungodly shall not be justified in the great day”; the Vulgate Latin and Septuagint versions render the words, “the ungodly shall not rise again in judgment”; from whence some have concluded there will be no resurrection of the wicked: which seems, to be the sense of Kimchi and other Jewish writers; who assert that the souls of the wicked perish with their bodies at death, and that the latter rise not, contrary to (<211207>Ecclesiastes 12:7 <271202>Daniel 12:2); but that the wicked will, rise may be concluded from the justice of God, which requires that the bodies which have sinned should be punished; and from the general judgment of good and bad, and from the account of the punishment of hell, which will be inflicted on the body as well as on the soul: besides, the contrary doctrine is a licentious one, and is calculated to harden wicked men in their sins, and is directly repugnant to the assertions of Christ, and the Apostle Paul, (<430528>John 5:28,29 <442415>Acts 24:15); nor has it any foundation in this text, even admitting such a version; which does not absolutely affirm that the wicked shall not rise again, but that they shall not rise again in, judgment, in the first resurrection, the resurrection of the just, and so as to be acquitted and discharged, but they shall rise to the resurrection of damnation;

nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous; who are made righteous by the righteousness of Christ imputed to them, and have a work of grace and holiness wrought in them; and who, under the influence of grace, live soberly, righteously, and godly; these are the same with the blessed man, (<190101>Psalm 1:1); and who at the day of judgment will be perfectly holy, and free from all sin; and they will be all gathered together by the holy angels; the dead saints will be raised, the living ones will be changed, and both will be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, and will make up one general assembly and church of the firstborn; and among these, and in this assembly, there will not be a single sinner; there are now sinners in Zion, foolish virgins with the wise, chaff and tares among Christ’s wheat, and wolves and goats among his sheep; but then there will be an eternal separation, and no mixing together any more.

Ver. 6. For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, etc.] The way in which he walks by faith, which is in Jesus Christ; the way in which he goes to the Father, and carries to him his sacrifices of prayer and praise, which meet with acceptance through him; the way in which he seeks for and expects justification, pardon, and salvation, namely, through the blood, righteousness, and sacrifice of Christ: and also it may denote his course, his walk and conversation; for the righteous man is a follower of God, he takes up the cross and follows after Christ: he walks not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, according to the rule of the word, and as becomes the Gospel of Christ: and this way of his in every sense the Lord “knows”; not merely as he is omniscient, for by his omniscience his eyes are upon the ways of all men; he knows the way of the wicked as well as the way of the righteous; but the sense is, that the Lord approves of and is well pleased with his way of faith and holiness; he knows this person, so as to love him and take delight and pleasure in him; his countenance beholds him with a smile; he is well pleased with him in Christ and for his sake, on whose account he has respect to him and to his offerings, to his service and duty, to his ways and works; and hence he is a blessed man, is in a happy situation, and all he does prospers, for he and his ways please the Lord: and hence also it is that neither he nor his way shall perish; the way he is in leads to everlasting life, and he being a follower of the Lord in a way pleasing to him, he shall never perish, but have eternal life; but the way of the ungodly shall perish; for his way is a wicked way, the way of sinners, (<190101>Psalm 1:1); it leads to destruction and death, and all that walk in it shall perish; for if is a way the Lord knows not, does not approve of, he abhors it; wherefore the man that continues in it will be unhappy, wretched, and miserable to all eternity. These last words therefore show the reason of the happiness of one sort of men, and the unhappiness of the other; and prove and confirm the same: the Lord knows, approves of, loves, and delights in the one; he does not approve of and delight in the other.

PSALM 2

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 2

This psalm is the second in order, and so it is called in (<441333>Acts 13:33); which shows that the book of Psalms was in the same form in the apostles' days as now, and as it ever had been; and though it is without a title, yet certain it is that it is a psalm of David, since the twelve apostles of Christ with one voice ascribe it to him, in which no doubt they the generally received sense of the Jewish (<440424>Acts 4:24,25); and the Messiah is the subject of and that it is a prophecy concerning him, his person, office, and kingdom, appears from the express mention of the Lord's Anointed, or Messiah, in his being set as King over Zion, notwithstanding the opposition made against him; from the person spoken of being called the Son of God, and that in such sense as angels and men are not, and therefore cannot belong to any creature; and from his having so large an inheritance, and such power over the Heathen; and from the reverence, service, and obedience due to him from the kings and judges of the earth; and from the trust and confidence which is to be put in him, which ought not to be placed but in a divine Person; and more especially this appears from several passages cited out of it in the New Testament, and applied to the Messiah, (<440425>Acts 4:25-27 13:33 <580105>Hebrews 1:5 5:5), to which may be added, that the ancient Jewish doctors interpreted this psalm of the Messiah [f18]; and some of the modern ones own that it may be understood either of David or of the Messiah, and that some things are clearer of the Messiah than of David [f19]; and some particular passages in it are applied to him both by ancient and later writers among the Jews, as (<190201>Psalm 2:1,2), "Why do the Heathen rage", etc. [f20]; (<190206>Psalm 2:6), "I have set", etc. [f21]; (<190207>Psalm 2:7), "I will declare the decree", etc. [f22], and (<190208>Psalm 2:8), "Ask of me", etc. [f23]; and we may very safely interpret the whole of him.

Ver. 1. Why do the Heathen rage, etc.] Or "the nations"; which some understand of the Jews, who are so called, (<011705>Genesis 17:5 <260203>Ezekiel 2:3 *marg); because of their various tribes; and of their rage against the Messiah there have been many instances; as when they gnashed upon him with their teeth, and at several times took up stones to stone him, and cried out in a most furious and wrathful manner, crucify him, crucify him, (<420428>Luke 4:28,29 <430859>John 8:59 10:31 19:6,15); though it is best to interpret it of the Gentiles, as the apostles seem to do in (<440427>Acts 4:27). The Hebrew word translated "rage" is by one Jewish writer [f24] explained by wrbj, "associate" or "meet together"; and which is often the sense of the word in the Syriac and Chaldee languages, in which it is more used; and another [f25] says, that it is expressive of "gathering together, and of a multitude"; it intends a tumultuous gathering together, as is that of a mob, with great confusion and noise [f26]; and so the Gentiles, the Roman soldiers, gathered together, even multitudes of them, and came out with Judas at the head of them, with swords and staves, to apprehend Christ and bring him to the chief priests and elders, (<402647>Matthew 26:47); these assembled together in Pilate's hall, when Christ was condemned to be crucified, and insulted him in a most rude and shocking manner, (<402602>Matthew 26:2 27:22,23,26); and many are the instances of the Gentiles rising in mobs, and appearing in riotous assemblies, making tumults and uproars against the apostles to oppose them, and the spread of the Gospel by them; to which they were sometimes instigated by the unbelieving Jews, and sometimes by their own worldly interest; (see <441350>Acts 13:50 14:5,19 17:5,6 19:23-32), to which may be added, as instances of this tumult and rage, the violent persecutions both of the Pagan emperors and of the Papists, which last are called Gentiles as well as the other; for this respects the kingdom of Christ, or the Gospel dispensations, from the beginning to the end; and the people imagine a vain thing? by "the people" are meant the people of Israel, who were once God's peculiar people, and who were distinguished by him with peculiar favours above all others, and in whom this prophecy has been remarkably fulfilled; they imagine it and meditated a vain thing when they thought the Messiah would be a temporal King, and set up a kingdom, on earth in great worldly splendour and glory, and rejected Jesus, the true Messiah, because he did not answer to these their carnal imaginations; they meditated a vain thing when they sought to take away the good name and reputation of Christ, by fixing opprobrious names and injurious charges upon him, for Wisdom has been justified of her children, (<401119>Matthew 11:19 <420735>Luke 7:35); and so they did when they meditated his death, with those vain hopes that he should die and his name perish, and should lie down in the grave and never rise more, (<194105>Psalm 41:5,6,8); for he not only rose from the dead, but his name was more famous after his death than before; they imagined a vain thing when they took so much precaution to prevent the disciples stealing his body out of the sepulchre, and giving out that he was risen from the dead, and more especially when he was risen, to hire the soldiers to tell a lie in order to stifle and discredit the report of it; they meditated vain things when they attempted to oppose the apostles, and hinder the preaching of the Gospel by them, which they often did, as the Acts of the Apostles testify; and it was after one of these attempts that the apostles, in their address to God, made use of this very passage of Scripture, (<440402>Acts 4:2,3,17,18,24,25); and they still meditate a vain thing in that they imagine Jesus of Nazareth is not the Messiah, and that the Messiah is not yet come; and in that they are expecting and looking for him. Now the Psalmist, or the Holy Ghost by him, asks "why" all this? what should move the Gentiles and the Jews to so much rage, tumult, and opposition against an holy and innocent person, and who went about doing good as he did? what end they could have in it, or serve by it? and how they could expect to succeed? what would all their rage and not, and vain imagination, signify? it is strongly suggested hereby that it would all be in vain and to no purpose, as well as what follows.

Ver. 2. The kings of the earth set themselves, etc.] Rose and stood up in great wrath and fury, and presented themselves in an hostile manner, and opposed the Messiah: as Herod the great, king of Judea, who very early bestirred himself, and sought to take away the life of Jesus in his infancy; and Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee, who is called a king, (<410614>Mark 6:14); who with his men of war mocked him, and set him at nought; and Pontius Pilate, the governor of Judea, who represented the Roman emperor, and condemned him to death, (<402726>Matthew 27:26); and all the kings of the earth ever since, who ever persecuted Christ in his members, and have set themselves with all their might to hinder the spread of his Gospel and the enlargement of his interest; and the rulers take counsel together; as did the Jewish sanhedrim, the great court of judicature among the Jews, the members of which were the rulers of the people, who frequently met together and consulted to take away the life of Christ: though it may also include all other governors and magistrates who have entered into schemes against the Lord, and against his Anointed, or Messiah, Christ: by "the Lord", or Jehovah, which is the great, the glorious, and incommunicable name of God, and is expressive of his eternal being and self-existence, and of his being the fountain of essence to all creatures, is meant God the Father; since he is distinguished from his Son, the Messiah, his anointed One, as Messiah and Christ signify; and who is so called, because he is anointed by God with the Holy Ghost, without measure, to the office of the Mediator, Prophet, Priest, and King; from whom the saints receive the anointing, which teacheth all things, and every grace of the Spirit in measure; and who, after his name, are called Christians. This name of the promised Redeemer was well known among the Jews, (<430141>John 1:41 4:25); and which they took from this passage, and from some others;

[saying], as follows:

Ver. 3. Let us break their bands asunder, etc.] These are not the words of the apostles, nor of the saints in Gospel times, encouraging one another, notwithstanding the rage and opposition of Jews and Gentiles against their Master and his interest, to break asunder the bands of wickedness, the idolatrous customs and practices of the Heathens, and to throw off the insupportable yoke of bondage, of Jewish traditions and ceremonies, (see <235806>Isaiah 58:6); but of the Heathen, the people, and kings of the earth, and rulers who, with one voice, say this and what follows, and cast away their cords from us; with relation to the Lord and his Anointed, whose laws, ordinances, and truths, they call “bands” and “cords”; so Arama interprets them of the law, and the commandments; or a “yoke”, as the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions render the last word; and the phrases in general express their irreverence of God and the Messiah, their rejection Christ and his religion; their non-subjection to him, and their refusal to have him to rule over them; and their disesteem and contempt of his Gospel, and of the ordinances of it, and of the laws and rules of his government in his churches: and also they show the wrong notion that carnal men have of these things that whereas Christ’s yoke is easy, and his burden light, (<401130>Matthew 11:30); his Gospel and the truths of it make men free from the slavery of sin and Satan, and from a spirit of bondage, (<450815>Romans 8:15); and true Gospel liberty consists in an observance of his commands and ordinances; yet they look upon these things as bands and cords, as fetters and shackles, as so many restraints upon their liberty, which are not to be bore: when, on the other hand, they promise themselves liberty in a disengagement from them, and in the enjoyment of their own lusts and sinful pleasures; whereas thereby they are brought into bondage, and become the servants of corruption.

Some render it “cast away from him” [f27]; either from Christ, or everyone from himself.

Ver. 4. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, etc.] At the rage and tumult of the Heathen; at the vain imaginations of the people; at the opposition of the kings of the earth; at the mad counsel of the rulers, against him and his Messiah; and at their proposal to one another to throw off the yoke and government of them both. This is a periphrasis of God, “who dwells in the heavens”, and sits there enthroned; though he is not included and comprehended in them, but is everywhere; and his being there is mentioned in opposition to the kings of the earth, and the people in it; and to show the vast distance there is between them, and how they are as nothing to him, (<234001>Isaiah 40:1,5,17,22) (<180418>Job 4:18); and how vain and fruitless their attempts must be against him and his Messiah: and his sitting there still and quiet, serene and undisturbed, is opposed to the running to and fro, and the tumultuous and riotous assembling of the Heathen. Laughing is ascribed unto him, according to the language of men, as the Jewish writers speak [f28], by an anthropopathy; in the same sense as he is said to repent and grieve, (<010606>Genesis 6:6); and expresses his security from all their attempts, (<180522>Job 5:22 41:29); and the contempt he has them in, and the certain punishment of them, and the aggravation of it; who will not only then laugh at them himself, but expose them to the laughter and scorn of others, (<200126>Proverbs 1:26);

the Lord shall have them in derision; which is a repetition of the same thing in other words; and is made partly to show the certainty of their disappointment and ruin, and partly to explain who is meant by him that sits in the heavens. The Targum calls him, “the Word of the Lord”; and Alshech interprets it of the Shechinah.

Ver. 5. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, etc.] Or, “and he shall speak to them”; so Noldius: that is, the Lord that sits in the heavens, and laughs, and has the Heathen, the people, the kings and rulers in derision, shall not only silently despise their furious and concerted opposition to him and his Messiah, but shall at last speak out unto them, not in his word, but in his providences; and not in love, as to his own people, when he chastises them, but in great wrath, inflicting severe and just punishment. It seems to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem, after the crucifixion, sufferings, death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ; and after the pouring out of the Spirit, and when the Gospel, to their great mortification, had got ground, and made large advances in the Gentile world; and vex them in his sore displeasure; or "in the heat of his anger"[f29]: (see <052924>Deuteronomy 29:24), where the Ghost speaks of the same people, and of the same ruin and destruction of them at the same time, as here: and as the carrying of the Jews captive into Babylon is called their vexation, (<230901>Isaiah 9:1); much more may their destruction by the Romans; then it was they howled for vexation of spirit, (<236514>Isaiah 65:14); the wrath of God came upon them to the uttermost; they were filled with trouble and confusion, with terror and consternation, as the word[f30] used signifies; they were vexed to see themselves straitened and pent in on every side by the Roman armies, oppressed with famine and internal divisions, rapine and murder; to see their temple profaned and burnt, their city plundered and destroyed, and themselves taken and carried captive: and what most of all vexed them was, that their attempts against Jesus of Nazareth, the true Messiah, were fruitless; and that, notwithstanding all their opposition to him, his name was famous, his interest increased, his kingdom was enlarged, through the spread of his Gospel among the Gentiles; and what Jehovah in (<190206>Psalm 2:6) says, though it is to the comfort of his people, was to their terror and vexation.

Ver. 6. Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion.] Or, "behold, I have set", etc. so Noldius by Zion is meant the church of God, especially under the Gospel dispensation; (see <581222>Hebrews 12:22 <661401>Revelation 14:1); so called, because, as Zion was, it is the object of God's love and choice, the place of his habitation and residence; where divine worship is observed, and the word and ordinances of God administered; and where the Lord distributes his blessings of grace; and which is the perfection of beauty, through Christ's comeliness put upon her; and will be the joy of the whole earth: it is strongly fortified by the power and grace of God, and is immovable and impregnable, being built on Christ, the Rock of ages; and, like Zion, it is an high hill, eminent and visible; and more especially will be so when the mountain of the Lord's house is established upon the tops of the mountains: and it is an Holy One, through the presence and worship of God in it, and the sanctification of his Spirit. And over this hill, the church, Christ is King; he is King of saints, and is acknowledged by them; and it is for their great safety and security, their joy, comfort, and happiness, that he is set over them: he is called by his Father "my King", because he who is King of Zion is his Anointed, as in (<190202>Psalm 2:2); and his Son, his begotten Son, as in (<190207>Psalm 2:7); his firstborn, his fellow and equal; and because he is his as King; not that he is King over him, for his Father is greater than he, as man and Mediator, or with respect to his office capacity, in which he is to be considered as King; and therefore he is rather King under him: but he is a King of his setting up, and therefore called his; he has appointed him his kingdom, given him the throne of his father David; put a crown of pure gold on his head, and crowned him with glory and honour, and the sceptre of righteousness in his hand, and has given him a name above every name. He did not make himself a King, nor was he made so by men; but he was set up, or "anointed" by God the Father, as the word [f31] here used signifies; and may refer either to the inauguration of Christ into his kingly office, and his investiture with it from all eternity, as in (<200823>Proverbs 8:23), where the same word is used as here; and anointing with oil being a ceremony performed at the instalment of kings into their office, the phrase is used for the thing itself: or rather, since Christ was anointed with the Holy Ghost in the human nature, at his incarnation and baptism, and especially at the time of his ascension, when he was made or declared to be LORD and CHRIST; this may refer to the time when he, as the ascended Lord and King, gave gifts to men, to his apostles, and qualified them in an extraordinary manner to carry his Gospel into the Gentile world, and spread it there, as they did with success; whereby his kingdom became more visible and glorious, to the great vexation of the Jews; for, in spite of all their opposition, Christ being set by his Father King over his church and people, continued so, and his kingdom was every day more and more enlarged, to their great mortification.

Ver. 7. I will declare the decree, etc.] These are the words of Jehovah's Anointed and King, exercising his kingly office, according to the decree and commandment of the Father: for these words refer not to the following, concerning the generation of the Son, which does not depend on the decree and arbitrary will of God, but is from his nature; but these words relate to what go before. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Oriental versions, place this clause at the end of (<190206>Psalm 2:6); some render it, "declaring his commandment", or "the commandment of the Lord"; the laws that he would have observed, both by him and by the subjects of his kingdom. The Syriac and Arabic versions, "that he might declare the commandment of the Lord"; as if this was the end of his being appointed King. The word qj is differently rendered; by many, "the decree", the purpose of God concerning Christ as Mediator, and the salvation of his people by him; and who so fit to declare this as he who lay in the bosom of the Father, and was privy to all his secret thoughts and designs, and in when the eternal purpose was purposed. (<430118>John 1:18 <490311>Ephesians 3:11). The Chaldee paraphrase renders it by amyq, "the covenant", the everlasting covenant of grace; and who so proper to declare this as he with whom the covenant was made, and who is the covenant itself, in whom all the blessings and promises of it are, and the messenger of it. (<390301>Malachi 3:1). It may not be unfitly applied to the Gospel, which is the sum and substance of both the decree and covenant of God; it is what was ordained before the world for our glory. This Christ was appointed to preach, and did declare it in the great congregation; the same with the counsel of God, (<442027>Acts 20:27). The words will bear to be rendered, "I will declare" pj la "to the command" [f32]; or according to the order and rule prescribed by Jehovah, without adding to it or taking from it: agreeably to which he executed his office as King, and Prophet also. The doctrine was not his own, but his Father's he preached; he spake not of himself, but as he taught and enjoined him; the Father gave him commandment what he should say and speak, (<431249>John 12:49); and he kept close to it, as he here says he would: and he ruled in his name, and by his authority, according to the law of his office; and which might be depended upon from the dignity of his person, which qualified him both for his kingly and prophetic offices, expressed in the following words:

the Lord hath said unto me, thou [art] my Son; not by creation, as angels and men; nor by adoption, as saints; nor by office, as civil magistrates; nor on account of his incarnation or resurrection; nor because of the great love of God unto him; but in such a way of filiation as cannot be said of any creature nor of any other, (<580105>Hebrews 1:5); He is the true, proper, natural, and eternal Son of God, and as such declared, owned, and acknowledged by Jehovah the Father, as in these words; the foundation of which relation lies in what follows:

this day have I begotten thee; which act of begetting refers not to the nature, nor to the office, but the person of Christ; not to his nature, not to his divine nature, which is common with the Father and Spirit; wherefore if his was begotten, theirs must be also: much less to his human nature, in which he is never said to be begotten, but always to be made, and with respect to which he is without father: nor to his office as Mediator, in which he is not a Son, but a servant; besides, he was a Son previous to his being Prophet, Priest, and King; and his office is not the foundation of his sonship, but his sonship is the foundation of his office; or by which that is supported, and which fits him for the performance of it: but it has respect to his person; for, as in human generation, person begets person, and like begets like, so in divine generation; but care must be taken to remove all imperfection from it, such as divisibility and multiplication of essence, priority and posteriority, dependence, and the like: nor can the "modus" or manner of it be conceived or explained by us. The date of it, "today", designs eternity, as in (<234313>Isaiah 43:13), which is one continued day, an everlasting now. And this may be applied to any time and case in which Christ is declared to be the Son of God; as at his incarnation, his baptism, and transfiguration upon the mount, and his resurrection from the dead, as it is in (<441333>Acts 13:33); because then he was declared to be the Son of God with power, (<450104>Romans 1:4); and to his ascension into heaven, where he was made Lord and Christ, and his divine sonship more manifestly appeared; which seems to be the time and case more especially referred to here, if it be compared with (<580103>Hebrews 1:3-5).

Ver. 8. Ask of me, etc.] Jehovah is either here again introduced speaking, or these words are a continuation of the Son's account of what his Father said unto him; which do not suppose any superiority in the one, or inferiority in the other; but are only expressive of the Father's great respect and affection for his Son, as such a way of speaking among men shows, (<170503>Esther 5:3 <401407>Matthew 14:7); and of the great interest the Son had in his Father, who could ask nothing but he had it; and shows the perfect harmony, agreement, and unity between them: (see <110305>1 Kings 3:5); Christ, in the council and covenant of grace and peace, asked many things of his Father, which were granted; he asked for the persons of all the elect to be his bride and spouse, and his heart's desire was given him, and the request of his lips was not withheld from him: he asked for all the blessings of grace for them; for spiritual life here, and eternal life hereafter; and all were given him, and put into his hands for them, (<192002>Psalm 20:2-4); and here it is promised him, and I shall give [thee] the Heathen [for] thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth [for] thy possession; by "the Heathen", and "the uttermost parts of the earth", are meant God's elect among the Gentiles, and who live in the distant parts of the world; which are Christ's other sheep, the Father has given to him as his portion, and whom he has made his care and charge: as if it was not enough that he should be King of Zion, or have the government over his chosen ones among the Jews, he commits into his hands the Gentiles also; (see <234906>Isaiah 49:6); and these are given him as his inheritance and possession, as his portion, to be enjoyed by him; and who esteems them as such, and reckons them a goodly heritage, and a peculiar treasure, his jewels, and the apple of his eye. These words respect the calling of the Gentiles under the Gospel dispensation; and the amplitude of Christ’s kingdom in all the earth, which shall be from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron, etc.] Not his inheritance and possession among the Gentiles, the chosen ones given him by the Father; these he delights in, takes care of, protects, and preserves: but the stubborn and rebellious ones among the Heathen, and in each of the parts of the world, who will not have him to reign over them; who treat his person with contempt, reject his government, disobey his Gospel, and despise his commands; towards these Christ will use severity, and will exert his power and break them in pieces. The Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions, render it, “shall feed” or “rule them”; and so it is cited in (<660227>Revelation 2:27 12:5 19:15); and applied to Christ, the Word of God, and King of kings; and must be understood, as it is in those places, of the severity of his government over them, of the strictness of his justice, without the least display of mercy; and then the sense is the same with those versions which render it, “shall break them:” as the word used is interpreted by the Targum, and the Jewish commentators on the place; and which is confirmed by what follows:

thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter’s vessel; which is very easily done with a bar of iron; and, when it is done, the pieces can never be put together again: so that by the metaphor is signified the easy and irreparable ruin of the wicked; (see <233014>Isaiah 30:14 <241911>Jeremiah 19:11). The word signifies that they should be so crumbled into dust, that they should be scattered about as with the wind; which, so far as it relates to the Jews, was fulfilled in their destruction by the Romans, and will have its accomplishment in the antichristian nations at the latter day; (see <660226>Revelation 2:26,27).

Ver. 10. Be wise now therefore, O ye kings, etc.] This address is made not so much to the kings of the earth in David’s time, as to those who would be under the Gospel dispensation, and times of the Messiah; and particularly who would rise up, and set themselves against the Lord and his

Anointed, (<190202>Psalm 2:2); and with these are to be understood their subjects: for if they are to serve the Lord, and be subject to Christ, then much more those that are under them; and they are rather spoken to particularly, because their examples have great influence on those over whom they rule, whether for good or evil these are exhorted to be wise, or to act the wise part; for great men are not always wise; wisdom, riches, and honour, do not always go together; men may be in high places, and yet be of low understandings; however, they do not always act wisely, and particularly those kings did not, when they rose up and set themselves against the Lord and his Messiah; since such opposition must be fruitless, nor is there any counsel against the Lord. And we learn, from the connection of these words with the following, that the truest wisdom in kings and people is to fear God, be subject to Christ, and trust in him. The words are an inference from what goes before; "therefore", since Christ is set as King over Zion, and he is no other than the Son of God, and who has a power over all flesh; one part of the world is his inheritance and possession, and the other part he will in a little time break and dash to pieces; wherefore "now", under the Gospel dispensation, while it is today, and now is the accepted time and day of salvation, before the blow is given; act the wise part and leave off opposing, and become subject to so great and powerful a King; be instructed, ye judges of the earth; who are under kings, being appointed by them to hear causes and minister justice; they answer to the sanhedrim of the Jews; to the rulers in (<190202>Psalm 2:2). These are exhorted to receive instructions, not in things political and civil they may be well acquainted with; but in things religious and evangelical, in the worship of God, in the Gospel of Christ, and in his ordinances; for persons in such posts should not be above instruction in these things. The word may be rendered, "be ye chastised" or "corrected"[f33]; that is, suffer reproof, correction, and chastisement at the hand of God, whether by words or deeds; submit to it patiently, and receive instruction from it: for God sometimes reproves kings and princes of the earth, on account of their sins, and for the sake of his people, when they should learn righteousness; (see <19A514>Psalm 105:14,15 <232609>Isaiah 26:9).

Ver. 11. Serve the Lord with fear, etc.] Not the creature, neither more, nor besides, nor with the Creator; God and mammon cannot both be served; nor any fictitious and nominal deities, the idols of the Gentiles, who are not gods by nature; but the true Jehovah, the one and only Lord God, he only is to be worshipped and served, even Father, Son, and Spirit. Here it may be understood either of the Lord Christ, the Son of God, who is to be served by the kings and judges of the earth, he being King of kings, and Lord of lords; or rather of Jehovah the Father, since the Son seems to be distinguished from him in (<190212>Psalm 2:12): and the service these persons are called unto lies not in the discharge of any office in the church, as in preaching the word, which is serving God in the Gospel of his Son; and hence the ministers of the word are eminently called the servants of the most high God; for kings and judges are not required hereby to lay aside their crowns and sceptres, and leave their seats of justice, and become preachers of the Gospel; but in acting according to the will of God revealed in his word, and in the whole worship of him, both internal and external: and this is to be done "with fear", not with fear of man, nor with servile fear of God, but with a godly and filial fear, with a reverential affection for him, and in a way agreeable to his mind and will; with reverence and awe of him, without levity, carelessness, and negligence; and rejoice with trembling; some reference may be had to the joy in public worship, as at sacrifices and festivals, and the music in divine service under the law; and the singing of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs under the Gospel; and especially to the Gospel dispensation itself, which is a time of joy and rejoicing; the Gospel is good tidings of great joy; the kingdom of God is not in things external, but in joy in the Holy Ghost; and, above all, respect is had to a rejoicing in Christ Jesus, in his person, righteousness, and salvation: and which is consistent with "trembling"; not with a fearful looking for of judgment, but with modesty and humility; in which sense this word, when joined with "fear" as here, is used (<503512>Philippians 2:12), and stands opposed to pride, haughtiness, and arrogance; men should so rejoice in Christ as to have no confidence in the flesh, or assume any degree of glory to themselves, or have any rejoicing in themselves, but wholly in Christ, giving all the glory of what they have to him.

Ver. 12. Kiss the Son, etc.] The Son of God, spoken of in (<190207>Psalm 2:7); the word used is so rendered in (<203102>Proverbs 31:2); and comes from another which signifies to "choose", and to "purify", or "to be pure"; hence some render it "the elect" or "chosen One", or "the pure One" [f34]; and both agree with Christ, who is God's elect, chosen to be the Redeemer and Saviour of his people, and who is pure free from sin, original and actual. And whereas a kiss is a token of love among friends and relations, at meeting and parting, (<013311>Genesis 33:11 <080114>Ruth 1:14); it may here design the love and affection that is to be expressed to Christ, who is a most lovely object, and to be loved above all creatures and things; or, as it sometimes signifies, homage and subjection, (<091001>1 Samuel 10:1): and it is the custom of the Indians to this day for subjects to kiss their kings: it may here also denote the subjection of the kings and judges and others to Christ, who is Lord of all; or else, as it has been used in token of adoration and worship, (<183126>Job 31:26,27 <281302>Hosea 13:2); it may design the worship which is due to him from all ranks of creatures, angels and men, (<580106>Hebrews 1:6); and the honour which is to be given to him, as to the Father, (<430522>John 5:22); which shows the greatness and dignity of his person, and that he is the true God and eternal life: in the Talmud [f35] this is interpreted of the law, where it is said,

> "there is no r b but the law, according to (<190212>Psalm 2:12);"

which agrees with the Septuagint version;

lest he be angry; though he is a Lamb, he has wrath in him, and when the great day of his wrath comes in any form on earth, there is no standing before him; and how much less when he shall appear as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire; then kings and freemen will call to the rocks to fall upon them, and hide them from him;

and ye perish [from] the way; the Syriac version renders it "from his way", the Son's way; and the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions "from the righteous way"; and the Arabic version "from the way of righteousness"; or "as to the way", as others [f36], the good way; all to one sense; meaning that way of righteousness, salvation and eternal life by Jesus Christ, which being missed by persons, they are eternally lost and undone: some render it "because of the way" [f37]; that is, because of their sinful course of life; for the way of the ungodly shall perish itself, and therefore they that pursue it shall perish also: others render it "in the way" [f38]; and then the sense is, lest they perish in the midst of their course of sin, in their own evil way, they have chosen and delighted in, or, to use the words of Christ, "die in their sins", (<430821>John 8:21,24), and everlastingly perish; for this perishing is to be understood not of corporeal death, in which sense righteous men perish, but of everlasting destruction: or the word which is rendered "from the way" may be translated "suddenly" [f39], "immediately", or "straightway", and our English word "directly" is almost the same; and so may design the swift and sudden destruction of such persons who provoke the Son to wrath and anger; which sense is confirmed by what follows;

when his wrath is kindled but a little; either to a small degree, or but for a little while; for the least degree and duration of it are intolerable, and who then can dwell in everlasting burnings, or abide the devouring flames? or when it is kindled µwatp, “suddenly” [f40], in a moment, as Jarchi interprets it; and so sudden wrath brings sudden destruction;

blessed [are] all they that put their trust in him; not in horses and chariots, in riches and honours, in their own wisdom, strength, and righteousness; but in the Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, and who is truly and properly God; or otherwise faith and trust would not be required to be put in him: and happy are those who betake themselves to him as to their strong hold and place of defence; who look to him and believe in him for pardon, peace, righteousness, every supply of grace and eternal life; these are safe and secure in him, nor shall they want any good thing needful for them; and they have much peace, joy, and comfort here, and shall have more grace as they want it, and hereafter eternal glory and happiness.

PSALM 3

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 3

A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom his son

This is the first of the psalms that has a title, and is called a Psalm; the word for which, “mizmor”, comes from one which signifies to “cut” or “prune”[f41], as trees are lopped of their superfluous branches; showing this to be a composition of even feet, in proper metre, formed for the modulation of the voice, to some tune or musical instrument; and it is said to be “a psalm of David”, which may be rendered “a psalm for” or “to David”[f42], as if it was wrote by another for his use, and inscribed to him; or rather that it was given to him by the Holy Spirit, who was the author of it, though he was the penman. It is observed by some, that wherever the dative case is used in the title of the psalm, as it most frequently is, as such a psalm to David, or to Asaph, it may signify that it came from the Lord to him, or was divinely inspired; just as it is said, the word of the Lord came to the prophets; though some render it “a psalm concerning David”[f43], his troubles, his faith and security in God, his victory over his enemies, and salvation from the Lord. However, David was the composer of this psalm, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, occasioned by his flight from Absalom; who, having stolen away the hearts of the people of Israel, entered into a conspiracy with them to dethrone his father and place himself in his stead; and the people so increased continually with him, that David thought it advisable to flee from Jerusalem, (<101512>2 Samuel 15:12-14); and at the time of his flight, or after it, he penned this psalm on account of it, and as suitable to it. And now was fulfilled what God had said, by Nathan the prophet, should befall him, because of the affair of Bathsheba and Uriah; (see <101211>2 Samuel 12:11 16:21,22). David was an eminent type of Christ, and so he was in his troubles, and in these; as one of his sons conspired against him to dethrone him, and take away his life; so Judas, one of Christ’s disciples or children, for disciples were called children, his familiar friend, that did eat of his bread, lifted up his heel against him, and sought to betray him, and did; and who, though he knew the designs of Judas against him, and did not flee from him, but rather went to meet him, yet it is easy to observe that he took the same route from Jerusalem as David did. At this time he went over the brook Kidron, and to the mount of Olives; (see <431801>John 18:1 <402730>Matthew 27:30); compared with (<101523>2 Samuel 15:23,30); And indeed the whole psalm may be applied to Christ; and so as the second psalm sets forth the dignity of Christ's person, as the Son of God, and the stability and enlargement of his kingdom, notwithstanding the opposition made to him; this expresses his troubles from his enemies, his death and resurrection from the dead, his victory over his enemies, and the salvation he wrought out for his people. In short, it may be understood of David as the type, of Christ as the antitype, and of the people of God, being suited to their experiences, more or less, in all ages; and in this large and extensive way I shall choose to interpret it.

Ver. 1. Lord, how are they increased that trouble me? etc.] David's enemies increased in the conspiracy against him, (<101512>2 Samuel 15:12); the hearts of the men of Israel were after Absalom, and against him. Christ's enemies increased when Judas with a multitude came to take him; when the body of the common people cried out, Crucify him; when the assembly of the wicked enclosed him, and pierced his hands and his feet. And the enemies of God's people are many; the men of this world are against them; legions of devils oppose them; and they have swarms of sins in their own hearts; and all these give trouble. David's enemies troubled him; he wept as he went up the hill, to think that his own son should seek to destroy him; that his subjects, whom he had ruled so long with clemency, and had hazarded his person in war for their defence, and to protect them in their civil and religious rights, should rebel against him. Christ's enemies troubled him, when they bound and led him away as a malefactor; when they spit upon him, smote and buffeted him; when they scourged and crucified him, and mocked at him. The enemies of the saints are troublers of them; in the world, and from the men of it, they have tribulation; Satan's temptations give them much uneasiness and distress; and their indwelling sins cause them to cry out, "Oh wretched men that we are!" This address is made to the Lord, as the Lord God omniscient, who knew the case to be as it was, and who had a concern in it not being without his will, but according to it, he having foretold it, and as he who only could help out of it: and the psalmist delivers it in a complaining way, and in an expostulatory manner; reasoning the case why it should be so, what should be the reason of it, for what end and purpose it was; and as wondering at it, suggesting his own innocence, and how undeserving he was to be treated in such a way; many [are] they that rise up against me; many in quantity, and great in quality, great in the law, in wisdom, in riches, and in stature, as Jarchi interprets it; such as Ahithophel and others, who rose up against David in an hostile manner, to dispossess him of his kingdom, and to destroy his life. And many were they that rose up against Christ; the multitude came against him as a thief, with clubs and staves: the men of this world rise up against the saints with their tongues, and sometimes with open force and violence; Satan, like a roaring lion, seeks to devour them, and their own fleshly lusts war against them.

Ver. 2. Many [there be] which say of my soul, etc.] Or "to my soul" [f44], the following cutting words, which touched to the quick, reached his very heart, and like a sword pierced through it:

[there is] no help for him in God; or "no salvation" [f45]: neither in this world, nor in that which is to come, as Kimchi explains it. David's enemies looked upon his case to be desperate; that it was impossible he should ever extricate himself from it; yea, that God himself either could not or would not save him. And in like manner did the enemies of Christ say, when they had put him upon the cross; (see <402743>Matthew 27:43); and how frequent is it for the men of the world to represent the saints as in a damnable state! and to call them a damned set and generation of men, as if there was no salvation for them? and how often does Satan suggest unto them, that there is no hope for them, and they may as well indulge themselves in all sinful lusts and pleasures? and how often do their own unbelieving hearts say to them, that there is no salvation in Christ for them, though there is for others; and that they have no interest in the favour of God, and shall be eternally lost and perish? And this account is concluded with the word selah, which some take to be a musical note; and so the Septuagint render it διαθαλμα, which Suidas [f46] interprets the change of the song, of the note or tune of it; and the rather it may be thought to be so, since it is only used in this book of Psalms, and in the prayer of Habakkuk, which was set to a tune, and directed to the chief singer. Kimchi derives it from a root which signifies "to lift up", and supposes that it denotes and directs to an elevation, or straining of the voice, at the place where this word stands. Others understand it as a pause, a full stop for a while; and as a note of attention, either to something that is remarkably bad and distressing, as here; or remarkably good, and matter of rejoicing, as in (<190304>Psalm 3:4,8). Others consider it as an affirmation of the truth of anything, good or bad; and render it "verily", "truly", as, answering to "Amen"; so be it, so it is, or shall be; it is the truth of the thing: to this sense agrees Aben Ezra. But others render it "for ever", as the Chaldee paraphrase; and it is a tradition of the Jews[f47], that wherever it is said, "netzach", "selah", and "ed", there is no ceasing, it is for ever and ever; and so then, according to this rule, the sense of David's enemies is, that there was no help for him in God for ever. A very learned man[f48] has wrote a dissertation upon this word; in which he endeavours to prove, that it is a name of God, differently used, either in the vocative, genitive, and dative cases; as, O Selah, O God, or of God, or to God, etc. as the sense requires.

Ver. 3. But thou, O Lord, [art] a shield for me, etc.] Or "about me"[f49] protecting and defending me. David was a military man, and often alludes to military affairs; and borrows words from thence, expressive of his great security from the Lord; (see <191802>Psalm 18:2). So Jehovah the Father was a shield to Christ, in his infancy, from Herod's rage and fury; and afterwards from the insults of the Pharisees, and their attempts to take away his life before the time; and in his sufferings and death, so as that his faith and confidence in him were kept up, and he got the victory over sin, Satan, and the world; (see <192209>Psalm 22:9,10) (<235007>Isaiah 50:7-9). And the Lord is a shield unto all his people, (<011501>Genesis 15:1) (<198411>Psalm 84:11). They are kept by his power, and encompassed about with his favour, as with a shield; his veracity and his faithfulness in his promises, and his truth, are their shield and buckler: and especially his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, is the shield which faith makes use of, particularly his blood and righteousness, and salvation by him; which it holds up, and defends itself with, against the charges of the law, the accusations of conscience, and the temptations of Satan; and which are a security from the justice of God, and wrath to come;

my glory; who took David from the sheepfold, and made him king over Israel, and raised him to all the glory he had enjoyed; and in whom he gloried as his covenant God, and of whom he made his boast; and not of his strength, valour, wisdom, riches, and honour. So God the Father is the glory of Christ, the glorifier of him, by supporting him under his sufferings, raising him from the dead, and setting him at his own right hand, where he is crowned with glory and honour: he is the glory of his people, in whom they glory, and by whom they are called to eternal glory; and who will give it to them, and reveal it in them, even an eternal weight of it, which the sufferings of this life are not worthy to be compared unto;

and the lifter up mine head; such as the helmet is: the Lord was lifter up of David’s head when he brought him to the throne, and afterwards gave him victory over his enemies; for so the phrase of lifting up the head signifies; (see <122527>2 Kings 25:27 <192706>Psalm 27:6). And he was the lifter up of Christ’s head when he raised him from the dead; and exalted him, both with and at his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, and gave him a name above every name. And he is the lifter up of the heads of his people in conversion, when he raises them from a low estate, and sets them among princes to inherit the throne of glory; and when he gives them comfort, peace, and joy, which causes them to lift up their heads; whereas in sorrow, and mourning, and distress, the head is bowed down like a bulrush, (<235805>Isaiah 58:5); and when he gives them boldness and confidence, as at the throne of grace now, through the sprinkling of the blood of Christ upon them; so at the bar of judgment hereafter, through the righteousness of Christ put upon them, as that they shall not be ashamed nor confounded; (see <422128>Luke 21:28 <620228>1 John 2:28); and he will be the lifter up of their heads in the resurrection morn, and when they shall appear with Christ in glory.

Ver. 4. I cried unto the Lord with my voice, etc.] The experience which the psalmist had of being heard in prayer, was what gave great encouragement to his faith, as to his interest in God and salvation by him, when his enemies were so increased about him; for crying here is to be understood of prayer, as it is often used in this book of Psalms: and so the Targum renders it, “I prayed”; and this designs vocal prayer. Sometimes there is a crying in prayer and no voice heard, as it is said of Moses, (<021415>Exodus 14:15); and was the case of Hannah, (<090113>1 Samuel 1:13); but this was with a voice, and a loud one, as in (<195517>Psalm 55:17); denoting ardour, fervency, and importunity; and such prayer avails much with God. The object addressed in prayer is the Lord, the God of his life, and who was able to save him, and supply all his wants; and he heard me out of his holy hill; either out of the church, the holy hill of Zion, (<190206>Psalm 2:6); where David prayed and God granted his presence, and gave an answer to his prayers; or out from the mercy seat and ark, which was a type of the propitiatory, Christ, and which David had brought to his own city, the hill of Zion; or from heaven, the habitation of God’s holiness: David was a man of prayer, and he was often heard and answered by God. And this also is true of Christ, he offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears to God (<580507>Hebrews 5:7), that was able to save him; and he was heard by him, yea, the Father always heard him: and God is a God hearing and answering the prayers of his people, sooner or later: sometimes before, sometimes at, and sometimes after their crying to him.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on "<190302>Psalm 3:2").

Ver. 5. I laid me down and slept, etc.] After the battle was over between Absalom's men and his, says Aben Ezra; but rather this was in the midst of his trouble and distress, since he afterwards prays for salvation: and this sleep was either, as Jarchi observes, through his heart being overwhelmed with grief; for there have been instances of persons sleeping through sorrow, as Elijah, Jonah, and the disciples of Christ, (<111904>1 Kings 19:4,5 Jon 1:3 <422245>Luke 22:45); or rather this is expressive of the calmness and serenity of his mind amidst his troubles; he laid himself down in peace, and slept quietly and comfortably; he did not lose a night's rest, his sleep was sweet unto him; which was a blessing of life from the Lord that everyone does not enjoy; (see <19C702>Psalm 127:2);

I awakened; in the morning, alive and cheerful, Some lay themselves down and never awake more, as Sisera the captain of Jabin's army, and Ishbosheth the son of Saul; and this might have been David's case, considering the circumstances he was in: and others, through perplexing thoughts and cares, or pains of body, or uneasy dreams, rise fatigued and distressed; but David arose in good health of body, and tranquillity of mind, and comfortably refreshed;

for the Lord sustained me; the psalmist committed himself to the care and protection of God; he laid himself down in his arms, and there slept in safety; the Lord preserved him, who is Israel's keeper, that neither slumbers nor sleeps: and he rose in health and cheerfulness in the morning, supported by his right hand. This shows, that lying down to sleep, when in such circumstances, and awaking with cheerfulness, were not owing to rashness, stupidity, and insensibility, but to divine supports. These words may be interpreted, as they are by some of the ancients, of the death of Christ, and of his resurrection from the dead by the power of God; death is often expressed by sleep, and the resurrection of the dead by an awaking out of sleep, (<271202>Daniel 12:2) (<232619>Isaiah 26:19); and Christ's death being signified by lying down and sleeping, may denote both the voluntariness of it, that he laid down his life freely and willingly; and his short continuance under the power of death, it was but like a night’s sleep; and his resurrection from the dead, being expressed by an awaking through the Lord’s sustaining him, shows that it was by the power of God, even the exceeding greatness of his power: and the whole of this may be applied to the case and state of the saints and people of God, who at times have rest and peace amidst their enemies; though they have tribulation in the world, they have peace in Christ; and notwithstanding the temptations of Satan, and the corruptions of their own hearts, they have joy and comfort through believing in Christ; the Lord sustains them with precious promises, and supports them with the discoveries of his love, and upholds them with the right hand of his righteousness.

Ver. 6. I will not be afraid of ten thousands of the people, etc.] David was a man of courage from his youth; the instances of his attacking the lion and the bear, when he kept his father’s sheep, his engaging with Goliath, and his military exploits, show it; and though there were now many thousands up in arms against him, and his own son at the head of them; all the tribes of Israel were revolting from him, and he was only attended with a few of his friends, yet he was not dismayed; for that he refers to this insurrection appears by what follows, that have set [themselves] against me round about; and this was owing not to himself; but to the Lord’s sustaining of him; (see <19270>Psalm 27:1-3); and such courage and greatness of soul did his antitype the Messiah express, and to a greater degree, when Judas, with his band of soldiers, and the multitude with clubs and staves, entered the garden to apprehend him; and when the prince of this world was marching towards him, and when he was engaged with all the powers of darkness, and when the sorrows of death compassed him about, yet he failed not, nor was he discouraged: and something of this spirit appears in true believers, When they are in the exercise of faith, have the presence of God, and the discoveries of his love; they are then not afraid what man can do unto them; nor are they afraid of devils themselves, but wrestle against them; nor of any nor all their enemies, they having victory over them, given by God through Christ.

Ver. 7. Arise, O Lord; save me, O my God, etc.] God sometimes, in the apprehension of his people, seems to be as if he was asleep: when he does not appear to them and for them, and does not exert his power on their behalf, then they call to him to awake and arise; (see <19442>Psalm 44:23); and it may be some respect is had to the words of Moses when the ark set forward, (<04103>Numbers 10:35); and it may be observed, that though David enjoyed so much peace and tranquillity of mind, and was in such high spirits as not to be afraid of ten thousands of men, yet he did not neglect the right means of deliverance and safety, prayer to God, who he knew was his God; and he addresses him as such, and uses his covenant interest in him, as an argument with him to arise and save him from his enemies, who was able to do it, and to whom salvation belongs: so Christ, his antitype, prayed to God as his God to save him, and was heard by him in like manner; so the saints call upon God in a day of trouble, cry to him in their distresses, to be delivered out of them; for thou hast smitten all mine enemies [upon] the cheekbone; to smite anyone upon the cheek is reckoned reproachful, and is casting contempt upon them; (see <181610>Job 16:10) and the sense is, that God had poured contempt upon his enemies in time past, and had brought them to shame and confusion: hence he puts up the above prayer as a prayer of faith for salvation, founded on past experience of God’s goodness; he prayed that his God would arise and save him, and he believed he would because he had hitherto appeared for him, and against his enemies;

thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly; who were like to beasts of prey, whose strength lies in their teeth, whereby they do the mischief they do; and the breaking of their teeth signifies the taking away from them the power of hurting, and refers to the victories which God had given David over the Philistines, Edomites, Syrians, and others; and maybe applied to Christ, and be expressive of sin, Satan, the world, and death, being overcome and abolished by him, and of the victory which the saints have through him over the same enemies.

Ver. 8. Salvation [belongeth] unto the Lord, etc.] As the author of it; temporal salvation is of him; all the deliverances of the saints out of their troubles are from him; and to him is owing their spiritual and eternal salvation; this belongs to Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit: Jehovah the Father resolved upon it, chose men to it from everlasting, contrived the scheme of it in his infinite wisdom, made a covenant with his Son, in which he secured it, and appointed him to be the author of it, and sent him in the fulness of time to effect it; and Christ the Son of God, being qualified for it, being mighty to save, came into this world for that purpose, and is become the author of eternal salvation; his own arm has brought it to him, though there were many difficulties in the way; such as fulfilling the law, satisfying justice, making an end of sin, grappling with all the powers of darkness, and undergoing an accursed death: and the Spirit of God, he makes men sensible of their need of this salvation; he brings it near to them, and works faith in them to lay hold upon it, and shows them their interest in it; and in consequence of all this the glory of salvation belongs to the Lord, Father, Son, and Spirit, and should be given to the Father as the contriver of it, to the Son as the author of it, and to the Spirit as the applier of it; (see <66710>Revelation 7:10);

thy blessing [is] upon thy people; or it may be considered prayer wise, let “thy blessing [be] upon thy people” [f50]; either upon those that were on the side of David, or on those, as others interpret it, who had imprudently joined themselves to Absalom; which latter sense, if right, shows in what a divine frame and disposition of mind the psalmist was, to pray for his enemies: or the words are an assertion, that the blessing of the Lord was come upon his covenant people, and does descend upon them as they are called by grace; even all spiritual blessings, the blessings of a justifying righteousness, of pardon of sin, of reconciliation and peace by the blood of Christ, of adoption, and of eternal life; the blessing of grace, and the blessing of glory.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

PSALM 4

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 4

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, a Psalm of David

This psalm is inscribed “to the chief musician”, or “conqueror” [f51]: who excelled others in the art of music, and carried the glory from them; who was very skilful, and instructed others in it, and was the master of the song, as Chenaniah, (<131522>1 Chronicles 15:22,27); who set the tune, led on the psalm, and had the whole direction and management of it; and so the Jewish doctors [f52] generally understand it of one that presided over the rest of the musicians and singers; and to such an one was this psalm sent, to be sung in public worship: for the psalms of David were not composed for private use only, but for public service; and were committed into the hands and care of the chief of the singers, as Asaph and others; (see <131607>1 Chronicles 16:7); by whom they were preserved and transmitted to future ages for the use of the church, not only in the former but in the present dispensation. The Septuagint interpreters, and after them the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic versions, render it “unto the end”, or for ever; to this agrees the sense of R. Saadiah Gaon [f53], who says, as if it was jxnl, “for ever”; but the former sense is best, to understand it of the chief musician, or precentor, who is said to be “on neginoth”: the singular; “neginah”, is used in the title of (<196101>Psalm 61:1), and it is sometimes rendered “a song”, as in (<183009>Job 30:9) (<197706>Psalm 77:6); hence the Vulgate Latin version here renders it “in songs”; and the Septuagint renders it “in psalms”; and then the meaning is, that this person was the chief man that presided over the songs and psalms: though the Jewish writers [f54], for the most part, interpret it of a musical instrument so called; not such an one as was blown, as the pipe and trumpet, but what was played upon with the hand; (see <091616>1 Samuel 16:16,23 19:9); a stringed instrument, which was touched with the fingers as an harp, or struck with a quill or bow as a violin. And as there were various instruments of music used in the temple service, so there were persons set over them, some over one sort, and some over another; and this man presided over the instruments that were played with the hand: and it looks as if this psalm was to be sung to such an instrument, by its being inscribed and sent to him. Aben Ezra takes the word to be, “the beginning of a song”; and the Targum renders the whole, “to sing upon the chorus” or “dances”. It is called “a Psalm of David”, being written by him, under the inspiration of the Spirit of God; the occasion of it was Absalom’s rebellion; and it was written when he fled from him, as the preceding, as Kimchi thinks; but, according to Lightfoot and others, it was the rebellion of Sheba, (<102001>2 Samuel 20:1-22), though others refer it to the time of his distresses and persecutions by Saul; according to the Jewish Rabbins [f55], where there are the words ^wgynw jwxyn, as they are both in this title, the psalm belongs to future time, to the world to come, to the times of the Messiah.

> “this is a psalm of David, who gave it to one of the singers to sing it continually,”

Ver. 1. Hear me when I call, O God of my righteousness, etc.] Or, “my righteous God” [f56], who is righteous in his nature, ways, and works, the just Judge of the whole earth, who will do right; or “the vindicator of my righteousness”, as the Syriac version renders it; that is, of his innocence and uprightness, which the Lord knew and was a witness of: and since he was his covenant God, he doubted not but he would bring it forth as the light, and favour his righteous cause, and do him justice upon his enemies: or the psalmist addresses God in this manner, because he was the author of his righteousness, and was the justifier of him, by imputing the righteousness of his Son unto him. So Christ addresses his Father, (<431726>John 17:26); who he knew would justify him, and by whom he was justified as the surety of his people, when he, rose from the dead: and so the saints can draw nigh to God the Judge of all, through the righteousness of Christ; knowing that he is just, and the justifier of him that believes in Jesus; and that he is just and faithful to forgive their sins, and cleanse them from all unrighteousness, on account of his blood. The petition put up by the psalmist is, to be heard when he called, that is, to hear his prayer, as it is explained in the latter part of the verse: and God is a God hearing prayer; and so David, Christ, and all the saints, have found him to be: and the encouragement to pray to the Lord, in hope of being heard, arose from past experience of divine goodness; thou hast enlarged me [when I was] in distress; when he had like to have been killed by Saul casting a javelin at him; and when his house was watched by men that Saul set there, and he was let down through a window and escaped; and when he was shut in at Keilah, where Saul thought he had him safe; and at other times, to which he may here refer, as in (<191819>Psalm 18:19 31:8); and this may be applied to the Messiah, when in the garden, beset with sorrows, and an angel strengthened him; and when on the cross, surrounded by various enemies, whom he conquered; and when in death and the grave, from the pains and cords of which he was loosed, and set in a large place. And this agrees also with the experience of the saints; who, when in distress through sin, Satan, and the law, have been set free, through the Gospel proclaiming liberty to the captives to such enemies; and the opening of the prison to them that have been bound by them: and when they have been so shut up and straitened in themselves, that they could not come forth in the discharge of duty, and in the exercise of grace; through the Spirit of the Lord, who is a spirit of liberty, they have been enlarged in the duty of prayer and of praise, and in the exercise of faith and love; and their hearts have been enlarged through the discoveries of the love of God towards them, so that they have run cheerfully in the ways of his commandments; who also gives them largeness of heart, an increase of the knowledge of Christ, and of the love of God, and tills them with joy and peace in believing, and draws out the desires of their souls to his name, and the remembrance of him; have mercy upon me: the psalmist pleads no merit nor worthiness of his own, but applies to the grace and mercy of God; and sensible of his sin, both original and actual, he entreats a discovery of pardoning grace and mercy. The words may be rendered, “be gracious unto me”[f57], or “show me favour”; bestow the blessings of grace, grant larger measures of grace, and fresh supplies of it: and so all sensible sinners apply to God for mercy; and all the saints have recourse to him as the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, for every mercy, both temporal and spiritual. Nor is this unsuitable to the Messiah, as man and Mediator; with whom, God keeps his mercy for evermore, as the head and surety of his people, and upon whom, as man, the grace of God was; and who increased, as in stature, so in favour with God and man; and which, no doubt, was desirable by him; and hear my prayer: the same petition with that in the beginning of the verse; invocation and prayer being the same thing.

Ver. 2. O ye sons of men, etc.] Meaning great men, the nobles of Israel; and so the Jewish interpreters[f58] generally explain it; such as Ahithophel, and others, who were in the conspiracy with Absalom, (<101512>2 Samuel 15:12): and so they were the kings and princes of the earth, and the rulers of the Jewish sanhedrim, the chief priests and elders, who were the enemies of Christ; and such, generally speaking, have been the persecutors of the saints; these men of power and authority, of dignity and honour, and who were in high places, and boasted of their titles and grandeur, the psalmist addresses by way of expostulation in the following words;

how long [will ye turn] my glory into shame? Meaning either God, who was his glory, (<190303>Psalm 3:3); whom they reproached when they said there was no help for him in him; or his tongue, the instrument of praise, and the songs of praise he expressed by it, (<190708>Psalm 7:8); which they jeered and scoffed at: or rather his royal glory and majesty, which they attempted to vail by casting him down from his excellency, by dethroning him, and setting up Absalom in his room. So the Jews endeavoured to turn the glory of Christ into shame, which lay in his being the only begotten of the Father; by denying his sonship, by condemning him to death; because he said he was the Son of God; and by mocking at him under that character on the cross; and also by their spitting upon, buffeting, and crucifying the Lord of glory; by reproaching his Gospel, ministers, and people; and by not acknowledging him as the Messiah, and submitting to his righteousness. And wicked men do as much as in them lies to turn the glory of the saints into shame, by aspersing their character, taking away their good name and reputation among men; by reproaching and reviling them, and speaking all manner of evil of them; and by persecuting them in the most violent manner;

[how long] will ye love vanity; or “a vain thing”[f59]. Such as the placing of Absalom upon the throne, on which their hearts were set; and such was the vain imagination of the Jews, with which they pleased themselves, that Jesus should die, and his name perish; and such are all the attempts of wicked men to ruin and destroy the people and interest of Christ; for no weapon formed against them shall prosper;

[and] seek after leasing? Or “a lie”[f60]; or that which fails and deceives, as a lie does: and such were all the counsels and designs of the great men of Israel against David: and so the Jews may be said to seek after a lie, when they seek after another Messiah besides Jesus of Nazareth: for every other proves a “Bar Cozbi”, that is, the son of a lie; as the false Messiah in Adrian’s time was called by themselves. And so do all such as seek after and embrace false doctrines, errors, and heresies, and are given up to believe them. Now the psalmist suggests that these great men were obstinate, and continued in these sinful practices; and that in the issue all their efforts would be vain and fruitless; and which he further strengthens by observing to them what follows.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on "<190302>Psalm 3:2").

Ver. 3. But know, etc.] Take notice of it, consider it, be assured of the truth, of it; it may be depended upon as fact, that the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself: which may be understood of David himself, an holy good man; a man after God's own heart; whom the Lord chose, and in a marvellous manner separated from the rest of his brethren; took him from the sheepfold, and set him upon the throne of Israel, for the glory of his great name; and therefore the attempts of his enemies against him would be without success: and also of the Messiah, God's Holy One, whom he has chosen out from among the people to be their Saviour and Redeemer, to the glory of his grace; wherefore the work of the Lord has prospered in his hands: and likewise of all the saints, and of their election; which act is expressed by their being set apart, or separated from others, who are called the rest; and which is a marvellous act of grace: for the word may be rendered, "he hath wonderfully set apart" [f61]. It is an amazing instance of grace that God should make one to differ from another, and separate them from their mother's womb, and call them by his grace. The object of this act is "him that is godly", or "holy" [f62]: not that any are set apart or chosen by God for their godliness, or holiness; for they are chosen through sanctification of the Spirit, and not because they were or it was foreseen they would be holy. Holiness, faith, godliness, and good works, are the fruits of election, and not the causes of it: but the word dys j, rendered "godly", signifies "good" and "merciful" [f63]; and designs one, that God is good, and gracious, and merciful unto; who is an object of his free grace and favour; and therefore he chooses and sets him apart of his own grace and mercy, and according to his sovereign will and pleasure: and that "for himself"; for his own use and service, for his praise and honour, and to the glory of his grace; which is his grand end in predestination, election, and in all spiritual blessings. And now all attempts against such persons are in vain; all charges against them are of no avail; all methods, whether by open force of persecutors, or by the cunning of false teachers, that lie in wait to deceive, to prevail against them, prove failures: and God will avenge his elect, that cry unto him day and night; as follows;

the Lord will hear when I call unto him; and deliver out of the hands of enemies, and cut them off: wherefore it is a vain thing for men to set themselves against Christ and his people.

Ver. 4. Stand in awe, and sin not, etc.] That is, stand in awe of God, and his righteous, judgments; be afraid of him, and tremble before him; make him your fear and your dread, and go on no longer and proceed no further in sinning against him. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions, render it, “be ye angry, and sin not”: which are the words of the apostle, (<490426>Ephesians 4:26); referring to this place; and which doubtless is the reason of these versions. There is an anger that is sinful, when it is without a cause, or exceeds due bounds, and is not directed to a good end, and is productive of bad effects, by words or deeds; and when it is soon raised, or long continued; and there is an anger that is not sinful; when it arises from a true zeal for God and religion; when it is kindled, not against the persons, but sins, of men; and when it is continued to answer good purposes; as the good of those with whom we are angry, and the glory of God, and the promoting of the kingdom and interest of Christ;

commune with your own heart upon your bed: when retired from men and business, and you are at leisure to think and meditate then reflect upon your actions, seriously consider them; ask your heart some proper and close questions; examine narrowly and thoroughly the principles on which, and the views with which, you act;

and be still; cease from all your rage and fury against me, against the Lord, and against his people; or “say in your own hearts” [f64], as follows.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

Ver. 5. Offer the sacrifices of righteousness, etc.] Offer for sacrifice things righteously gotten, for the Lord hates robbery for burnt offering, (<236108>Isaiah 61:8). Some respect may be had to the unrighteous acquisitions of Absalom and his men, and who were now in possession of Jerusalem, and of the altars of the Lord, and were sacrificing on them; in which they gloried; and to which this may be opposed. Likewise sacrifices of righteousness are such as were according to the law, and were offered in a right manner; which were not maimed, nor had any blemish in them; (see <390113>Malachi 1:13,14); and particularly such as were offered up in the faith of the great sacrifice, Christ; for, without faith, it is impossible to please God by any sacrifice. And this sense is confirmed by the following clause, which requires trust in the Lord. Moreover, righteousness, with the Jews, signifies alms, beneficence, showing mercy to the indigent; and acts of liberality are sacrifices, with which God is well pleased; and which are preferred by him to the sacrifices of the ceremonial law, (<581316>Hebrews 13:16 <280606>Hosea 6:6). The sacrifices also of a broken heart, and of a contrite spirit, are such as God esteems of; he looks to those that have them, and dwells with them. And to this sense the Chaldee paraphrase inclines, in which the words are thus paraphrased; and why may not the sacrifice of praise for mercies received, especially for the righteousness of Christ, be at least included, if not principally designed; since these are sacrifices which, under the ceremonial law, were more pleasing to God than others; and are always acceptable to him through Jesus Christ our Lord? Agreeably to this, Aben Ezra thinks the peace offerings are intended, which were in a way of thanksgiving; and are opposed to sin offerings, and trespass offerings, and burnt offerings; from the last of which sacrifices of righteousness are distinguished in (<195119>Psalm 51:19);

> “subdue your corruptions, and it shall be reckoned to you as a sacrifice of righteousness?”

and put your trust in the Lord: not in your strength, in horses and chariots, and numbers of men; nor in wise counsels, nor in riches, nor in fleshly privileges, nor in works of righteousness, or sacrifices of righteousness: for though they are to be performed, they are not to be trusted in; nor in your own hearts. And while the psalmist is striking at the false confidence of the sons of men he is addressing, he may at the same time be thought to be encouraging those that were with him to trust in the Lord, Jehovah, the Son of God, before spoken of by him as the object of trust, (<190212>Psalm 2:12); to trust in his person for the acceptance of their persons and sacrifices of righteousness; and in his righteousness for justification; in his blood for pardon; in his sacrifice for expiation of sin; in his fulness for daily supplies; and in his power for protection and safety. And it is right to trust in him at all times; in times of affliction, temptation, and desertion: he is always the same; in him is everlasting strength; he has an heart as well as an ability to help and succour, and none ever trusted in him and were confounded. Such have peace and safety, and can want no good thing.

Ver. 6. [There be] many that say, who will show us [any] good? etc.] These may be thought to be the men of the world; carnal worldly minded men, seeking after temporal good, and taking up their rest and contentment in it; to whom the psalmist opposes his wish and request, in the following words. Or these are the words of the men that were along with David, wishing themselves at home and in their families, enjoying the good things of life they before had; or rather these are the words of the same many, the enemies of David, spoken of in (<190301>Psalm 3:1,2); who were wishing, as Kimchi observes, that Absalom’s rebellion might prosper; that David might die and his son reign in his stead, so the evil they wished to him was good to them: or they may be the words of the same men, expressing the desperate condition that David and his friends were in, which the psalmist represents in this manner, “who will show us any good?” none, say they, will show them any good, neither God nor man; there is no help for him in God; he and his friends must unavoidably perish: and this produces the following petition, Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us; meaning his gracious presence, the manifestations of himself, the discoveries of his love, communion with him, the comforts of his Spirit, and the joys of his salvation; suggesting that in the enjoyment of these things lay their good and happiness, and their safety also; his face and favour, love and grace, being as a shield to encompass them, and as a banner over them, (<190512>Psalm 5:12 <220204>Song of Solomon 2:4); and so Jarchi observes, that the word here used signifies to lift up for a banner [f65]; so, me respect seems to be had to the form of the priests blessing, (<040624>Numbers 6:24-26); and the words are opposed to the good desired by carnal men, and express the true happiness of the saints, (<198915>Psalm 89:15); this is a blessing wished for not only by David, but by his antitype the Messiah, (<402746>Matthew 27:46); and by all believers.

Ver. 7. Thou hast put gladness in my heart, etc.] The Ethiopic version reads it “into our heart”; in granting the above request; for, nothing so rejoices the hearts of God’s people as the light of his countenance, or the enjoyment of his gracious presence: this was matter of exceeding joy to Christ himself, (<192106>Psalm 21:6 <440228>Acts 2:28); and so it is to all his members; this causes inward gladness, gladness of heart, and is opposed to the external rejoicings of wicked men and of hypocrites: and this is of God’s putting into the heart; and indeed none can put gladness either into a wounded conscience, into the heart of a sensible sinner, or into the soul of one that is panting after the presence of God, and communion with him, but God himself; more than in the time [that] their corn and their wine increased: meaning the time of harvest and of vintage; when there is a good harvest, and a good vintage, there is joy among men, and the contrary when it is otherwise, (<230903>Isaiah 9:3 <290112>Joel 1:12); these things being of general use, spread an universal joy among people; there is scarce any earthly thing that occasions more joy than these do: and yet the joy on such occasions is not to be compared with spiritual joy, that is a joy unspeakable and full of glory. Some take the m to be not comparative, but causal, and render the words [f66], “thou hast put gladness in ray heart from the time that their corn”, etc. as do the Chaldee paraphrase and Syriac versions; and the Arabic version renders it, “because of the multitude of fruits”, etc. and then the sense is, as if David should say concerning his enemies,

> “I never envied their prosperity, I always rejoiced when they had a good harvest, or vintage, and still do; and yet they have rose up and rebelled against me, and requited me evil for good.”

And this sense is given into by the Jewish commentators [f67], and shows of what an admirable spirit, and in what a sweet disposition of mind, the psalmist was; that while his enemies were seeking his life he was rejoicing in their prosperity; and is a sad aggravation of their wickedness: and this may also be understood of the rejoicing of David, and even of the Messiah, and likewise of all good men, at the spiritual prosperity of the saints, at any increase of grace, spiritual knowledge, and joy, signified by these outward things, as in (<243112>Jeremiah 31:12); the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions, add “oil” to corn and wine.

Ver. 8. I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep, etc.] Signifying, that he had such a calmness and serenity of mind, amidst all his troubles, that he could not only lay himself down in great peace, and much composure of mind, but sleep also, and that as soon as laid down almost; some lay themselves down, but cannot sleep, through the anxiety of their minds; but the psalmist could do both: or the word rendered “both” may he translated “together” [f68]; and the sense be either that he would lie down and sleep together with his friends, committing himself and them to the care and protection of God; or that he should lie down and sleep together with his enemies; meaning that he was assured that there would quickly be a reconciliation and peace between them; (see <201607>Proverbs 16:7); for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety; suggesting that his protection and safety were owing to the power and presence of God only; and that was the reason of the tranquillity of his mind, and why he slept so quietly in the night watches, though in such danger from his enemies; or “thou, Lord, makest me only” or “alone”[f69], being solitary and destitute of friends, to dwell in safety; finder the shadow of thy wings, encompassed by thy favour, and surrounded by thy power; (see <053328>Deuteronomy 33:28).

PSALM 5

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 5

To the chief Musician upon Nehiloth, a Psalm of David

This psalm, being written by David under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, is inscribed and sent to him who had the direction and management of the musical instruments used in religious worship in David’s time, and afterwards in the temple service, called “nehiloth”; as the preceding psalm is inscribed to him who presided over those called “neginoth”, (<190401>Psalm 4:1); and as they seem to be such instruments as were played upon with the hand, stringed instruments, so these seem to be wind instruments, such as were blown with the mouth; as the flute, cornet, pipe, trumpet, and hautboy; the word being derived from the same root as “chalil”, the pipe, is, and signifies hollow, and so designs such hollow instruments as above: Rabbenu Hai[f70] thinks the instrument intended was so called from the humming of bees, which its sound resembled; “nechil shel deborim”, with the Rabbins[f71], signifying a swarm of bees; and a word from the same root in the Arabic language is used for a bee[f72]; though others have thought it might be so called from the murmuring noise of a brook or river, to which the sound of it might be like; because a word from the same root this is thought to come in the Hebrew language signifies a brook or river. The Septuagint version, which is followed by the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic versions, renders it, “for that which obtained the inheritance”; and the Arabic version, “concerning the inheritance”; and to this agrees the old Midrash[f73] of the Jews; but what is the meaning is left to everyone to conjecture; the reason of these versions is because the root from whence this word is supposed to be derived signifies to “inherit”: the Targum renders the whole inscription thus, “to sing upon the dances a song of David”, as it does the title of the preceding psalm; Aben Ezra takes the word, as he does “neginoth”, to be the first word of some song, to the tune of which this psalm was to be sung; and Jarchi interprets it “troops” or “armies”, and says it is a prayer on account of the troops of enemies that came against Israel; and that the singer said this psalm on the behalf of all Israel. The Syriac interpreter calls it a prayer in the person of the church, when it went in the morning to the house of the Lord. The occasion of it seems to be the same with that of the two former: and certain it is that the psalmist was in distress by reason of wicked men when he wrote it, as appears from several passages in it; the ancient Jewish doctors[f74] understood by them Doeg and Ahithophel; some think it was penned, as the preceding psalm, on account of the rebellion of Sheba, (<102001>2 Samuel 20:1-22).

Ver. 1. Give ear to my words, O Lord, etc.] Meaning not his words in common conversation, but in prayer; the words which came out of his mouth, and were audibly expressed by him at the throne of grace, and design vocal prayer; and so stand distinguished from the meditation of his heart, sacred ejaculations, or mental prayer; (see <195402>Psalm 54:2 19:14); and words in prayer to God ought to be few, at least not repeated, (<210502>Ecclesiastes 5:2 <400607>Matthew 6:7); and these should be a man’s own words, as were the psalmist’s; not what were suggested by another, or written in a book before him, but what were of his own composing and putting together, under the direction of the Spirit of God; who put words into his mouth, and furnished him both with words and matter, and which he freely uttered before the Lord: and this is the “parrhesia”, boldness, freedom of speech, which the Scriptures speak of, (<580416>Hebrews 4:16 10:19); and the saints are allowed to use in prayer before God; when they may pour out their souls unto him, and freely tell him all their mind, as the psalmist now did; to which he entreats the Lord to “give ear”; not that God has a corporeal ear as man has, but he that made the ear has the power of hearing: this is an anthropopathy, and is spoken after the manner of men; such as are of kind and benevolent dispositions do not turn away, but stop and hear what a poor miserable object has to say to them, to whom they listen and return an answer; and so this phrase is expressive of the kind regard God has to the prayers of the destitute, which he does not despise but delight in; and of his bowing and inclining his ear, or of the strict and close attention he gives to them; and of the full and suitable answer he returns, in his own time and way; and is what the psalmist most earnestly entreats. He adds, consider my meditation; the prayer he had meditated: for meditation is requisite to prayer, and should go before it; which is necessary in order to pray with the understanding; nor should men utter anything rashly and hastily before the Lord: it may design mental prayer, in distinction from vocal prayer, signified by his words before, such as that of Moses at the Red sea, and of Hannah before Eli, (<021415>Exodus 14:15) (<090113>1 Samuel 1:13). The word also signifies inward mourning, and groans; the root from whence this is derived to mourn, and is so rendered in (<233814>Isaiah 38:14); where Hezekiah compares his prayers to the chattering of a crane and swallow, and the mourning of a dove; and are the same with the unutterable groanings with which the Spirit of God sometimes makes intercession for the saints, (<450826>Romans 8:26); and which are not hid from God, (<193809>Psalm 38:9); but are well known to him: he understands the language of a sigh or groan; and so the words may be rendered "understand my moan"[f75].

Ver. 2. Hearken unto the voice of my cry, etc.] Which seems to intend more than groans or words, even a loud outcry, as of a person in great distress; such as the strong crying of Christ, in the days of his flesh, when on the cross, forsaken by God, deserted by his friends, and surrounded by his enemies, (<580507>Hebrews 5:7); and such, in some measure, was the case of David. The arguments used by him, that the Lord would hearken to him, are as follow: and the first is taken from his interest in the Lord, and his relation to him, my King and my God; the Lord was David's King in a civil sense; though David was a king over others, yet the Lord, who is the King of kings, was King over him, and he owned him to be so; he was set upon the throne by him, had his kingdom from him, and was accountable to him: and he was his King in a natural sense, the kingdom of nature and providence belonging to him, as he was his Creator, preserver, protector, and defender; and in a spiritual sense, he being delivered from the dominion of other lords, sin, Satan, and the world, and brought to a subjection to him by his Spirit and grace; and so to own him as his King and Lawgiver, as well as his Saviour. And he was his God; not in a general way, as he is the God of the spirits of all flesh living; nor merely in the peculiar way in which he was the God of the people of Israel; but in a most special manner, as being his covenant God and Father in Christ. He was his God, not only as the God of nature and providence, but as the God of all grace; who had distinguished him by special and spiritual blessings and favours; and whom David loved, believed in, and worshipped as his God. And this his interest in him, and relation to him, he uses with great pertinence and propriety, as an argument that he might be heard by him; since the Lord was his King, and he his subject; the Lord was his God, and he one of his people; the Lord was his father, and he a child of his; and therefore entreats and hopes to be heard; (see <236315>Isaiah 63:15,16). His next argument is taken from his resolution to pray to him, and to continue to do so:

for unto thee will I pray; and only to thee: not to the gods of the Heathen, to idols, the works of men’s hands, who can neither hear nor save: and to thee always; suggesting, that he would never leave off praying till he was heard; he would give him no rest, day nor night, until he received an answer.

Ver. 3. My voice shall thou hear in the morning, O Lord, etc.] These words may be considered either as expressing the confidence of the psalmist, that the Lord would hear and answer him, and that in the morning, every morning, as soon and as often as he prayed; or that he would hear him early, quickly, speedily, seasonably, and at the best time; or else as declaring what he would do in consequence of his resolution to pray to the Lord in (<190502>Psalm 5:2); he would pray to him every morning: the morning is a proper time for prayer, both to return thanks to God for refreshing sleep and rest, for preservation from dangers by fire, by thieves and murderers, and for renewed mercies in the morning; as also to pray to God to keep from evil and dangers the day following; to give daily food, and to succeed in business and the employments of life; and for a continuation of every mercy, temporal and spiritual. God should be served and sought in the first place; and so to do looks as if God was with his people, and they with him, when they awake in the morning. The Targum and Arabic version consider the words as a petition, and render them, “Hear[f76] in the morning, O Lord, my voice”, or “my petition”; and so bear the same sense as the other petitions; in the morning will I direct [my prayer] unto thee; or “set [it] in order”[f77]: not so much respecting the order of words, the method of prayer, which is sometimes very broken and confused, and yet regarded by God; but in allusion either to the shewbread, placed in order on the table, which was typical of Christ’s continual intercession for his people, (<024004>Exodus 40:4); or to the offering of incense and other sacrifices, which when offered were put in order upon the altar; and to which prayer is compared, (<19E102>Psalm 141:2). Or the words may be rendered, “I will stand before thee in the morning”, as the Arabic version; or, “I will present unto thee”, as the Septuagint; that is, myself; (see <180106>Job 1:6) (<451201>Romans 12:1); though the supplement, “my prayer”, seems to be a good one; and so the words are supplied by the Jewish commentators[f78]; and will look up; or “out” [f79] as out of a watch tower, (<350201>Habakkuk 2:1); to see if help is coming, and for an answer of prayer: the phrase is expressive of hope, expectation, faith, and confidence, that an answer would be returned; and therefore the psalmist determines to look upwards to heaven, whither he directed his prayer, and from whence the answer must come; and to look out from his watch tower, where he was waiting for it, and to continue patiently expecting it till he had it: and the ground of his confidence were the nature and perfections of God, particularly his purity and holiness, as appears from (<190504>Psalm 5:4).

Ver. 4. For thou [art] not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, etc.] Sin, ungodliness; it is contrary to his nature, who is holy, just, and good; and to his will revealed in his law, which is the same with his nature; and sin is a transgression of it. God is so far from taking pleasure in sin, that it is the abominable thing which his righteous soul hates; though this hinders not his voluntary permission of sin, or his decree of it; which he has willed, though he does not delight in it, in order to magnify the riches of his grace and mercy in the salvation of his people: nor is this contrary to the delight and pleasure which he takes in the persons of his elect in Christ, though they are sinners in themselves, and were so when he so loved them as to give his Son for them, and who died for them while they were yet sinners; and when he sends his Spirit to regenerate and sanctify them, and are after conversion guilty of many sins: for, though he delights in their persons, he has no pleasure in their sins; nor is it consistent with the holiness of his nature to take pleasure in wickedness, let it be committed by whomsoever;

neither shall evil dwell with thee; that is, the evil man, who continues in a course of wickedness, and lives and dies in his sins. He has no communion with God here, nor shall he dwell with him hereafter; but shall be bid to depart from him, whether he be a profane sinner openly, or secretly a wicked professor of religion. The sense of the psalmist is, that since they were evil and wicked men, that were risen up against him, and gave him trouble, he entertained a strong confidence that God would hear him, for himself and his friends, whose cause was righteous; and appear against his enemies, who were wicked and ungodly men; and this he grounded upon the purity and holiness of God.

Ver. 5. The foolish shall not stand in thy sight, etc.] By the “foolish” are meant not such who are so in a natural, but in a moral sense, wicked and ungodly men. The Septuagint render the word, “transgressors of the law”; and the Vulgate Latin version, “the unrighteous”; and the Arabic version, “they that contradict thy precepts”. The word[f80] used comes from a root which signifies to “praise”; and may design such as are praisers of themselves, proud boasters; who are elated with their own excellencies, with their wisdom, strength, honours, riches, and righteousness, and treat all others with contempt; for though they are unrighteous, yet they trust in themselves that they are righteous, and despise others, which betrays their folly; hence the Syriac version renders it, “the proud”; and the Chaldee paraphrase, “mockers”. And their not standing in the sight of God denotes his abhorrence and detestation of them; as when one man abhors another he cannot endure to look upon him, or bear to have him in his presence: and it shows that such shall receive no favour from him; for though, like proud Haman, they may think themselves his favourites, and they are the persons the king will delight to honour; yet to their great mortification they will find, that a poor Mordecai, a mean despicable believer, will be preferred unto them. Nor shall they stand in acceptance and confidence before him at the day of judgment: they will not be able to stand themselves, but will call to the rocks and mountains to cover them; and they will not be suffered lost and, but will be driven from the presence of the Lord into everlasting burnings, thou hatest all workers of iniquity; not all that have sin in them or do sin, for there are none without it; but such who give themselves up to work wickedness, who make it the business of their lives, and are slaves unto it, living in a continued series and course of impiety; and this character does not only belong to openly profane sinners, but to some professors of religion; (see <400722>Matthew 7:22,23); and these are the objects of God’s hatred. Which does not so much intend any past act of his, the preterition or passing them by, when he chose others in his eternal purposes; in which sense the word is used in (<450913>Romans 9:13), as his continued aversion to them, denying them his grace and favour, and rejecting them from all nearness to him and communion with him; and may include the everlasting punishment of them, by which his displicine and hatred will be made manifest: and he is impartial in it, without any respect to persons, high or low, rich or poor; indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, will come upon every soul of man that does evil. God’s love to his own people was antecedent to sin, and was placed upon them in Christ, in whom their persons are always well pleasing to him; and though they sinned in Adam, and became actual transgressors of his law, yet such was his love to their persons, that he saves them from their sins by the blood and righteousness of his son.

Ver. 6. Thou shall destroy them that speak leasing, etc.] Or “a lie” [f81]; whether in matters of religion; as false doctrines, errors, and heresies, are lies; and so all that deny the deity, sonship, and Messiahship of Christ, are liars; and the followers of the man of sin speak lies in hypocrisy: or in common conversation; such are like to Satan, and are abominable in the sight of God; and he will destroy them, either with a temporal destruction, with bodily diseases, as Gehazi was smitten with a leprosy; and with corporeal death, as Ananias and Sapphira; or with eternal destruction, the destruction of body and soul in hell; for all liars have their part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone;

the Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man; or “the man of blood and deceit” [f82]; that thirsts after blood; who sheds innocent blood, as the Targum paraphrases it. He showed his resentment against Cain, the first of this sort, in a way that was intolerable to him. He very early established a law, requiring that he who shed man’s blood, by man should his blood be shed; and he will give the whore of Rome, who has been drunk with the blood of his saints, blood to drink, because she is worthy. And all such who flatter with their tongue, and speak with a double heart, and lie in wait to deceive their neighbour, whether in things temporal or spiritual, are the objects of his abhorrence and indignation; (see <19523>Psalm 55:23). Now David’s enemies being such sort of persons, foolish wicked men, proud and haughty, workers of iniquity, liars, bloody and deceitful men, men that God had an abhorrence of, he therefore hoped and was confident that God would hear his prayers against them, and for himself.

Ver. 7. But as for me, I will come [into] thy house, etc.] The tabernacle of Moses, sometimes called the house of God, (<130923>1 Chronicles 9:23); for as yet the temple was not built. Here David had been used to go in times past; and though he was now in a kind of exile from it, he was confident he should again enter into and determined so to do whenever he had an opportunity, and that in the following manner:

in the multitude of thy mercy; grace or goodness. God is rich in mercy, abundant in goodness and truth; there is a multitude of mercy, love, and grace in his heart, and which is stored up in his covenant, and displayed in his Son, and in the provision of him as a Saviour of lost sinners; abundant mercy is shown in regeneration, in adoption, and in the forgiveness of sins, and in every spiritual blessing, and in the gift of eternal life. And now, not relying on his own merits, strength, and righteousness, or leaning to his own understanding, but trusting in the mercy, grace, and goodness of God in Christ, and in hope of finding more grace and mercy to help in time of need; with thankfulness for what he had received, he determines, by divine leave and assistance, to enter, into the house of the Lord: and whatever other persons did, whom he had before described, it was his resolution to serve the Lord, under a sense of his mercy and goodness to him; which laid him under an obligation so to do, and is the true principle from which all service should proceed;

[and] in thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple; either heaven, the habitation of God’s holiness, towards which, and to God there, the psalmist would lift up his eyes, his hands, and heart; or the tabernacle, at the door of which the worship of God was performed, the sacrifices were brought, and God met his people; and therefore he says he would worship towards the temple or tabernacle, (<030103>Leviticus 1:3 <022942>Exodus 29:42,43). And it may be that David has reference to the Messiah, the medium of divine worship; whose human nature was typified by the tabernacle and temple, in which the fulness of the Godhead dwells: the psalmist therefore purposes to worship God in Christ, and to perform all acts of worship, as prayer, praise, hearing the word, offering sacrifice, etc. in the name and faith of Christ; looking towards him for the presentation of his services by him, and for the acceptance of them with God through him: and this he desired to do in the “fear” of God; not with a slavish fear, but with reverence and godly fear; with a fear influenced by the multitude of God’s mercy, grace, and goodness, in art humble modest manner, not trusting to, or depending upon, any service done by him.

Ver. 8. Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness, etc.] Not in mine, but thine; in the righteousness of God, which is revealed in the Gospel, from faith to faith, and is imputed by God, and received by faith; in this righteousness the psalmist desired to be led into the house of God, and appear before him; nor is there any other righteousness in which man can stand before God and worship. Or else the sense is, that God would lead him in the way of righteousness, in his righteous statutes, judgments, and ordinances; in which way the Lord does lead his people, (<192303>Psalm 23:3 <200820>Proverbs 8:20). Or that he would lead him for his righteousness’ sake; because of his faithfulness to his promises, that he would direct, uphold, and never leave nor forsake him. David was very sensible that the way of man is not in himself, and that he could not direct his own steps; and therefore desired to be guided by the Lord, and to be led by the right hand of his righteousness, and to be upheld by it in his ways:

because of mine enemies; or, “those that observe me”[f83] that lie in wait and watch for my halting, as Jeremiah’s enemies did; and would rejoice at my fall, and insult me, and blaspheme thy name; therefore lead, guide, and uphold me;

make thy way straight before my face; thy way of providence, thy way of grace, thy way of worship and duty; let it appear plain and manifest, that I may know in which way I should walk; and let all obstructions be removed out of the way, that I may walk straight on, without any difficulty or hinderance. He seems to have respect to his enemies, who lay in his way, that God would remove them; (see <190509>Psalm 5:9,10).

Ver. 9. For [there is] no faithfulness in their mouth, etc.] In the mouth of the ungodly, as the Chaldee paraphrase; in the mouth of every one of them, as Aben Ezra interprets it: that is, in the mouth of every wicked, bloody, and deceitful man; of everyone of David’s enemies, as Saul, or the conspirators with Absalom his son. There was no steadfastness in them; nothing right, sure, or firm said by them; nothing that could be depended upon; there was “no truth” in them, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions render it. And as this was true of David’s, so of Christ’s enemies; of Herod, and of the Herodians, and of the Scribes and Pharisees; (see <400208>Matthew 2:8 22:16); and of the enemies of Christ’s Gospel; of all false teachers, who speak not the word faithfully; tell dreams, use the hidden things of dishonesty, walk in craftiness, handle the word of God deceitfully, and speak lies in hypocrisy: there is no certainty in them, nor is any thing they say to be trusted to. And this is the character of wicked men in common: they are an assembly of treacherous men; there is none upright among them; nor is any confidence to be placed in them: the people of God are in danger of being imposed upon and misled by them to their hurt; and therefore the psalmist prays, that the Lord would lead him in his righteousness; their inward part [is] very wickedness; their heart, which is desperately wicked, exceeding sinful; not only wicked, and very wicked, but wickedness itself. This is the root and fountain of all wickedness, and the reason why there is no faithfulness in their mouth: the word[f84] is sometimes rendered, “their inward thought”, (<194911>Psalm 49:11 64:6); which is the inmost of man, the nearest to him; and which, and even the imagination of it, is evil, and that continually: the word [f85] translated "wickedness" signifies woes, calamities, and mischiefs; and such the wicked hearts of men are full of, and are continually devising against the people of God, and his righteous cause. And this is the just character of ungodly men, even though they may profess to know God, have a form of godliness, and be outwardly righteous before men; as these were David was concerned with; their throat [is] an open sepulchre; or as one, as the Targum paraphrases it; to which the throat of wicked men may be compared for its voracity and insatiableness; the grave being one of those three or four things, which never has enough or is satisfied. And this is true of the throat, whether it be considered as an instrument of speech, and throws out devouring words to the prejudice of the characters and reputations of others; or as an instrument of swallowing meat and drink, and where the pleasure of appetite is; and so may be expressive of the eager desire of the wicked after sin, who drink up iniquity like water; and of their delight in it, and their fulness of it, and yet still greedy, insatiable, and not to be satisfied: and their throat may be compared to an open grave for the nauseous stench it emits; corrupt communication, filthiness, and foolish talking, proceeding out of it; and horrible oaths, curses, imprecations, and blasphemies, being belched out through it; and for the danger which is by it, since into it men may fall unawares; and so the evil communications of wicked men corrupt good manners, and do great mischief to those who fall into company with them;

they flatter with their tongue; or, "make it smooth" [f86]; use oily expressions, soft language: or, "part" or "divide" [f87] their tongue; are double tongued and double hearted; and so deceive persons, as the apostle interprets it in (<450313>Romans 3:13). They flatter God himself, drawing nigh to him in an hypocritical way; they flatter men, their neighbours, and impose upon them; they flatter princes, and such parasitic people were about David. And such are false teachers, who prophesy smooth things, and with good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple; or, which account there is great reason to pray to be led and directed by the Lord.

Ver. 10. Destroy thou them, O God, etc.] Or "make them guilty" [f88]; that is, make them appear to be guilty, either to themselves, that they may acknowledge their offences, confess their guilt, and ask for pardon; or to others, pronounce them guilty, pass the sentence of condemnation on them: and the Chaldee paraphrase and the Syriac version render it by byj, “condemn them”, or hold them guilty; and the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions, “judge” them; treat them as guilty persons, punish them, destroy them, soul and body, with an everlasting destruction;

let them fall by their own counsels; into the pit they have dug for others; as Haman fell by his counsels, and was hanged on the gallows he prepared for Mordecai. And so sometimes a man’s own counsel casts him down, and is the cause of his ruin, (<181807>Job 18:7). Or, “because of their own counsels” [f89]; which they have taken against the Lord and his Anointed, against his cause and interest, and against his righteous ones, particularly David; meaning their wicked counsels, in which they walked; (see <281106>Hosea 11:6). Or “from their counsels” [f90]; as the Targum and most versions render it: that is, let their counsels be turned into foolishness, become brutish, be carried headlong, and come to nought. Which had its accomplishment in Ahithophel;

cast them out; either out of their own country, and carry them into captivity; or from the presence of the Lord, from his tabernacle and worship; which David’s enemies now enjoyed, and gloried in: or into outer darkness, into a furnace of fire, where there is weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth; in the multitude of their transgressions: when God deals with men in a way of grace, he turns away ungodliness from them, or them from their ungodliness; but when in a way of judgment he suffers them to die in their sins, and so perish: or “for the multitude of their transgressions” [f91]. The sins of transgressors are many and because of them they are cast out of the sight o God, and will be bid to depart from him hereafter; for they have rebelled against thee: all sin is a rebellion against God; hence sinners are called rebellious ones. The rebellion of David’s subjects against him was a rebellion against God; because it was an attempt to dethrone him, whom God had made king of Israel. The word [f92] signifies to embitter, exasperate, and provoke: and such is the nature of sin, it is a bitter thing in itself, and it provokes the eyes of God’s glory. Now each of these expressions are to be considered, not so much petitions, as prophecies; and not as imprecations, but as predictions of what would be the portion of wicked men.

Ver. 11. But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice, etc.] Who trust not in themselves, in their own hearts, in their righteousness, or riches, or strength; but in the name, righteousness, and strength of the Lord: who betake themselves to him, and put all their confidence in him: let them rejoice in the salvation of the Lord, and in hope of eternal glory and happiness;

let them even shout for joy: not only rejoice inwardly, but express their joy externally, with their voices, and in the loudest manner; and that always, the matter and foundation of a believer's joy always continues; and so does the grace itself: though it is not always in exercise, yet it is an everlasting joy; and with it the redeemed of the Lord will come to Zion, and no man will be able to take away their joy. Which distinguishes it from the triumphing of the wicked, and the joy of the hypocrite, which is but for a moment;

because thou defendest them, or "coverest them" [f93]; with the feathers of divine protection, under the shadow of his wings, and with the hollow of his hand: so God preserves his people, keeps them by his power, as the apple of his eye, and is a wall of fire round about them. Which is a good reason why they should rejoice, and shout for joy;

let them also that love thy name; as all that put their trust in the, Lord do; they love the Lord himself, because of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands, and for what he has done for them: they love all they know of him; they love him in all his persons, Father, Son, and Spirit; and every name of his, by which he has made himself known. They love, admire, and adore all his attributes and perfections, as they are displayed in the works of creation and providence; and especially in redemption by Jesus Christ, where they all gloriously meet together; and in whom God has proclaimed his name gracious and merciful. They love his word, his Gospel, by which he is made known; and they love his people, on whom his name is called, and who call upon his name. And let such, says the psalmist, be joyful in thee: not rejoice in their boasting of their wisdom, strength, riches, and righteousness; all such rejoicing is evil: but in the Lord, in his grace, righteousness, and salvation. He is the only true proper object of spiritual joy; and there is good reason for it, from what follows.

Ver. 12. For thou, Lord, wilt bless the righteous.] As he has blessed him with a righteousness, even the righteousness of God imputed to him, by which he is denominated righteous, and with the forgiveness of his sins; so he will bless him with peace and prosperity, with all spiritual blessings, with the blessings of grace here, and glory hereafter. Hence he has just reason to rejoice and be glad; with favour wilt thou compass him as [with] a shield: by which is meant the free favour, love, and grace of God in Christ, which springs from his sovereign will and pleasure; is his good will to men, and the exceeding riches of his grace, shown in his kindness towards them in Christ Jesus: and the compassing or crowning of the righteous with it, as the word [f94] signifies, is expressive of the abundance of it, in the application of it to them in conversion, and in every instance and blessing of grace; for such are crowned with lovingkindness and tender mercies; the grace of the Lord is exceeding abundant towards them, it flows and overflows; it surrounds them on all sides, and covers them all over: it is as a shield unto them from all their enemies, (<194011>Psalm 40:11); and which being held in the hand of faith, quenches the fiery darts of Satan; and is the saints security from every enemy, and from all hurt and danger, here or hereafter; (see <360317>Zephaniah 3:17 <450838>Romans 8:38,39); and is a crown of glory upon them, which makes them glorious, lovely, and amiable. Some interpret this of Christ the righteous One; so Nebiensis.

PSALM 6

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 6

To the chief Musician on Neginoth upon Sheminith, a Psalm of David

What is designed by “the chief musician”, and what is meant by “neginoth”, have been observed preciously, (see Gill on “<190401>Psalm 4:1”). As for “sheminith”, it seems to be one particular sort of the “neginoth”, or stringed instrument, which this man had the care of; see the title of (<191201>Psalm 12:1): which most of the Hebrew writers[f95] understand of the harp of eight strings, to which this psalm was set; and which, from the number of its strings, was called “sheminith”, which signifies “the eighth”: and this receives confirmation from (<131521>1 Chronicles 15:21). The eighth string was added to the harp by Simonides, according to Pliny[f96]: but if such an harp is here meant, this refutes it, for David lived long before Simonides. Though some[f97] have thought it refers to a poem or song of eight notes, to the tune of which this psalm was sung; or to the eighth note, which was grave, and which we call the bass. As for the eighth day of circumcision, of which some Jewish writers mystically interpret it; or the eighth, that is, the first day, or Lord’s day, to which some of the ancient Christian writers refer it, or the eighth age, or millennium, as Theodoret; these can by no means be admitted of. The occasion of it was either some bodily disease the psalmist laboured under, or some distress of soul, on account of sin; and the rather this seems to be the case, seeing the psalm begins with the same words as (<193801>Psalm 38:1), in which the psalmist so much bewails his iniquity. Some have thought it was drawn up for the use of any and every sick person; and others say it was written on the account of Israel in captivity, who were then as sick persons[f98]: but rather the occasion of it was bodily sickness, inward guilt of conscience for sin, and distress by enemies; as appears from, (<190603>Psalm 6:3,4,7,8).

Ver. 1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thine anger, The Lord sometimes rebukes or reproves men by his spirit, and sometimes by his word and ministers, and sometimes by his providences, and that on account of sin; to bring to a sense and acknowledgment of it; and particularly for remissness in duty, or neglect of it; and for trusting in the creature, or in any outward enjoyment, boasting of it, and loving it too much; and these rebukes of his own people are always in love, and never in wrath, though they sometimes fear they are; (see <198807>Psalm 88:7,16) (<250301>Lamentations 3:1); and therefore deprecate them, as the psalmist here does; not the thing itself, but the manner in which it is apprehended it is done, or doing;

neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure; when God chastens his own people it is not in a way of vindictive wrath, or as a proper punishment for sin; for this would be contrary to Christ's suretyship engagements and performances, and to the doctrine of his satisfaction for sin; it would draw a veil over it, and render it of none effect; it would be contrary to the justice of God to punish both surety and principal; and to the everlasting love of God to them, in which he always rests, and from which there can be no separation; nor would they be dealt with as children; and besides would be condemned with the world, and killed with the second death; whereas they will not, though chastened of God, it is the chastening of a father, is very instructive to them, and is always for their good, spiritual and eternal; is in measure, in judgment, and in love; and never in fury and hot displeasure; but this being feared, is deprecated.

Ver. 2. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, etc.] He knew he was a sinner, both by original sin and actual transgression, which he was always ready to own; he knew that what he had done deserved the wrath of God, even his hot displeasure; and that for such things it came upon the children of disobedience: he knew that there was mercy with God through Christ, and therefore he flees unto it, pleads for it, and entreats the manifestation of forgiving love: he pleads no merits of his own, nor makes any mention of former works of righteousness done by him, but throws himself upon the mercy of God in Christ; giving this as a reason, for I [am] weak; either in body, through some disease upon him; or in soul, being enfeebled by sin, and so without spiritual strength to do that which was good of himself; to exercise grace, and perform duty, and much less to keep the law of God, or make atonement for sin, or to bear the punishment of it;

O Lord, heal me; meaning either his body, for God is the physician of the body, he wounds and he heals; so he healed Hezekiah and others; and he should be sought to in the first place by persons under bodily disorders: or else his soul, as in (<194104>Psalm 41:4); sin is the disease of the soul, and a very loathsome one it is, and is incurable but by the balm of Gilead, and the physician there; by the blood of Christ, and forgiveness through it; and the forgiveness of sin is the healing of the diseases of the soul, (<19A303>Psalm 103:3);

for my bones are vexed; with strong pain; meaning his body, as Kimchi and Aben Ezra observe; because these are the foundation of the body, and the more principal parts of it: and this may be understood of his grief and trouble of heart for his sins and transgressions, which is sometimes expressed by the bones being broke, and by there being no rest in them, (<195108>Psalm 51:8 38:3).

Ver. 3. My soul is also sore vexed, etc.] Or "exceedingly troubled" [f99], and even frightened and thrown into a consternation with indwelling sin, and on account of actual transgressions, and by reason of the hidings of God's face, and through the temptations of Satan, and because of the fear of death; to which Old Testament saints were very incident.

But thou, O Lord, how long? it is an abrupt expression, the whole he designed is not spoken, being hindered through the grief and sorrow with which his heart was overwhelmed; and is to be supplied after this manner,

> "shall I have refreshment?"

as the Chaldee paraphrase; or,

> "wilt thou look and not heal me?"

as Jarchi; or

> "my soul be troubled?"

as Aben Ezra; or > "shall I be afflicted, and thou wilt not heal me?"

as Kimchi; or

> "wilt thou afflict me, and not arise to my help?"

(see <191301>Psalm 13:1,2).

Ver. 4. Return, O Lord, etc.] By this it seems that the Lord had withdrawn himself, and was departed from the psalmist, wherefore he entreats him to return unto him, and grant him his gracious presence. God is immense and omnipresent, he is everywhere: going away and returning cannot be properly ascribed to him; but he, nay be said to depart from his people, as to sensible communion with him, and enjoyment of him, when he hides his face, withdraws his gracious presence, and the comfortable discoveries and influences of his love; and he may be said to return when he visits them again, and manifests his love and favour to them: the Jewish writers[f100] interpret it, as in (<198503>Psalm 85:3); and though there is no such change in God, as from love to wrath, and from wrath to love; but inasmuch as there is a change in his dispensations towards his people, it is as if it was so; and thus it is apprehended by them; deliver my soul; from the anxiety, distress, and sore vexation it was now in, for of all troubles soul troubles are the worst: and from all enemies and workers of iniquity which were now about him, and gave him much grief and uneasiness; and from death itself, he was in fear of;

> “return from the fierceness of thine anger,”

O, save me for thy mercy’s sake; out of all troubles of soul and body, and out of the hands of all enemies, inward and outward; and with temporal, spiritual, and eternal salvation; not for his righteousness’s sake, as Kimchi well observes; for salvation is according to the abundant mercy of God, and not through works of righteousness done by men, otherwise it would not be of grace.

Ver. 5. For in death [there is] no remembrance of thee, etc.] Of the goodness, truth, power, and faithfulness of God; no notice can be taken nor mention, made either of the perfections or works of God, whether of nature or of grace, by a dead man to others; he is wholly useless to men on earth with respect to these things; in the grave who shall give thee thanks? for mercies temporal or spiritual; the dead cannot praise the Lord among men, only the living; (see <193009>Psalm 30:9 115:17 <233818>Isaiah 38:18,19); wherefore the psalmist desires that he might live and praise the Lord: this argument is taken from the glory of God, which end cannot be answered among men by death, as by life. It does not follow from hence that the soul either dies or sleeps with the body, and is inactive until the resurrection morn, neither of which are true; or that the souls of departed saints are unemployed in heaven; they are always before the throne, and serve the Lord day and night; they remember, with the utmost gratitude and thankfulness, all the goodness and grace of God unto them, and praise him for all his wondrous works: but the sense is, that when a saint is dead, he can no more serve and glorify God on earth among men.

Ver. 6. I am weary with my groanings, etc.] By reason of bodily illness, or indwelling sin, or the guilt of actual transgressions, or the hidings of God's face, or a sense of divine wrath, or the temptations of Satan, or afflictions and crosses of various kinds, or fears of death, or even earnest desires after heaven and eternal happiness, or the low estate of Zion; each of which at times occasion groaning in the saints, as in the psalmist, and is the common experience of all good men. The psalmist being weary of his disease, or of sin, groaned till he was weary with his groaning; inward groaning affects the body, wastes the animal spirits, consumes the flesh, and induces weariness and faintness; (see <19A205>Psalm 102:5 <244503>Jeremiah 45:3);

all the night make I my bed to swim: I water my couch with my tears; these are hyperbolical phrases[f101], expressing more than is intended, and are not to be literally understood; for such a quantity of tears a man could never shed, as to water his couch and make his bed to swim with them, but they are used to denote the multitude of them, and the excessiveness of his sorrow; (see <19B9136>Psalm 119:136 <250348>Lamentations 3:48,49); and these tears were shed, not to atone and satisfy for sin, for nothing but the blood and sacrifice of Christ can do that; but to express the truth and reality, as well as the abundance of his grief; and this was done "all the night long"; (see <180703>Job 7:3,4); when he had leisure to think and reflect upon his sins and transgressions, and when he was clear of all company, and no one could hear or see him, nor interrupt him in the vent of his sorrow, and when his disease might be heavier upon him, as some diseases increase in the night season: this may also be mystically understood, of a night of spiritual darkness and desertion, when a soul is without the discoveries of the love of God, and the influences of his grace; and has lost sight of God and Christ, and interest in them, and does not enjoy communion with them; and throughout this night season weeping endures, though joy comes in the morning. And it may be applicable to David's antitype, to the doleful night in which he was betrayed, when it was the hour and power of darkness, and when he had no other couch or bed but the ground itself; which was watered, not only with his tears, but with his sweat and blood, his sweat being as it were great drops of blood falling to the ground; so he is often said to sigh and groan in spirit, (<410734>Mark 7:34 8:12 <431133>John 11:33,38).

Ver. 7. Mine eye is consumed because of grief, etc.] Either by reason of the affliction he laboured under, which could not he joyous, but grievous; or because, of the sin that was in him, and those that he had committed, which were grieving to him; or through the sins of other professors of religion, or profane sinners, whom he beheld with grief of heart and weeping eyes: the word[f102] used signifies anger and indignation, and sorrow arising from thence, and may denote either indignation in himself at his enemies, who were rejoicing at his calamities; or the sense he had of the anger of God, and his hot displeasure, which he feared he was rebuking and chastening him with; and now his heart being filled with grief on one or other of these accounts, or all of them, vented itself in floods of tears, which hurt the visive faculty; for through much weeping the eye is weakened and becomes dim; and through a multitude of tears, and a long continuance of them, it fails; (see <181707>Job 17:7 <193109>Psalm 31:9 <250211>Lamentations 2:11);

it waxeth old because of all mine enemies; saints have many enemies, sin, Satan, and the world; and these are very oppressive ones, as the word[f103] here signifies; such as beset them about, straiten them on all hands, and press them sore; and they must be pressed down by them, were it not that he that is in them is greater than he that is in the world; and David’s enemies gave him so much trouble, and caused him to shed such plenty of tears, that his eye waxed old, was shrunk up, and beset with wrinkles, the signs of old age; or it was removed out of its place, as the word is rendered in (<181804>Job 18:4); or the sight was removed from that, it was gone from him, (<193810>Psalm 38:10).

Ver. 8. Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity, etc.] The psalmist being fully assured that God had heard his prayer, that he should recover from his disorder, or be delivered out of his calamities, whether corporeal or spiritual, has on a sudden a spring of joy, faith, and comfort; as sometimes there is a quick transition from comfortable to uncomfortable frames; (see <193007>Psalm 30:7); so on the contrary, there is as quick a passage from uncomfortable to comfortable ones; (see <250318>Lamentations 3:18,24); who may be called “workers of iniquity” (see Gill on “<190505>Psalm 5:5”); and these were either his open enemies, as Saul and his men, or Absalom and the conspirators with him, whom he bids to cease from following and pursuing after him; or his secret ones, hypocritical courtiers, that were about him, who were wishing and hoping for his death. It is the lot of God’s people to be among the workers of iniquity; Lot was among the Sodomites, David was in Meshech and in the tents of Kedar, Isaiah was among men of unclean lips; Christ’s lily is among thorns, and his sheep among goats; and though in some respects a civil conversation with wicked men cannot be avoided, for then good men must needs go out of the world; yet as little company should be kept with them as can be, and no fellowship should be had with them in sinful practices, nor in superstitious worship; and though there will not be a full and final separation from them in the present state of things, there will be hereafter, when these very words will be used by David’s antitype, the Lord Jesus Christ; not only to profane sinners, but to carnal professors of religion, who have herded themselves with the people of God, (<402541>Matthew 25:41 7:23 <421325>Luke 13:25-28). The reason why the psalmist took heart and courage, and ordered his wicked persecutors, or sycophants, to be gone from him, was his assurance of being heard by the Lord; for the Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping; referring to what is said (<190606>Psalm 6:6,7); he had not only lifted up his voice in prayer, but he had wept and made supplication, as Jacob did, (<281204>Hosea 12:4); sometimes God brings his people to the throne of grace weeping, and with supplications leads them, (<243109>Jeremiah 31:9); and then hears their cry and answers them.

Ver. 9. The Lord hath heard my supplication, etc.] Which he had presented to him, (<190601>Psalm 6:1,2,4); in which he deprecates his anger and hot displeasure; entreats his free favour, grace, and mercy; desires healing for soul or body, or both; prays a return of his gracious presence; and deliverance and salvation out of all his troubles, from all his enemies, and from death itself. The word [f104] used properly signifies petitions for grace and mercy, which the psalmist put up under the influence of the spirit of grace and supplication, and which were heard; the Lord will receive my prayer; instead of a burnt offering, as Aben Ezra glosses it; as sweet incense, as what is grateful and delightful, coming up out of the hands of Christ the Mediator, perfumed with the sweet incense of his mediation: the word [f105] signifies prayer made to God as the righteous Judge, as the God of his righteousness, who would vindicate his cause and right his wrongs; and a believer, through the blood and righteousness of Christ, can go to God as a righteous God, and plead with him even for pardon and cleansing, who is just and faithful to grant both unto him. The psalmist three times expresses his confidence of his prayers being heard and received, which may be either in reference to his having prayed so many times for help, as the Apostle Paul did, (<471208>2 Corinthians 12:8); and as Christ his antitype did, (<402639>Matthew 26:39,42,44); or to express the certainty of it, the strength of his faith in it, and the exuberance of his joy on account of it.

Ver. 10. Let all mine enemies be ashamed, etc.] Or "they shall be ashamed"[f106]; and so the following clauses may be rendered, and be considered as prophecies of what would be; though if this be considered as an imprecation, it is wishing no ill; wicked men are not ashamed of their abominations committed by them, neither can they blush; it would be well if they were ashamed of them, and brought to true repentance for them; and if they are not ashamed now, they will be hereafter, when the Judge of quick and dead appears; and sore vexed; or "troubled"[f107]; as his bones had been vexed, and his soul had been sore vexed by them; as he knew they would be through disappointment at his recovery, and at his deliverance from the distresses and calamities he was now in, when he should sing for joy of heart, and they should howl for vexation of spirit;

let them return; meaning either from him, from pursuing after him; or to him, to seek his favour, and be reconciled to him, and be at peace with him, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi explain it; unless this word should only signify "again", as it sometimes does, and be read in connection with what follows;

[and] let them be again ashamed suddenly[f108]; intimating that his deliverance would be sudden, in a moment, in a very little time, and so would be their disappointment, shame, and confusion. Jarchi, from R. Jonathan and R. Samuel bar Nachmani, refers this to the shame of the wicked in the world to come.

PSALM 7

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 7

Shiggaion of David, which he sang unto the Lord, concerning the words of Cush the Benjamite

The name of this psalm, "Shiggaion", either respects the music or the matter of the psalm. Some take it to be the name of the musical instrument to which the psalm was set[f109]: so Habakkuk's prayer is said to be "upon shigionoth"; which is the same word with this, only of the plural number, (<350301>Habakkuk 3:1). Others say it was the first word of a song, to the tune of which this was sung[f110] And others understand it of a certain kind of a song[f111]: and the Targum renders it, "the interpretation of the ode of David"; which Ainsworth renders, "David's interpretation of the law"; leading atyrwa instead of atydwa, as does also the king of Spain's Bible. And certain it is that it is the name of a song; since it follows, "which he sang unto the Lord"; in his presence, before him, and to the glory of his name. But the question is, of what sort it is? and why it should be so called? since its root hgç signifies "to err" or "wander": it is more generally rendered, "an erratic" or "wandering ode"; a song or psalm, which consisted of various kind of metre: it was sung with various notes, and all kind of music, which made it very pleasant. Hence some render it, "David's delight", as R. Obadiah Gaon; and the verb from whence it is derived is translated "ravished" in (<200519>Proverbs 5:19,20); and Ben Melech says, the word signifies twhr[w hjmç, "joy and pleasure"; and Aben Ezra observes that some interpret it gwn[t, "delight". But others are of opinion that this word regards the subject matter of the psalm, and may be rendered, "David's ignorance" or "error"; his sin of ignorance; and respects his mistaken conduct with regard to his enemies, particularly Saul, in making imprecations upon them, (<190610>Psalm 6:10); in cursing them, and especially King Saul; when a king is not to be cursed, (<211020>Ecclesiastes 10:20); and in cutting off the skirt of his garment, for which his heart smote him, (<092404>1 Samuel 24:4,5). Some render it, "the care of David", as Cocceius; which he wrote in deep meditation, when he had forgot himself, and was as it were in an ecstasy; setting forth "the sum of his cares", as Ainsworth expresses it, when he was harassed and greatly afflicted by his enemies. The occasion of it is, “the words of Cush the Benjamite”; which some understand of Shimei the Benjamite, who came out and cursed David as he went along, when he fled from Absalom, (<091605>1 Samuel 16:5-11). Theodoret thinks Hushai is meant, who persuaded Absalom not to follow the counsel of Ahithophel; on which account David penned this psalm. Others interpret it of one of Saul’s courtiers, who was of the tribe of Benjamin, and whose name was Cush[f112]; and which is very likely, since it is evident that some of Saul’s courtiers accused David to him, and charged him with seeking his harm, not only to take away his crown and kingdom, but his life, (<092409>1 Samuel 24:9 26:19). Though the generality of the Jewish writers[f113] interpret it of Saul himself, who is called Cush, in allusion to his father’s name Kish, who was a man of Benjamin, (<090901>1 Samuel 9:1); or else because Cush signifies “an Ethiopian”, to which he may be compared, as the children of Israel in (<300907>Amos 9:7). For as the Ethiopian is various in his skin, so was Saul in his actions, as Jarchi observes; or rather because, as Kimchi and Ben Melech express it, as the Ethiopian does not change his skin, (<241323>Jeremiah 13:23); so Saul did not change his hatred to David. Though the same writers observe, that he may be called so by the rule of contraries, because he was a very goodly and beautiful man; the words referred to are supposed to be those in (<092207>1 Samuel 22:7,8).

Ver. 1. O Lord my God, in thee do I put my trust, etc.] The psalmist expresses his interest in God as his covenant God, and his trust and confidence in him; and with these he sets out as the stay of his soul, and his bulwark against the fears of his enemies; and he does not say that he had trusted in God, or would for the future trust in him; but that he did trust in him, and continued to do so. And God is to be trusted in at all times; in times of affliction, temptation, and desertion; and these the psalmist premises to his petition, which follows, as an encouragement to him to hope for success, since God was his God, and none that ever trusted in him were confounded; save me from all them that persecute me, and deliver me; persecution is no new thing to the people of God; David had his persecutors, and many of them; the Church, in Jeremiah’s time, had hers; the saints, in the times of the apostles, and in all ages since, have had theirs. Every one that will live godly in Christ Jesus must expect persecution in one shape or another; and there is none can save and deliver from it but God, and he can and will in his own time, (<470110>2 Corinthians 1:10). David was sensible of this, and therefore applies to him, and him only; and not to an arm of flesh, to his friends, or to neighbouring princes and powers.

Ver. 2. Lest he tear my soul like a lion, etc.] That is, one of his persecutors, the chief of them; it may be Saul, whom the psalmist compares to a lion for his majesty and greatness, the lion being the king among beasts; and for his authority, power, and might, and for his wrath and cruelty, which he feared; and which, should it be exerted on him, would tear his soul, or himself, in pieces; would rend his soul from his body, and dispatch his life; (see <201912>Proverbs 19:12). So the Apostle Paul calls the Roman governor, before whom he was, and from whose hands he was delivered, a lion, for his power and fierceness, (<550417>2 Timothy 4:17). And so our adversary the devil, the chief of all persecutors, and who instigates others against the saints, is by Peter said to go about like a roaring lion, (<600508>1 Peter 5:8); rending [it] in pieces, as the lion does his prey when hungry. So Homer[f114] compares Polyphemus to a mountain lion, which devours and leaves nothing, neither the intestines, nor flesh, nor bones; and represents[f115] it first taking hold of the creature with its strong teeth, and breaking its neck, and drawing out its blood and all its inwards; (see <233813>Isaiah 38:13);

while [there is] none to deliver; no saviour, no deliverer: for if God does not save and deliver his people out of the hands of their persecutors, none can; especially out of the hands of such an one as is here described tearing and rending in pieces. As there is no God besides the Lord, there is no saviour besides him: there is no temporal nor spiritual saviour but he: salvation is not to be expected from any other; and were it not for him, saints must fall a prey to their enemies.

Ver. 3. O Lord my God, if I have done this.] The crime which Saul and his courtiers charged him with, and which was made so public that every body knew it; and therefore it was needless particularly to mention it; namely, that he lay in wait for Saul, and sought his life to take it away, (<092409>1 Samuel 24:9). The Targum interprets it of this psalm, paraphrasing it, “if I have made this song with an evil intention”; to give an ill character of any, and lead them with false charges; if there be iniquity in my hands; not that he was without sin, he had it in his heart; nor that he lived without the actual commission of sin: but his sense is, that there was no iniquity, as not in his heart, purpose, and design, so not in his hand, nor attempted by him, of the kind he was accused of, (<092411>1 Samuel 24:11). Otherwise, we often hear him complaining of the depravity of his nature, and acknowledging his sins and transgressions, (<193205>Psalm 32:5 38:3,4 51:1-5).

Ver. 4. If I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me, etc.] That is, when Saul was at peace with him; when he lived at his court, and ate at his table his meaning is, that he did not conspire against him, nor form schemes to deprive him of his crown nor of his life: or, as it may be rendered, “if I have rewarded to him that rewarded me evil” [f116]; that is, as Jarchi explains it, if I rewarded him as he rewarded me, evil for evil. This David did not; and it is eminently true of Christ his antitype, (<600223>1 Peter 2:23); and in it he ought to be imitated by every believer, (<451217>Romans 12:17);

yea, I have delivered him that without cause is mine enemy; meaning Saul, who persecuted David without any just reason, and whom David delivered without any obligation to do it; not for any benefit and kindness he had received from him; for the phrase “without cause” may be read in connection either with the word “delivered” [f117]; for the deliverance was wrought without any cause or merit on Saul’s part, or profit to David; or with the word “enemy”, for Saul was David’s enemy without any just cause on David’s part: and the deliverance referred to was when he cut off Saul’s skirt, in the cave at Engedi, and spared his life; and when he took away his spear from him, as he was sleeping in the trench, and did not destroy him, nor suffer those that would to do it, (<092404>1 Samuel 24:4,5,7,10,17 26:8,11). The words may be rendered, “only I stripped him” [f118]. The sense is, that he cut off the skirt of his coat, and took away his spear, and so in part stripped him both of his clothes and armour, at two different times; not to do him any hurt, but to let him know, as Jarchi observes, that he was delivered into his hands, and he could have slain him, but did not. The same Jewish writer interprets the word used “of stripping of garments”; and Aben Ezra observes, from R. Moses, that the “vau”, rendered “yea”, signifies “only”, as in (<014210>Genesis 42:10).

Ver. 5. Let the enemy persecute my soul, and take [it], etc.] That is, if the above things he was charged with could be proved against him; then he was content that Saul his enemy should pursue after him, and apprehend him, and bring him to justice, by taking away his life from him;

yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth; with the utmost indignation and contempt, without showing any mercy; as the lion treads down his prey, and tears it to pieces, (<330508>Micah 5:8); or as the potter treads his clay under foot, (<234125>Isaiah 41:25);

and lay mine honour in the dust; meaning either his life and soul, as before; denominating himself from his better part, and which he elsewhere calls his glory, (<191609>Psalm 16:9 30:12 57:8); (see <014906>Genesis 49:6); or else his body, as R. Judah Ben Balaam, who is blamed for it by Jarchi; or rather his fame, credit, and reputation, that he had gained, both by his courage and valour in the field, and by his wise and prudent behaviour at court, (<091807>1 Samuel 18:7,16). Should he appear to be guilty of the crimes he was accused of, he is willing to have his glorious name buried in the dust of oblivion, and his memory perish for ever. The words are to be considered as a strong assertion of his innocence, in an appeal to God, the searcher of hearts, and the trier of the reins of men; and as imprecating on himself the worst of evils, should it not appear; (see <183121>Job 31:21,22).

Selah; Aben Ezra renders “selah”, “in truth”, “let it be so”; and the Targum renders it, as usual, “for ever”; (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

Ver. 6. Arise, O Lord, in thine anger, etc.] This and the following phrase do not suppose local motion in God, to whom it cannot belong, being infinite and immense, but are spoken of him after the manner of men, who seems sometimes as though he had laid himself down, and was unconcerned about and took no notice of human affairs, of the insults of the wicked and the oppressions of the righteous; wherefore the psalmist beseeches him to “arise”, which he may be said to do when he comes forth in his power in the defence of his people, and against their enemies; (see <191205>Psalm 12:5 <232621>Isaiah 26:21); and he also prays him to arise in anger, to show himself displeased, and give some tokens of his resentment, by letting his enemies feel the lighting down of his arm with the indignation of his anger;

lift up thyself, because of the rage of mine enemies; ascend the throne of judgment, and there sit judging right; show thyself to be the Judge of the earth, high and lifted up; let it appear that thou art above all mine enemies, higher and more powerful than they; stop their rage, break the force of their fury, lift up a standard against them, who, likes mighty flood, threaten to bear all before them: or “lift up thyself in rage”, or “fierce wrath, because of”, or “against mine enemies”[f119]: and so the sense is the same as before; and this way go many of the Jewish interpreters[f120];

and awake for me [to] the judgment [that] thou hast commanded; not that sleep falls upon God, for the keeper of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps; nor does it fall on any but corporeal beings, not upon angels, nor the souls of men, much less on God; but he sometimes in his providence seems to lie dormant and inactive, as if he disregarded what is done in this world; and therefore his people address him as if he was asleep, and call upon him to arise to their help and assistance; (see <194423>Psalm 44:23,26); and so David here, “awake for me”, that is, hasten to come to me and help me; suggesting that he was in great distress and danger, by reason of his enemies, should he delay coming to him. By “judgment” is either meant the vengeance which God had ordered him to execute upon his enemies, as Jarchi interprets it, and therefore he entreats him to arise and put him in a capacity of doing it; or else his innocence, and the vindication of it, which God had promised him, and then the petition is much the same with (<190708>Psalm 7:8). But the generality of Jewish[f121] writers understand it of the kingdom which God had appointed for him, and for which he was anointed by Samuel; and who had told Saul that God had found a man after his own heart, whom he had “commanded” to be captain over his people, (<091314>1 Samuel 13:14); wherefore the psalmist prays that God would hasten the fulfilment of his purpose and promise, and set him on the throne, that so he might administer justice and judgment to the people.

Ver. 7. So shall the congregation of the people compass thee about, etc.] By “the congregation of the people” are meant the nation of the Jews, the twelve tribes of Israel, called an assembly of people, and a company of nations, (<012803>Genesis 28:3 35:11); and this is to be understood not of their gathering together in an hostile manner about David to take him, which might be interpreted compassing God himself about, David being as dear to him as the apple of his eye, which is the sense of several Jewish commentators[f122]; but rather of their encompassing and surrounding the altar of God with songs of deliverance, upon David’s being rid of his enemies and advanced to the throne of the kingdom; (see <192606>Psalm 26:6,7); unless it should have regard to the pure worship of God by David, which was greatly neglected in Saul’s time; and then the sense is, that the psalmist prays that he might be established in his kingdom, as God had appointed and commanded, when he would fetch up the ark of God, and encourage the worship of God, and rectify all disorders in it; that so the several tribes might come up to Jerusalem and encompass the ark, the symbol of the divine Presence, and worship in his holy mountain; for their sakes therefore return thou on high; take, the throne of justice, high and lifted up, vindicate the cause of the oppressed, deliver me from all my troubles, put me into the peaceable possession of my kingdom; if not for my, sake, yet for the sake of thy church and people, and for the sake of thy worship and thy glory; the Targum paraphrases it, “return thou to the house of thy Shechinah”.

Ver. 8. The Lord shall judge the people, etc.] The inhabitants of the world in general; for God is the Judge of all the earth, and he judges the world in righteousness daily, and ministers judgment in uprightness, though it is not always manifest; or his own people in particular, whose cause he pleads, whose injuries and wrongs he avenges, whose persons he protects and defends; this the psalmist expresses with confidence, and therefore, suitable to his character as a Judge, he entreats him as follows:

judge me, O Lord, according to my righteousness; he speaks not of his justification before God, in whose sight he well knew no flesh living could be justified by their own righteousness, (<19E302>Psalm 143:2); nor of the righteousness of his person, either imputed or inherent; but of the righteousness of his cause, (<193527>Psalm 35:27); not of his righteousness Godward, for he knew that he was a sinner with respect to him; but of his righteousness towards Saul, against whom he had not sinned, but had acted towards him in the most righteous and faithful manner, (<092411>1 Samuel 24:11); and therefore desired to be judged, and was content to stand or fall according to his conduct and behaviour towards him; and according to mine integrity [that is] in me; who had always acted the sincere and upright part towards Saul, though he had pursued him with so much fury and violence; the psalmist’s prayer was heard and answered, (<191820>Psalm 18:20,24).

Ver. 9. Oh, let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end, etc.] Which will not be till the measure of it is fully up, and that will not be till the wicked are no more; for, as long as they are in the world they will be committing wickedness, and like the troubled sea continually cast up the mire and dirt of sin; and they will remain to the end of the world, till the new Jerusalem church state shall take place, when all the Lord’s people will be righteous, and there will not be a Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts, nor a pricking brier or grieving thorn in all the land; for, in the new earth will no sinner be, but righteous persons only; and for this state the psalmist may be thought to pray; however by this petition and the following he expresses his hatred of sin and love of righteousness: some choose to render the words [f123], “let wickedness now consume the wicked”; as in the issue it will, unless the grace of God takes place; some sins consume the bodies, others the estates of wicked men, and some both; and all are the means of destroying both body and soul in hell, if grace prevent not; this may be considered as a declaration of what will be, being a prophetic petition [f124];

but establish the just; or righteous one; meaning himself, and every other who is made righteous, not by his own righteousness, but by the righteousness of Christ imputed to him; and who needs not to have his righteousness established, which is in itself stable, firm, and sure, and cannot be more so; it is an everlasting one, and cannot be abolished, but abides for ever, and will answer for him in a time to come; but his faith to be established more and more in its exercise on this righteousness: nor do the persons of the just need establishing, or can they be more stable than they are, as considered in Christ, as they are the objects of God’s everlasting love, secured in the covenant of grace, and built on Christ the foundation; but the graces of faith, hope, and love, need daily establishing on their proper object, they being weak, fickle, and inconstant in their acts; and the saints need more and more establishing in the doctrines of the Gospel, and in their adherence to the cause of God and Christ and true religion; and it is God’s work to establish them, to whom the psalmist applies; (see <600510>1 Peter 5:10);

for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins; he is righteous himself in his nature, and in all his works, and he knows who are righteous and who are wicked; he knows the hearts, thoughts, affections, and inward principles of all men, and the springs of all their actions; he looks not at outward appearances, but at the heart; and as he can distinguish between the one and the other, he is capable of punishing the wicked and of confirming the righteous, consistent with the truth of his perfections.

Ver. 10. My defence [is] of God, etc.] Or “my shield [is] in” or “of God” [f125]; God was his shield, his protector and defender; (see <190303>Psalm 3:3); or “my shield [is] with God”; that is, Christ, who was the shield his faith made use of against every spiritual enemy, was with God; he was with him as the Word and Son of God from all eternity, and as the living Redeemer of his people before his incarnation; and he is now with him as their intercessor and advocate, who pleads in defence of them, and opposes himself, his blood and righteousness, to all the charges and accusations of Satan; which saveth the upright in heart: who have the truth of grace in them, wisdom in the hidden part; who are sincere in their affections, purposes, and designs, in their faith, hope, and love; and act from real principles of truth and love, in the integrity of their souls; for these light and gladness are sown, to them grace and glory are given, and no good thing is withheld from them; they are saved by God from sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell, and every enemy, with a spiritual and everlasting salvation.

Ver. 11. God judgeth the righteous, etc.] Not all that are thought to be righteous, or think themselves to be so, are such; nor is any man naturally righteous, or of himself, nor by virtue of his obedience to the law of works; but such only are righteous who are made so by the obedience of Christ; these God governs and protects, avenges their injuries and defends their persons; some render the words, “God is a righteous Judge” [f126]; he is so now in the administrations of his government of the universe, and he will be so hereafter in the general judgment of the world; and God is angry [with the wicked] every day; wicked men are daily sinning, and God is always the same in his nature, and has the same aversion to sin continually; and though he is not always making men examples of his wrath, yet his wrath is revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness of men; and there are frequent stances of it; and when he is silent he is still angry, and in his own time will stir up all his wrath, and rebuke in his hot displeasure.

Ver. 12. If he turn not, etc.] Not God, but the enemy, or the wicked man, spoken of (<190705>Psalm 7:5,9,11); if he turn not from his wicked course of life, to the Lord to live to him, and according to his will; unless he is converted and repents of his sin, and there is a change wrought in him, in his heart and life; the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions read, “if ye turn not”, or “are not converted”, an apostrophe to the wicked;

he will whet his sword: God is a man of war, and he is sometimes represented as accoutred with military weapons; (see <235917>Isaiah 59:17,18); and among the rest with the sword of judgment, which he may be said to whet, when he prepares sharp and sore judgments for his enemies, (<232701>Isaiah 27:1 <053241>Deuteronomy 32:41);

he hath bent his bow, and made it ready; drawn his bow of vengeance, and put it on the full stretch, and made it ready with the arrows of his wrath, levelled against the wicked, with whom he is angry; which is expressive of their speedy and inevitable ruin, in case of impenitence; (see <250204>Lamentations 2:4 3:12,13); or "trod his bow", as is the usual phrase elsewhere; (see <191102>Psalm 11:2 <250204>Lamentations 2:4 3:12); which was done by the feet, and was necessary when the bow was a strong one, as Jarchi on (<191102>Psalm 11:2); observes; and so the Arabs, as Suidas [f127] relates, using arrows the length of a man, put their feet on the string of the bow instead of their hands.

Ver. 13. He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death, etc.] The weapons of his indignation, (<231305>Isaiah 13:5); which, will issue both in the first and second death, corporeal and eternal; the instruments of the former are diseases of various kinds, and judgments, as famine, pestilence, etc. and of the latter not only the law is an instrument of it, that being the letter which kills, and is the ministration of condemnation and death, but even the Gospel itself to wicked men is the savour of death unto death; and devils will be the executioners of it;

he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors: the word for persecutors signifies "hot" or "burning" [f128], and designs such persons who burn in malice and wrath, In rage and fury, against the saints, and hotly pursue after them, as Laban did after Jacob, (<013136>Genesis 31:36); for these more especially God has determined in his eternal purposes and decrees, and for these he has provided in his quiver, arrows of wrath and vengeance, fiery ones; and against these will he bring them forth, direct them, and shoot them at them, (<196407>Psalm 64:7). Some [f129] understand all this not of God, but of the wicked man, and read "if he turn not", but, on the contrary, instead of that, "will whet his sword, bend his bow", etc. against the righteous; yet he shall be disappointed, he shall not accomplish his designs, as appears by the following verses; these phrases are used of wicked men, (<191102>Psalm 11:2 37:14,15 64:2-4), but the former sense seems best.

Ver. 14. Behold, he travaileth with iniquity, etc.] Is full of it, and big with it, as a woman with child, and eagerly desires to bring it forth, and is in pain till he commits it; and hath conceived mischief; that which is injurious to God and the perfections of his nature, a transgression of his law, and an affront to his justice and holiness, is doing wrong to fellow creatures, and harm to themselves, either to their name and credit, or to their substance and estates, or to their bodies and souls, and it may be to them all; and yet this they conceive, they devise it in their hearts, and form schemes how to bring it to pass, and which they do with great freedom, deliberation, and pleasure; and brought forth falsehood; or “vanity”[f130], or a vain thing, as the same word is rendered in (<181535>Job 15:35); no fruit at all, but wind, or stubble, (<232617>Isaiah 26:17 33:11); that which deceives does not answer the expectation, but the contrary to it; the sense is, that wicked men having devised mischievous things against the saints, they are big with expectations of success, and strive to bring their purposes to bear, but are miserably disappointed, for it all ends in vanity and vexation of spirit to themselves.

Ver. 15. He made a pit and digged it, etc.] That is, he digged a pit, and made it very large and capacious, to answer his purposes; and is fallen into the ditch [which] he made; so it is said of the Heathen, (<190915>Psalm 9:15); and is exemplified in the case of Haman, who was hanged upon the gallows he had built for Mordecai. Kimchi explains this of Saul’s falling upon his own sword, and dying by it, which he drew against David; phrase is proverbial, (<202627>Proverbs 26:27 <211008>Ecclesiastes 10:8); the sense of this and the above figurative expressions is literally and properly given in (<190716>Psalm 7:16).

Ver. 16. His mischief shall return upon his own head, etc.] That which he conceived and devised in his mind, and attempted to bring upon others, shall fall upon himself, as a just judgment from heaven upon him; and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate; referring to the violence with which Saul pursued David, which would be requited to him, and of which he prophesied, (<092610>1 Samuel 26:10).

Ver. 17. I will praise the Lord according to his righteousness, etc.] Or on account of it, as it was displayed in vindicating the innocent, and punishing the wicked; so Pharaoh having ordered male infants of the Hebrews to be drowned, and he himself and his host in righteous judgment being drowned in the Red sea; Moses and the children of Israel sung a song, as the psalmist here; and will sing praise to the name of the Lord most high; whose name is Jehovah, and is the most High over all the earth; and who had now, according to the psalmist’s request, (<190706>Psalm 7:6,7); arose and lifted up himself, and returned on high, and had shown himself to be above all David’s enemies, and had sat on the throne judging right.

PSALM 8

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 8

To the chief Musician upon Gittith, a Psalm of David

Some think this psalm was composed when the ark was brought to the house of Obededom the Gittite; and that it was delivered to him and his sons, as others were to Asaph, to Jeduthun, to the sons of Korah, etc. [f131]. But against this lies a strong objection, that Obededom and his sons were porters, and not singers, (<132604>1 Chronicles 26:4,15); and for the same reason “gittith” cannot be the name of a musical instrument which was kept in his family, and presided over by them[f132]. Some are of opinion this word had its name from Gath; and that this psalm was wrote by David when he was there[f133]; or that it is the name of a musical instrument invented and made there, and which was brought from thence[f134]: And so the Targum paraphrases it;

> “upon the harp which was brought from Gath.”

A word like this signifies “winepresses”: and hence the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic versions, render it “for the winepresses”: which Theodoret interprets of churches, where Christ the true vine is gathered by believers, and they prepare the mystic wine. Some think[f135] the psalms which bear this name were composed for the feast of tabernacles: when, having got in their vintage, they filled their presses, and squeezed their grapes, and therefore gave thanks; it was usual, even with the Heathens[f136], to make use of the harp, and other instruments of music, at the gathering of the grapes to be squeezed and pressed. Some of the Jewish writers[f137] apply it to the times of Edom’s destruction, who was to be trodden down as in a winepress, foretold in (<236301>Isaiah 63:1-3); and others interpret it of the times of Gog and Magog, when the prophecy in (<290313>Joel 3:13); shall be fulfilled[f138] and some have thought this psalm to be a song of praise, like one of those sung by them that tread in the winepress; the time of vintage being a time of joy. The ancient Christian writers explain it of the sufferings of Christ, when he trod the winepress of his Father’s wrath. But the word “gittith” is either the first word of some song, as Aben Ezra thinks; or the name of the tune, as Kimchi; or rather of the musical instrument to which this psalm was set and sung. Though the author of the epistle to the Hebrews, (<580206>Hebrews 2:6); citing some passages from this psalm, only says, “one in a certain place testified”; without mentioning either the number of the psalm, or the name of the writer; yet it is certain that David was the penman of it: and both from the testimony of that writer, and from a citation of Christ himself, it is evident that the subject of this psalm is the Messiah, and that it belongs to his times; (see <580206>Hebrews 2:6-9 <402115>Matthew 21:15,16). So the Syriac scholiast;

> “the eighth psalm is concerning Christ our Redeemer.”

Ver. 1. O Lord our God, etc.] Jehovah, the one God, who is Lord of all angels and men, and in an especial manner Lord and King of saints;

how excellent [is] thy name in all the earth! by the “name” of God is not meant any particular name of his, by which he is called; but either himself, his nature and perfections; or rather that by which he is made known, and particularly his Gospel; (see <431706>John 17:6 <440915>Acts 9:15); this is excellent in its nature, it being good news, and glad tidings of good things, which display the love, grace, mercy, and kindness of God to men, as well as his wisdom, power, truth, and faithfulness; and in the subject matter of it, Christ and his righteousness, and life and salvation by him, the spiritual blessings of grace it publishes, and the exceeding great and precious promises it contains; and in its usefulness for the enlightening, quickening, and converting sinners, and for the comforting and reviving of drooping saints. It is the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, and excels the law in glory. It cannot well be said how glorious it is; it is marvellously excellent; and that “in all the earth”, being carried by the apostles, who were sent by Christ with it, into all the world; where it has shone out, and appeared gloriously to Gentiles as well as Jews. This clause shows that this is said by David prophetically of Gospel times; for not in his time, nor in any period under the Old Testament, was the name of the Lord glorious and excellent in all the earth. His name was great in Israel, but not in all the world. He showed his word, and gave his statutes and ordinances to Jacob; but as for the Gentiles, they were without them, and were strangers to the covenants of promise, (<197601>Psalm 76:1,2 147:19,20 <490212>Ephesians 2:12); but this was true of the first times of the Gospel; and will be still more fully accomplished when the prophecies in (<390111>Malachi 1:11 <381409>Zechariah 14:9); shall be fulfilled;

who hast set thy glory above the heavens: meaning his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, the brightness of his glory; in whom is all the fulness of the Godhead, the glory of all the divine perfections; so called (<196302>Psalm 63:2 85:9); and the setting of him above the heavens designs the exaltation of him at the right hand of God; where angels, principalities, and powers, became subject to him, and he was made higher than the heavens, (<580726>Hebrews 7:26). And it was in consequence, and by virtue of this, that the Gospel was spread throughout the earth; for upon Christ's exaltation the Spirit was poured down upon the apostles, and they were endowed with girls qualifying them to carry the Gospel into each of the parts of the world.

Ver. 2. Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, etc.] Not literally such, though the Jewish writers [f139] generally so understand it; as do some Christian interpreters, who explain it of the wonderful formation, nourishment, and growth of infants; and of the marvellous care of God in providing the breast for them; in filling it with milk, and teaching them to suck; which, being observed by men, occasion praise to God, to the confusion of atheists and infidels. But this is no other than what is common to brute creatures: rather the words are to be understood in a figurative sense. So Jarchi applies them to the priests and Levites in the temple: but it is best to interpret them of the apostles and first preachers of the Gospel; and of such who received it and professed it; who were in their own eyes, and in the eyes of the world, as babes and sucklings, (<401125>Matthew 11:25);

hast thou ordained strength: by which is meant the Gospel, the rod of Christ's strength, and the power of God unto salvation; and which being made useful for the conversion of souls, is the cause of much praise and thanksgiving to God: this, by the mouths and means of the apostles and first ministers of the word, God ordained, or "founded" [f140], settled and established in the world, notwithstanding all the opposition made unto it; so that the gates of hell cannot prevail against it, to root it out of the world; but it will continue the everlasting Gospel;

because of thine enemies: either for the sake of subduing them, and bringing them to the obedience of Christ, that is, the elect of God, who are before conversion enemies to God and Christ; or rather for the sake of confounding the implacable enemies of God and Christ, and of the cause and interest of religion. In order to which God has made choice of instruments the most mean and despicable, (<460126>1 Corinthians 1:26-28); and God’s end in this more particularly is expressed in the following clause; that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger; Satan, the enemy of mankind, the adversary of Christ personal and mystical, who is filled with envy, wrath, and malice, against Christ and his people; him, by the, means of the Gospel and the ministry of it, God has “caused to cease”[f141], as the word may be rendered; not as to his being, but as to his power and authority, in the Gentile world; out of which, to his great mortification, he was cast, by the mouth and ministry of babes and sucklings. These words are applied by Christ to the children in the temple, crying Hosanna to the son of David, out of whose mouths God perfected the praise of the Messiah; and by which, and Christ’s defence of them, the Scribes and Pharisees, the mortal enemies of Christ, and who wanted to revenge themselves on him, were silenced and stilled, (<402115>Matthew 21:15,16).

Ver. 3. When I consider thy heavens, etc.] Where God dwells, and which he has made; the airy and starry heavens, which are to be seen with the bodily eye; and the heaven of heavens, which is to be beheld and considered by faith:

the work of thy fingers; being curiously wrought by his power, and garnished by his Spirit: for the finger of God is the Spirit of God; (see <401228>Matthew 12:28); compared with (<421120>Luke 11:20);

the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained, or “prepared”[f142], for various uses to the earth, and the inhabitants of it. The sun is not mentioned, because it cannot be looked upon, as the moon and the stars may, nor be seen when they are. And it is generally thought that David composed this psalm in the night, When these celestial bodies were in view; and, it may be, while he was keeping his father’s sheep, since, in the enumeration of the creatures subject to man, sheep are mentioned first, as being in view, (<190807>Psalm 8:7). The heavenly bodies are very glorious creatures, and are worthy of the consideration and contemplation of man, and even of a saint; whereby he may be led to observe the wisdom, power, goodness, and greatness of God.

Ver. 4. What is man, that thou art mindful of him? etc.] That is, the psalmist, while he was considering the greatness and glory of the celestial bodies, thought this within himself, and so expressed it; which is to be understood, not of man in general, nor of Adam in a state of innocence; he could not be called “Enosh”, the word here used, which signifies a frail, weak, sickly mortal man; nor could he with any propriety be said to be the son of man, as in the following clause: nor of fallen man, or of Adam’s posterity, descending from him by ordinary generation; for all things are not put in subjection to them, as is hereafter said of man: but this is to be understood of the man Christ Jesus, as it is interpreted in (<580206>Hebrews 2:6-9); or of that individual of human nature which Christ assumed. The name of Enosh well agrees with him, who was a man of no note and esteem among men, a worm and no man, a man of sorrows and acquainted with griefs, encompassed with infirmities, and was subject to death, and did die. Now it was a marvellous thing that God should be mindful of that individual of human nature; that he should prepare it in his council and covenant; that among the vast numbers of individuals which it came up in his infinite mind to create, he should choose this, to exalt it, and appoint it to union with his own Son, and take that delight in it he did; that when it was formed by his Spirit, he should anoint it with the oil of gladness above his fellows; that he should take such providential care of it, and so often and so strongly express his affection for it; that he should regard it, and support it under sufferings; and when in the grave, did not leave it, nor suffer it to see corruption; but raised it from the dead, and gave it glory, and exalted it at his own right hand; and the son of man, that thou visitest him? The name of “the son of man” is the name of the Messiah, in (<198017>Psalm 80:17 <270713>Daniel 7:13); and is often given to Christ, and used by him of himself in the New Testament. And this visiting of him is not to be understood in a way of wrath, though he was so visited by God, when he bore the chastisements of his people; but in a way of favour, by bestowing upon him without measure the gifts and graces of his Spirit; by affording him his gracious presence, and tilling him with spiritual peace and joy.

Ver. 5. For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, etc.] Than Elohim, “than God”, as this word usually signifies: and could it be interpreted of man, as made by God, it might be thought to refer to the creation of him in the image and likeness of God; but as it must be understood of the human nature of Christ, it may regard the wonderful union of it to the Son of God, on account of which it is called by the same name, (<420135>Luke 1:35); and so made but a little lower than God, being next unto him, and in so near an union with a divine Person; and which union is hypostatical or personal, the human nature being taken into a personal union with the Son of God: and so these words give an instance of God’s marvellous regard to it; and contain a reason, proving that he has been mindful of it, and visited it. Though rather this clause refers to the humiliation of Christ in his human nature, as it is interpreted in (<580209>Hebrews 2:9); and so it removes an objection, as it is connected with the following clause, which might be made against what had been observed in (<190804>Psalm 8:4), on account of the low estate of Christ’s human nature, when here on the earth; and the sense is, that God has been mindful of it, and visited it, notwithstanding its state of humiliation for a little while, seeing he has crowned it with glory and honour, etc. Christ was made low as to nature, place, estate, reputation, and life; he who was the most high God, in the form of God, and equal to him in the divine nature, was made frail mortal flesh, and was in the form of a servant in the human nature. He who dwelt on high, and lay in the bosom of his Father, descended into the lower parts of the earth, was formed in the womb of a virgin, and when born was laid in a manager, and dwelt and conversed with sinful mortal men upon earth: he who was Lord of all, whose is the earth, and the fulness of it, had not where to lay his head: he whose glory was the glory of the only begotten of the Father, became a worm and no man in the esteem of men, was despised and rejected of men, and was of no reputation: and he who was the Lord of life and glory was crucified and killed; becoming obedient to death, even the death of the cross. Such is the nature of Christ’s humiliation, expressed by being “made low”; the degree of it is, “lower than Elohim”, than God: he was equal to him in the divine nature, but inferior to him in the human nature, (<431428>John 14:28). As Mediator he was the servant of God, and the servant is not greater than his master; nor as such so great: and he was in his low estate in such a condition as to need the help and assistance of God, which he had in the day of salvation: and especially he was lower when he, was deserted by him, (<402746>Matthew 27:46). Agreeably to which, some render the words, as they will bear to be rendered, “thou didst make him want God”, or “didst deprive”, or “bereave him of God” [f143]; that is, of the gracious presence of God: and so Christ was made lower than God in nature, office, and condition. Sometimes the word “Elohim” is used for civil magistrates, as in (<198206>Psalm 82:6); because they are in God’s stead, and represent him; and, on account of their majesty, authority, and power, bear some resemblance to him. Now Christ was made lower than they, inasmuch as he not only taught obedience to them, but obeyed them himself, was a servant of rulers, paid tribute to them, and suffered himself to be examined, tried, judged, and condemned by them; but since the word is rendered “angels” by the Chaldee paraphrase, the Septuagint interpreters, the Jewish commentators, Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, and in the Arabic, Syriac, and Ethiopic versions, and above all by the author of the epistle to the Hebrews, it is best to interpret it of them: and Christ was made lower than they by assuming human nature, which is inferior to theirs, especially in the corporeal part of it; and more so, inasmuch as it was attended with infirmities, and subject to sorrows and griefs; and as it was sometimes reduced to great extremes, and to want the comforts of life; and sometimes was in such distress as to need the assistance and ministration of angels, which it had, (<400411>Matthew 4:11 <422243>Luke 22:43); and particularly it was lower than they when deserted by God, whose face they always behold. To which may be added, that Christ was made under, a law given by the disposition of angels, ordained by them, and is called “the word” spoken by them; some parts of which they are not subject to; but the particular instance the apostle observes is suffering of death, (<580209>Hebrews 2:9); which angels are not liable to, they die not. The duration of this low estate was “a little while”; for so the Hebrew word j [m may be rendered, as it is in (<193710>Psalm 37:10), and the Greek βραχυ τι, used by the Septuagint, and the author of the epistle to the Hebrews, as it is in (<440534>Acts 5:34); which refers either to the time of suffering death, and lying under the power of that and the grave, which was but a little time; or at most to the days of his flesh, reaching from his incarnation to his resurrection; which was a course but of a few years, and may very well be expressed in this manner. And to this low estate was Christ brought by Jehovah the Father, who is the person spoken of throughout the psalm; he preordained him to it, prepared a body for him, sent him in the fulness of time, made of a woman, made under the law, and had a very great hand in his sufferings and death: though all was with Christ’s full consent, and with his free good will;

and hast crowned him with glory and honour; by raising him from the dead, and setting him at his own right hand, committing all judgment to him; and requiring all creatures, angels and men, to give worship and adoration to him. And this being in consequence of his sufferings, after he had run the race, and endured a fight of afflictions; and because of the greatness of his glory and honour, with which he was as it were on all sides surrounded, he is said to be “crowned” with it; who a little before was crowned with thorns, and encompassed with the terrors of death and hell. This respects his mediatorial glory.

Ver. 6. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands, etc.] All power in heaven and in earth being given to him: when he was raised from the dead, and when he ascended on high, and was set down at the right hand of God, he was made or declared Lord and Christ; Lord of the hosts of heaven, of all the angels there, King of saints, King of kings, and Lord of lords. All things in heaven and earth, which God has made, are put into his hands, to subserve his cause and glory, and for the good of his people; for he is head over all things to the church. The Ethiopic version reads, “all the works of thy hands”; among whom are angels. This is a greater dominion than was given to the first man, Adam, (<010125>Genesis 1:25); thou hast put all [things] under his feet; or put them in subjection to him, as the phrase signifies, and as it is interpreted, (<580208>Hebrews 2:8). Good angels are subject to him, as appears by their ministration to him, their dependence on him, and adoration of him, (<600322>1 Peter 3:22); devils are subject to him, whether they will or not; and so are wicked men, whose power and wrath he is able to restrain, and does; and the church is subject to Christ, as her head; and so all good men, willingly and heartily, and from a principle of love, obey his commands: yea, all creatures in the earth, air, and sea, are in subjection to him; an enumeration of which is given in the following verses.

Ver. 7. All sheep and oxen, etc.] The tame creatures, which are useful for food and clothing:

yea, and the beasts of the field; the wild beasts, which he can make use of to destroy and devour his enemies, and whom he can restrain from harming his own people, (<241508>Jeremiah 15:8 <270622>Daniel 6:22 <442803>Acts 28:3-5).

Ver. 8. The fowl of the air, etc.] These he rained about the tents of the Israelites for their relief, (<197827>Psalm 78:27), and can command them to feed his people, as the ravens did Elijah, (<111704>1 Kings 17:4,6); or to destroy his enemies, (<241503>Jeremiah 15:3); (see <195010>Psalm 50:10,11); and the fish of the sea: instances of Christ’s power over them, and of their being at his command, and for his service, may be seen in (<401727>Matthew 17:27 <420505>Luke 5:5,6 <432103>John 21:3,6);

[and whatsoever] passeth through the paths of the seas: some [f144] understand this of ships, made by the wisdom and art of men, in which they pass through the paths of the sea, and fish in the midst of it. The Targum paraphrases it, “and leviathan, which passes through the paths of the sea”. Compare with this (<232701>Isaiah 27:1). Some interpret all these things in a figurative and allegorical way; and some of the ancients by “sheep” understood believers among the Gentiles; by “oxen”, the Jews; by “the beasts of the field”, idolaters and profane persons; “by the fowls of the air”, angels; and by “the fish of the sea”, devils: but these are much better explained by Cocceius, who, by “sheep”, understands common members of the churches; by “oxen”, those that labour in the word and doctrine; by “the beasts of the field”, aliens from the city and kingdom of God; men fierce and cruel, (<231106>Isaiah 11:6-8 65:25); by “the fowl of the air”, such as are tilted up with pride and vanity; and by “the fish of the sea”, such as are immersed in worldly pleasures. But it is best to interpret the whole literally; from whence may be observed, that what was lost by the first Adam is restored by the second; and that believers have a free use of all the creatures through Christ: and not only the things here mentioned are subject to him, but everything else; there is nothing left that is not put under him, only he is excepted that put all things under him, (<580208>Hebrews 2:8 <461527>1 Corinthians 15:27).

Ver. 9. O Lord our Lord, how excellent [is] thy name in all the earth! The psalm ends with the same words with which it begins; which shows that the sense of this, with which the psalmist was affected, continued with him, and doubtless increased, after such a confirmation of it, by the instances he was led to take notice of. (See Gill on “<190801>Psalm 8:1”).

PSALM 9

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 9

To the chief Musician upon Muthlabben, a Psalm of David

Some, take “muthlabben” to be the name of the tune to which this psalm was sung, and to design the same note which we call the counter-tenor: others think, that “upon muth”, or “almuth”, are but one word, and the same as “alamoth”, (<194501>Psalm 45:1), title; and that it is the name of a musical instrument; and that “Ben” in “labben”, is the name of the chief musician, who was over that sort of instrument, to whom the psalm is inscribed[f145]; and indeed R. Sol Jarchi says, that he had seen in the great Masorah these words as one; and so it seems the Septuagint interpreters read them, who render them, “for the hidden things of the son”; and the Arabic version, “concerning the mysteries of the son”: and Ben is a name, it is said, of one of the singers, whose kindred and companions were appointed with psalteries on “alamoth”, (<131518>1 Chronicles 15:18,20). And so then the title runs thus; “to the chief musician on alamoth, [even to] Ben”. But others are of opinion that the subject matter or occasion of the psalm is designed by this phrase; and that as “muth” signifies “death”, the death of some person is intended, on account of which this psalm was composed; some say Nabal, seeing the word ˆbl, “Laban”, inverted, or read backwards, is “Nabal”[f146], whose death affected David; as appears from (<092538>1 Samuel 25:38,39). Others, that it was one of the kings of the Gentiles, whose name was Labben, and is mentioned nowhere else, who fought with David, and whom he slew, and upon his death penned this psalm[f137]. Others, Goliath the Philistine[f148], who is called, (<091704>1 Samuel 17:4,23). µynbh çya, which we render “champion” and dueller, one of two that fight together. But rather the reason of the name is, as given by the Jewish commentators[f149], because he went and stood between the two camps of the Philistines and the Israelites; and so the Chaldee paraphrase renders the title of this psalm,

> “to praise, concerning the death of the man who went out between the camps, a song of David.”

And so the psalm itself, in the Targum, and by other Jewish writers, is interpreted of Goliath and the Philistines, and of the victory over them; and which does not seem amiss. Arama interprets it of the death of Saul. Others interpret Almuth Labben "of the death of the son"; and understand it of the death of Absalom, the son of David[f150]: but David's passion moved in another way, not in joy, but in grief, (<101833>2 Samuel 18:33); nor is there anything in the psalm that can be referred unto it. Others, of the death of the son of God; but of that there is not the least hint in the psalm. Theodoret interprets it of Christ's victory over death by dying, which was a mystery or hidden thing. Rather, I should think, it might be interpreted of the death of the son of perdition, the man of sin and his followers; who may be typified by Goliath, and the Philistines: and so, as Ainsworth observes, as the former psalm was concerning the propagation of Christ's kingdom, this is of the destruction of antichrist. And Jerom, long ago said, this whole psalm is sung by the prophet in the person of the church, concerning antichrist: and to this agrees the Syriac version; which makes the subject of the psalm to be,

> "concerning Christ, taking the throne and kingdom, and routing the enemy."

And also the Arabic version, according to which the argument of the psalm is,

> "concerning the mysteries of the Son, with respect to the glory of Christ, and his resurrection and kingdom, and the destruction of all the children of disobedience."

To which may be added, that this psalm, according to R. Sol Jarchi, belongs to the time to come, to the days of the Messiah, and the future redemption by him.

Ver. 1. I will praise [thee], O Lord, with my whole, heart, etc.] This is what is called in the New Testament making melody in the heart, or singing with grace in the heart, (<490519>Ephesians 5:19 <510316>Colossians 3:16); and yet does not signify mere mental singing, but vocal singing, the heart joining therein; for the word here used for praise signifies to confess, to speak out, to declare openly the praises of God in the public congregation, as David elsewhere determines to do, (<19B101>Psalm 111:1 138:1,2); the heart ought to, be engaged in every, part of divine service and worship, whether in preaching or in hearing, or in prayer, or in singing of praise; and the whole heart also: sometimes God has nothing of the heart in worship, it is removed far from, him, and gone after other objects; and sometimes it is divided between God and the creature; hence the psalmist prays that God would unite his heart to fear him, and then he should praise him with all his heart, with all that was within him, with all the powers and faculties of his soul; (see <198611>Psalm 86:11,12 103:1). This phrase is not expressive of the perfection of this duty, or of performing it in such manner as that there would be no imperfection in it, or sin attending it; for good men fail in all their performances, and do nothing good without sin; hence provision is made for the iniquities of holy things; but of the heartiness and sincerity of it; and in such a sincere and upright manner the psalmist determines, in the strength of divine grace, to praise the Lord;

I will show forth all thy marvellous works; such as the creation of all things out of nothing, and the bringing them into the form and order in which they are by the word of God; and in which there is such a display of the power and wisdom of God; and particularly the formation of man out of the dust of the earth, in the image, and after the likeness of God; the sustentation of the whole world of creatures in their being, the providential care of them all, the preservation of man and beast; and especially the work of redemption: it is marvellous that God should think of redeeming sinful men; that he should fix the scheme of it in the way he has; that he should pick upon his own Son to be the Redeemer; that ungodly men, sinners, the chief of sinners, and enemies, should be the persons redeemed; and that not all the individuals of human nature, but some out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation: as also the work of grace, which is a new creation, and more marvellous than the old; a regeneration, or a being born again, which is astonishing to a natural man, who cannot conceive how this can be; a resurrection from the dead, or a causing dry bones to live; a call of men out of darkness into marvellous light; and it is as wondrous how this work is preserved amidst so many corruptions of the heart, temptations of Satan, and snares of the world, as that it is; to which may be added the wonderful works yet to be done, as the setting up of the kingdom of Christ, the destruction of antichrist, the resurrection of the dead, the last judgment, and the eternal glory and happiness of the saints; and doubtless the psalmist may have respect to the many victories which he, through the divine power, obtained over his enemies; and particularly the marvellous one which was given him over Goliath with a stone and sling: these the psalmist determined to make the subject of his song, to dwell and enlarge upon, to show forth unto others, and to point out the glories, beauties, and excellency of them: and when he says “all” of them, it must be understood of as many of them as were within the compass of his knowledge, and of as much of them as he was acquainted with; for otherwise the marvellous works of God are infinite and without number, (<180509>Job 5:9 9:10).

Ver. 2. I will be glad and rejoice in thee, etc.] Not in himself, in any attainments or works of his; not in his wisdom, riches, and strength, nor in his warlike exploits, but in the Lord; not in second causes, in horses and chariots, in armies, and in the courage and valour of men, but in God, as the author of deliverance, victory, and salvation; not in God only as the God of nature and providence, but as the God of all grace, and as his covenant God and Father; and because of the blessings of this covenant, as forgiveness of sin, a justifying righteousness, etc. for he rejoiced not in his own righteousness, but in the righteousness of Christ, as well as in his person, grace, and sacrifice; so the Chaldee paraphrase renders it, “I will be glad and rejoice”, Ærmymb, “in thy Word”, the Logos, the essential Word of God, of whom there were many types, promises, and prophecies in the former dispensation; two words being here used express the greatness of this joy, and especially the latter word denotes a very vehement joy, a joy unspeakable and full of glory; such as arises from a sight of Christ the object, and which the psalmist had now in view; and this was not a carnal and worldly joy, but joy in the Holy Ghost;

I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High; that is, to the glory of his name, his being, and perfections, as displayed in his marvellous works, and in the revelation of his word, and especially in his son; and under the character of the “most high” God, the supreme Being over all creatures, angels and men; (see <190717>Psalm 7:17).

Ver. 3. When mine enemies are turned back, etc.] As the Philistines were, when Goliath their champion was dead; and as the men that came to apprehend Christ, David’s antitype, went backwards and fell to the ground, through the superior power of Christ; and as sin, Satan, and the world, and at last antichrist, are made to retreat from the Lord’s people, who are more than conquerors over them through Christ that has loved them. “They shall fall and perish at thy presence”; they shall stumble at one thing or another which divine Providence will throw in their way to hinder them from executing their designs, and so fall before them they meant to destroy, and perish at the presence of God as wax melteth before the fire; (see <192702>Psalm 27:2 68:1,2); so antichrist shall be consumed with the breath of Christ’s mouth, and the brightness of his coming, (<530208>2 Thessalonians 2:8); and this is the ground and foundation of the psalmist’s joy, and rejoicing, and singing praise to God as it will be the reason of the joy of saints in the latter day, (<661822>Revelation 18:22 19:1,2).

Ver. 4. For thou hast maintained my right and my cause, etc.] Or vindicated and established his righteous cause; God had pleaded and defended it, and by the flight, fall, and ruin of his enemies, had clearly made it appear that his cause was just and good;

thou sittest in the throne judging right; God has not only a throne of grace on which he sits, and from whence he distributes grace and mercy to his people, but he has a throne of judgment, and which is prepared for it, as in (<190907>Psalm 9:7); where he sits as the Judge of all the earth, and will do right; nor can he do otherwise, though his judgments are not always manifest in the present state of things; and the vindication of the psalmist’s innocence and uprightness is another reason of his joy and gladness.

Ver. 5. Thou hast rebuked the Heathen, etc.] The people of the Philistines, as the Targum and Kimchi explain it, though some Jewish writers[f151] understand it of Amalek the chief of the Heathen nations; but it rather refers to Gospel times, and to the rebukes of the Heathen, by the preaching of the Gospel, for their idolatry and superstition; and especially to the latter day, and to the rebukes of the antichristian states, the Papists who are called Gentiles; which will be with flames of fire, and will issue in their utter extirpation, upon which a profound peace and prosperity will succeed in the Christian churches, according to (<230204>Isaiah 2:4); which is a prophecy of those times;

thou hast destroyed the wicked; the wicked man; for it is in the singular number, “labben”, as Aben Ezra observes, or who is meant by him; Goliath, according to the Targum and Kimchi; or Esau, as other Jewish writers[f152], that is, his posterity the Edomites; and each of these were figures of antichrist, the man of sin, the wicked one, whom Christ will slay with the breath of his lips, (<231104>Isaiah 11:4); thou hast put out their name for ever and ever; that is, the glory and reputation of their name, a good and honourable one, which they sought to transmit to the latest posterity; for though the names of wicked men may continue, as Pharaoh, Judas, and others; yet they continue with a scandal and reproach upon them that shall never be wiped off, their names rot and stink; (see <201007>Proverbs 10:7); the whole of this denotes the utter ruin and shameful end of the enemies of Christ and his church, and which is matter of joy to the saints.

Ver. 6. O thou enemy, etc.] Which some understand of Goliath, though we do not read of any desolations made by him, nor of any cities destroyed by him; nor by the Israelites upon his death, and the flight of the Philistines on that account; Jarchi interprets it of Esau and his posterity, who shall be destroyed in future time, to which he applies, (<263509>Ezekiel 35:9); other Jewish writers[f153] think Amalek is intended, whose destruction they suppose will be in the days of the Messiah, and then will this Scripture be fulfilled: and as these all prefigured antichrist, as before observed, he seems to be designed, and not Satan, as some Christian interpreters have thought, that enemy of Christ, personal and mystical, of the church, and every true believer; and so is antichrist, he opposes himself to God, and all that is called God; he is one that is contrary to Christ, as his name signifies, to his persons, offices, grace, and kingdom; who blasphemes the name of God, his tabernacle, and his saints;

destructions are come to a perpetual end; which may be understood either of the destructions and desolations made by antichrist, the havoc he has made in the world, treading under foot the holy city, the church, destroying the earth and the inhabitants of it, the bodies, souls, and estates of men; but now the psalmist prophetically declares the end of them to be come, his forty two months, or one thousand two hundred and sixty days or years, will be up, and he will go on no more desolating and destroying; (see <661102>Revelation 11:2,3,18 13:5,7); or of the destructions and desolations made upon him by the pouring out of the seven vials upon the antichristian states, upon the seat of the beast, and upon both Pope and Turk, the eastern and western antichrist; when in the issue the beast, and the false prophet with him, will be taken and cast alive into a lake of fire; (see <661920>Revelation 19:20 20:10,14,15); and so this phrase denotes that the destruction of antichrist will be consummate, his ruin will be complete, and there will be an utter end of him. Some, instead of “desolations”, by the change of a point read twhrj, “swords”, and Ben Labrat or R. Donesh says[f154] that he found it so written in an ancient book; and so reads Jarchi, though he takes notice of the other reading also; and so read the Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions; and then the sense is, swords shall fail, they shall be no more made use of to destroy men with, they shall be beaten into ploughshares; for upon the destruction of the man of sin there will be a profound peace in the world; (see <230204>Isaiah 2:4). Some[f155] read these words interrogatively, “are destructions come to a perpetual end?” that is, which the enemy antichrist designed to bring upon the people of God? no, they are not; he may imagine they are, when the two witnesses are slain; and may think he has then made an entire slaughter, and a complete destruction of the saints; but he will be mistaken, these witnesses will rise again, and ascend up to heaven in the sight of their enemies, and to the great terror of them, (<661110>Revelation 11:10-12);

and thou hast destroyed cities, or “hast thou destroyed cities?” that is, as antichrist threatened and intended, namely, to destroy all the cities and churches of Christ; but, alas! he will never be able to do it, they are built on a rock against which the gates of hell can never prevail: but it is better to read the words affirmatively, and interpret them not of the enemy, but of God, and of him destroying the cities of the enemy; for, at the pouring out the seventh and last vial, the great city, the whole antichristian jurisdiction, will be divided into three parts, and utterly perish; and the cities of the Pagan and Mahometan nations will fall, and particularly Babylon the great city will come in remembrance before God, and be utterly destroyed, (<661619>Revelation 16:19);

their memorial is perished with them; they shall not be returned or built any more, but shall be like a millstone cast into the sea, and be found no more at all, (<263509>Ezekiel 35:9 <661821>Revelation 18:21). Some[f156] read this clause by way of interrogation as the others, “is their memorial perished with them?” no, the righteous are in everlasting remembrance, even those churches which the Romish antichrist has made havoc of, as the Albigenses and Waldenses; the memory of them is still precious.

Ver. 7. But the Lord shall endure for ever, etc.] When antichrist is entirely ruined, his cities destroyed, and the memorial of them perished, then “shall the Lord sit for ever”[f157], as the words may be rendered; that is, as a Jewish writer[f158] paraphrases them, in rest and quiet. The words may be expressive of the unchangeableness and eternity and power of God; the Chaldee paraphrase of them is, yyd armym, “the Word of the Lord is for ever; his habitation is in the highest heavens”. And they may very well be interpreted of Christ, the essential Word of God, who is the unchangeable, everlasting, and almighty God; and who sits King for ever, and must sit at God’s right hand, in the highest heavens, until all his enemies are made his footstool; and to him most properly do the following things in this verse (<190908>Psalm 9:8) belong:

he hath prepared his throne for judgment; for the administration of judgment in this world, for the particular judgment after death, and for the general judgment after the resurrection of the dead; which seems by what follows to be chiefly meant, and which will come on after the destruction of antichrist; and all things are preparing for it; the day is appointed in which God will judge the world; Christ is ordained to be the Judge of quick and dead; devils and ungodly men are reserved to the judgment of the great day; the throne is ready, which will be a white one, (<662011>Revelation 20:11); denoting the purity, justice, and uprightness of the Judge, who himself is at the door.

Ver. 8. And he shall judge the world in righteousness, etc.] The word lbt, rendered “world”, is, as Ben Melech well observes, a general name for all the countries of the habitable world; and so shows that it is the universal judgment that is here spoken of; and which will be carried on and finished with the utmost righteousness, and according to the strictest rules of justice and equity; and is therefore called the righteous judgment of God, (<450205>Romans 2:5); (see <199613>Psalm 96:13 98:9 <441731>Acts 17:31);

he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness; which signifies the same with the former clause, unless by the “world” there, should be meant the wicked of the world; and by the “people” here, the people of God; to whom the righteous Judge will give the crown of righteousness.

Ver. 9. The Lord also will be a refuge for the oppressed, etc.] The poor and weak, such as have no might nor power, and are thrown down and trampled upon, as the word [f159] signifies; and such are the people of God. They are oppressed with the burden of sin; they are bowed down with Satan and his temptations; and are sometimes pressed out of measure, and above their strength, with the persecutions of men; they are trodden under foot by antichrist, or otherwise are borne down with a variety of sorrows and afflictions; but the Lord is a refuge for them. The Chaldee paraphrase renders it as before, “the Word of the Lord”, the eternal Logos, the Son of God: he is a refuge for poor sensible sinners, fleeing from wrath to come; being typified by the cities of refuge, whither the manslayer fled from the avenger of blood: he is the strong hold for the prisoners of hope to turn into; his name is a strong tower and place of defence for oppressed saints;

he is a refuge when all others fail, and at all times, in the day of affliction, and in the hour of death, and at judgment;

a refuge in times of trouble; of which the saints have many, as when God hides his face, when corruptions prevail, when grace is low in exercise, and temptations are strong, yet even then Christ is the refuge from the storm; the salvation of his people is of him, and he is their strength in every time of trouble; (see <232504>Isaiah 25:4 <193739>Psalm 37:39).

Ver. 10. And they that know thy name, etc.] As proclaimed in the Gospel, a God gracious and merciful, and forgiving sin; and as in Christ, in whom his name is, and in whom he is the God of love, grace, and mercy, though out of him a consuming fire; or the name of Christ himself, the Word of the Lord, who is the refuge of saints and sinners; his name Jesus, a Saviour: such who know him to be the able, willing, complete, all sufficient, and everlasting Saviour; who know his power and faithfulness to keep what is committed to him; and who know him not merely notionally and speculatively, and in a professional way only, but affectionately, spiritually, and experimentally: such will put their trust in thee; as they have great reason to do; and the more they know of the grace and mercy of God in Christ, and of the ability and suitableness of Christ as a Saviour, the more strongly will they place their trust and confidence in him;

for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee: who are first sought out by God in the effectual calling, and then under the influence and direction of his grace and Spirit seek him in Christ, where he is only to be found; and seek Christ and his righteousness above all things else, and with their whole hearts, and diligently; and seek to Christ alone for life and salvation, and continue seeking the Lord, by prayer and supplication, for whatever they stand in need of; these God does not forsake: he may sometimes hide his face from them, as he does from his own children, and did from his own Son, yet he never forsakes them totally and finally; nor will he forsake the work of his own hands, which he has wrought in them, but will perfect it; he will never leave them so as that they shall perish by sin, Satan, or any enemy; he will not forsake them in life, nor at death, but will be the strength of their hearts, and their portion for ever.

Ver. 11. Sing praises to the Lord, which dwelleth in Zion, etc.] The psalmist having determined in the strength of grace to praise the Lord himself, and show forth all his marvellous works, and given his reasons for it, both with respect to himself in particular, and with respect to the people of God in general, here calls upon others to engage in the same work; the Lord is not only to be praised, which may be done by celebrating the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands; by giving him thanks for mercies temporal and spiritual, and by living to his glory; but his praises are to be sung by a modulation of the voice in musical notes, as the word used signifies; (see <220212>Song of Solomon 2:12); where the same word is used of the singing of birds; and this is to be done by the saints jointly, in concert together, as Paul and Silas in prison sang the praises of God; and there is great reason why they should join together in this work, since they share the blessings of divine grace in common together; and it is their duty to stir up one another to this service, as well as to other parts of worship: and this perfectly agrees with the exhortation to the saints, and the work they shall be employed in at the fall of Babylon, or destruction of antichrist, (<661401>Revelation 14:1-3 18:20 19:1,2). Jehovah, to whom praises are to be sung, is described as the inhabitant of Zion, the ark and tabernacle being there before the temple was built, which were symbols of the divine Presence. The Targum paraphrases it, “who causeth his Shechinah to dwell in Zion”; as many of the Jewish writers interpret this psalm of Goliath, a doubt arises here about it, since in the days of Saul, and at the time of Goliath’s death, Zion was in the hands of the Jebusites, and the ark of God was not there till many years afterwards; to this it is replied, that David might compose this psalm upon that occasion not immediately at that time, but after he was king of Israel, and when the ark was brought to Zion; or that he said this by a prophetic spirit, foreseeing that, God would dwell there; and Kimchi observes, that it was everywhere a received tradition among the people of Israel that the sanctuary would be built there; but however this be, certain it is that the church of God goes by the name of Zion frequently; (see <190206>Psalm 2:6 50:2) (<581222>Hebrews 12:22 <661401>Revelation 14:1). God by his essence and power is everywhere, he fills heaven and earth, and cannot be contained in either; his glorious presence is in heaven; his gracious presence is in his church and among his people; where they dwell he dwells, and where he dwells they dwell: hence the church is called by the same name as the Lord is here, the inhabitant of Zion, (<231206>Isaiah 12:6); and this description of him points out the place where his praises are to be sung, in Zion; who are to sing them, the members of the church; and the reason why, because the Lord dwells in Zion; and is there a refuge for his people, and protects them; declare among the people his doings; what God does for the souls of men is not only to be declared among the people of God, (<196616>Psalm 66:16); but also among the people of the world, when a suitable opportunity offers; and especially in the public ministry of the word; partly that the name of God may be exalted, his grace, goodness, and mercy be displayed; and partly that it might be the means of the conversion of God’s chosen ones among them, (<199602>Psalm 96:2,3 <231202>Isaiah 12:2-4); though it may be here his doings in providence are meant, his special providential care of his church and people, and his vengeance on their enemies, on Babylon; for upon the ruin of antichrist, the judgments of God, his providential dispensations towards his church and people, will be made manifest, and all nations will be called upon to fear and worship him; (see <245028>Jeremiah 50:28 <661503>Revelation 15:3,4); the word [f160] which is here used signifies such deeds and actions as are the effects of thought and counsel, and which are purposely and industriously done; and whatsoever is done by the Lord, whether in a way of grace or providence, is done after the counsel of his own will; as he thought so it is, as he purposes so it comes to pass, and all things are done well and wisely, and answer the ends and designs of them.

Ver. 12. When he maketh inquisition for blood, etc.] The Arabic version renders it, “he remembers him that seeks their blood”; that is, the wicked man, that lies in wait for innocent blood, and whose feet are swift to shed it; the man of sin, who is bloodthirsty; who drinks up the blood of the saints like water, and has been made drunk with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, him will God remember, and take vengeance on, in his own time: but rather this is to be understood of God himself, seeking for the blood of his saints: he knows where it is, though ever so privily shed, as he did Abel’s; yet, to show his strict care and accurate notice of it, he is represented as searching for it, and finding it out by secret search, (<240234>Jeremiah 2:34). And it is the same phrase with “requiring” blood, and expresses a demand of satisfaction for it; and declares the vengeance that God will take on account of it: he requires the blood of every man at the hand of him by whom it is shed, (<010905>Genesis 9:5,6); especially the blood of the righteous, (<402335>Matthew 23:35); particularly the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, shed by the Romish antichrist; he will make inquisition for that, and will find in Babylon the blood of the prophets and saints, and of all that are slain on earth; and will avenge the blood of his servants at her hand, and give her blood to drink, (<661824>Revelation 18:24 19:2 16:6);

he remembereth them; either the “righteous”, as the Targum paraphrases it, whose blood has been shed; or else the wicked, who shed their blood: God will remember them and their sins; which, for some time, may seem not to have been taken notice of by him, and will pour out his wrath, and inflict just punishment on them; (see <661619>Revelation 16:19 18:5,6);

he forgetteth not the cry of the humble: the “Cetib”, or writing of the text, is µyyn[, “afflicted”; the “Keri”, or marginal reading, is µywn[, “humble”; so the Masorah and Targum read: both may be taken into the sense: afflicted persons are generally humble, afflictions make them humble; God’s people are an afflicted people; afflicted with sin, with Satan, with the world, with antichrist and his followers: and they are an humble people; grace makes them humble, and a sense of their sin and unworthiness keeps them so: and this is a proper character of the followers of Jesus. These in their distress cry to the Lord, as the Israelites did in Egypt under their bondage and, pressures: yea, their blood cries after death, as Abel’s did, and as the blood of the martyrs of Christ does, whose souls under the altar cry for vengeance, (<660609>Revelation 6:9); and God is not unmindful of their cry; however he may seem to be, he takes notice of it, and wilt in his own time avenge his elect, which cry unto him day and night.

Ver. 13. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, etc.] The psalmist proceeds to petitions on his own account in this verse: the ends he proposes by the fulfilling of them are mentioned in the next. A good man, a man called by the grace of God, though he has obtained mercy of the Lord, yet still stands in need of more, of fresh discoveries of pardoning grace and mercy, of merciful supplies, of merciful support, and merciful deliverances from enemies, inward and outward: and such an one flees to God, and not to the creature; and pleads, not his own dignity, righteousness, or merit, but the mercy of God;

consider, my trouble [which I suffer] of them that hate me; or “see my affliction because of mine enemies”[f161]; look upon me under it with an eye of pity and compassion, and help and deliver me; and look upon mine enemies that give me this trouble, and take vengeance on them;

thou that liftest me up from the gates of death; the house appointed for all living; that is, from the power of it, when just upon the brink of it; when near it, as a person is to an house, when he is at the gates of it; either through sickness, or some violent distemper of body, as Hezekiah was; or through some imminent danger in battle, as David was when engaged with Goliath; when everyone thought, as Kimchi observes, that he should fall by his hand: or it may be this may have respect to his being raised up from the death of sin, and delivered from the power of darkness; to his being brought out of the horrible pit and miry clay of an unregenerate state, and set upon the rock of salvation; which is a lifting up indeed, an exaltation from a very low to a very high estate: and this the psalmist takes notice of to encourage his faith; and makes use of it as an argument with God, that as he had dealt so graciously and bountifully with him, he would still show mercy to him, and look upon him under his affliction.

Ver. 14. That I may show forth all thy praise, etc.] That is, all thy bounties and acts of goodness, deserving of praise; even as many of them as he had an experience of, and which came within his knowledge; and as much of them as he was capable of observing: for otherwise the instances of divine grace and goodness are so many, that they cannot be reckoned up in order, nor God be praised for them, in the present state of things, as he should; (see Gill on “<190901>Psalm 9:1”); in the gates of the daughter of Zion: it was usual with the Hebrews to represent a chief city as a mother city, and the towns and villages, and places adjacent, as daughters; and so, as Zion or Jerusalem signifies the church of God in general, or the mother church, (<480426>Galatians 4:26); so “the daughter” of Zion may mean a particular church: the Targum renders it the congregation of Zion; and “the gates” of it are the public ordinances of divine worship in it; and the sense is, that the psalmist desired to show forth the praises of God in the most public manner in the congregation and assembly of the saints;

I will rejoice in thy salvation, or “that I may rejoice in thy salvation”[f162]: meaning either temporal salvation and deliverance from enemies, wrought by God for him, which would be matter of joy to him; or spiritual salvation, which may be called God’s salvation, because contrived by him in the council of peace, and secured by him in the covenant of grace, and wrought out by his Son in the fulness of time, and applied by his Spirit at conversion. And a gracious man rejoices in this salvation more because it is the Lord’s than because it is his own; or he rejoices more because of the glory of God, which is displayed in it, than because of his own advantage and happiness by it.

Ver. 15. The Heathen are sunk into the pit [that] they made, etc.] The psalmist having determined to praise the Lord, and called upon others to join with him in it, here enters upon it: for, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra observe, this is h l h t "the praise" he was desirous to show forth, which is occasioned by the destruction of God's enemies, and the deliverance of his people: by "the Heathen" are meant not the Philistines, as Kimchi interprets it, who thought to cause Israel to fall, and fell themselves; but this is spoken prophetically of the nations of the earth, who have joined in the idolatry of antichrist, the Gentiles, by whom the holy city has been trodden under foot; even the several antichristian states, that will be destroyed by the pouring out of the seven vials, and especially the last, at the battle of Armageddon; and which will be brought on by themselves, with a design to destroy the whole kingdom and interest of Christ, but will issue in their utter ruin, which this phrase is expressive of; (see <661803>Revelation 18:3 11:2 16:13,14,16 19:19-21). The metaphor is taken from hunters, who dig pits for the wild beasts to fall into, that they may the more easily take them, into which they fall themselves; (see <190715>Psalm 7:15). Wicked men are mischievous and crafty, but sometimes they are taken in their own craftiness; in the net which they laid is their own foot taken; which may signify the same thing as before, that the mischief they design for others falls upon themselves; only as the former phrase denotes their utter destruction like the sinking of a millstone in the sea, by which the irrecoverable ruin of Babylon is expressed, (<661821>Revelation 18:21); this may design the restraint and hinderance of them from doing the evil they would; their feet are entangled, that they cannot run to shed blood; and their hands are held, that they cannot perform their enterprise; and their wrath in restrained and made to praise the Lord. The metaphor is taken from fowlers, who lay nets and snares for birds, and cover them that they may not be seen, but fall into them unawares; (see <19C407>Psalm 124:7).

Ver. 16. The Lord is known [by] the judgment [which] he executeth, etc.] The judgment which God will execute upon antichrist, and the antichristian powers, will be a means of making known his name, his glory, his perfections, in all the earth; as his wisdom, power, justice, and goodness; (see <020916>Exodus 9:16 <197910>Psalm 79:10 <661503>Revelation 15:3,4). The destruction of antichrist will be the Lord's doing, and it will be a righteous one; it will be a just retaliation; as he has killed with the sword, multitudes of his followers shall be killed with the sword; as he has led captive, he shall be taken captive at the battle of Armageddon; as he has burnt, many of the martyrs of Jesus, he shall be cast into the lake of fire burning with brimstone. Some read these words as two sentences, “The Lord is known; he hath executed judgment”[f163]: the latter of these refers not to the ministration of justice in the providential government of the world, or at the last day in the general judgment; but to the judgment of the great whore, or antichrist, at which time the Lord will be known in his Gospel in all the world; the earth will be tilled with the knowledge of him, and he, and he alone, will be exalted; his name will be great and glorious throughout the earth; all shall know him, from the least to the greatest; and their knowledge of him will be very clear and comprehensive;

the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands; not Goliath, as Kimchi thinks, who was slain by David with his own sword, though this was true of him in the letter and type; but the wicked one, the man of sin and son of perdition, antichrist, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all craftiness and wily stratagems, called the depths of Satan, (<660224>Revelation 2:24); but his own sins shall take him, and he shall be holden with the cords of his iniquities, and be rewarded double for all his sins; what is before figuratively expressed is here literally declared; or, “he hath snared the wicked in or by the work of his hands”[f164], that is, God.

Higgaion. Selah; of the latter of these words, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”); the former signifies “meditation”; Jarchi paraphrases it hghn, “let us meditate on this, selah”; Aben Ezra interprets it, “I will show forth this in truth”; the Chaldee paraphrase is, “the righteous shall rejoice for ever”; the note of Kimchi and Ben Melech is, “this salvation is to us meditation and praise”; upon the whole the sense seems to be this, that God’s judgments upon antichrist, and the antichristian states, and the deliverance of his people from their yoke and tyranny, are things worthy of the meditation of the saints, and afford just matter of joy, praise, and thanksgiving.

Ver. 17. The wicked shall be turned into hell, etc.] Some render it, “shall return to the grave”[f165], to the earth, the original dust from whence they came; but this is common to all men, to the righteous as well as the wicked; rather lwaç here signifies the place of torment, commonly called hell, where devils and damned spirits are; hither the souls of the wicked go immediately upon their departure from their bodies, (<421623>Luke 16:23); and after the judgment is over, they will be remanded thither in soul and body; and their damnation is called the destruction of soul and body in hell; which will consist in an everlasting separation from God, and in a sense of his wrath and fiery indignation: and though this is true of all the wicked, yet here that wicked one, antichrist, and his wicked followers, are chiefly designed; even the beast and false prophet, who shall be cast alive into the lake of fire burning with brimstone, (<661920>Revelation 19:20 20:10);

[and] all the nations that forget God; which is not to be understood of the Pagan nations, though they may be said to forget God, since he is to be known by the light of nature, and yet they worship idols, the works of their hands; but the Papal nations, who adore the pope of Rome as God on earth, worship angels and saints departed, and images of gold and silver, and wood and stone. It may be applied to every wicked man who forgets there is a God who sees and knows all things, and to whom men are accountable; (see <195022>Psalm 50:22).

Ver. 18. For the needy shall not always be forgotten, etc.] The people of God are poor and needy for the most part; they are so in things temporal, and they are poor in spirit, or in things spiritual, of which they are sensible; their needs are many, and frequently return; but God has provided a throne of grace for them to come to for help in time of need, and he will supply all their wants out of the fulness of grace in Christ; nor is he unmindful of them, and of his covenant with them; strictly speaking, they are never forgotten by him, being engraven on his hands, and set as a seal on his heart; but they sometimes seem to be so both to themselves and others, (<194203>Psalm 42:3,10 44:24 77:9 <234914>Isaiah 49:14); and they may continue so long; God may seem for a long time to take no notice of them, but suffer them to lie under affliction and persecution; the holy city is trodden under foot forty two months, or one thousand two hundred and sixty days, that is, so many years; so long the witnesses prophesy in sackcloth, so long the church is in the wilderness, and so long will be the reign of antichrist, (<661102>Revelation 11:2,3 12:6 13:5); but as great Babylon will come up in remembrance before God, and he will remember her sins, and render her double; the set time to favour his poor and needy will come, and he will arise and have mercy on them, and bring them into a glorious and comfortable state and condition;

the expectation of the poor shall [not] perish for ever; the negative particle, though not in the original text, is rightly supplied from the preceding clause, as it is by the Targum, Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, and as the sense requires; and the expectation of Christ’s poor ones is not only a supply of grace here and eternal happiness hereafter; but they expect a glorious state of the church on earth, and that Christ will descend in person from heaven, and his tabernacle will be among men; and that they shall be kings and priests, and possess the kingdom, and reign with Christ a thousand years; and though these things may seem to be deferred, and their expectation put off to a length of time, yet it shall not perish for ever; there will be a performance of the things promised and expected.

Ver. 19. Arise, O Lord, etc.] To the destruction of thine enemies, and the salvation of thy people; (see Gill on “<19706>Psalm 7:6”);

let not man prevail; the man of sin, antichrist, that is, let him not always prevail; he is the little horn that was to prevail against the saints, and has prevailed, (<270721>Daniel 7:21 <661307>Revelation 13:7); but he shall not always prevail; this petition will be heard and answered; for though he shall cast down many thousands, he shall not be “strengthened” by it, (<271112>Daniel 11:12); where the same word is used as here; the Lamb at last shall overcome him and his ten kings, his supporters, and all that shall aid and assist him, (<661714>Revelation 17:14 19:19-21);

let the Heathen be judged in thy sight; that is, the antichristian nations that adhere to the man of sin, let them be judged and punished in the sight of God, the Judge of all the earth, whose eyes are as a flame of fire; compare with this (<290312>Joel 3:12).

Ver. 20. Put them in fear, O Lord, etc.] Who are, a bold, impudent, fearless generation of men; who, like the unjust judge, neither fear God nor regard men, therefore the psalmist prays that God would inject fear into them, who only can do it; and this will be done at Babylon’s destruction, when the antichristian kings, merchants, and seafaring men, will stand afar off for fear of her torment, (<661810>Revelation 18:10,15,17);

[that] the nations may know themselves [to be but] men; and not God, and have no power against him; (see <233103>Isaiah 31:3); the sense is, that the antichristian nations, who oppose themselves to Christ and his people, may know that they are but frail, mortal, miserable men, as the word[f166] signifies; and that he who is at the head of them, the man of sin, is no other, though he exalts himself above all that is called God, (<530204>2 Thessalonians 2:4); or these words are a prayer for the conversion of many among the nations, and may be rendered, “put, O Lord, fear in them”[f167]; that is, the true grace of fear, “that the nations may know” themselves, their sin and guilt and danger, and know God in Christ, and Christ, and the way of salvation by him; for at the word “know” should be a stop, concluding a proposition, since the accent “athnach” is there; and then follows another, “they [are] men. Selah”: destitute of the fear and grace of God, are capable of it, but cannot give it to themselves.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

PSALM 10

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 10

This psalm in the Septuagint version, and those that follow it, is a part and continuation of the preceding psalm, and makes but one with it; hence in these versions the number of the following psalms differ from others, and what is the eleventh with others is the tenth with them, and so on to the hundred fourteenth and one hundred fifteenth, which also are put into one; but in order to make up the whole number of one hundred and fifty, the hundred sixteenth and the hundred forty seventh are both divided into two; and indeed the subject of this psalm is much the same with the former. Antichrist and antichristian times are very manifestly described; the impiety, blasphemy, and atheism of the man of sin; his pride, haughtiness, boasting of himself, and presumption of security; his persecution of the poor, and murder of innocents, are plainly pointed at; nor does the character of the man of the earth agree to well to any as to him: his times are times of trouble; but at the end of them the kingdom of Christ will appear in great glory, when the Gentiles, the antichristian nations, will perish out of his land, (<191001>Psalm 10:1-11,16,18).

Ver. 1. Why standest thou afar off, O Lord? etc.] This psalm begins with a complaint which proceeds on two general heads; the one is with respect to God, his distance from his people, and desertion of them in times of trouble, in this verse; and the other is with respect to the wicked in some following ones. God by his infinite essence and power is everywhere, and is never far off from any of his creatures; and though his glorious presence is in heaven, which, with respect to us on earth, is a land afar off, yet this hinders not but that there is often great nearness between God and his people; and when he stands afar off from them in their apprehensions, it is when he withdraws his gracious presence from them, and defers help and assistance to them, and does not immediately and directly come and visit them: this they cannot bear, they complain; they wonder that, seeing they are the objects of his love, this should be his manner of conduct towards them; they expostulate with him, and inquire for what end and upon what account he should so use them, and most earnestly desire that he would haste and come unto them and help them; (see <192201>Psalm 22:1,11,18);

[why] hidest thou [thyself] in times of trouble? when God seems to take no notice of his people, does not look upon them, but turns a deaf ear to them, he is said to hide his face, his eyes and ears, from them: and this is sometimes the case of the best of saints, as it has been of Job, David, Heman, and others; and though this is done in a sovereign way by God, who comes and goes when he pleases; for sensible communion with him as much depends upon his sovereign pleasure as the gift of his grace itself does; yet, generally speaking, the denial or withdrawing of his gracious presence is by way of resentment for some disagreeable conduct and behaviour of his people; and is consistent with his everlasting and unchangeable love to them, but is what fills them with grief and sorrow; nor can they: forbear making mournful complaints upon it; and this is aggravated when it is a time of trouble with them, either of soul trouble, by reason of the prevalence of unbelief, and the force of Satan's temptations; or of bodily affliction; though times of trouble here seem to design times of persecution, as may be concluded from the connection of these words with the following; and antichristian times are times of persecution: during the reign of antichrist, in which he is suffered to make war with the saints and overcome them; and during the church's being in the wilderness the space of one thousand two hundred and sixty days or years, God may seem to stand at a distance, and to hide himself from her.

Ver. 2. The wicked in [his] pride doth persecute the poor, etc.] The "poor" is the good and gracious man, who is commonly poor in this world's things, and is sensibly poor in spirit, or sensible of his spiritual poverty; or he is so called because "afflicted", as the word signifies; and he is afflicted because he is poor: these two characters generally go together. The "wicked" man is the wicked one, the lawless one, the man of sin, and son of perdition, antichrist, the great persecutor of Christ's poor saints and faithful witnesses, more or less, ever since he has been in power; and which arises from the "pride" of his heart, not bearing that any should refuse to pay homage to him, contradict his will, or dissent from him. The word [f168] signifies to follow after, to pursue, as Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, interpret it; and "to pursue hotly", as it is rendered in (<013136>Genesis 31:36); and denotes the vehemence and heat of his wrath and fury, with which antichrist persecutes the followers of the Lamb; hence persecution is compared to the heat of the sun, (<401306>Matthew 13:6,21); Some render the words, “through the pride of the wicked the poor is burned”, or “the poor burns”[f169]: which may be understood either literally, of the burning of the martyrs of Jesus by antichrist, as here in Queen Mary’s days; and which was foretold, that some of the saints should fall by flame, as well as by sword, captivity, and spoil; and to which that part of the description of Christ answers, whose feet are said to be like fine brass, as if it burned in a furnace; and which is prefaced to the epistle to the church at Thyatira, which is an emblem of the apostate church: (see <271133>Daniel 11:33 <660115>Revelation 1:15 2:18); or figuratively, of the poor saints burning with grief at the pride and wickedness of the man of sin, and with zeal for the honour and glory of God; (see <471129>2 Corinthians 11:29) (<220806>Song of Solomon 8:6 <196909>Psalm 69:9); let them be taken in the devices that they have imagined: we read the words as a petition; and so the sense is, let the wicked persecutors be taken in the wicked and crafty schemes which they have devised for the hurt of others, as they are, or will be; (see <190915>Psalm 9:15,16). But the psalmist is not yet come to petitions, nor does he until (<191012>Psalm 10:12); but is all along describing the wickedness of the wicked one. It seems better therefore to render the words as do the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions, “they are taken in the devices that they have imagined”: and the meaning is, that the poor, who are persecuted by the wicked, are taken by their crafty schemes they lay for them, as Jarchi interprets it, and are put to death by them. So these words show the issue and event of persecution: and this sense best agrees with the boasted success of the wicked man (<191003>Psalm 10:3).

Ver. 3. For the wicked boasteth of his heart’s desire, etc.] As antichrist does of his universal power over all bishops and princes, which his heart was long desiring after; of his being Christ’s vicar, Peter’s successor, and head of the church; and of having power in heaven, earth, and hell: he boasts of his wealth and riches, of the righteousness and merits of saints, of works of supererogation, a stock of which he pretends to have in his hands to dispense to others: he boasts of his own holiness and infallibility, and of miracles, signs, and lying wonders done by his creatures, and of his great success in destroying those that oppose him; (see <661807>Revelation 18:7 <530204>2 Thessalonians 2:4). The words may be rendered, “the wicked praiseth himself for the desire of his heart”[f170], so the Chaldee paraphrase; to which agrees Jarchi’s gloss, and thus it is usual for proud, haughty, wicked men, as the Assyrian monarch, Nebuchadnezzar, and so the man of sin, to ascribe whatsoever they have or do to their own power and prudence; (see <231012>Isaiah 10:12,13) (<270430>Daniel 4:30). Or they may be rendered, “he praiseth the wicked for his heart’s desire” [f171]; or for his lusts, for his indulging them: for a wicked man not only delights in committing sin himself, but he also takes pleasure in those that do it; and some of the antichristian party have even wrote in commendation of the most unnatural lusts; and blesseth the covetous, [whom] the Lord abhorreth: the covetous man is one that makes no use of what he has but for himself; and oftentimes withholds that which is meet from himself, as well as from others; and who makes use of unlawful ways to get, retain, and increase wealth, and is never satisfied: such an one God abhors, because he is an idolater, he has other gods before him; he worships his gold, be sets his affection on it, places his confidence in it, and expects protection and security from it, to a neglect of divine Providence; and yet the wicked man blesses him, calls his covetousness frugality and good husbandry; ascribes what he has to his diligence, care, and industry, and bestows gifts upon him. The words may be rendered, “the covetous man blesses himself” [f172]; with the good things he has laid up for many years; he pronounces himself blessed, and promises himself a great deal of happiness, in futurity; and ascribes all he has to his own hands. Or, “the covetous man curses, he abhors the Lord” [f173]; for the same word in the Hebrew language signifies to bless and curse, (<180105>Job 1:5 2:9), which Aben Ezra on the place observes; and it is applicable enough to antichrist, who opens his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven; (see <661306>Revelation 13:6).

> “wicked Esau praiseth himself, because he hath obtained the desire of his soul:”

Ver. 4. The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek [after God], etc.] We supply it, “after God”; as do the Targum and Kimchi on the place: the sense is, he will not seek to God for counsel or assistance, he will not pray unto him; which is the character of every unregenerate man, (<450311>Romans 3:11); or, he will not inquire into the will of God, to know what is right or what is wrong, but will do what seems best in his own eyes: and this arises from the pride of his heart, which shows itself in his countenance, in his proud and haughty look. It is said of the little horn, who is antichrist, that he has a look more stout than his fellows, (<270720>Daniel 7:20). The words may be rendered, “the wicked inquires not into the height of his anger”; so Ainsworth observes; that is, of God’s anger; he is not concerned about it; he neither fears God nor regards men. Jarchi’s sense of the words is,

> “all his thoughts say unto him, God will not inquire into everything that I shall do, for there is no judgment.”

God [is] not in all his thoughts; nor in any of them, for they are evil continually; and if he does at any time think of him, his thoughts of him are wrong; he thinks he is altogether such an one as himself: or, “all his thoughts [are, there is] no God” [f174]: though he does not choose to say so, he thinks so; at least, he wishes it may be so; and he works himself into such impiety and atheism as to deny the providence of God, and thinks that he does not govern the world, nor concern himself with what is done below; that he takes no notice of men’s actions, nor will call them to an account for them; and that there will be no future state or judgment, in which secret as well as open things will be made manifest: or, as the Chaldee paraphrase glosses it, “that all his thoughts are not manifest before the Lord”.

Ver. 5. His ways are always grievous, etc.] To God and to his people; or, “his ways cause terror” [f175], so Aben Ezra; make men fear; as antichrist has made the whole world tremble at him, (<661304>Revelation 13:4); or, “his ways are defiled”, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin render it; for to him is nothing pure, his mind and conscience being defiled, (<560115>Titus 1:15); or, “his ways always remain” [f176]; they are always the same, there is no change in them for the better: or they “prosper” [f177] as Jarchi interprets it; and this is sometimes stumbling to the saints, (<241201>Jeremiah 12:1 <197302>Psalm 73:2,3);

thy judgments [are] far above, out of his sight: meaning either the laws, statutes, and commandments of God, which are not taken notice of by him; but his own decrees or orders are set in the room of them; or the examples of punishment inflicted on wicked men, as on the old world, on Sodom and Gomorrah, the Egyptians, and other nations; these are not regarded, when they should be a terror to him;

[as for] all his enemies, he puffeth at them; who are the poor saints, and are looked upon by antichrist as feeble creatures, and all their efforts against him and his kingdom are treated with contempt: he blows upon them, and suggests that he can cause them to fall with the breath of his mouth, or strike them down with a straw or a feather; (see <191206>Psalm 12:6).

Ver. 6. He hath said in his heart, etc.] To and within himself, he thought in his own mind; for the thought is the word or speech of the mind, λογος ενδιαυετος;

I shall not be moved; from his prosperous and happy condition, abounding: with riches and honours; from his seat of empire, over kings, princes, and the nations of the world; flattering himself that it would never be otherwise with him than it is: even “to generation and generation”, I shall not be moved; so the words may be rendered;

for [I shall] never [be] in adversity, or “in evil” [f178]: meaning either the evil of sin; so asserting his innocence, wiping himself clean of all iniquity, claiming to himself the title of “holiness” itself, and the character of infallibility; giving out that he is impeccable, and cannot err; when he is not only almost, but altogether, in all evil; and is ο ανομος, the lawless and wicked one, the man of sin, who is nothing but sin itself. The Targum paraphrases the whole thus; “I shall not be moved from generation to generation from doing evil”; and so it is a boast of impiety, and that none can restrain him from it, no one having a superior power over him; (see <191204>Psalm 12:4). Or the evil of affliction, or calamity; wherefore we render it “adversity”, so Jarchi and Aben Ezra understand it: the note of the former is, or for ever; and the latter compares it with (<041115>Numbers 11:15); Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it of long life. It is a vaunt of antichrist, promising himself a continuance of his grandeur, ease, peace, and prosperity; in which he will be wretchedly disappointed. The language and sense are much the same with that of the antichristian Babylon, (<661807>Revelation 18:7,8).

> “evil shall not come upon me in my generation,”

Ver. 7. His mouth is full of cursing, etc.] Or, “he has filled his mouth with cursing” [f179] God and good men, his superiors, himself and others. The word signifies “an oath”; and may design either a profane oath, taking the name of God in vain; or an oath on a civil account, a false oath, taken with a design to defraud and deceive others, as follows, and intends perjury; and this, as applicable to antichrist, regards his mouth speaking great things and blasphemies against God, and uttering curses and anathemas against the saints, (<661305>Revelation 13:5,6); and deceit and fraud; such as flattery and lying, which are both used by him with an intention to impose upon and deceive. The apostle, in (<450314>Romans 3:14); renders both these words by one, “bitterness”; which may be said of sin in general, which is a very bitter thing; though it is rolled as a sweet morsel in the mouth of a wicked man, yet in the issue it is bitterness to him: and it is applicable to sinful words, which are bitter in their effects to those against whom they are spoken, or who are deceived and imposed upon by them: and, as they refer to antichrist, may have respect to the lies in hypocrisy spoken by him, and to the deceitfulness of unrighteousness, by which he works upon those that perish, (<540402>1 Timothy 4:2 <530210>2 Thessalonians 2:10);

under his tongue [is] mischief and vanity; alluding to serpents, who have little bags of poison under their teeth; (see <19E003>Psalm 140:3); Kimchi and Ben Melech observe, that the heart is under the tongue, being lower than it, and so denotes the wickedness which that is full of, and devises continually, and is latent in it until discovered; and is mischievous iniquity, injurious to God, and the honour of his law, and to fellow creatures; and especially to the saints, whose persons, characters, and estates, are aimed at; but in the issue it is all vanity, and a fruitless attempt, being blasted by God, and overruled for good to him; (see <235417>Isaiah 54:17);

Ver. 8. He sitteth in the lurking places of the villages, etc.] Which were by the wayside, where thieves and robbers harboured, and out of which they came, and robbed passengers as they came by. The word [f180] signifies “palaces” or “courts”: and so it is rendered by the Chaldee paraphrase and Syriac version; and so the allusion is not to mean thieves and robbers, but to persons of note and figure. Hence the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions, render it, “he sitteth in lurking places with the rich”; and may be fitly applied to the pope and his cardinals. Antichrist sits in the temple of God, and by his emissaries gets into the villages, the particular churches and congregations of saints, where they lie in ambush to do mischief, to corrupt their faith, worship, and manners; and like thieves and robbers enter in to steal, kill, and destroy;

in secret places doth he murder the innocent; the harmless lambs and sheep of Christ; who, though they are not without sin in themselves, yet are innocent with respect to the cause and the things for which they suffer:

these are the saints and prophets and martyrs of Jesus, whose blood is shed by antichrist; and the taking away of their lives is reckoned murder with God; and is so styled in the Scriptures, (<660921>Revelation 9:21); though the antichristian party call it doing God good service, and impute it to zeal for the good of holy church; and yet this they choose to do in secret, by private massacres, or by the inquisition; which having condemned men to death, delivers them over to the secular power to execute the sentence on them: just as the Jews delivered Christ to the Roman governor, to shift off the sin and blame from themselves; murder being what no one cares to be known in, or chargeable with; his eyes are privily set against the poor: the word hklj, rendered “poor”, is used nowhere but in this psalm, in which it is used three times, here, and in (<191001>Psalm 10:1-4); and in the plural number in (<191010>Psalm 10:10). It is translated “poor” both in the Chaldee paraphrase and Septuagint version, and in those that follow them. In the Arabic language it signifies “black”[f181], and may design such who are black by reason of persecution and affliction, who go mourning all the day long on account of sin, their own and others; and because of the distresses and calamities of the church and people of God. These the eyes of the wicked watch and observe, and are set against them to do them all the mischief they can; their eyes are full of envy and indignation at them, though it is all in a private and secret way. The allusion is to thieves and robbers, who hide themselves in some secret place, and from thence look out for them that pass by, and narrowly observe whether they are for their purpose, and when it will be proper to come out and seize upon them.

Ver. 9. He lieth in wait secretly as a lion, etc.] The first beast in (<661302>Revelation 13:2); is said to have a mouth like a lion, and the second beast in (<191011>Psalm 10:11); spake like a dragon; and both design one and the same, antichrist, in his twofold capacity, civil and ecclesiastical; this metaphor of the lion lying in wait secretly for his prey denotes the insidious methods used by antichrist to destroy the faithful witnesses of Christ; who lies like a lion in his den, in the temple of God, now become a den of thieves;

he lieth in wait to catch the poor: to snatch and carry them away captive as his prey; (see <661310>Revelation 13:10);

he doth catch the poor when he draweth him into his net; this metaphor is taken from fowlers, who spread nets, into which they allure and draw the birds and catch them. The allurements, snares, and nets, which antichrist lays to catch the poor saints and people of God in, are the riches and honours of this world, great pretensions to holiness, devotion; and religion, and many lying signs and wonders.

Ver. 10. He croucheth [and] humbleth himself, etc.] As the lion before he leaps and seizes on his prey, and as the fowler creepeth upon the ground to draw the bird into his net and catch it; so the antichristian beast has two horns like a lamb; though he has the mouth of a lion, and speaks like a dragon, he would be thought to be like the Lamb of God, meek, and lowly, and humble, and therefore calls himself “servus servorum”, “the servant of servants”; but his end is, that the poor may fall by his strong ones; the word for “poor” is here used, as before observed on (<191008>Psalm 10:8), in the plural number, and is read by the Masorites as two words, though it is written as one, and is by them and other Jewish writers [f182] interpreted a multitude, company, or army of poor ones, whose strength is worn out; these weak and feeble ones antichrist causes to fall by his strong ones; either by his strong decrees, cruel edicts, and severe punishments, as by sword, by flame, by captivity and by spoils, (<271133>Daniel 11:33); or by the kings of the earth and their armies, their mighty men of war, their soldiers, whom he instigates and influences to persecute their subjects, who will not receive his mark in their right hands or foreheads, (<661315>Revelation 13:15-17 17:12,13). It is very observable, that those persecuted by antichrist are so often in this prophetic psalm called “poor”; and it is also remarkable, that there were a set of men in the darkest times of Popery, and who were persecuted by the Papists, called the “poor” men of Lyons: the whole verse may be rendered and paraphrased thus, “he tears in pieces”, that is, the poor, whom he catches in his net; “he boweth himself”, as the lion does, as before observed; “that he may fall”, or rush upon; with his strong ones, his mighty armies, “upon the multitude of the poor”.

Ver. 11. He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten, etc.] Meaning either his own sins, because they are not immediately punished; wherefore he hopes to go on for ever with impunity, but will be mistaken, for God will remember the iniquities of Babylon, and render to her double, (<661805>Revelation 18:5,6); (see <300717>Amos 7:17); or else the poor ones he oppresses; for though they seem for a while to be forgotten by God, they are not, a book of remembrance is written for them;

he hideth his face; that is, from his poor saints, which is true oftentimes; but then the use the wicked one makes of it is bad, namely, to insult them on that account, and to imagine that it is grateful to God, and doing him good service, to afflict and persecute them; and that God will never regard them, nor return to them more, as follows;

he will never see [it]; or them; he will never more look upon the poor, he will no more regard them, and take notice of them and their afflictions; than which nothing is more false; for though he hides his face for a moment, yet with everlasting kindness will he gather them to himself; and he beholds all their oppressions and afflictions, and not as a bare spectator; he sympathizes with them, and delivers them out of them. Or "he will never" the wickedness committed by the wicked; which is a very foolish thought, since what is done in the dark, and in the most secret manner, is seen by God, the darkness and the light are alike to him; he is all-seeing and ever-seeing, and everywhere seeing; and he it is that has made the eye, and shall not he see? (<199405>Psalm 94:5-9); the sense of the whole in general is, that God takes no notice of good men or bad men, nor of what is done by either of them; he does not concern himself with the affairs of this world, which is an impious denial of divine Providence; (see <260909>Ezekiel 9:9 <360112>Zephaniah 1:12).

Ver. 12. Arise, O Lord, etc.] (see <190307>Psalm 3:7 7:6 9:19);

O God, lift up thine hand; either on the behalf of his people, to help and deliver them; his hand may be said to be let down when their enemies prevail, and to be lifted up or exalted when it does valiantly, and works salvation for them; so when Moses's hands were let down Amalek prevailed, and when his hands were lifted up Israel prevailed, (<021711>Exodus 17:11); or against their enemies, to strike them, to inflict punishment upon them, as God's hand is said to be stretched out against the Egyptians, and to lie upon them, when he sent his plagues among them, (<020704>Exodus 7:4,5); and a dreadful thing it is to fall both into and under the hand of the living God, and to feel the weight of the lighting down of his arm with indignation. The Targum understands it as a gesture of swearing; (see <011422>Genesis 14:22); and paraphrases it, "confirm the oath of thine hand"; either sworn in wrath against his enemies, or in love to his people; either of which is sure and certain, and according to the immutable counsel of his will;

forget not the humble; the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, the Lamb of God, by which character the saints are distinguished from the antichristian party, (<661404>Revelation 14:4); these are such who are made so by the Spirit of God, who in conversion brings down the pride and haughtiness of man, that Christ and his grace may be alone exalted; these have the meanest thoughts of themselves, and the best of others; their motto is, they envy not the gifts and graces of others, and ascribe all they have and are to the free grace of God; they are not easily provoked, they patiently bear injuries, and quietly submit to the adverse dispensations of Providence: the word in the original text is read “humble”, but written “afflicted”: both characters generally meet together in the people of God; (see Gill on “<190912>Psalm 9:12”); this prayer for the humble is a prayer of faith; for though the humble may seem to be forgotten by God, they are not, they are precious in his sight; he dwells among them, he gives more grace unto them, he comforts them when disconsolate, he feeds them when they are hungry, he teaches and guides them when they want direction, he lifts them up when they are cast down, and beautifies them with salvation.

> “less than the least of all saints, and the chief of sinners;”

Ver. 13. Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? etc.] God may be said to be contemned or despised, when his being, perfections, and providence are denied, or called in question, or abused, (<191009>Psalm 10:9,11); when his word is derided, the great things of his law are counted as a strange thing (<280812>Hosea 8:12), and the truths of his Gospel are reckoned foolishness; and instead of these, the decrees, doctrines, and traditions of men, are set up, as by antichrist; and when his ministers, and especially his Son, are treated with disdain, (<421016>Luke 10:16);

he hath said in his heart, thou wilt not require [it], or “seek [it]”[f183]; or inquire after it, his iniquity; the sense is, that God will make no inquiry after sin, and bring it into judgment, unto account, and under examination; or will not make inquisition, that is, for blood, for the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus, shed by antichrist; or will not require it at his hands, or recompense vengeance for it: all which is false and vain; the contrary to it will be found true.

Ver. 14. Thou hast seen [it], etc.] Though the wicked say God will never see, ([<191011>]Psalm 10:11); he sees all things in general, all men and all their actions; all are manifest and open to him, and everything in particular, especially the wickedness of men; even that which is said or thought in the heart;

for thou beholdest mischief and spite; that mischief which arises from spite or malice in the heart; God beholds the inward principle from whence it proceeds, as well as that itself; the mischief devised in the heart, on the bed, and which lies under the tongue, designed against the people of God, either to the injury of their characters and estates, or to their bodies, and even to their souls, as much as in them lies, proceeding from implacable malice and enmity to them; to requite [it] with thy hand: of power, to retaliate it upon their own heads, to render tribulation to them that trouble the saints, which is but a righteous thing with God: or “to put [it] in thy hand” [f184]; and the sense is, that God looks upon all the injuries the wicked out of spite devise to do to his people, and puts them in his hand, that they may be ever before him, and always in his sight, and he will take a proper opportunity of avenging them. The Targum interprets it of God’s rewarding good men, as well as punishing the wicked, paraphrasing the whole thus, the poor committeth himself unto thee: his body, and the outward concerns of life, as to a faithful Creator; his soul, and the spiritual and eternal welfare of it, as to the only Saviour and Redeemer; he commits all his ways to him, as the God of providence and grace; and at last he commits his spirit to him at death, as to his covenant God and Father: the words may be rendered, “the poor leaveth upon thee” [f185]; that is, he leaves himself and his upon the Lord; he leaves his burden on him, he casts all his care upon him, as he is advised and encouraged to do; he leaves his cause with him to plead it for him, who will plead it thoroughly and maintain it: the phrase is expressive of the poor’s faith and hope in God; hence the Chaldee paraphrase renders it, “on thee will thy poor ones hope”; for the supply of their wants, and for help and assistance against their enemies;

> “it is manifest before thee that thou wilt send sorrow and wrath upon the wicked; thou lookest to render a good reward to the righteous with thy hand;”

thou art the helper of the fatherless; God is the Father of them, provides for them, supplies, supports, and defends them; nor will he in a spiritual sense leave his people orphans or comfortless, but will visit and help them; (see <196805>Psalm 68:5 <431418>John 14:18);

Ver. 15. Break thou the arm of the wicked and the evil [man], etc.] His power and strength, so that he shall not be able to hold the sword, to strike a blow, or do any hurt to the people of God; (see <263021>Ezekiel 30:21-25). This prayer is in some measure already fulfilled in antichrist, the man of sin, or pope of Rome; though his kingdom is not broke to pieces; as it will be when Christ’s kingdom shall be more visibly set up, to which reference is had in (<191016>Psalm 10:16); (see <270244>Daniel 2:44); yet his strength is weakened, his arm is broken, he has not the power he had, nor can he tyrannise and do the mischief he once did: “but as [for] the evil man” [f186], for so the words should be read, there being an “athnach” under the word “wicked”, which ends the proposition there:

seek out his wickedness [till] thou find none; which designs a thorough search after sin, full punishment of it, and the entire ruin and destruction of the wicked; and the sense is, that God would make a strict inquiry into the wickedness of the man of sin, which he promised himself he would not, (<191013>Psalm 10:13); and that he would punish him and his followers to the uttermost for it, until there should not be one of the antichristian party found upon earth; with which sense agrees (<191016>Psalm 10:16); (see <19A435>Psalm 104:35).

Ver. 16. The Lord [is] King for ever and ever, etc.] Christ was King from everlasting, and during the Old Testament dispensation he was promised and prophesied of as King; and he had a kingdom when he was here on earth, though not of this world; nor was it with observation. At his ascension to heaven, and session at the right hand of God, he sat down upon the same throne with his Father, and was made or declared Lord and Christ, and appeared more visibly in his kingly office; and in the latter day it will be yet more manifest that he is King of saints, and when indeed he will be King over all the earth, and his kingdom will be an everlasting one: he will have no successor in it, nor will any usurper obtain any more; the devil, beast, and false prophet, will be cast into the lake of fire; all antichristian states will be destroyed, and all authority, rule, and power, put down; nor can his kingdom ever be subverted, he must reign till all enemies are put under his feet; he will reign to the end of the present world, and with the saints a thousand years in the new heaven and earth, and in the ultimate glory to all eternity; nor will his government cease when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to the Father, only the mode of the administration of it. Here begins the song of praise; the reign of Christ is matter of joy; (see <199701>Psalm 97:1 <235207>Isaiah 52:7);

the Heathen are perished out of his land: not the seven nations which were driven out of the land of Canaan, to make way for the people of Israel, that was long ago; nor the wicked and degenerate Jews, called the Heathen, (<190201>Psalm 2:1); compared with (<440427>Acts 4:27); on whom, and on whose temple, city, and nation, Christ's native land, wrath is come to the uttermost; and they are perished out of it: nor hypocrites out of churches, which are Christ's property; but the antichristian party out of the world, which is Christ's land by creation, as God, and by the gift of his father to him, as Mediator. The followers of antichrist are called Gentiles, and the nations of the earth, (<661102>Revelation 11:2,18 18:2); and these will be no more; they will be utterly destroyed, when the man of sin shall be consumed with the breath of Christ's mouth and the brightness of his coming. The seventh vial will clear the world of all the remains of Christ's enemies: this also is cause of rejoicing, (<19D216>Psalm 132:16-18 <661822>Revelation 18:22).

Ver. 17. Lord, thou hast heard the desire of the humble, etc.] (see <191012>Psalm 10:12 <190912>Psalm 9:12); for the coming of Christ's kingdom, and that the kingdoms of this world may become his; for the destruction of antichrist, and for the avenging the blood of the saints. The prayers of God's people sometimes lie in inward and secret desires of the soul, and are not expressed in words; and these desires are all before the Lord, and are well known unto him; yea, such prayers of the heart, and which come from it, are principally regarded by him; they being his own preparation, as is suggested in the next clause, and the breathings of his Spirit; and especially the desires of humble souls are regarded, whose prayers he never despises, nor sends them away empty, but fills with his good things;

thou wilt prepare their heart; for prayer, by pouring a spirit of grace and supplication on them, impressing their minds with a sense of things to be prayed for, and drawing out the desires of their souls unto them, and making intercession for them with groanings according to the will of God, and so helping their infirmities; and it is God's work to prepare the heart for prayer, as well as to put words into the mouth, (<201601>Proverbs 16:1); or “thou wilt direct their heart”[f187]; to the object of prayer, himself, and to the things to be prayed for, for they know not what to pray for, nor how as they should; and to what may encourage to it, as the love of God, the covenant of grace, the person, blood, and righteousness of Christ: or “confirm” or “establish their heart”[f188]; strengthen and fix them, that they be not wavering and doubtful, but certain and assured of success, believing that their desires will be fulfilled in God’s own time;

thou wilt cause thine ear to hear; God has an ear to hear the prayers of his people, nor is his ear heavy that it cannot hear; his ears are open to the cries of righteous ones; nor will he ever turn a deaf ear to them, but will give an answer in his own time and way; which is an instance of his sovereign grace and goodness. These words express the faith of the psalmist in God being a God hearing and answering prayer, particularly in things relating to the ruin of antichrist and his followers, and to the kingdom and glory of his son Jesus Christ.

Ver. 18. To judge the fatherless and the oppressed, etc.] That is, God will cause his ear to hear the cries of his people, so as to avenge the wrongs done to the fatherless, and them that are oppressed by the man of sin; (see <661118>Revelation 11:18 18:20 19:2); that the man of the earth may no more oppress: or “terrify”[f189], the dear children of God, and faithful witnesses of Christ, as he has done; for by “the man of the earth” is not meant carnal worldly men in general, “the wicked of the earth”, as the Targum renders it; who are so called because their original is from the earth, and they dwell in earthly tabernacles, and shall return to the earth again, and are earthly minded men, and have much of this world’s things; and are therefore sometimes called the men and children of this world, and who, generally speaking, are oppressors of the saints; and who shall cease to be so in the latter day, when the kingdom shall be given to the saints of the most High; but particularly the man of sin, the Romish antichrist, seems intended, who is the beast that is risen up out of the earth, (<661311>Revelation 13:11); and so the words may be rendered here, “the man out of the earth”[f190]; whose kingdom and government is an earthly one, and is supported by the kings of the earth, and with earthly power and grandeur, and with earthly views and worldly ends: he has been the great oppressor and terrifier of the poor people of God; but when Christ comes to avenge them on him, he will no more oppress, he will be taken and cast alive into the lake of fire; (see <661310>Revelation 13:10 19:20).

The words may be rendered according to the accents thus, “to judge the fatherless and the oppressed; he shall not add any more”: for there is an “athnach” which makes a proposition “under” dw[, “any more”: and the sense is, God shall so thoroughly avenge the injuries of the fatherless and the oppressed, that there will be no need to add thereunto or repeat the vengeance, it will be an utter destruction; and then follows another distinct end of causing his ear to hear, namely, “to shake terribly the man of the earth”, or “to shake terribly man from off the earth” [f191], the man of sin, as before; (see <230219>Isaiah 2:19,21); or, as Jarchi interprets the words, “to beat and break in pieces”; that is, antichrist and his kingdom; so Montanus.

PSALM 11

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 11

To the chief Musician, [A Psalm] of David

This psalm has no name; it is neither called a psalm, nor hymn, nor song, nor prayer, only said to be David's; and is inscribed and directed as others to the chief musician, or master of the song, to be used in public service; and seems to be written much upon the same subject with the two preceding psalms. According to Theodoret it was written when David was persecuted by Saul, and was advised by some to flee for his safety.

Ver. 1. In the Lord put I my trust, etc.] Not in himself, in his own heart, nor in his own righteousness and strength; nor in men, the greatest of men, the princes of the earth; nor in his armies, or any outward force; but in the Lord, as the God of providence and of grace; and in the Messiah, in his person and righteousness; so the Chaldee paraphrase renders it, "in the Word of the Lord do I hope": and the phrase denotes a continued exercise of faith in the Lord; that he was always looking to him, staying himself on him, and committing himself and all his concerns to him; for he does not say, I "have", or I "will", but I "do", put my trust in the Lord; at all times, even in the worst of times, and in the present one; wherefore he is displeased with his friends for endeavouring to intimidate him, persuading him to flee and provide for his safety, when he had betaken himself to the Lord, and was safe enough;

how say ye to my soul, flee [as] a bird to your mountain? they compare him to a little, fearful, trembling bird, wandering from its nest, moving through fear from place to place, whereas his heart was fixed, trusting in the Lord; and this gave him a disgust: they advise him to flee either "from" his mountain, so Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; that is, either from Judea, which was a mountainous country, especially some parts of it; or from Mount Zion, or rather from the mountain in the wilderness of Ziph, or the hill of Hachilah, where David sometimes was, (<092314>1 Samuel 23:14 26:1); or it may be rendered "to your mountain", as we, so the Targum; that is, to the said place or places where he had sometimes hid himself; and this they said to his “soul”, which was very cutting and grieving to him; the word rendered “flee” in the “Cetib”, or writing of the text, is wdwn, in the plural, “flee ye”; but is pointed for, and in the “Keri”, or marginal reading, is ydwn, “flee thou”; the latter agrees with this being said to David’s soul, the former with the phrase “your mountain”, and both are to be taken into the sense of the words; not as if the one respected David’s soul only, and the other both soul and body, as Kimchi and Ben Melech observe; but the one regards David’s person, and the other his companions, or the people with him; and contains an advice, both to him and them, to flee for their safety; the reasons follow.

Ver. 2. For, lo, the wicked bend [their] bow, etc.] Are devising mischief, and making preparations to accomplish it;

they make ready their arrow upon the string; of the bow, and are just about to execute their wicked designs; that they may privily shoot at the upright in heart; such as David, and those that were with him, were; they were men whose hearts were upright before God, and were of upright conversations before men, and so became the butt of the malice and resentment of wicked men; against these they formed evil purposes, delivered out bitter words, which were like sharp arrows of the mighty; threatened them with ruin and destruction, and took methods to bring about their designs and make good their words, in the most private and secret manner. Hence some of David’s friends thought it most advisable for him to make his escape; adding,

Ver. 3. If the foundations be destroyed, etc.] Or, “for the foundations are destroyed” [f192]; all things are out of order and course both in church and state; the laws, which are the foundations of government, are despised and disregarded; judgment is perverted, and justice stands afar off; the doctrines and principles of religion are derided and subverted; so that there is no standing, either in a political or religious sense. Jarchi interprets this of the priests of the Lord, the righteous, who are the foundations of the world, particularly the priests of Nob, slain by Doeg. Other Jewish writers, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, understand it of the purposes and counsels, nets and snares, laid by the wicked for the righteous, which are broken and destroyed; not by them, for what can they do? but by the Lord, who is in his holy temple. So it what can the righteous do? or “what does the righteous one do” [f193]? that is, the righteous Lord, he sits in the heavens, he beholds all the actions of the wicked, he distinguishes the righteous from them, and rains a violent storm of wrath upon them, as in the following verses; or “what has the righteous man done” [f194] ? what has David done, that the priests of Nob should be slain? nothing that was criminal; nor shall he bear the sin, but they, according to Jarchi’s sense; or rather, what has he done that the wicked should bend their bow, prepare their arrow, and attempt to shoot privily at him, and to overturn the foundations of justice and equity? nothing that deserves such treatment: or if the fundamental doctrines of true religion and everlasting salvation be subverted, what can the righteous do? he can do nothing to obtain salvation, nor do any good works of himself; the Chaldee paraphrase is, “wherefore does he do good?” he can have no principle, motive, or end to do good, if fundamental truths are destroyed: or “what should he do” [f195] ? something the righteous ones may do, and should do, when men are attempting to undermine and sap the foundation articles of religion; they should go to the throne of grace, to God in his holy temple, who knows what is doing, and plead with him to put a stop to the designs and attempts of such subverters of foundations; and they should endeavour to build one another up on their most holy faith, and constantly affirm it while others deny it; and should contend earnestly for it, and stand fast in it.

Ver. 4. The Lord [is] in his holy temple, etc.] Not in the temple at Jerusalem, which as yet was not built; nor in the temple of Christ’s human nature; but rather in the church, where he dwells, which is an holy temple to the Lord; and which is an argument for trust in him, and a reason against the fears of men in the worst of times; (see <194601>Psalm 46:1-5). Though it may be best to understand it of heaven, the habitation of God’s holiness, and which is the true sanctuary; and which the holy places made with hands were only a figure of; since it follows, the Lord’s throne [is] in heaven; yea, the heaven is his throne; here he sits on a throne of grace, and here he has prepared his throne for judgment; and both this and the preceding clause are expressive of his glory and majesty; and are said to command awe and reverence of the Divine Being, and to inject terror into the wicked; and to show that God is above the enemies of his people, and to encourage the saints’ trust and confidence in him; and are mentioned as a reason why David put his trust in him; and are, with what follows in (<191105>Psalm 11:5), opposed to the advice and reasonings of some of his friends in the preceding ones;

his eyes behold; all men, and all their actions; he sees what the wicked are doing in the dark, what preparations for mischief they are making, and beholds them when they shoot privily at the upright in heart; he can turn the arrow another way, and cause it to miss the mark: his eyes run to and fro throughout the earth, in favour of those whose hearts are perfect and sincere. God’s omniscience, which is denied by wicked men, who are therefore hardened in sin, and promise themselves impunity, is used by the saints as an argument to encourage their faith and trust in God, with respect to their preservation and deliverance. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions, read, “his eyes look unto the poor”; but this is an addition to the text not suitable to the context;

his eyelids try the children of men; he tries their reins, he searches into their very hearts, and into the inmost recesses of them, and takes cognizance of their thoughts, intentions, and designs; and confounds and disappoints them, so that they cannot perform their enterprises.

Ver. 5. The Lord trieth the righteous, etc.] As gold is tried in the fire, by afflictive providences; hereby he tries their graces, their faith, and patience, their hope, and love, and fear; and, by so doing, expresses his love to them, since this is all for their good: and therefore, when he suffers the wicked to go great lengths in persecuting and distressing them, this should not weaken, their confidence in him; he still loves them, and loves when he rebukes and chastises them; but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his soul hateth; that is, such who live in a course of sin and wickedness, and who not only do injury to the persons, characters, and properties of men, but love it, and delight therein, and also take pleasure in them that do the same: these God has a continued and inward aversion to; sin and wickedness being the abominable thing his righteous soul hates: and he shows his hatred to them, by not chastising them now, as he does his own people, but reserving everlasting punishment for them hereafter; (see <201324>Proverbs 13:24).

Ver. 6. Upon the wicked, etc.] The wicked one, the man of sin, antichrist, and upon all that worship the beast and his image, on all persecutors, and upon all wicked men in general:

he shall rain snares, fire, and brimstone, and an horrible tempest; this will be in hell, as Jarchi observes. The allusion is to the Lord’s raining fire and brimstone from heaven upon Sodom and Gomorrah, which was an example and emblem of eternal fire; (see <011924>Genesis 19:24 <650107>Jude 1:7). For the beast and the false prophet, and all the antichristian party, and all wicked men, will have their part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone. The phrases used express the dreadfulness and horribleness of their punishment; the suddenness, violence, and force, with which it will come; and the rise of it, it will be from heaven; God himself will rain this shower of wrath upon them, (<182023>Job 20:23); nor will there be any escaping it, it will be inevitable: therefore “snares” are said to be “rained”; the wicked will be snared in the works of their own hands; they will be taken and held in the cords of their own sins; and full and deserved punishment will be inflicted on them, which will be very severe and terrible. All that is dreadful in a storm is here expressed, even in a storm of fire. The word rendered “snares” is by some thought to be the same with µymj p, “burning coals”; and may signify burning stones, hot thunderbolts; (see <191813>Psalm 18:13,14); “fire” may signify lightning, with its dreadful flashes, and which burn and consume in an instant; and “brimstone” the nauseous scent and smell, which always attend lightning and thunder, as naturalists observe [f196] : and the words for “an horrible tempest” signify a burning wind: so that they all serve to convey horrible ideas of the punishment of the wicked in hell. The Targum calls them “showers of vengeance”;

[this shall be] the portion of their cup; which will be measured out to them in proportion to their sins, and which God, in righteous judgment, has appointed for them; and which they shall all drink of, and wring out the very dregs of it.

Ver. 7. For the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, etc.] The Lord is righteous in himself, and in all his ways and works; and therefore righteousness, as it lies both in punishing the wicked, and in maintaining the righteous cause of his people, must be loved by him, it being agreeable to his nature: he loves to exercise righteousness in the earth, to administer it to and among men; this he delights in. He is well pleased with the righteousness of his Son, it being satisfactory to his justice, and that by which his law is magnified and made honourable; and he is well pleased with his people, as they are clothed with it: and he approves of their righteous actions, as they are done in obedience to his righteous law, in faith, from a principle of love, and with a view to his glory; these are acceptable to him in Christ;

his countenance doth behold the upright; whom wicked men privily shoot at, (<191102>Psalm 11:2); God looks with pleasure upon them, and takes delight in them, and takes care of them, protects and defends them, and at last saves them; and which, with all that goes before, was an encouragement to David to trust in the Lord; (see <190710>Psalm 7:10); and moreover, the Lord lifts up the light of his countenance on such, and indulges them with his gracious presence, than which nothing is more comfortable and desirable. Some choose to render the word, “their countenance”[f197], meaning the trinity of Persons, Father, Son, and Spirit, who all have a gracious regard to such: others render the clause thus, “the upright shall see his face”, the face of God; so the Chaldee paraphrase and the Arabic version; (see <191715>Psalm 17:15).

PSALM 12

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 12

To the chief Musician upon Sheminith, a Psalm of David

The word “sheminith” is used in the title of (<190601>Psalm 6:1), and signifies “eighth”; and intends either the eighth note, to which the psalm was sung, or rather the harp of eight chords, to which it was set, as the Targum and Jarchi interpret it. Some Jewish writers[f198] understand it of the times of the Messiah; and the Syriac version entitles the psalm, and the Arabic version says, it is concerning the end of the world, which shall be in the eighth day; and concerning the coming of the Messiah: but Arnobius interprets it of the Lord’s day.

> “an accusation of the wicked, and a prophecy concerning the coming of the Messiah:”

Ver. 1. Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, etc.] A godly man, according to the notation of the word[f199], is one that has received grace and mercy of the Lord; as pardoning mercy, justifying and adopting grace; and who has principles of grace, goodness, and holiness, wrought in him; who fears the Lord, and serves him acceptably, with reverence and godly fear, and sorrows for sin, after a godly sort; who loves the Lord, and hopes and believes in him; who is regenerated and sanctified by the Spirit of God, and is a true worshipper of God, and lives in all holy conversation and godliness; and, particularly, is “beneficent”, “kind”, and “merciful”[f200] unto men: such may be said to “cease” when there are but few of them; when their number is greatly reduced[f201], either by death, or when such who have seemed, and have been thought to be so, prove otherwise: in a view of which, the psalmist prays for help and salvation; “help”, or “save”[f202] Lord; meaning himself, being destitute of the company, counsel, and assistance of good and gracious men; or the cause and interest of religion, which he feared would sink by the ceasing of godly men. When all friends and refuge fail, saints betake themselves to God, and their salvation is of him; and he is their present help in a time of trouble; and he saves and reserves for himself a number in the worst of times; as he did in Elijah’s time, who thought there was no godly man left but himself; (see <451101>Romans 11:1-5); for the faithful fail from among the children of men; so that there are none left among them but carnal, unregenerate, ungodly, and unfaithful men. The “faithful” are such who are upright in heart and conversation; who trust in the Lord, and believe in the Messiah; who abide by the truths and ordinances of God; and are faithful in what is committed to their trust, whether they be gifts of nature, Providence, or grace; and to their fellow Christians, in advising, reproving, etc. when needful: these may fail in the exercise of grace, and in the discharge of duty, but not so as to perish eternally. The words design the paucity of them, and the sad degeneracy of the times to which they refer: and they may belong either to the times of David, when Saul’s courtiers flattered him, and spoke evil of David; when the men of Keilah intended to have delivered him up; when the Ziphites discovered him to Saul, and invited him to come and take him; or when Absalom rose up in rebellion against him, and so many of the people fell off from him: or else to the times of Christ; the people of the Jews in his age were a wicked and faithless generation; and even among his own disciples there was great want of fidelity: one betrayed him, another denied him, and all forsook him and fled; after his death, some doubted his being the Redeemer, and one of them could not believe he was risen from the dead, when he was. And these words may be applied to the antichristian times, the times of the grand apostasy, and falling away from the faith, upon the revealing of the man of sin; since which the holy city is trodden under foot; the witnesses prophesy in sackcloth; and the church is in the wilderness, and is hid there. Yea, to the second coming of Christ, when there will be great carnality and security, and little faith found in the earth. A like complaint with this see in (<235701>Isaiah 57:1 <330702>Micah 7:2).

Ver. 2. They speak vanity everyone with his neighbour, etc.] That which is false and a lie, either doctrinal or practical; what was not according to the word of God, and was vain and empty, frothy, filthy, and corrupt; and which no godly and faithful man would do. And this being done in common, by the generality of men, one with another, shows the degeneracy of the age, and supports the complaint before made. They speak even

[with] flattering lips; as Cain did to Abel, Joab to Amasa, the Herodians to Christ, Judas to his Master, false teachers to those that are simple, hypocrites to God himself, when they draw nigh to him only with their lips, and all formal professors to the churches of Christ, when they profess themselves to be what they are not. And this is a further proof of the justness of the above complaint;

[and] with a double heart do they speak: or “with an heart and an heart” [f203]; such are double minded men, who say one thing, and mean another; their words are not to be depended upon; there is no faithfulness in them. The Chinese [f204] reckon a man of “two hearts”, as they call him, a very wicked man, and none more remote from honesty.

Ver. 3. The Lord shall cut off all flattering lips, etc.] This is either a prophecy or a prayer, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi observe; that God either would or should cut off such who used flattery with their lips, by inflicting some judgment in this life, or everlasting punishment hereafter; by taking them away by death “out of the world”, as the Targum paraphrases it; or by casting them into hell, where all liars and deceitful persons will have their portion; (see <183221>Job 32:21,22);

[and] the tongue that speaketh proud things, or “great things” [f205], as the little horn, (<270720>Daniel 7:20,25); and the beast, or Romish antichrist, who is designed by both, (<661305>Revelation 13:5,6); and which will be accomplished when Christ shall destroy him with the breath of his mouth, and the brightness of his coming; and indeed every tongue that riseth up against God, Christ, and his people, will be condemned; when ungodly sinners will be convinced of all their hard speeches, (<235417>Isaiah 54:17) (<650115>Jude 1:15). Perhaps some regard may be had to the tongue of Doeg the Edomite; (see <195203>Psalm 52:3-5).

Ver. 4. Who have said, with our tongue will we prevail, etc.] Either through the eloquence of them, or the outward force and power with which they are backed. The sense is, as we say, so shall it be; our words are laws, and shall be obeyed, there is no standing against them; our edicts and decrees shall everywhere be regarded: or “we will make one to prevail”, or “have the dominion” [f206]; meaning antichrist, the man of sin; for all this is true of the tongues of the antichristian party, and of their laws, edicts, and decrees and which have obtained everywhere, and by which the wicked one has been established in his tyrannical power and authority;

our lips [are] our own, or “with us” [f207]: we will say what we please, and make what laws and decrees we think fit, and impose them upon men; and so change times and laws without control, (<270725>Daniel 7:25); who [is] Lord over us? which is the very language and conduct of antichrist, who opposes and exalts himself above all that is called God, (<530204>2 Thessalonians 2:4); and is indeed the language of the hearts and lives of all wicked and ungodly men, sons of Belial, men without any yoke or restraint; who walk, and are resolved to walk, after the imagination of their own evil hearts; not knowing the Lord, and being unwilling to obey him, or to be restrained by him; (see <020502>Exodus 5:2).

Ver. 5. For the oppression of the poor, etc.] The servants and people of God, who, for the most part, are poor in a temporal sense, and are all of them, and always, so in a spiritual sense, standing continually in need of fresh supplies of grace; and being often afflicted, as the word signifies, are mean and despicable in the eyes of the men of this world, and so oppressed by them, as the poor generally are by the rich; and as the people of Israel were oppressed by the Egyptians, so are the people of God by antichrist, and by his tyrannical laws and edicts, and by such haughty and insolent persons as before described;

for the sighing of the needy; who groan under their oppressions; being stripped of all good things, their friends, and worldly substance, they sigh inwardly, and cry unto the Lord, who sees their oppressions, hears their groans; and though he cannot be moved, as men are, by anything without himself, yet, according to his abundant mercy and sovereign will, he appears and exerts himself on the behalf of his people, and for their relief and assistance;

now will I arise, saith the Lord; to have mercy on the poor and needy, and to avenge them on their oppressors, and free them from them. And this the Lord promises to do “now”, speedily, immediately; God arises in the most seasonable time, when his people are in the greatest straits, and in the utmost distress and herein displays his wisdom, power, and goodness. This is an answer to the petition of the psalmist in (<191201>Psalm 12:1);

I will set [him] in safety [from him that] puffeth at him; or “in salvation” [f208]; in Christ the Saviour. All God’s people are put into the hands of Christ, and are preserved in him; there they are in safety, for out of his hands none can pluck them; and being built on him, the Rock, they are safe, notwithstanding the waves and winds of temptation, persecution, etc. come with ever so much force upon them. Here it seems to signify, that God would deliver his poor and needy from their oppressions, and put them into a comfortable, prosperous, safe, and happy situation, in which they will be out of the reach of their enemies; as will be the witnesses, when they shall ascend to heaven, (<661111>Revelation 11:11,12); even out of the reach of him that “puffeth at” them, despises them, and treats them with the utmost scorn and contempt; (see <191005>Psalm 10:5). Or that “breathes”, or “let him breathe” [f209] threatenings and slaughters; as Saul did against the disciples of Christ, (<440901>Acts 9:1); or that “lays snares for him” [f210], as the wicked do for the righteous; or that “speaks unto him” in such haughty and insolent language as before expressed. Some make this clause a proposition of itself, “he puffeth at him”; meaning either that he that is secure, safety puffs at his enemy, despises him, as he has been despised by him; or God, who breathes upon him, and whose breath is as a stream of brimstone, which kindles in him a fire of divine wrath, which is unquenchable; or else the sense is, God will “speak to himself”, or “to him” [f211]; in which sense the word is used (<350204>Habakkuk 2:4); that is, good and comfortable words to the poor; or “he will give him refreshment”, or “rest”: which he will determine in himself to speak to him: or “he shall have breathing”, or “let him breathe” [f212]: he shall have times of refreshing from the Lord, and rest from adversity, from the oppositions and persecutions of his enemies.

Ver. 6. The words of the Lord [are] pure words, etc.] This observation the psalmist makes in reference to what is just now said in (<191205>Psalm 12:5):, and in opposition to the words of wicked men in (<191202>Psalm 12:2,4); which are deceitful, sinful, and impure. The Scriptures are the words of God; and they are pure and holy, free from all human mixtures, and from all fraud and deceit; they are the Scriptures of truth. The promises are the words of God, and they are firm and stable, and always to be depended on, and are ever fulfilled, being yea and amen in Christ Jesus. The Gospel, and the doctrines of it, are the words of God; that is the sincere milk of the word, pure and incorrupt; as it is in itself, and as it is dispensed by the faithful ministers of it; and they are all according to godliness, and tend to encourage and promote purity and holiness of heart and life; (see <203005>Proverbs 30:5);

[as] silver tried in a furnace of earth; they are as “silver” for worth and value; yea, they are more valuable than silver or gold, (<191910>Psalm 19:10

119:72 <200810>Proverbs 8:10,11). The Bible is a mine of rich treasure, and to be searched into as for it; the promises in it are exceeding precious; they are like apples of gold in pictures of silver, and yield more joy than the finding a great spoil. The doctrines of the Gospel are comparable to gold and silver and precious stones, and to be bought at any rate, but to be sold at none: and they are as silver “tried”, which is pure, and free from dross. The words of men, of false teachers, are as dross and reprobate silver; but the words of the Lord are tried, and are pure, and free from all the dross of error and falsehood, (<191830>Psalm 18:30). And they are as silver tried “in a furnace of earth”, which some[f213] render “by the Lord of the earth”; but the word rather signifies a furnace, or an refinery, in which metal is melted and purified; and may be applied to the Lord Jesus Christ in human nature, in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and who came full fraught with the doctrines of the Gospel; and in whom they have been “tried”, by his sufferings and death, and are found to be pure, solid, and substantial: or to the ministers of the Gospel, who have this treasure in earthen vessels, whose works and words and ministry are tried by many fiery trials, and abide: or to all the people of God in general, who dwelt in earthly tabernacles; and who, in the midst of various afflictions, have a comfortable and confirming evidence of the purity and truth of the words of God, of the promises of his covenant, and the doctrines of the Gospel;

purified seven times; that is, many times, (<202416>Proverbs 24:16); and so completely and perfectly pure, and clear of all dross whatsoever, as silver so many times tried must needs be: and so the words of God are not only pure, but very pure, exceeding pure, (<19B9140>Psalm 119:140).

Ver. 7. Thou shall keep them, O Lord, etc.] Not the words before mentioned, as Aben Ezra explains it, for the affix is masculine and not feminine; not but God has wonderfully kept and preserved the sacred writings; and he keeps every word of promise which he has made; and the doctrines of the Gospel will always continue from one generation to another; but the sense is, that God will keep the poor and needy, and such as he sets in safety, as Kimchi rightly observes: they are not their own keepers, but God is the keeper of them; he keeps them by his power, and in his Son, in whose hands they are, and who is able to keep them from falling; they are kept by him from a total and final falling away; from the dominion and damning power of sin, and from being devoured by Satan, and from the evil of the world: and this the psalmist had good reason to believe, because of the love of God to them, his covenant with them, and the promises of safety and salvation he has made unto them;

thou shalt preserve them from this generation for ever; or “thou shalt preserve him” [f214]; that is, everyone of the poor and needy, from the wicked generation of men in which they live, from being corrupted or intimidated by them; and who are described in the beginning of the psalm. Some take these words to be a prayer, “keep thou them, O Lord, and preserve them”, etc. [f215]; and so the following words may be thought to be a reason or argument enforcing the request.

Ver. 8. The wicked walk on every side, etc.] Of the poor and needy, of the righteous ones, to watch them, lay snares for them, and hurt them; therefore, Lord, keep and preserve them: the wicked are everywhere in great numbers, the whole world lies in wickedness; and the men of it are like their father the devil, they go about to do all the mischief they can to the saints; wherefore they stand in need continually of divine preservation;

when the vilest men are exalted: either to great dignities and high offices, to be magistrates and rulers; (see <202902>Proverbs 29:2); or are highly esteemed and caressed; which shows the sad degeneracy and badness of the times, and the unsafe and dangerous condition the people of God are in, unless kept by him; (see <390315>Malachi 3:15,16); or else these words may be considered as expressive of the judgment of God upon wicked men, and so confirm what the psalmist had said of God’s regard to and preservation of his own people; and the sense be, that the wicked shall walk up and down here and there, as outcasts and vagabonds, in a most desolate, destitute, and miserable condition; and as the latter clause may be rendered, “according to [their] exaltation [shall be] the vileness”, depression, or humiliation “of the children of men” [f216]; they shall be brought as low as they have been made high; by how much the more highly they have been exalted, by so much the more deeply they shall be humbled: or else the meaning is, they shall walk about here and there fretting and vexing, when they shall see such who in their opinion are the meanest and basest of men, of low degree, and of a mean extract, exalted to the highest posts of honour and dignity; as David, who was taken from the sheepfold, and placed on the throne of Israel; so Jarchi, who observes that the Haggadah explains it of the Israelites, who will be exalted in time to come.

PSALM 13

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 13

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David

According to Theodoret this psalm was written by David, not when he fled from Saul, but from Absalom; and gives this reason for it, what happened to him from Saul was before his sin, and therefore he could speak with great boldness; but what befell him from Absalom was after it, and therefore mourning and groans were mixed with his words.

Ver. 1. How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord? for ever? etc.] When God does not immediately deliver his people from their enemies, or help them out of an affliction; when he does not discover his love, communicate his grace, apply the blessings and promises of his covenant as usual; and when he does not visit them in his usual manner, and so frequently as he has formerly done, they are ready to conclude he has forgotten them; and sometimes this continues long, and then they fear they are forgotten for ever; and this they cannot bear, and therefore expostulate with God in a querulous manner, as the psalmist does here; but this is to be understood not in reality, but in their own apprehension, and in the opinion of their enemies; God never does nor can forget his people; oblivion does not fall upon him with respect to common persons and things; and much less with respect to his own dear children, for whom a special book of remembrance is written; (see Gill on “<190918>Psalm 9:18”);

how long wilt thou hide thy face from me? his love, and the manifestation of it, from his person; his gracious presence, the light of his smiling countenance, which sometimes God hides or withdraws from his people by way of resentment of their unbecoming carriage to him; and which is very distressing to them, for they are apt to imagine it is in wrath and hot displeasure, when he still loves them, and will with everlasting kindness have mercy on them; (see <230817>Isaiah 8:17 59:2 54:7-10). The Targum renders it, “the glory of thy face”.

Ver. 2. How long shall I take counsel in my soul, etc.] Or “put it” [f217]; to take counsel of good men and faithful friends, in matters of moment and difficulty, is safe and right; and it is best of all to take counsel of God, who is wonderful in it, and guides his people with it; but nothing is worse than for a man to take counsel of his own heart, or only to consult himself; for such counsel often casts a man down, and he is ashamed of it sooner or later: but this seems not to be the sense here; the phrase denotes the distressing circumstances and anxiety of mind the psalmist was in; he was at his wits' end, and cast about in his mind, and had various devises and counsels formed there; and yet knew not what way to take, what course to steer;

[having] sorrow in my heart daily; by reason of God's hiding his face from him; on account of sin that dwelt in him, or was committed by him; because of his distance from the house of God, and the worship and ordinances of it; and by reason of his many enemies that surrounded him on every side: this sorrow was an heart sorrow, and what continually attended him day by day; or was in the daytime, when men are generally amused with business or diversions, as well as in the night, as Kimchi observes;

how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me? even the vilest of men, (<191208>Psalm 12:8); this may be understood either of temporal enemies, and was true of David when he was obliged not only to leave his own house and family, but the land of Judea, and flee to the Philistines; and when he fled from Absalom his son, lest he should be taken and slain by him; or of spiritual enemies, and is true of saints when sin prevails and leads captive, and when the temptations of Satan succeed; as when he prevailed upon David to number the people, Peter to deny his master, etc. The Jewish writers [f218] observe that here are four "how longs", answerable to the four monarchies, Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman, and their captivities under them.

Ver. 3. Consider [and] hear me, O Lord my God, etc.] The psalmist amidst all his distresses rightly applies to God by prayer, claims his interest in him as his covenant God, which still continued notwithstanding all his darkness, desertions, and afflictions; and entreats him to "consider" his affliction and trouble, and deliver him out of it; to consider his enemies, how many and mighty they were; and his own weakness his frame, that he was but dust, and unable to stand against them: or to "look" [f219] upon his affliction, and upon him under it, with an eye of pity and compassion; to have respect to him and to his prayers, and to turn unto him, and lift up the light of his countenance upon him: and so this petition is opposed to the complaint in (<191301>Psalm 13:1); and he further requests that he would “hear” him; that is, so as to answer him, and that immediately, and thereby show that he had not forgotten him, but was mindful of him, of his love to him, and covenant with him;

lighten mine eyes: meaning either the eyes of his body, which might be dim and dull through a failure of the animal spirits, by reason of inward grief, outward afflictions, or for want of bodily food; which when obtained refreshes nature, cheers the animal spirits, enlightens or gives a briskness to the eyes; (see <091427>1 Samuel 14:27,29); or else the eyes of his understanding, (<490118>Ephesians 1:18); that he might behold wondrous things in the law of God, know the things which were freely given to him of God, see more clearly his interest in him, and in the covenant of his grace, and have his soul refreshed and comforted with the light of God’s countenance; and he be better able to discern his enemies, and guard against them; and be directed to take the best method to be delivered and secured from them. The people of God are sometimes in the dark, and see no light; especially when benighted, and in sleepy frames; and it is God’s work to enlighten and quicken them; lest I sleep [the sleep] of death; a natural death [f220], which is comparable to sleep, and often expressed by it; and which sense agrees with lightening the eyes of his body, as before explained; or rather the sense is, lift up the light of thy countenance, revive thy work in the midst of the years; let me see thy goodness in the land of the living, that I may not faint and sink and die away. Or it may be an eternal death is designed; for though true believers shall never die this death, yet they may be in such circumstances, as through unbelief to fear they shall. The Targum paraphrases the word thus;

> “enlighten mine eyes in thy law, lest I sin, and sleep with those who are guilty of death.”

Ver. 4. Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him, etc.] Which is an argument God takes notice of; and for which reason he does not give up his people into the hands of their enemies; (see <053227>Deuteronomy 32:27). The Chaldee paraphrase interprets this of the evil imagination or corruption of nature, and represents it as a person, as the Apostle Paul does in (<450715>Romans 7:15-21); and which may be said to prevail, when it pushes on to sin, and hinders doing good, and carries captive; and it may be applied to Satan, the great enemy of God’s people, who triumphs over them, when he succeeds in his temptations;

[and] those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved; meaning from his house and family, from his country and kingdom, from a prosperous state and condition to a distressed one; at which the troublers of David’s peace would rejoice. They that trouble the saints are sin, Satan, and the world; and the two last rejoice when they are in an uncomfortable and afflicted condition; and especially Satan rejoices when he gains his point, if it is but to move them from any degree of steadfastness, of faith and hope, or from the ways of God in any respect: the Targum adds, “from thy ways”; for to be moved so as to perish eternally they cannot, being built upon the Rock of ages, and surrounded by the power and grace of God.

Ver. 5. But I have trusted in thy mercy, etc.] The faith, hope, and comfort of the psalmist grew and increased by prayer; from complaining he goes to praying, from praying to believing; he trusted not in himself, not in his own heart, nor in his own righteousness and merits, but in the mercy of God; and not in the bare absolute mercy of God, but in the grace and goodness of God, as the word [f221] here used signifies, as it is displayed in the plenteous redemption which is by Christ; which is a sufficient ground of faith and hope; (see <19D007>Psalm 130:7);

my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation; which God is the contriver, author, and giver of, and in which the glory of his perfections is so greatly displayed: and a true believer rejoices more on account that God is glorified by it than because of his own interest in it; and this joy is an inward one, it is joy in the heart, and is real and unfeigned, and is what continues, and will be felt and expressed both here and hereafter.

Ver. 6. I will sing unto the Lord, etc.] In prayer faith is encouraged, through believing the heart is filled with joy; and this joy is expressed by the lips, in songs of praise to the Lord, ascribing the glory of salvation to him, and giving him thanks for every mercy and blessing of life;

because he hath dealt bountifully with me; both in a way of providence and grace, granting life and preserving it, and supporting with the comforts of it; blessing with spiritual blessings, and crowning with loving kindness and tender mercies; all which is generous and bountiful dealing, and affords a just occasion of praise and thanksgiving; (see <19B607>Psalm 116:7 103:1-5).

PSALM 14

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 14

To the chief Musician, [a Psalm] of David

The argument of this psalm, according to Theodoret, is Sennacherib’s invasion of Judea, when he sent Rabshakeh to Hezekiah, with menaces and curses; upon which Hezekiah implored divine help, and obtained it, and the Assyrian army was destroyed by an angel; of all which he thinks this psalm was prophetic.

Ver. 1. The fool hath said in his heart, etc.] This is to be understood not of a single individual person, as Nabal, which is the word here used; nor of some Gentile king, as Sennacherib, or Rabshakeh his general, as Theodoret; nor of Nebuchadnezzar, nor of Titus, as some Jewish writers [f222] interpret it, making one to be here intended, and the other in the fifty third psalm: the same with this; but of a body, a set of men, who justly bear this character; and design not such who are idiots, persons void of common sense and understanding; but such who are fools in their morals, without understanding in spiritual things; wicked profligate wretches, apostates from God, alienated from the life of God; and whose hearts are full of blindness and ignorance, and whose conversations are vile and impure, and they enemies of righteousness, though full of all wicked subtlety and mischief: these say in their hearts, which are desperately wicked, and out of which evil thoughts proceed, pregnant with atheism and impiety; these endeavour to work themselves into such a belief, and inwardly to conclude, at least to wish,

[there is] no God; though they do not express it with their mouths, yet they would fain persuade their hearts to deny the being of God; that so having no superior to whom they are accountable, they may go on in sin with impunity; however, to consider him as altogether such an one as themselves, and to remove such perfections from him, as may render him unworthy to be regarded by them; such as omniscience, omnipresence, etc. and to conceive of him as entirely negligent of and unconcerned about affairs of this lower world, having nothing to do with the government of it:

and thus to deny his perfections and providence, is all one as to deny his existence, or that there is a God: accordingly the Targum paraphrases it,

> "there is no anjlwç, "government" of God in the earth;"

so Kimchi interprets it,

> "there is no governor, nor judge in the world, to render to man according to his works;"

they are corrupt; that is, everyone of these fools; and it is owing to the corruption of their hearts they say such things: they are corrupt in themselves; they have corrupt natures, they are born in sin, and of the flesh, and must be carnal and corrupt: or "they do corrupt", or "have corrupted" [f223]: they corrupt themselves by their atheistic thoughts and wicked practices, (<650110>Jude 1:10); or their works, as the Chaldee paraphrase adds; or their ways, their manner and course of life, (<010612>Genesis 6:12); and they corrupt others with their evil communications, their bad principles and practices, their ill examples and wicked lives;

they have done abominable works: every sinful action is abominable in the sight of God; but there are some sins more abominable than others; there are abominable idolatries, and abominable lusts, such as were committed in Sodom; and it may be these are pointed at here, and which are usually committed by such who like not to retain God in their knowledge; (see <450124>Romans 1:24,28);

[there is] none that doeth good; anyone good work in a spiritual manner; not in faith, from love, in the name and strength of Christ, and with a view to the glory of God: nor can any man do a good work without the grace of God, and strength from Christ, and the assistance of the Spirit of God: hence, whatsoever a wicked man does, whether in a civil or in a religious way, is sin; (see <202104>Proverbs 21:4,27). Arama takes these to be the words of the fool, or atheist, saying, there is no God that does good, like those in (<360112>Zephaniah 1:12).

Ver. 2. The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, etc.] As he did when all flesh had corrupted its way, and before he brought a flood upon the world of the ungodly, (<010612>Genesis 6:12). This is said in direct opposition to the atheistic thoughts and reasonings of wicked men, in (<191401>Psalm 14:1). There is a God, and he takes notice of the children of men, and of what is done by them; though his throne is in the heavens, and his dwelling there, yet he looks down from thence, and takes cognizance of all human affairs. This must be understood consistent with the omniscience and omnipresence of God; it is an anthropopathy, or a speaking after the manner of men; and denotes the exact notice which God takes, and distinct observation he makes, and the perfect and accurate knowledge he has of men and their actions; (see <011105>Genesis 11:5 18:20,21 <193313>Psalm 33:13-15); to see if there were any that did understand: not things natural, civil, and moral, but things spiritual as the Apostle Paul interprets the words, (<450311>Romans 3:11). For though man has not lost the natural faculty of his understanding, and may have an understanding of the things of nature, yet not of the things of God, until a supernatural light is put into him; not any spiritual experimental knowledge of God in Christ, nor of the way of salvation by Christ, nor of the work of the Spirit of God upon the heart, nor of the doctrines of the Gospel, nor any true sight and sense of his own state and condition;

[and] seek God; that is, “after God”; as the apostle in the same place explains it; after the knowledge of him and his ways, and communion with him; after the things of God, his interest and his glory: they do not seek after him in prayer, or by an attendance on his worship and ordinances; at least with their whole hearts, earnestly, diligently, constantly, and in the first place; nor do they seek after him in Christ, where he is only to be found; nor under the influence, and with the assistance of the blessed Spirit.

Ver. 3. They are all gone aside, etc.] As bankrupts, having run out their whole stock, and into debt, and have nothing to pay, nor make composition with, and are obliged to abscond, as Adam, (<010308>Genesis 3:8,24). The words in (<195303>Psalm 53:3) are, “everyone of them is gone back”; from God; have revolted from him, and turned their backs upon him, and have gone back from his commandment, despised his law, and cast away his word. The Apostle Paul interprets it, “they are all gone out of the way”; out of God’s way, into their own way; out of the path of truth, righteousness, and holiness, into the way of sin, error, darkness, and death; and with this agrees the interpretation of Aben Ezra, who adds, “out of the right way”; and of Kimchi and Ben Melech, whose gloss is, “out of the good way”; which is God’s way, or the way of his commandments;

they are [all] together become filthy, or “stinking”[f224], like putrid and corrupt flesh; (see <193805>Psalm 38:5 <230106>Isaiah 1:6); and so “unprofitable”, useless, and good for nothing, as the apostle renders it, (<450312>Romans 3:12). Mankind are universally filthy and unclean; they are all of them defiled with sin, both in soul and body, in all the faculties of their souls and members of their bodies; and they are originally and naturally so; nor can anything cleanse them from their pollution but the blood of Christ;

[there is] none that doeth good, no, not one: this is repeated partly to asseverate more strongly the depravity of mankind, and partly to express the universality of it; that there is no exception to it in any that descend from Adam by ordinary generation. Here follows in the Septuagint version, according to the Vatican copy, all those passages quoted by the apostle, (<450313>Romans 3:13-18); which have been generally supposed to have been taken from different parts of Scripture; so the Syriac scholiast says, in some ancient Greek copies are found eight more verses, and these are they, “Their throat”, etc.

Ver. 4. Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? etc.] Of the being of God, of the nature of sin, and of the punishment due unto it? This question is put either by way of admiration, as Kimchi and Aben Ezra observe; the psalmist, or rather God speaking after the manner of men, wondering that there should be such ignorance and stupidity among men, as before expressed; or rather, as denying this to be the case, and affirming that they have knowledge, notwithstanding they think, and say, and do, as before related, as in (<450921>Romans 9:21). Do not they know that there is a God? and that they are accountable to him for their actions? Verily they do: for this is said, not of sinners of the Gentiles; though even they, by the light of nature, know there is a God, and show the work of the law written in their hearts; and have a consciousness in them of good and evil; but of sinners in Zion, of the profligate part of mankind among the Jews, who had a divine revelation, by which they knew the one God of Israel; and a law, by which was the knowledge of sin, and whose sanctions were rewards and punishments. And it seems to design the chief among them, who had power over others, to eat them up and devour them; even their political and ecclesiastical governors (see <330301>Micah 3:1-3 <263402>Ezekiel 34:2), who, though they had no spiritual understanding, nor experimental knowledge of things, yet had a theoretical and speculative one; so that their sins were attended with this aggravation, that they were against light and knowledge, particularly what follows:

who eat up my people [as] they eat bread: not David’s people, but the Lord’s people: (see <191402>Psalm 14:2); whom he chose for his people, who were his covenant people, and who professed his name, and were called by it; these the workers of iniquity ate up, devoured, and consumed; (see <241025>Jeremiah 10:25); by reproaching and persecuting them, doing injury to their persons, property, and character: they devoured their persons, by using them cruelly and putting them to death; they devoured their substance, by spoiling them of it, and converting it to their own use, as the Pharisees are said to devour widows’ houses and they destroyed their good names and characters with their devouring words: and this they did with as much ease, delight, and pleasure, and without any remorse of conscience, and as constantly, as a man eats his bread. Or the words may be rendered, “they eat up my people, they eat bread”; that is, though they act such a wicked and cruel part, yet they have bread to eat, and fulness of it; they are not in straits, nor afflicted and punished; and because they are not, they are hardened in their impiety and iniquity: or “they eat bread”, after they have persecuted and devoured the Lord’s people, with peace of mind, without remorse of conscience, as if they had done no iniquity, like the adulterous woman in (<203020>Proverbs 30:20);

and call not upon the Lord; or pray to him, or serve and worship him; for invocation includes the whole worship of God; and this they do not, though they know him, and are daily supplied by him, and eat his bread. Some read this clause with the former, “they eat bread, and call not on the Lord”; as if their sin was, that when they eat bread, they did not ask a blessing upon it, nor return thanks to God for it, which ought to be done; but the accent “athnach” under mjl, “bread”, will not admit of this sense, though it seems to be countenanced by the Targum.

Ver. 5. There were they in great fear, etc.] This, shows that they had some knowledge of God, and consciousness of guilt, which they endeavoured to banish out of their minds by their fears of punishment; and these fears men of the most atheistic principles cannot get rid of. In (<195305>Psalm 53:5) it is added, “where no fear was”: that is, any cause or reason for it: such men are often frightened at their own shadows, afraid to be in the dark alone, as Hobbes the atheist was. The wicked flee when no man pursues, and are chased by the sound of a shaken leaf; (see <202801>Proverbs 28:1 <032636>Leviticus 26:36); or where there was no fear of God before their eyes, nor on their hearts, as well as no regard to men; or where before there were perfect peace and security, and no apprehension or dread of any calamity, ruin, and destruction; for God [is] in the generation of the righteous, or “of the righteous One” [f225]; which some understood of Jesus Christ the righteous: and though the age or generation in which he lived was a very wicked one, yet God was with him; as was seen by the doctrines he taught, and the miracles he wrought; and which filled the Jews with panic fears, lest the Romans should come and take away their place and nation: but rather this is to be understood of the generation of the saints, who are righteous through the righteousness of Christ, and have the new man in them, which is created in righteousness and true holiness, and live soberly and righteously; these are sometimes called the generation of the upright, and of the children of God, and of them that seek him, (<191202>Psalm 112:2 73:15 24:6); in the midst of these God is, among them he affords his gracious presence, and is with them, for their help and assistance against their enemies: and as this makes them fearless of them, it fills their enemies with dread and terror; (see <060209>Joshua 2:9-11). The Targum renders it,

> “the Word of the Lord is in the generation of the righteous.”

Ver. 6. You have shamed the counsel of the poor, etc.] The poor saints, the Lord’s people, the generation of the righteous, who are generally the poor of this world; poor in spirit, and an afflicted people: and the counsel of them intends not the counsel which they give to others, but the counsel which they receive from the Lord, from the Spirit of counsel, which rests upon them, and with which they are guided; and this is to trust in the Lord, and to make him their refuge; and which is good advice, the best of counsel. Happy and safe are they that take it! But this is derided by wicked and ungodly men; they mock at the poor saints for it, and endeavour to shame them out of it; but hope makes not ashamed; (see <192207>Psalm 22:7,8); because the Lord [is] his refuge: he betakes himself to him when all others fail; and finds him to be a refuge from the storm of impending calamities, and from all enemies.

Ver. 7. O that the salvation of Israel [were come] out of Zion! etc.] By whom is meant the Messiah, the Saviour of Israel, of all the elect of God, whether Jews or Gentiles; and who is so called, because the salvation of them was put into his hands, and he undertook it; and because he is the Captain and Author of it, and it is in him, and in no other. He was to come out of Zion, out of Judea, from among the Jews; Zion being, as Kimchi observes, the head of the kingdom of Israel; (see <451126>Romans 11:26). Accordingly Christ did come of the Jews, and salvation was of them, (<450904>Romans 9:4,5 <430422>John 4:22); and for his coming from hence, or for his incarnation, the psalmist most earnestly wishes: he was one of those kings, prophets, and righteous men, that desired to see the days of the Messiah, (<401317>Matthew 13:17 <421024>Luke 10:24). And what might move him so vehemently to wish for it, at this time, might be the sad corruption and depravity of mankind he had been describing, and the afflicted and distressed state of the saints;

when the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people. The people of God are, in their unregeneracy, in a state of captivity to sin, Satan, and the law; the work of the Messiah, when he came, was to proclaim liberty to the captives, to set them free, to deliver them from their spiritual bondage: and this Christ has done; he has redeemed his people from all their sins, and from the curse of the law, and from the power of Satan, and has led captivity captive; and which has justly occasioned great joy in the redeemed ones, according to this prophecy:

Jacob shall rejoice, [and] Israel shall be glad; that is, the posterity of Jacob and Israel; not his natural, but spiritual seed, such who are the true sons of Jacob, Israelites indeed; these having faith and hope in the plenteous redemption of Christ, rejoice in the view of their interest in it; they the song of redeeming love now, and these ransomed ones will hereafter come to Zion with joy, and everlasting joy upon their heads. The Jews refer this to the times of the Messiah [f226].

PSALM 15

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 15

A Psalm of David

As in the preceding psalm, according to Theodoret, the salvation of the inhabitants of Jerusalem is foretold, and the liberty of the captives; so in this advice is given to them, and the life they ought to live proposed, who should share in such benefits.

Ver. 1. Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? etc.] This question, with the following, is put by the psalmist in a view of the sad corruption and degeneracy of mankind described in the preceding psalm, which renders the sons of men unfit for the presence of God, and communion with him; and it is put to the Lord himself, the founder of Zion, who has set his King over this holy hill of his; who has enacted laws for the good of it, and brings his people thither, making them meet for it, and so is most proper to give the qualifications of such as are admitted here; for by the tabernacle is meant not the human nature of Christ, as in (<580802>Hebrews 8:2 9:11); as some interpret it, and apply all the characters in the following verses to Christ; nor heaven itself, of which the holy place made with hands in the tabernacle and temple were a figure, (<580924>Hebrews 9:24); for to "sojourn" [f227] or "lodge", as in an inn, as the word rendered abide signifies, will not suit with that state and place which is fixed and immovable; but the church of God on earth, called a "tabernacle", in allusion to the tabernacle of Moses, where God granted his presence, sacrifices were offered up with acceptance, and the holy vessels were put; and which was mean without, but rich and glorious within: so God affords his gracious presence in his church, accepts the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise offered to him there; and here are the vessels of mercy placed, which are sanctified and meet for the master's use; and though it is mean and despicable in its outward appearance, in the eyes of men, it is all glorious within; (see <220106>Song of Solomon 1:6); and this is the tabernacle of God, being of his building and preserving, and the place of his residence; who shall dwell in thy holy hill? the same is here intended as in the preceding clause; the allusion is to Mount Zion, whither the ark of the Lord was brought in David’s time, and on one part of which the temple was afterwards built: and the church may be compared to this hill, for its eminence and visibility in the world; for the holiness which God has put upon it, and for the immovableness of it; for though like, a tabernacle it may be carried from place to place, yet it is like an hill that can never be removed out of the world; it is built on a sure foundation, the Rock of ages. Now the purport of these questions is, who is a proper person to be an inhabitant of Zion? or to be a member of the church of God? the answer is in the following verses.

Ver. 2. He that walketh uprightly, etc.] Or “perfectly” [f228]; (see <011701>Genesis 17:1); not so as to be without sin entirely, but as not to be chargeable with any notorious crime, and living in it; moreover, perfection and uprightness often signify sincerity, and the phrase here may design an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile; whose faith is unfeigned, whose love is without dissimulation, whose hope is without hypocrisy, and his whole conduct without fraud and deceit; likewise such an one may be said to walk uprightly who walks according to the truth of the Gospel, and by faith on Christ and in Christ, as he has received him; and such an one is fit to be a member of a Gospel church; and worketh righteousness; not in order to his justification before God; for not such an one, but he that trusts in the Lord for righteousness, shall inherit his holy mountain, (<235712>Isaiah 57:12,13); but he that works the work of faith, and believes in the righteousness of Christ; who looks to it and receives it; that lays hold on it and pleads it as his justifying righteousness; he that does righteousness in this sense, is righteous as Christ is righteous, (<620307>1 John 3:7); and such an one is a proper person to dwell in his house; and who also by faith does works of righteousness, and whose life is a series and course of righteousness, as a fruit of his faith, and in consequence of his having laid hold on the righteousness of Christ; and speaketh the truth in his heart; receives Christ who is the truth, and the Gospel the word of truth into his heart, and makes an hearty profession of the same before men; and both speaks according to his light in the Scriptures of truth, whenever he speaks of divine things; and in common conversation speaks truth from his heart to his neighbour, and does not speak with a double heart, or say one thing with his mouth, and intend another in his heart; (see <191202>Psalm 12:2); or endeavour to deceive persons, and impose a falsehood on them, or tell them lies; for as such a person is not fit to dwell in a private house, or to be in a civil society, much less is he a proper person to be in the house of God.

Ver. 3. [He that] backbiteth not with his tongue, etc.] Is not a slanderer, a defamer, a tale bearer; a backbiter is one who privately, secretly, behind a man’s back speaks evil of him, devours and destroys his credit and reputation: the word here used comes from lgr, which signifies the “foot”, and denotes such a person who goes about from house to house, speaking things he should not, (<540513>1 Timothy 5:13); and a word from this root signifies spies; and the phrase here may point at such persons who creep into houses, pry into the secrets of families, and divulge them, and oftentimes represent them in a false light. Such are ranked amongst the worst of men, and are very unfit to be in the society of the saints, or in a church of Christ; (see <450130>Romans 1:30) (<471220>2 Corinthians 12:20);

nor doeth evil to his neighbour: to any man whatever, good or bad, friend or foe, whether in a natural, civil, or spiritual relation, either by words or deeds, to his person, property, or good name;

nor taketh up, a reproach against his neighbour; does not raise any scandalous report on him himself, nor will he bear to hear one from another, much less will he spread one; nor will he suffer one to lie upon his neighbour, but will do all he can to vindicate him, and clear his character.

Ver. 4. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned, etc.] A “vile” man is a very wicked, profligate, and abandoned creature, one that is to every good work reprobate; and such sometimes are in high places, (<191208>Psalm 12:8) (<271121>Daniel 11:21); and are greatly caressed and esteemed by the men of the world; but then, as they are an abomination to God, they should be despised by his people, let them be what they will as to their riches, honours, and wisdom among men; as Haman was by Mordecai, (<170302>Esther 3:2); and Ahab by Elisha, (<120314>2 Kings 3:14); and such who keep company with, and express a delight and pleasure in such sort of persons, ought by no means to have a place in the house of God. Some understand this of a good man being “despised in his own eyes”, as it may be rendered[f229]; on account of his vileness, and the imperfection of his obedience, and as expressive of his great humility, esteeming others better than himself; and who renounces himself, and is rejected by himself, having a very mean opinion of himself; which is the sense of the Targum, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi; and which is no bad sense, though the former is countenanced by what follows;

but he honoureth them that fear the Lord; who have the covenant grace of fear wrought in their hearts, and serve the Lord with reverence and godly fear; that is, who are truly religious and godly persons; these such who are fit members of the church of Christ love heartily, esteem of highly, and honour them by thinking and speaking well of them, and behaving with great respect and decency to them; (see <451210>Romans 12:10);

[he that] sweareth to [his own] hurt, and changeth not; having taken a solemn oath, so sacred is it with him, and such a regard has he to the name of God, by whom he swears, that though it is to his civil loss and detriment, yet he will not break it and depart from it, but punctually observe it: some render it, “he that swears to his neighbour, and changeth not” [f230]; he that is just to his word, faithful to his promises, that exactly fulfils all the obligations he lays himself under unto others; he that is honest and upright in all his dealings. The Jewish writers interpret this clause of a man’s vowing and swearing to afflict himself by fasting, which, though it is to the emaciating of his body, yet he strictly observes his vow or oath; but this is foreign from the scope of the place: it might be rendered, “he that swears to do evil, and does not recompense or perform” [f231], it being better to break through such an oath than to keep it; (see <030504>Leviticus 5:4).

Ver. 5. [He that] putteth not out his money to usury, etc.] To the poor, in an extravagant and exorbitant way, by which he bites, devours, and destroys his little substance, and sadly afflicts and distresses him; (see <022225>Exodus 22:25); otherwise, to lend money on moderate interest, and according to the laws, customs, and usages of nations, and to take interest for it, is no more unlawful than to take interest for houses and land; yea, it is according to the law of common justice and equity, that if one man lends money to another to trade with, and gain by, that he should have a proportionate share in the gain of such a trade; but the design of this passage, and the law on which it is founded, is, to forbid all exactions and oppressions of the poor, and all avaricious practices, and to encourage liberality and beneficence; and such who are covetous, and bite and oppress the poor, are not fit for church communion; (see <460511>1 Corinthians 5:11 <490505>Ephesians 5:5); nor taketh reward against the innocent; either to swear falsely against him, or to pass a wrong sentence on him; (see <091203>1 Samuel 12:3);

he that doeth these [things] shall never be moved; from the tabernacle of God, and his holy hill; he is fit to be a member of the church of God, and an inhabitant of Zion; and he shall dwell and abide there, he shall be a pillar which shall never go out, (<660312>Revelation 3:12); he shall finally persevere, through the grace of God; he shall hold on and out unto the end: and though he may fall through infirmity and temptation into sin, and that many times, yet he shall not finally and totally fall, (<610110>2 Peter 1:10); but shall be as Mount Zion which can never be removed, (<19C501>Psalm 125:1,2); The words should be rendered, since the accent "athnach" is on hla, "these things", thus; "he that doeth these things", not only what is mentioned in this verse, but in the foregoing, "he", I say, "shall never be moved".

PSALM 16

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 16

Michtam of David

This is a new title, not met with before, though it afterwards is prefixed to “five” psalms running, the fifty sixth, the fifty seventh, the fifty eighth, the fifty ninth, and the sixtieth psalms. Some take the word “michtam” to be the name of a musical instrument, as Kimchi on (<190401>Psalm 4:1); others the name of one of the tunes, as Jarchi; and others the tune of a song which began with this word, as Aben Ezra observes, to which this psalm was sung; the Septuagint translate it “stelography”, or an inscription upon a pillar; such an one as is erected by conquerors, as Theodoret observes, having writing on it declaring the victory obtained; suggesting that the psalm, or the subject of it, the death and resurrection of Christ, was worthy to be inscribed on a pillar of marble; and the Targum renders it, “a right engraving”, that deserves to be engraven in a monument of brass: but what seems to be the best sense of the word is, that it signifies a work of gold, and may be rendered, “a golden [psalm] of David”; so called, either because it was a dear and favourite song of his; or from the subject matter, which is more valuable and precious than the most fine gold: the title of it in the Syriac and Arabic versions is, and certain it is from (<191610>Psalm 16:10), the resurrection of Christ is spoken of in it, as is clear from the testimonies of two apostles, Peter and Paul, who cite it in proof of it, (<440225>Acts 2:25-31 13:35-37); and since there is but one person speaking throughout the psalm, and Christ is he that speaks in (<191610>Psalm 16:10), and which cannot be understood of David, nor of any other person but Christ, the whole of the psalm must be interpreted of him.

> “concerning the election of the church, and the resurrection of Christ;”

Ver. 1. Preserve me, O God, etc.] Prayer is proper to Christ as man; he offered up many prayers and supplications to Cost, even his Father, and his God, and as the strong and mighty God, as the word [f232] here used is commonly rendered by interpreters; with whom, all things are possible, and who is able to save; (see <580507>Hebrews 5:7 <420612>Luke 6:12 <402639>Matthew 26:39,42,44 <431701>John 17:1); and this petition for preservation was suitable to him and his case, and was heard and answered by God; he was very remarkably preserved in his infancy from the rage and fury of Herod; and very wonderfully was his body preserved and supported in the wilderness under a fast of forty days and forty nights together, and from being torn to pieces by the wild beasts among which he was, and from the temptations of Satan, with which he was there assaulted; and throughout the whole of his ministry he was preserved from being hindered in the execution of his office, either by the flatteries, or menaces, or false charges of his enemies; and though his life was often attempted they could not take it away before his time: and whereas Christ is in this psalm represented as in the view of death and the grave, this petition may be of the same kind with those in (<431227>John 12:27 <402639>Matthew 26:39,42); and put up with the same submission to the will of God; and at least may intend divine help and support in his sufferings and death, preservation from corruption in the grave, and the resurrection of him from the dead; and it may also include his concern for the preservation of his church, his other self, and the members of it, his apostles, disciples, and all that did or should believe in his name, for whom he prayed after this manner a little before his death; (see <422231>Luke 22:31,32 <431711>John 17:11,15,20,24); for in thee do I put my trust: or “have hoped” [f233]; the graces of faith and hope were implanted in the heart of Christ, as man, who had the gifts and graces of the Spirit without measure bestowed on him, and these very early appeared in him, and showed themselves in a very lively exercise, (<192207>Psalm 22:7 <420249>Luke 2:49); and were in a very eminent manner exercised by him a little before his death, in the view of it, and when he was under his sufferings, and hung upon the cross, (<230106>Isaiah 1:6-9) (<402746>Matthew 27:46 <191609>Psalm 16:9,10 22:8); and this his trust and confidence in God alone, and not in any other, is used as a reason or argument for his preservation and safety.

Ver. 2. [O my soul], thou hast said unto the Lord, etc.] Some take these to be the words of David speaking to the church, who had owned the Lord to be her Lord, and had declared what follows; others think they are the words of God the Father to his Son, suggesting to him what he had said; but they are rather an apostrophe, or an address of Christ to his own soul; and the phrase, “O my soul”, though not in the original text, is rightly supplied by our translators, and which is confirmed by the Targum, and by the Jewish commentators, Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi;

thou [art] my Lord; Christ, as man, is a creature made by God; his human nature is the true tabernacle which God pitched and not man, and on this consideration he is his Lord, being his Creator; and as Mediator Christ is his servant, and was made under the law to him, obeyed him, and submitted to his will in all things; so that he not only in words said he was his Lord, but by deeds declared him to be so;

my goodness [extendeth] not to thee; such who suppose that David here speaks in his own person, or in the person of other believers, or that the church here speaks, differently interpret these words: some render them, “my goodness [is] not above thee” [f234]; it is far inferior to thine, it is not to be mentioned with it, it is nothing in comparison of it; all my goodness, happiness, and felicity lies, in thee, (<19735>Psalm 73:25); others, “I have no goodness without thee”: the sense is the same as if it was “I have said”, as read the Greek, Vulgate Latin, and Oriental versions, and so Apollinarius; I have none but what comes from thee; what I have is given me by thee, which is the sense of the Targum; (see <590117>James 1:17); others, “my goodness is not upon thee” [f235]; does not lie upon thee, or thou art not obliged to bestow the blessings of goodness on me; they are not due to me, they spring from thy free grace and favour; to this sense incline Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi; (see <421710>Luke 17:10 <451135>Romans 11:35); others, “thou hast no need of my goodness”; nor wilt it profit thee, so R. Joseph Kimchi; (see <182202>Job 22:2,3,35:7,8); or the words may be rendered, “O my goodness”, or “thou art my good, nothing is above thee” [f236]; no goodness in any superior to God. But they are the words of Christ, and to be understood of his goodness; not of his essential goodness as God, nor of his providential goodness, the same with his Father’s; but of his special goodness, and the effect of it to his church and people; and denotes his love, grace, and good will towards them, shown in his incarnation, sufferings, and death; and the blessings of goodness which come thereby; such as a justifying righteousness, forgiveness of sin, peace, and reconciliation, redemption, salvation, and eternal life. Now though God is glorified by Christ in his incarnation, sufferings, and death, and in the work of man’s redemption, yet he stood in no need of the obedience and sufferings of his Son; he could have glorified his justice another way, as he did in not sparing the angels that sinned, in drowning the old world, and in burning Sodom and Gomorrah, and in other instances of his vengeance;

though there is glory to God in the highest in the affair of salvation by Christ, yet the good will is to men; though the debt of obedience and sufferings was paid to the justice of God, whereby that is satisfied and glorified, yet the kindness in paying the debt was not to God but to men, described in (<191608>Psalm 16:8).

Ver. 3. [But] to the saints that [are] in the earth, etc.] Who are sanctified or set apart by God the Father in election; whose sins are expiated by the blood of Christ in redemption, and who are sanctified or made holy by the Spirit of God in the effectual calling; and who live a holy life and conversation: these are said to be “in the earth”, not to distinguish them from the saints in heaven, to whom the goodness of Christ extends as to them, unless it be to distinguish them from the angels in heaven, who are called saints, (<053302>Deuteronomy 33:2); as Aben Ezra observes; but to point out the place of their abode, scattered up and down in the earth; and to show that love, grace, goodness, and kindness of Christ reaches to them in the present state of things, notwithstanding all their meanness and imperfection in themselves, and their despicableness in the eyes of others; (see <431301>John 13:1);

and [to] the excellent; the same with the saints, who though reckoned by men the faith of the world, and the offscouring of all things, are in high esteem with Christ; they are “nobles”[f237] in his account, as the word is rendered in (<243021>Jeremiah 30:21); they are princes in all the earth, and these princes are kings; they are made kings and priests unto God by Christ; they wear and live like kings, and have the attendance, power, riches, and glory of kings; they are guarded by angels, they have power with God, they are rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom;

in whom [is] all my delight; Christ’s delights were with these sons of men before the world was, and have always continued with them; they are his “Hepbzibah” and “Beulah”, as in (<236204>Isaiah 62:4); hence he became incarnate, and suffered and died for them, and makes application of all the blessings of his grace and goodness to them.

Ver. 4. Their sorrows shall be multiplied, etc.] Not the sorrows of the saints and excellent ones, by seeing the idolatry of men, as Aben Ezra interprets it; but the sorrows of such

[that] hasten [after] another [god]; a false god, an idol, to serve and worship it; for, generally speaking, idolaters are more forward, eager, and hasty to attend a false worship, than the worshippers of the true God are to attend his service: now their sorrows are many, even in their worship, by cutting their bodies with knives and lancets, as the worshippers of Baal did; and by sacrificing their own children, which, notwithstanding their rash and precipitate zeal, could not fail of giving them pain and uneasiness; and, besides temporal punishments inflicted on them for their idolatry by God, and stings of conscience, which must sometimes attend them, the wrath of God lies upon them, and they will have their portion in the lake of fire, and the smoke of their torment will ascend for ever and ever. Some render the words, "their idols are multiplied"; and so the Chaldee paraphrase, when men leave the true God, they know not where to stop; the Heathens had not less than thirty thousand gods, and the Jews when they fell into idolatry ran in the same way, (<240228>Jeremiah 2:28 11:13 <280811>Hosea 8:11). The word "god" is not in the original text, though the supplement is countenanced by the Jewish writers[f238], who interpret it in this way; but I rather think the text is to be understood not of Heathen idolaters, but of unbelieving Jews, who, rejecting the true Messiah, hasten after another Messiah, king, and saviour; when Jesus the true Messiah came they received him not; but when another came in his own name they were eager to embrace him, (<430543>John 5:43); and to this day they are hastening after another; and in their daily prayers pray that the coming of the Messiah might be hdyhmb, "in haste", in their days[f239]; and the sense of the passage is, that the sorrows of the Jews, rejecting the Messiah and hastening after another, would come thick and fast upon them, until wrath came upon them to the uttermost, (<402406>Matthew 24:6-8) (<520216>1 Thessalonians 2:16); and it holds good of all, whether Jews or Gentiles, that hasten after another saviour; that say to the works of their hands, that they are their gods, or go about to establish a righteousness of their own, or seek for life and salvation by their own doings; these, sooner or later, will lie down in sorrow, (<235011>Isaiah 50:11);

> "they multiply their idols, and after that hasten to offer their sacrifices;"

their drink offerings of blood will I not offer: meaning not the libations of the Gentiles, which were not wine, according to the law, (<041510>Numbers 15:10); but blood, even sometimes human blood; but the sacrifices of the Jews, which were either got by blood, murders and robberies, and on that account were hateful to God, (<236108>Isaiah 61:8); or rather the sacrifices of bloodthirsty persons, whose hands were full of blood, (<230111>Isaiah 1:11-15); and such were the offerings of the priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, in Christ's time, who were the children of them that killed the prophets, and sought after the blood of Christ. Or it may be rendered, "I will not offer their drink offerings because of blood"[f240]; meaning his own blood shed for the remission of sins, which being obtained, there remains no more offering for sin; and so the words may express the abolition of all legal sacrifices, and the causing of them to cease through the blood and sacrifice of Christ. This shows the person speaking to be a priest, and therefore could not be David, but must be the Messiah, who is a priest after the order of Melchizedek; and who had a better sacrifice to other up than any of the offerings of the Jews, even his own self, by which he has put away sin for ever. He adds, nor take up their names into my lips; not the names of idol deities, nor of their worshippers, but of the Jews that rejected him as the Messiah, for whom he would not pray, (<431709>John 17:9); and so as he refused to offer their sacrifices, he would not perform the other part of his priestly office for them in intercession; though this may also have respect to the rejection of the Jewish nation as the people of God; writing a "Loammi", (<280109>Hosea 1:9), upon them, declaring them to be no longer the children of the living God; leaving their names for a curse, a taunt, and a proverb in every place; expressing the utmost abhorrence of them, and showing the utmost indignation at them, as persons whose names were not worthy or fit to be mentioned, (<490503>Ephesians 5:3).

Ver. 5. The Lord [is] the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup, etc.] This is said by Christ as a priest, and in allusion to the Levitical priests, who had no inheritance in the land of Canaan with their brethren, but the Lord was their part and portion, and their inheritance, (<041820>Numbers 18:20 <051801>Deuteronomy 18:1,2); and it expresses the strong love and affection Christ had for the Lord as his God, the delight and pleasure he had in him, and the satisfaction he had in the enjoyment of him and communion with him, and that it was his meat and drink to serve him, and to do his will; and though his goodness did not extend to him, yet his goodness and happiness as man lay in him: unless the sense should be,

> "the Lord is he who gives me the portion of mine inheritance;"

meaning his church and people, all the elect of God, who are Christ's portion and inheritance, given him by the Father; (see <053209>Deuteronomy 32:9 <190208>Psalm 2:8); And assigns to me my cup, as of blessings, so of sorrows and sufferings, which being measured out, filled up, and put into his hand by his Father, he freely took it, (<431811>John 18:11);

thou maintainest my lot; that is, either his interest in God himself, as his covenant God, which always continued; or the lot of goods, of grace and glory, put into his hands for his people, which always remains; or rather the saints themselves, who, as they are Christ’s portion and inheritance, so they are his lot; in allusion to the land of Canaan, which was divided by lot: these Jehovah took hold of, kept, preserved, and upheld, as the word [f241] signifies; so that they shall never totally and finally fall and perish; and this sense is countenanced by what follows.

Ver. 6. The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant [places], etc.] The allusion is to the measuring of land by lines, and appropriating each part to the proper owners; and lines design the land that is measured out by them, and here the church and people of God, the chosen ones who are given to Christ, as his portion and inheritance; and the sense is, that Christ’s portion lies among or in pleasant persons; such as were so to him, as he saw them in his Father’s purposes and decrees; and as they are clothed in his righteousness, and washed in his blood; and as they are adorned with the graces of his Spirit; and as they will be as a bride adorned for him in the New Jerusalem state, for rather persons than places are here meant: though as the bounds of the saints’ habitations are set, and they are known to Christ, so they were pleasant to him, and he took delight and rejoiced in the very spots of ground where he knew they would dwell, (<200831>Proverbs 8:31); and the word “places” is supplied by Aben Ezra and Kimchi: but the former sense seems best, and agrees with what follows;

yea, I have a goodly heritage: so the Lord’s people are called, (<600503>1 Peter 5:3); these are Christ’s heritage, his peculiar treasure, his jewels, with whom he is greatly delighted and well pleased; more than men are with their gold and silver, houses and land, and their greatest wealth and substance: these persons are the inheritance with which he is contented and fully satisfied.

Ver. 7. I will bless the Lord, etc.] As prayer, so thanksgiving belongs to Christ, as man and Mediator; (see <401125>Matthew 11:25,26 <431142>John 11:42); and here he determines to praise the Lord, and give thanks to him for counsel and instruction:

who hath given me counsel; for though he himself is the Counsellor, with respect to his people, yet as man he received counsel from God, and the spirit of counsel rested on him, (<231102>Isaiah 11:2); and fitted him for and directed him in the execution of his prophetic office; for the doctrine he taught was not his own, but his Father's; and he said nothing of himself but what his Father taught him, and instructed him to speak, (<430616>John 6:16 8:28 12:49,50). And he also gave him counsel about the execution of his priestly office, or about his sufferings and death, and drinking of the cup, which he, with submission to the divine will, desired might pass from him; but having advice in this matter, most cheerfully and courageously yielded to take it, (see <402639>Matthew 26:39,42,44,46,50,53,54);

my reins also instruct me in the night seasons; when engaged in prayer to God, in which he sometimes continued a whole night together, (<420612>Luke 6:12 21:37); and especially in that dark and dismal night in which he was betrayed, when it was the hour and power of darkness with his enemies; then, his inward parts being influenced by the spirit of wisdom and counsel, directed him how to behave and conduct himself. Or "the reins" being the seat of the affections, and being put for them, may signify, that his strong affection for God, and love to his people, put him upon and moved him to take the steps he did, to deliver up himself into the hands of sinful men, in order to suffer and die for his friends, and obtain eternal salvation for them.

Ver. 8. I have set the Lord always before me, Not his fear only, or the book of the law, as Jarchi interprets it, but the Lord himself; or, "I foresaw the Lord always before my face", (<440226>Acts 2:26); as Christ is set before men in the Gospel, to look unto as the object of faith and hope, to trust in and depend upon for life and salvation; so Jehovah the Father is the object which Christ set before him, and looked unto in the whole course of his life here on earth; he had always an eye to his glory, as the ultimate end of all his actions; and to his will, his orders, and commands, as the rule of them; and to his purposes, and counsel, and covenant, to accomplish them; and to his power, truth, and faithfulness, to assist, support, and encourage him in all his difficulties and most distressed circumstances;

because [he is] at my right hand: to counsel and instruct, to help, protect, and defend: the phrase is expressive of the nearness of God to Christ, his presence with him, and readiness to assist and stand by him against all his enemies; (see <19A931>Psalm 109:31 110:5 121:5); so the Targum paraphrases it, "because his Shechinah rests upon me";

I shall not be moved: as he was not from his place and nation, from the duty of his office, and the execution of it, by all the threats and menaces of men; nor from the fear, worship, and service of God, by all the temptations of Satan; nor from the cause of his people he had espoused, by all the terrors of death, the flaming sword of justice, and the wrath of God; but, in the midst and view of all, stood unshaken and unmoved; (see <234204>Isaiah 42:4 50:5-9).

Ver. 9. Therefore my heart is glad, etc.] Because he had the Lord always in view; he was at his right hand, for his support and assistance, as well as because of what is expressed in the next verses: this is the same with rejoicing in spirit, (<421021>Luke 10:21); it denotes an inward joy, and fulness of it, because of the Lord’s presence with him; (see <440228>Acts 2:28);

and my glory rejoiceth; meaning either his soul, which is the most glorious and noble part of man, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech interpret it; or rather his tongue, as in (<440226>Acts 2:26); the faculty of speaking in man being what gives him a superior glory and excellency to other creatures, and is that whereby he glorifies God; and so the word is often used in this book; (see <193012>Psalm 30:12 57:8 108:1); and here the phrase designs Christ’s glorifying God, and singing his praise with joyful lips, among his disciples, a little before his sufferings and death;

my flesh also shall rest in hope; in the grave, which, as it is a resting place to the members of Christ, from all their sorrow, toil, and labour here; so it was to Christ their head, who rested in it on the Jewish sabbath, that day of rest, and that berth “in safety” [f242], as the word used may signify, and in of his resurrection from the dead, as follows.

Ver. 10. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, etc.] Meaning, not in the place of the damned, where Christ never went, nor was; for at his death his soul was committed to his Father, and was the same day in paradise: but rather, “sheol” here, as “hades” in the Near Testament, signifies the state of the dead, the separate state of souls after death, the invisible world of souls, where Christ’s soul was; though it was not left there, nor did it continue, but on the third day returned to its body again; though it seems best of all to interpret it of the grave, as the word is rendered in (<014238>Genesis 42:38 <233818>Isaiah 38:18); and then by his “soul” must be meant, not the more noble part of his human nature, the soul, in distinction from the body; for as it died not, but went to God, it was not laid in the grave; but either he himself, in which sense the word “soul” is sometimes used, even for a man’s self, (<190302>Psalm 3:2 11:1). For it might be truly said of him, God’s Holy One, that he was laid in the grave, though not left there; or rather his dead body, for so the word “nephesh” is rendered in (<040906>Numbers 9:6,10 19:11,1-3); so “anima” is used in Latin authors [f243]: this was laid in the grave; for Joseph having begged it of Pilate, took it down from the cross, and laid it in his own new tomb; though it was the will of God it should not be left there, but be raised from the dead, as it was on the third day, before it was corrupted, as follows:

neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption; that is, to lie so long in the grave as to putrefy and be corrupted; wherefore he was raised from the dead on the third day, according to the Scriptures, before the time bodies begin to be corrupted; (see <431139>John 11:39); and this was owing not to the care of Joseph or Nicodemus, in providing spices to preserve it, but of God who raised him from the dead, and gave him glory; and who would not suffer his body to be corrupted, because he was holy, and because he was his Holy One; that so as there was no moral corruption in him, there should be no natural corruption in him; so the Jewish Midrash [f244] interprets it, that which is not true of David, nor of any but the Messiah. This character of “Holy One” eminently belongs to Christ above angels and men, yea, it is often used of the divine Being, and it agrees with Christ in his divine nature, and is true of him as man; he is the holy thing, the holy child Jesus; his nature is pure and spotless, free from the taint of original sin; his life and conversation were holy and harmless, he did no sin, nor knew any, nor could any be found in him by men or devils; his doctrines were holy, and tended to promote holiness of life; all his works are holy, and such is the work of redemption, which is wrought out in consistence with and to the glory of the holiness and righteousness of God; Christ is holy in all his offices, and is the fountain of holiness to his people; and he is God’s Holy One, he has property in him as his Son, and as Mediator, and even as an Holy One; for he was sanctified and sent into the world by him, being anointed with the holy oil of his Spirit without measure. The word may be rendered, a “merciful” [f245] or “liberal” and “beneficent one”: for Christ is all this; he is a merciful as well as a faithful high priest, and he generously distributes grace and glory to his people.

> “no worm or maggot should have power over him;”

Ver. 11. Thou wilt show me the path of life, etc.] Not the way of life and salvation for lost sinners, which is Christ himself; but the resurrection of the dead, which is a passing from death to life; and was shown to Christ, not doctrinally, or by illuminating his mind, and leading him into the doctrine of it, for so he himself has brought it to light by the Gospel; practically and experimentally, by raising him the dead, or by causing him to pass from death to life; and he was the first to whom the path of life was shown in this sense, or the that who ever trod in it, and so has led the way for others: hence he is called the that fruits of them that slept, the firstborn and first begotten from the dead; for though others were raised before, yet not to an immortal life, never to die more, as he was; now the view, the faith, and hope of this, of not being left in the grave so long as to see corruption, and of being raised from the dead to an immortal life, caused joy and gladness in Christ, at the time of his sufferings and death, as well as what follows;

in thy presence [is] fulness of joy: Christ, being raised from the dead, ascended to heaven, and was received up into glory into his Father's presence, and is glorified with his own self, with his glorious presence, for which he prayed, (<431705>John 17:5); and which fills his human nature with fulness of joy, with a joy unspeakable and full of glory; (see <440228>Acts 2:28); and as it is with the head it will be with the members in some measure; now the presence of God puts more joy and gladness into them than anything else can do; but as yet their joy is not full; but it will be when they shall enter into the joy of their Lord, into the presence of God in the other world then everlasting joy will be upon their heads;

at thy right hand [there are] pleasures for evermore; Christ being entered into heaven is set down at the right hand of God in human nature, an honour which is not conferred on any of the angels, (<580113>Hebrews 1:13); where the man Christ Jesus is infinitely delighted with the presence of God, the never fading joys of heaven, the company of angels and glorified saints; here he sits and sees of the travail of his soul; he prolongs his days and sees his seed, souls called by grace, and brought to glory one after another, until they are all brought in, in whom is all his delight; and which was the joy set before him at the time of his sufferings and death: or the words may be rendered "in thy right are pleasant things for ever" [f246], and may design those gifts and graces, which Christ, being exalted at the right hand of God, received from thence and gives to men, for the use and service, of his church and people, in the several successive ages of time; and so Aben

Ezra takes the words to be an allusion to a man’s giving pleasant gifts to his friend with his right hand.

PSALM 17

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 17

A Prayer of David

This prayer was put up by David either in his own person, on his own account, praying to God for the vindication of his cause, and for salvation and deliverance from his enemies; or in the person of the Messiah, whose type he was, and of the whole church, so Jerom of old interpreted it; and the title of it in the Arabic version is, in which preservation and protection are prayed for, and hope of eternal life is expressed. It was written, according to Theodoret, when David suffered persecution from Saul.

> “a prayer in the person of a perfect man, and of Christ himself, and of everyone that is redeemed by him;”

Ver. 1. Hear the right, O Lord, etc.] The psalmist appeals to the Lord as a Judge, sitting on the throne judging right, that he would hear his cause litigated between him and his adversaries, determine and give the decisive sentence about it; so Christ committed himself to him that judgeth righteously, (<600223>1 Peter 2:23); for by “right” may be meant his right and cause, or his righteous cause, as in (<190904>Psalm 9:4); unless rather his righteous prayer should be intended, so the Targum paraphrases it, “my prayer in righteousness”; not presented for the sake of his own righteousness, but on account of the righteousness of Christ, and for the vindication of his righteous cause before men: the Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Arabic versions, render it “my righteousness”, meaning his righteous cause; but rather the word may be rendered “righteousness” [f247], or the “righteous one”, and may design the psalmist himself, who was a righteous person, and such the Lord hears; or Christ, whose name is the Lord our righteousness, (<242306>Jeremiah 23:6); and who, as an advocate or intercessor for himself and for his people, is Jesus Christ the righteous, (<620201>1 John 2:1). The Septuagint version takes it to be an epithet of the Lord himself, translating it, “O Lord of my righteousness”, as in (<190401>Psalm 4:1); and so the Syriac version, “hear, O holy Lord”; and in this manner does Christ address his father in prayer, (<431711>John 17:11,25); and the consideration of the holiness and righteousness of God is of use in prayer to glorify God, and to command a proper awe and reverence of him; attend unto my cry; the word for “cry” signifies both a noise made in a way of joy and grief; wherefore the Chaldee paraphrase renders it, “attend to my praise”, or hymn of praise, and which arises from sorrow and distress; and intends not mental prayer attended with groanings which cannot be uttered, but vocal prayer expressed in a loud and mournful manner, signifying the distress the person is in, and his earnestness and importunacy for help; and of this sort were some of Christ’s prayers; (see <580507>Hebrews 5:7);

give ear unto my prayer, [that goeth] not out of feigned lips; hypocritical and deceitful ones; but this went forth from his heart, which was lifted up with his hands to God, to whom he drew nigh with a true heart, and called upon him in the sincerity and uprightness of his soul; and of this sort were all Christ’s prayers, in whose mouth there is no guile: the various expressions, “hear, attend, give ear”, which signify the same thing, show the distress the supplicant was in, the fervency of his prayer, and his vehement and earnest desire to be heard and answered immediately; and since the accent “athnach” is upon the word ytlpt, “my prayer”, this last clause is not to be joined only to that, but refers to all that is said before; as that his “right” and his “cry”, as well as his prayer, were unfeigned.

Ver. 2. Let my sentence come forth from thy presence, etc.] Not of condemnation, such as came forth from God and passed on Adam and all his posterity, (<450512>Romans 5:12,18); though such an one was executed on Christ, as he was the surety and representative of his people; but of justification, which came forth from God and passed on Christ, when he rose from the dead, and upon his people in him, (<540316>1 Timothy 3:16 <450425>Romans 4:25). Here it chiefly designs the vindication of the innocence of the psalmist before men; and his request is, that as he was fully persuaded that he was clear of the things he was charged with in the sight of God, that he would openly and publicly make him appear so before men; that he would bring forth his righteousness as the light, and his judgment as the noonday, (<193706>Psalm 37:6); and of which he made no doubt but he would; so Christ, though he was traduced by men, knew he should be justified by his Father, and by his children, (<235008>Isaiah 50:8 <401119>Matthew 11:19);

let thine eyes behold the things that are equal; which is not to be understood barely of the eyes of his omniscience; for these behold things both equal and unequal, good and evil, things which agree and disagree with the law of God, the rule of righteousness and equity; but of his approbation of them, and that he would some way or other testify that approbation; for the petition intends the favouring of his just and equal cause, and making it to appear to be so.

Ver. 3. Thou hast proved mine heart, etc.] This properly belongs to God, who is the searcher of the heart and reins, and is desired by all good men; and though God has no need to make use of any means to know the heart, and what is in it; yet in order to know, or rather to make known, what is in the hearts of his people, he proves them sometimes by adversity, as he did Abraham and Job, and sometimes by prosperity, by mercies given forth in a wonderful way, as to the Israelites in the wilderness, (<050802>Deuteronomy 8:2,16); sometimes by suffering false prophets and false teachers to be among them, (<051303>Deuteronomy 13:3); and sometimes by leaving corruptions in them, and them to their corruptions, as he left the Canaanites in the land, and as he left Hezekiah to his own heart, (<070222>Judges 2:22 3:1 <143231>2 Chronicles 32:31). In one or other or more of these ways God proved the heart of David, and found him to be a man after his own heart; and in the first of these ways he proved Christ, who was found faithful to him that appointed him, and was a man approved of God;

thou hast visited [me] in the night; God visited and redeemed his people in the night of Jewish darkness; he visits and calls them by his grace in the night of unregeneracy; and so he visits with his gracious presence in the night of desertion; and he often visits by granting counsel, comfort, and support, in the night of affliction, which seems to be intended here; thus he visited the human nature of Christ in the midst of his sorrows and sufferings, when it was the Jews’ hour and power of darkness. Elsewhere God is said to visit every morning, (<180718>Job 7:18);

thou hast tried me; as silver and gold are tried in the furnace; thus the people of God, and their graces in them, are tried by afflictions; so David was tried, and in this manner Christ himself was tried; wherefore he is called the tried stone, (<232816>Isaiah 28:16);

[and] shalt find nothing; or “shalt not find”: which is variously supplied; some “thy desire”, or what is well pleasing to thee, so Jarchi; or “thou hast not found me innocent”, as Kimchi; others supply it quite the reverse, “and iniquity is not found in me”, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic versions; or “thou hast not found iniquity in me”, as the Syriac and Arabic versions; to which agrees the Chaldee paraphrase, “and thou hast not found corruption”; which must be understood, not as if there was no sin and corruption in David; for he often makes loud complaints and large confessions of his sins, and earnestly prays for the forgiveness of them; but either that there was no sin in his heart which he regarded, (<196618>Psalm 66:18); which he nourished and cherished, which he indulged and lived in; or rather there was no such crime found in him, which his enemies charged him with; (see <190703>Psalm 7:3,4). This is true of Christ in the fullest sense; no iniquity was ever found in him by God, by men or devils, (<431430>John 14:30) (<600222>1 Peter 2:22); and also of his people, as considered in him, being justified by his righteousness, and washed in his blood, (<245020>Jeremiah 50:20); though otherwise, as considered in themselves, they themselves find sin and corruption abounding in them, (<450718>Romans 7:18,21);

I am purposed [that] my mouth shall not transgress; by murmuring against God, on account of his visitation and fiery trials, or by railing at men for their false charges and accusations; this resolution was taken up by the psalmist in the strength of divine grace, and was kept by him, (<193909>Psalm 39:9); so Christ submitted himself patiently to the will of God without repining, and when reviled by men reviled not again, (<422242>Luke 22:42 <600223>1 Peter 2:23); and from hence may be learned, that the laws of God may be transgressed by words as well as by works, and that the one as well as the other should be guarded against; (see <193901>Psalm 39:1).

Ver. 4. Concerning the works of men, etc.] Of wicked men, as to what respects and concerns them, or in the midst of them; in the midst of a wicked generation of men, and their filthy conversation; who appear to be so, by the word of thy lips; the law of God, the Scriptures of truth, the rule and standard of faith and practice, which show what works are good and what are not; by the use, help, and benefit of this;

I have kept [me from] the paths of the destroyer; such is the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning; antichrist, whose name is Abaddon and Apollyon, both which signify a destroyer; false teachers, and all wicked men: the “paths” of such are their wicked principles and practices, their damnable errors and heresies, their sins and lusts, which make up the broad road that leads to destruction: these the psalmist “kept” or “observed”[f248], for the words “me” and “from” are not in the original text; and the sense is, that he took notice of them, and avoided them, and, as a faithful prince and magistrate, forbad his subjects walking in them, and restrained them from them, making the word of God the rule of his conduct.

Ver. 5. Hold up my goings in thy paths, etc.] Which being spoken by David in his own person, and for himself, shows that he was conscious of his own weakness to keep himself in the ways of God, and to direct his steps therein; and that he was sensible of, the need he stood in of divine power to uphold and support him in them;

[that] my footsteps slip not; out of the paths of truth and duty, of faith and holiness; of which there is danger, should a man be left to himself, and destitute of divine direction and aid; (see <19730>Psalm 73:2) (<241023>Jeremiah 10:23); and though Christ had no moral weakness in him, and was in no danger of falling into sin, or slipping out of the ways of God; yet these words may be applied to him in a good sense, as considered in human nature, and attended with the sinless infirmities of it, he being God’s servant, whom he upheld, and of whom he gave his angels charge to keep him in all his ways, (<234201>Isaiah 42:1 <199111>Psalm 91:11).

Ver. 6. I have called upon thee, etc.] In prayer. This had been the constant practice of the psalmist, and he still continued in it; for thou wilt hear me, O God; God is a God hearing prayer; he is used to hear his people, and they have frequent experience of it, and they may be assured that whatsoever they ask according to his will, and in the name of Christ, he will hear; and such an assurance is a reason engaging the saints to a constant calling upon God, (<19B602>Psalm 116:2); and such confidence of being always heard Christ had, (<431141>John 11:41,42);

incline thine ear unto me, [and hear] my speech; meaning his prayer, which he now directed to him in full assurance of being heard, and is as follows.

Ver. 7. Show thy marvellous loving kindness, etc.] Such is the lovingkindness of God to his people in Christ; which is sovereign, free, special, distinguishing, everlasting, and unchangeable; it is better than life, and passes knowledge; and which is set upon men and not angels, some and not all, and these many of them the worst and vilest of men, and all of them by nature children of wrath as others; and which has appeared in choosing them in Christ, putting them into his hand, and making a covenant with him for them; in sending him into the world to suffer and die for them; in regenerating, adopting, justifying, pardoning, and saving them with an everlasting salvation; all which is marvellous in their eyes, and will be the wonder of men and angels to all eternity: this sometimes is hidden from the objects of it, as it might be from the psalmist, and therefore he desires a manifestation of it to him; or else his sense is, that God would show to others in what a marvellous manner he loved him, by the help, deliverance, and salvation he would give him. Such a petition will agree with Christ; (see <194010>Psalm 40:10,11). Some render the words[f249], “separate thy lovingkindness”, or cause it to pass “from them that rise up on” or “against thy right hand”; but these were never the objects of it; and there is no separation of them from it, nor of that from them who are interested in it, (<450838>Romans 8:38,39); much better may it be rendered, “separate” or “distinguish thy lovingkindness”[f250]; that is, let it appear that I have special interest in thy lovingkindness, distinct from others; distinguish me by thy lovingkindness, remember me with that which thou bearest to a peculiar people, (<19A604>Psalm 106:4); them which put their trust [in thee]; not in men, not in an arm of flesh, not in themselves, in their own power, wisdom, riches, and righteousness; but in the Lord their God, who is the Saviour of all men, but especially of them that believe, (<540410>1 Timothy 4:10); for these he saves both in a temporal and in a spiritual manner;

O thou that savest by thy right hand; either by his power, or by the man of his right hand, his own son;

from those that rise up [against them]; from all their spiritual enemies, sin and Satan; and from all outward ones, from the men of the world, oppressors and violent persecutors, who are afterwards described: the phrase, “by thy right hand”, is by some, as Aben Ezra, connected with the word trust, and rendered, “them which trust in thy right hand”[f251]; either in the grace, mercy, and favour of God, dispensed by his right hand; or in his strength, and the mighty power of his arm; and by others it is joined to the last clause, and so it stands in the original text, and rendered, “from those that rise up against thy right hand”[f252]; and so the words describe such persons who in a bold and presumptuous manner set themselves against God, and strengthen themselves against the Almighty; who resist his counsel and will, oppose themselves to the Lord and his Anointed, the man of his right hand, made strong for himself; and to his saints, who are as dear to him as his right hand, and who are preserved by him in the hollow of his hand.

Ver. 8. Keep me as the apple of the eye, etc.] Which is weak and tender, and is hurt and put to pain, and made uneasy by every little thing that annoys it, and than which nothing is more dear to a man, or he is more careful of preserving from being hurt; and fitly represents the weak estate and condition of God’s people, his affection for them, and tender care of them; who as he has provided tunics for the eye, and guarded it with eyebrows, so he has taken care for the safety of his dear children, (<053210>Deuteronomy 32:10 <380208>Zechariah 2:8);

hide me under the shadow of thy wings; alluding either to the wings of the cherubim over the mercy seat, where God granted his presence; so the Targum paraphrases it, or to birds, who cover their young ones with their wings to save them from birds of prey; (see <199101>Psalm 91:1,4 <233005>Isaiah 30:5 <402337>Matthew 23:37). From such passages perhaps the Heathens had their notion of presenting their gods with wings [f253].

> “under the shadow of thy Shechinah hide me;”

Ver. 9. From the wicked that oppress me, etc.] Or “waste” or “destroy” [f254]; as wild beasts do a field or vineyard when they get into it; and such havoc do persecutors and false teachers make of the church and people of God, when they are suffered to get in among them, (<198013>Psalm 80:13) (<442029>Acts 20:29); wherefore from such wicked and unreasonable men protection is desired, (<530302>2 Thessalonians 3:2);

[from] my deadly enemies; enemies against his soul or life, who sought to take it away, nothing would satisfy them but this;

[who] compass me about; on all sides, in order to obtain their desire; such were the enemies of Christ, and so they are described, (<192212>Psalm 22:12,13,16).

Ver. 10. They are enclosed in their own fat, etc.] Or “their fat has enclosed them”; either their eyes, that they can hardly see out of them, or their hearts, so that they are stupid and senseless, and devoid of the fear of God; the phrase is expressive of the multitude of their wealth and increase of power, by which they were swelled with pride and vanity, and neither feared God nor regarded man; so the Targum paraphrases it,

> “their riches are multiplied, their fat covers them;”

(see <053215>Deuteronomy 32:15 <197308>Psalm 73:8,9); some read it, “their fat shuts their mouths”, so Aben Ezra and Kimchi; or “with their fat they shut them”[f255]; but the accent “athnach” will not admit of this reading; the last word belongs to the next clause;

with their mouth they speak proudly; against God and his people, belching out blasphemies against the one, and severe menaces and threatenings against the other.

Ver. 11. They have now compassed us in our steps, etc.] The sense is, they could not stir a step but they were at their heels, surrounding them on every side. This was true of David, when he was pursued by Saul, and followed by him to Keilah and the wilderness of Maon, (<092308>1 Samuel 23:8,26); according to the “Cetib”, or textual writing, it should be rendered, “they have compassed me”; but, according to the “Keri”, or marginal reading, and the points, it is as we have translated it, and which is followed by the Targum, and both are right, and design David as a principal person, and those that were with him, who were encompassed by Saul and his men. This also was verified in Christ, when Judas followed him into the garden with a band of men to betray him, and when he was enclosed by wicked men as he went to the cross, and hung upon it, (<431802>John 18:2,3 <192212>Psalm 22:12,16); and may likewise be accommodated to the case of all the saints, who are troubled on every side, are beset with the corruptions of their hearts, the temptations of Satan, and the reproaches and persecutions of the men of the world, (<470408>2 Corinthians 4:8 7:5);

they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth; which posture either denotes fraudulence and hypocrisy, showing, by looking only upon the ground, as if they were harmless and inoffensive, and had no ill designs, and took no notice of anything; which, as it was true of David’s enemies, so of the Jews and of Judas with respect to Christ, and of false teachers with respect to the church, (<422020>Luke 20:20) (<400715>Matthew 7:15 26:48,49); or else inhumanity and contempt, not caring to turn their eyes to look upon them in distress, but kept their eyes fixed upon the earth, so Christ was treated by the Jews, (<235303>Isaiah 53:3); or rather their being intent upon mischief, their diligence and watchfulness to observe all motions, and take every opportunity “to strike”, or “cast me down to the earth”, as the Arabic and Syriac versions render it; or the sense is, as Kimchi gives it, their eyes are upon our ways, to spread nets for us in the earth to take us.

Ver. 12. Like as a lion [that] is greedy of his prey, etc.] Or “the likeness of him is as a lion”[f256]; meaning Saul, as Kimchi interprets it; or everyone of them that compassed them about, as Aben Ezra observes; sometimes wicked and persecuting princes are compared to lions, for their strength and cruelty; (see <202815>Proverbs 28:15 <550417>2 Timothy 4:17); so the devil is called a roaring lion, (<600508>1 Peter 5:8); and the antichristian beast is said to have the mouth of a lion, (<661302>Revelation 13:2); and as it were a young lion lurking in secret places; to leap upon its prey, and seize it at once, as it has opportunity; this denotes the secret and insidious method which the enemies of Christ take to do mischief; (see <191009>Psalm 10:9,10).

Ver. 13. Arise, O Lord, etc.] (see <190307>Psalm 3:7 7:6 9:19 10:12);

disappoint him, or “prevent his face”[f257]; be beforehand with him, and so disappoint him, when he is about to seize his prey; who is comparable to the lion, or to the young lion; meaning the chief of his enemies, it may be Saul;

cast him down; everyone of them that set themselves to cast down others to the earth. Jarchi’s note is, that he may bow down and fall;

> “cut off his feet,”

deliver my soul from the wicked, [which is] thy sword; so Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, render the words; that is, from wicked men, whom God makes use of as instruments to afflict and chastise his people: so the Assyrian monarch is called the “rod” of his anger, with whom he scourged his people Israel, (<231005>Isaiah 10:5). Compare with this (<192220>Psalm 22:20). The words are rendered by some, “deliver my soul from the wicked by thy swords”[f258]; meaning not the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God by which Christ was delivered from the wicked one, when tempted by him in the wilderness; but the avenging justice of God, the sword of the Lord, which, being whetted and taken hold on, and used by him, brings vengeance on his enemies, and salvation to his people; (see <053241>Deuteronomy 32:41 <232701>Isaiah 27:1 <244706>Jeremiah 47:6,7). The Targum paraphrases the clause thus,

> “deliver my soul from the wicked, who deserves to be slain by thy sword.”

Ver. 14. From men [which are] thy hand, O Lord, etc.] Some understand these words, with what follows, as independent of the former, and of another set of men, even of good men; so the Targum,

> “and the righteous who deliver their souls for thy sake, O Lord, unto death in the earth, their portion is in eternal life;”

so Jarchi gives the like sense of them: but the words are to be connected with the preceding, as they are by Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech; and the sense is, deliver my soul from men, which are instruments in thine hand to chastise thy people: so even Satan himself, and the Sabeans and Chaldeans, whom he instigated to afflict Job, are called the “hand” of the Lord that touched him, because he suffered them to do what they did for the trial of him, (<181921>Job 19:21). The words may be rendered, “the men of thy hand”[f259]; who are raised up by thine hand to the power and dignity they have; and who can easily be pulled down by it; and who are in thine hand, and at thy beck and control, and whose wrath and fury thou canst restrain. Or they may be rendered, “from men by thy hand”[f260]; that is, deliver me from them by thy strong hand and mighty power; as Israel of old was delivered from the Egyptians by the strong and mighty hand of God; from men of the world: who are, as they were when they came into the world, in sin, in darkness, and in a carnal and unregenerate state; who are not only in the world, but of it, and belong to it, and to it only; and are under the influence of the god of the world, and are taken with the lusts and pleasures of it, and live in them and serve them: and are of worldly spirits, inordinately love the things of the world, mind earth and earthly things, and are unconcerned about the things of another world; (see <421608>Luke 16:8);

[which have] their portion in [this] life; and in this only; have a large share of the good things of this life; and which is all their portion, (<421625>Luke 16:25);

and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid [treasure]: earthly treasure, as gold and silver, which is called hid treasure, because it is first hid in the bowels of the earth, out of which it is dug, and afterwards hid in the coffers of worldly men; and oftentimes kept to the hurt of the owners of it. Or the phrase may denote the value and preciousness of it. And to have the belly filled with this is to have a very great affluence and plenty of it; though it is very rare, let it be ever so large, that men are fully satisfied with it;

they are full of children; which among the eastern nations was reckoned a considerable part of outward prosperity and happiness; (see <182107>Job 21:7,8,11 <19C703>Psalm 127:3-5); or their "children are full", or "filled" [f261] with hidden treasure also;

and leave the rest of their [substance] to their babes; their children's children; their grandchildren, as Kimchi explains it; and which is said, not by way of complaint, as an evil in them, since it is lawful and right for parents to lay up for their children, and leave it to them: unless the sense is, that they engross all to themselves, and to their posterity, in life and death; while they live, they indulge their sensual appetites and lusts, and fill themselves and theirs, but give nothing to the poor and hungry; nor part with anything for the interest of God and true religion; and when they die leave nothing for such use and service, but all to their posterity: but rather the phrase is expressive of their great plenty; that having lived in and enjoyed great fulness themselves, and given large portions to their children, yet have much left; which, at death, they bequeath to the young generation. Now from such men in power and dignity, and from being hurt by them, as well as from communion and conversation with them, the psalmist desires to be delivered; and expresses his satisfaction in other and better things than they enjoy, in the following words.

Ver. 15. As for me, etc.] I do not desire to be in their place and stead, with all their plenty and prosperity; I am content with my present condition and situation: for behold thy face in righteousness; that is, appear before God in public worship, where was the ark, the symbol of the face of God; enjoy his gracious presence, have the discoveries of his love, and see his face and favour; than which nothing was more desirable by him and delightful to him. Or God himself may be meant by "his face"; and especially God as he is to be beheld in the face of Christ, the Angel of his presence; and who is to be beheld by faith in the present state of things, though as through a glass, darkly; and in the future state perfectly, and as he is, both with the eyes of the understanding, and, after the resurrection, with the eyes of the body; (see <181926>Job 19:26,27); and to this state the psalmist seems more especially to have respect, as Jarchi interprets it: and the beatific vision of God in Christ will be very glorious and exceeding delightful; it will be assimilating and appropriating; it will be free from all darkness and interruption, and will continue for ever. And this shall be seen “in righteousness”; the psalmist believing that he should then appear as an innocent person clear of all the false charges brought against him; and so this may be understood of the righteousness of his cause, in which he should stand before God, and enjoy communion with him:, or this may design that perfect holiness and purity of heart, without which no man shall see the Lord; and which, though now imperfect, shall in the other state be without spot or blemish: or rather, the righteousness of Christ, which fits believers for, and in which they are brought into and stand in, the King’s presence;

I will, or "shall"

I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness; which will be in the resurrection morn: or, as Jarchi expresses it, when the dead shall awake from their sleep; for this is not to be understood of awaking from natural sleep in the morning; when it is a satisfaction to a believer to be with God, and to have God with him, (<19D918>Psalm 139:18); nor of awaking from a sleepy drowsy frame of spirit, which sometimes attends the saints; but of rising from the dead: for as death is oftentimes expressed by sleep in Scripture, so the resurrection by an awaking out of it, (<232619>Isaiah 26:19 <271202>Daniel 12:2); at which time the saints will arise with the image of the heavenly One upon them: they will be like to Christ both in soul and body; in soul, in perfect knowledge and complete holiness: in body, in incorruption and immortality, in power, glory, and spirituality; in this will lie their happiness and satisfaction. Or the meaning is, that he should be satisfied with the likeness of God, with Christ the image of God, when he should arise from the dead; seeing he should then appear with him in glory, see him as he is, and be like him, and be for ever in his presence; which will yield endless pleasure and unspeakable satisfaction. For the words may be interpreted, not of David’s awaking, but of the glory of God awaking or appearing; which would afford an infinitely greater satisfaction than worldly men have in worldly things[f262], to which this is opposed, (<191710>Psalm 17:10); so the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions read, I shall be satisfied when thy glory appears, or is seen; and so the Ethiopic and Arabic versions.

PSALM 18

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 18

To the chief Musician, [a Psalm] of David

This is the same with that in (<102201>2 Samuel 22:1-23), with some variations, omissions, and alterations:

the servant of the Lord; not only by creation, nor merely by regeneration, but by office, as king of Israel, being put into it by the Lord, and acting in it in submission and obedience to him; just as the apostles under the New Testament, on account of their office, so style themselves in their epistles:

who spake unto the Lord the words of this song; that is, who delivered and sung this song in so many express words, in public, before all the congregation of Israel, to the honour and glory of God:

in the day [that] the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul, Not that this psalm was composed and sung the selfsame day that David was delivered from Saul, and set upon the throne; for it seems to have been written in his old age, at the close of his days; for immediately after it, in the second book of Samuel, it follows, “now these be the last words of David”, (<102301>2 Samuel 23:1): but the sense is, that whereas David had many enemies, and particularly Saul, who was his greatest enemy, the Lord delivered him from them all, and especially from him, from him first, and then from all the rest; which when he reflected upon in his last days, he sat down and wrote this psalm, and then sung it in public, having delivered it into the hands of the chief musician for that purpose. There are two passages cited out of it in the New Testament, and applied to Christ; (<191802>Psalm 18:2), in (<580213>Hebrews 2:13), and (<191849>Psalm 18:49) in (<451509>Romans 15:9); and there are many things in it that very well agree with him; he is eminently the “servant” of the Lord as Mediator; he was encompassed with the snares and sorrows of death and hell, and with the floods of ungodly men, when in the garden and on the cross God was his helper and deliverer, as man; and he was victorious over all enemies, sin, Satan, the world, death and hell; as the subject of this psalm is all along represented: and to Christ it does most properly belong to be the head of the Heathen, whose voluntary subjects the Gentiles are said to be, (<191843>Psalm 18:43,44); and which is expressed in much the same language as the like things are in (<235504>Isaiah 55:4,5); which is a clear and undoubted prophecy of the Messiah; to which may be added, that the Lord's Anointed, the King Messiah, and who is also called David, is expressly mentioned in (<191850>Psalm 18:50); and which is applied to the Messiah by the Jews[f263] as (<191832>Psalm 18:32) is paraphrased of him by the Targum on it;

and he said; the following words:

Ver. 1. I will love thee, O Lord, my strength.] These words are not in twenty second chapter of Second Samuel: the psalm there begins with (<191802>Psalm 18:2). The psalmist here expresses his love to the Lord, and his continuance in it; that Jehovah the Father was, is, and ever will be the object of Christ's love, is certain; and which has appeared by his readiness in the council and covenant of grace to do his will; by his coming down from heaven to earth for that purpose; by his delight in it, it being his meat and drink to do it; and by his sufferings and death, which were in compliance with, and obedience to it, (<431431>John 14:31); and as in David, so in all regenerate ones, there is love to God; Jehovah is loved by them in all his persons; Jehovah the Father is loved, and to be loved, for the perfections of his nature, because of the works of his hands, of creation and providence; and particularly because of his works of special grace and goodness, and especially because of his love wherewith he has loved his people, (<620419>1 John 4:19). Jehovah the Son is loved, and to be loved, above all creatures and things whatever, sincerely and heartily, fervently and constantly; because of the loveliness of his person, the love of his heart, and his works of grace and redemption; all of him is lovely; and he is to be loved, and is loved, in his person, offices, relations, people, word, and ordinances: Jehovah the Spirit is loved, and to be loved, because of his person and perfections, and operations of grace; as a sanctifier, comforter, the spirit of adoption, the earnest and pledge of eternal glory. The word here used signifies the most intimate, tender, and affectionate love; it often designs mercy and bowels of mercy; so Aben Ezra interprets it of seeking mercy of God: the reasons are as follow in this verse and (<191802>Psalm 18:2): because "the Lord is my strength"; so he was to Christ as man, who as such was the man of his right hand, the Son of Man, whom he made strong for himself, to do his work, and for his glory, (<198017>Psalm 80:17); he promised to strengthen him, and he did, (<198921>Psalm 89:21 <234201>Isaiah 42:1 49:8); and so he is the strength of all his saints, even Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit; he is the strength of their hearts both in life and at death; he is the strength of their graces, who strengthens that which he has wrought for them, and in them; he strengthens them to do their duty, to bear the cross, and every affliction, and against every enemy of their souls; and this renders him very lovely and amiable to them.

Ver. 2. The Lord [is] my rock, etc.] To whom the saints have recourse for shelter and safety, for supply, support, and divine refreshment; and in whom they are secure, and on whom they build their hopes of eternal life and happiness, and so are safe from all enemies, and from all danger. Christ is called a Rock on all these accounts, (<196102>Psalm 61:2,3) (<233202>Isaiah 32:2 33:16 <401618>Matthew 16:18 <461004>1 Corinthians 10:4); and my fortress; or garrison; so the saints are kept in and by the power of God as in a garrison, (<600105>1 Peter 1:5); and my deliverer: out of all afflictions, and from all temptations, and out of the hands of all enemies; from a body of sin and death at last, and from wrath to come;

my God; the strong and mighty One, who is able to save, and who is the covenant God and Father of his people;

my strength, in whom I will trust; as Christ did, and to whom these words are applied in (<580213>Hebrews 2:13); and as his people are enabled to do even under very distressing and discouraging circumstances, (<181315>Job 13:15) (<232604>Isaiah 26:4);

my buckler; or shield; who protects and defends them from their enemies, and preserves them from the fiery darts of Satan; and the horn of my salvation; who pushes, scatters, and destroys their enemies, and saves them; a metaphor taken from horned beasts; so Christ, the mighty and able Saviour, is called, (<420169>Luke 1:69);

[and] my high tower; such is the name of the Lord, whither the righteous run and are safe, (<201810>Proverbs 18:10); and where they are above and out of the reach of every enemy; (see <233316>Isaiah 33:16); in (<102203>2 Samuel 22:3), it is added, “and my refuge, my Saviour, thou savest me from violence”. These various epithets show the fulness of safety in Jehovah, the various ways he has to deliver his people from their enemies, and secure them from danger; and the psalmist beholding and claiming his interest in him under all these characters, rendered him exceeding lovely and delightful to him; and each of them contain a reason why he loved him, and why, in the strength of grace, he determined to love him. God may be regarded in all these characters by Christ as man.

Ver. 3. I will call upon the Lord, etc.] In prayer, for fresh mercies, and further appearances of himself, and discoveries of his grace and favour;

[who is worthy] to be praised; for the perfections of his nature, the works of his hands, his providential goodness, and more especially for his covenant grace and blessings in Christ. The Targum is, agreeably to the rule the apostle gives, (<500406>Philippians 4:6); and this prayer was a prayer of faith, as follows;

> “in praise, or with an hymn, I pray before the Lord;”

so shall I be saved from mine enemies: which was founded upon past experience of God’s goodness to him in distress, when he called upon him, as the next words show.

Ver. 4. The sorrows of death compassed me, etc.] These words and the following, in this verse and (<191805>Psalm 18:5), as they respect David, show the snares that were laid for his life, the danger of death he was in, and the anxiety of mind he was possessed of on account of it; and as they refer to Christ, include all the sorrows of his life to the time of his death, who was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief personally, and bore and carried the sorrows and griefs of all his people; and may chiefly intend his sorrows in the garden, arising from a view of the sins of his people, which he was about to bear upon the cross; and from an apprehension of the wrath of God, and curse of the law, which he was going to sustain for them, when his soul was περιλυπος, encompassed about with sorrow, even unto death, (<402638>Matthew 26:38); when his sorrow was so great, and lay so heavy upon him, that it almost pressed him down to death, he could scarce live under it; and may also take in the very pains and agonies of death; he dying the death of the cross, which was a very painful and excruciating one; (see <192214>Psalm 22:14-17); The Hebrew word for “sorrows” signifies the pains and birth throes of a woman in travail; and is here fitly used of the sufferings and death of Christ; through which he brought forth much fruit, or many sons to glory. The Targum is,

> “distress has encompassed me, as a woman that sits upon the stool, and has no strength to bring forth, and is in danger of dying.”

In (<102205>2 Samuel 22:5), it is “the waves” or “breakers of death compassed me”; and the word there used is rendered in (<281313>Hosea 13:13); “the breaking forth of children”; moreover the same word signifies “cords”[f264], as well as pains and sorrows; and the allusion may be to malefactors being bound with cords when led to execution, and put to death; and may here signify the power of death, under which the Messiah was held for a while, but was loosed from it at his resurrection; to which sense of the word, and to the words here, the Apostle Peter manifestly refers, (<440224>Acts 2:24);

and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid; meaning either the multitude of them, as Herod, Pontius Pilate, the Roman soldiers, and people of the Jews, who all gathered together against him; so the Targum endured by them; as spitting upon, buffering, scourging, etc. The word rendered “ungodly men [is] Belial”; and signifies vain, worthless, and unprofitable men; men of no figure or account; or lawless ones, such as have cast off the yoke of the law, are not subject to it; persons very wicked and profligate. The word in the New Testament seems to be used for Satan, (<470615>2 Corinthians 6:15); where it is so rendered in the Syriac version, and he may be designed here; and by the floods of Belial may be meant, not so much the temptations of Satan in the wilderness, as his violent and impetuous attacks upon Christ in the garden, when being in an agony or conflict with him, his sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood, (<422244>Luke 22:44). The Septuagint render the word, “the torrents of iniquity troubled me”; which was true of Christ, when all the sins of his people came flowing in upon him, like mighty torrents, from all quarters; when God laid on him the iniquity of them all, and he was made sin for them; and in a view of all this “he began to be sore amazed”, (<411433>Mark 14:33); compare with this (<196901>Psalm 69:1,2). Arama interprets Belial of the evil imagination in David, who had a war in himself.

Ver. 5. The sorrows of hell compassed me about, etc.] Or “the cords of the grave”[f265], under the power of which he was detained for awhile; the allusion may be to the manner of burying among the Jews, who wound up their dead bodies in linen clothes; so that they were as persons bound hand and foot; and thus were they laid in the grave; (see <431144>John 11:44); and so was Christ, till he was raised from the dead, when he showed himself to have the keys of hell and death, and to be no more under their power, or be held by them; the snares of death prevented me; or “met” or “got before me” [f266] the sense is, he was taken in them: this phrase designs the insidious ways and methods which the enemies of Christ took to ensnare him, and take away his life, and in which they succeeded; (see <402604>Matthew 26:4).

Ver. 6. In my distress I called upon the Lord, etc.] The great Jehovah, the everlasting I AM, who is the most High in all the earth, and who is able to save, (<580507>Hebrews 5:7); and cried unto my God; as Jesus did, (<402746>Matthew 27:46); so the members of Christ, when in distress, as they often are, through sin and Satan, through the hidings of God’s face, a variety of afflictions, and the persecutions of men, betake themselves to the Lord, and call upon their God: a time of distress is a time for prayer; and sometimes the end God has in suffering them to be in distress is to bring them to the throne of his grace; and a great privilege it is they have that they have such a throne to come to for grace and mercy to help them in time of need, and such a God to sympathize with them, and help them; and their encouragement to call upon him, and cry unto him, is, that he is Jehovah, omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent; who knows their wants, is able to help them, and is a God at hand to do it;

He heard my voice out of his temple; that is, out of heaven his dwelling place; for the temple at Jerusalem was not built in David’s time; and it may be observed, that the prayer of the psalmist, or whom he represents, was a vocal one, and not merely mental; and hearing it intends a gracious regard unto it, an acceptance of it, and an agreeable answer: for it follows, and my cry came before him, [even] into his ears; God did not cover himself with a cloud, that his prayer could not pass through; but it was admitted and received; it came up before him with acceptance; it reached his ears, and even entered into them, and was delightful music to them: (see <431141>John 11:41,42 <580507>Hebrews 5:7).

Ver. 7. Then the earth shook and trembled, etc.] As it did quickly after Christ called upon the Lord, and cried to his God upon the cross, (<402750>Matthew 27:50,51); and so some time after, when his people were praying together, the place where they were assembled was shaken, (<440431>Acts 4:31); as a token of God’s presence being with them: and the shaking and trembling of the earth is often used as a symbol of the presence of God, and of the greatness of his majesty; as when he brought the children of Israel through the Red sea, went before them in the wilderness, and descended on Mount Sinai, which mountain then moved and quaked exceedingly; (see <19A432>Psalm 104:32 77:16-18 68:7,8 <021918>Exodus 19:18); and it is easy to observe, that in this, and other parts of this majestic account of the appearance of God on the behalf of the person the subject of this psalm, and against his enemies, there are manifest allusions to the giving of the law on Mount Sinai; though it may be this shaking of the earth, and what follows, are to be understood in a figurative sense;

the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken; and design the shaking of the earth and heavens, prophesied of in (<370206>Haggai 2:6,7); and which is explained in (<581226>Hebrews 12:26,27); of the removing the ordinances of the ceremonial law, that Gospel ordinances might remain unshaken; for in (<102208>2 Samuel 22:8); the words are, “the foundations of heaven moved and shook”; and the shaking and moving of the earth and mountains may denote the abolition and destruction of kingdoms and nations; and first of the civil polity of the Jews, and of their ecclesiastical state, which quickly ensued upon the death of Christ; and next of the ruin of Rome Pagan, and then of Rome Papal; which are both signified by an earthquake, and by the removal of mountains, (<660612>Revelation 6:12,14 11:13 16:18-20); because he was wroth; with the people of the Jews, for disbelieving and rejecting the Messiah; for setting themselves, and taking counsel together against him, and putting him to death; for these things God was angry with them, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost, and their nation, city, and temple were destroyed, (<190201>Psalm 2:1-5 <520216>1 Thessalonians 2:16); and with the Pagan empire and antichristian powers, (<660616>Revelation 6:16,17 11:18).

Ver. 8. There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, etc.] This, with what follows, describes a storm of thunder; the “smoke” designs thick black clouds, gathered together; “fire” intends lightning; and “coals of fire”, hot thunderbolts; and the whole is borrowed from, and is an allusion to what was at the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, (<021916>Exodus 19:16,18); The majesty of God is here set forth in much such language as is the leviathan in (<184119>Job 41:19-21); the “smoke of his nostrils” seems to intend the indignation of God against the enemies of David, of Christ, and of his people, and the punishment be will inflict upon them, (<236505>Isaiah 65:5 <661411>Revelation 14:11). The Targum interprets it of the pride and insolence of Pharaoh; and fire out of his mouth devoured; God is a wall of fire round about his people, and a consuming one to his and their enemies. This expresses the wrath of God upon the Jewish nation, and his sending the Roman armies to burn their city, (<402207>Matthew 22:7); coals were kindled by it; the Jews being as dry trees, were fit fuel for the fire of divine wrath, and so presently became as coals of fire; so the antichristian party, upon the pouring out of the fourth vial, will be scorched with heat, and blaspheme the name of God, (<661608>Revelation 16:8,9).

Ver. 9. He bowed the heavens also, and came down, etc.] To execute wrath and vengeance on wicked men; which is always the sense of these phrases when they go together; (see <19E406>Psalm 144:6-8 <236401>Isaiah 64:1,2); The Targum is, "he bowed the heavens, and his glory appeared"; that is, the glory of his power, and of his mighty hand of vengeance; for not his grace and mercy, but his indignation and wrath, showed themselves; for it follows, and darkness [was] under his feet; the Targum is, "a dark cloud", expressive of the awfulness of the dispensation to wicked men; who are not allowed to see the face of God, are debarred his presence, and denied, communion with him, and to whom everything appears awful and terrible, (<199702>Psalm 97:2-5).

Ver. 10. And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly, etc.] The Targum renders it in the plural number, "cherubim"; and so the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic versions; and by whom may be meant, either the angels, who are as horses and chariots, on whom Jehovah rides, and who art he makes use of as executioners of his wrath and vengeance, (<380605>Zechariah 6:5 <196817>Psalm 68:17); and to whom wings are assigned as a token of swiftness, (<230602>Isaiah 6:2); or rather the ministers of the Gospel, who are the living creatures in (<660407>Revelation 4:7,8); and answer to the "cherubim" in Ezekiel's visions; and whom God made use of, especially after the death of Christ, and when the Gospel was rejected by the Jews, to carry it into the Gentile world, which was done by them with great speed and swiftness; and Maimonides [f267] gives a caution, not to understand the phrase, "he did fly", as of God, but of the cherub;

yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind; which may design the speedy help and assistance God gave to his Son, and gives to his people; and the swift destruction of their enemies; (see <19A403>Psalm 104:3,4); the words in (<102211>2 Samuel 22:11), with only the variation of a letter in one word, are, “and he was seen upon the wings of the wind”; which were both true; nor need a various reading be supposed, the psalmist using both words at different times, suitable to his purpose, and which both express his sense. Wings are ascribed to the winds by the Heathen poets, and they are represented as winged on ancient monuments [f268].

Ver. 11. He made darkness his secret place, etc.] Which, and the dark waters in the next clause, are the same with the thick clouds in the last, in which Jehovah is represented as wrapping himself, and in which he lies hid as in a secret place; not so as that he cannot see others, as wicked men imagine, (<182213>Job 22:13,14); but as that he cannot be beheld by others; the Targum interprets it, his pavilion round about him [were] dark waters, [and] thick clouds of the skies; these were as a tent or tabernacle, in which he dwelt unseen by men; (see <183629>Job 36:29); all this may design the dark dispensation of the Jews, after their rejection and crucifixion of Christ; when God departed from them, left their house desolate, and them without his presence and protection; when the light of the Gospel was taken away from them, and blindness happened unto them, and they had eyes that they should not see, and were given up to a judicial darkness of mind and hardness of heart; which were some of the dark, deep, and mysterious methods of divine Providence, with respect to which God may be said to be surrounded with darkness, dark waters, and thick clouds; (see <451107>Romans 11:7,8,25,32,33).

> “he caused his Shechinah to dwell in darkness;”

Ver. 12. At the brightness [that was] before him, The lightning that came out of the thick clouds; which may denote, either the coming of Christ to take vengeance on the Jewish nation, which was swift and sudden, clear and manifest; or the spreading of the Gospel in the Gentile world, in which Christ, the brightness of his Father’s glory, appeared to the illumination of many; (see <402427>Matthew 24:27); and both may be intended, as the effects following show; his thick clouds passed; that is, passed away; the gross darkness, which had for so many years covered the Gentile world, was removed when God sent forth his light and truth; and multitudes, who were darkness itself, were made light in the Lord;

hail [stones] and coals of fire; the same Gospel that was enlightening to the Gentiles, and the savour of life unto life unto them, was grievous, like hail stones, and tormenting, scorching, irritating, and provoking, like coals of fire, and the savour of death unto death, to the Jews; when God provoked them, by sending the Gospel among the Gentiles, and calling them: or these may design the heavy, awful, and consuming judgments of God upon them, which are sometimes signified by hail storms; (see <660807>Revelation 8:7 16:11). In (<102213>2 Samuel 22:13), it is only, "through the brightness before him were coals of fire kindled".

Ver. 13. The Lord also thundered in the heavens, etc.] By his apostles and ministers, some of which were Boanergeses, sons of thunder, whose ministry was useful to shake the consciences of men, and bring them to a sense of themselves, (<410317>Mark 3:17);

and the Highest gave his voice; the same with thunder; for thunder is often called the voice of the Lord, (<183705>Job 37:5 40:9 <192903>Psalm 29:3-9); compare with this (<196811>Psalm 68:11); the Targum interprets it, "he lifted up his word"; the same effects as before follow, hail [stones] and coals of fire; (see Gill on "<191812>Psalm 18:12").

Ver. 14. Yea, he sent out his arrows, etc.] By which thunderbolts, cracks of thunder, and flashes of lightning, seem to be meant; (see <197717>Psalm 77:17,18 144:6); comparable to arrows shot, and sent out of a bow; and may denote, either the doctrines of the Gospel, which were sharp in the hearts of Christ's enemies, and are either the means of subduing them to him, or of destroying them, being the savour of death unto death; or however, like arrows, give great pain and uneasiness where they stick, and grievously distress and torment; as does the fire which comes out of the mouth of the two witnesses, (<661105>Revelation 11:5,10). The Targum is, or else the judgments of God are meant, as famine, pestilence, and the sword, which God sent unto, and spent upon the Jewish nation, (<053223>Deuteronomy 32:23);

> "he sent his word as arrows;"

and scattered them; among the nations of the world, where they have been dispersed ever since;

and he shot out lightnings; or “many lightnings”, so the Targum:

and discomfited them; troubled, terrified, and distressed them.

Ver. 15. Then the channels of water were seen, etc.] Or, “of the sea”; as in (<10216>2 Samuel 22:16). There seems to be an allusion to the drying up of the sea when the Israelites passed through it. Aben Ezra interprets this of the discovery of the secrets of enemies, and of their deep schemes and counsels, which they seek to hide, but are made known by him who sees all things in the dark; and so the following clause; and the foundations of the world were discovered; but it rather seems to intend the utter extirpation and ruin of the Jewish nation, both in their civil and ecclesiastic state, the foundation of which was rooted up and laid bare; unless with Jerom we understand this of the ministers of the word, in whom the doctrines of grace were channelled, and who were as fountains of water; and of the foundation of the apostles and prophets made known in the Gospel: but the former sense is best; since it follows, at thy rebuke, O Lord; at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils; for the destruction of the Jews was the effect of divine wrath and vengeance: so ends the account of the wonderful appearance of God in favour of the person the subject of this psalm, and against his enemies; the deliverance wrought for him is next described.

Ver. 16. He sent from above, etc.] Either his hand, as in (<19E407>Psalm 144:7); he exerted and displayed his mighty power in raising Christ from the dead; or he sent help from his sanctuary; as in (<192002>Psalm 20:2); and helped and strengthened him in a day of salvation; or when he wrought out the salvation of his people; or “he sent his word”, as in (<19A720>Psalm 107:20); his word of command, to take up his life again, as he had given it to lay it down, (<431018>John 10:18). The Targum is, he sent his prophets; but it may be much better supplied, he sent his angels, or an angel; as he did at his resurrection, who rolled away the stone from the sepulchre, as a token of his justification and discharge: so Jarchi interprets it, he sent his angels; and Aben Ezra supplies it thus, unless the sense should be, as Cocceius suggests, he sent a cloud from above, which was done at Christ’s ascension, and which received him out of the sight of the apostles, (<440109>Acts 1:9). Since it follows, he took me; that is, up to heaven; thither Christ was carried in a cloud, one of God’s chariots, he sent for him; and where he is received, and will be retained until his second coming; though rather the sense is, he took me by the hand:

> “he sent his word or his angel:”

he drew me out of many waters. This is said either in allusion to Moses, who had his name from his being drawn out of the water, (<020210>Exodus 2:10); and who was an eminent type of Christ; and this is the only place where the Hebrew word is made use of from whence he had his name; or else to a man plunged in water ready to be drowned; (see <196901>Psalm 69:1,2). By these “many waters” may be meant the many afflictions, sorrows, and sufferings from which Christ was freed, when raised from the dead, and highly exalted and crowned with glory and honour; and the torrent of sins which flowed in upon him at the time he was made sin for his people, from which he was justified when risen; and so will appear a second time without sin unto salvation; and the wrath of God, the waves and billows of which went over him, and compassed him about as water, at the time of his sufferings; from which he was delivered when he was shown the path of life, and entered into the presence of God, and sat at his right hand, where are joys and pleasures for evermore; and also his grand enemy Satan, with his principalities and powers, who came in like a flood upon him; but he destroyed him and spoiled them; and particularly the floods of ungodly men, spoken of in (<191804>Psalm 18:4); seem to be here designed; compare with this (<19E407>Psalm 144:7); “so many waters” signify many people and nations, (<661715>Revelation 17:15); and accordingly the Targum is,

> “he delivered me from many people.”

This was true of Christ when risen and ascended; he was then separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; and this sense is confirmed by the following words, where what is expressed figuratively here is there literally explained.

Ver. 17. He delivered me from my strong enemy, etc.] Which, as it may respect David, may be understood of Goliath the Philistine champion, who was a man of war from his youth; or Saul, king of Israel; and, as it may respect David’s antitype, may design either the chief priests, Scribes, and

Pharisees, who were men of power and influence; or more especially Satan, the strong man armed, with all his principalities and powers; or, likewise death, the last enemy, from whose pains and cords he was loosed when raised from the dead, and when he was delivered from every other strong enemy; and from them which hated me; from the old serpent the devil, between whom and him there has been a lasting enmity; and from the world, the people of the Jews, particularly the Pharisees, who bore an implacable hatred to Christ;

for they were too strong for me; as Goliath and Saul were too strong for David of himself, so Christ's enemies were too strong for him; not as God, for he is the mighty God, the Almighty, and stronger than the strong man armed, but as man; for in his human nature he had a sinless weakness, which showed itself in his agonies in the garden; or a natural weakness, through which he was crucified; and this weak nature of Christ Satan attacked, and got an advantage over, and brought it to the dust of death, which is meant by his bruising his heel, though by it he got a broken head. But though Christ's enemies were too strong for him, considered merely as man, they not being, at least many of them, flesh and blood, but principalities and powers; yet being helped by his Father, and supported by his divine nature, he overcame them, and was delivered from them.

Ver. 18. They prevented me in the day of my calamity, etc.] Referring to the times of his distress in the garden and upon the cross; the time of his sufferings and death, which was a dark and cloudy day, as the word [f269] used suggests, both in a literal and in a spiritual sense; and when the day and hour was come, fixed and determined by the will of God, then his enemies, though not before, met him, laid hold on him, were too mighty for him, condemned, crucified, and insulted him; but the Lord was my stay; or staff, on whom he leaned, relied, and depended, believing he would help him; and by whom he was supported and upheld, (<234201>Isaiah 42:1 50:7-9 49:7,8). The Targum is,

> "the Word of the Lord was my stay."

Ver. 19. He brought me forth also into a large place, etc.] Into heaven, a place of the glorious liberty of Christ, after his captivity to death and the grave, whither he ascended leading captivity captive, and of the children of God; and a spacious place, where there is room enough for Christ and all his people; here he now is, and will remain till his second coming, and from hence we expect him; (see <431402>John 14:2,3). Compare with this (<193108>Psalm 31:8 118:5);

he delivered me, because he delighted in me; God delivered David from all his enemies, because he was a man after his own heart, in whom he delighted; not for any merit and worthiness in him, but of his good will and pleasure: he delivered Christ because he was his elect, in whom his soul delighted; and who was daily his delight, rejoicing in his presence before the world was: and he delivers his church and people, because they are his Hephzibah, in whom is his delight, (<236204>Isaiah 62:4); the Father delighted in them, and therefore chose them to salvation; the Son delighted in them, and gave himself for them, and ransomed them out of the hands of him that is stronger than they; the Holy Spirit delighted in them, and therefore regenerates, renews, and sanctifies them, and seals them up unto the day of redemption.

Ver. 20. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteousness, etc.] Which, if applied to David, cannot be understood of his own personal righteousness, or of works of righteousness done by him, for these merit nothing at the hand of God; no reward, in strict justice, is due to them, or given to them: a man’s own righteousness is imperfect, and by the law of God is not accounted a righteousness; and it is unprofitable to God, is no gain to him, and so not rewardable by him; and were it perfect, it is but man’s duty, and what God has a prior right to, and so is not recompensed by him; though it is so far from being pure and perfect, that it is attended with much sin, and is no other than rags, and filthy ones, which can never recommend a person to God; it is what will not bear the sight of God, and can never be called cleanness in his eyesight: by it no man is justified before him; and though God does, indeed, reward the works of his people, which are fruits of his grace, yet the reward is not of debt, but of grace. This, therefore, must be understood of the righteousness of David’s cause, and of his innocence with respect to the things he was charged with by his enemies; of his righteousness towards Saul; and of “the cleanness of [his] hands”, in not defiling them with his blood, when it was in his power to take away his life; therefore God rewarded him by delivering him out of his hands, and setting him upon the throne, and causing his kingdom to flourish and prosper; for this respects temporal blessings, and not eternal glory and happiness; and is something that had been and was then enjoyed, and not anything future, or in another world: though it is best of all to apply it to Christ, and understand it of his righteousness, which he, as Mediator, has wrought out for his people; this is perfect, pure, and spotless, and entirely agreeable to the law of God; what will bear the sight of God, is satisfying to his justice, is well pleasing to him, and is what he accepts of, and imputes to them that believe in Christ, and by which they are justified from all things. Now, according to this righteousness, Christ in strict justice has been rewarded in his own person; as he had the work of man's redemption assigned him, and he agreed to do it, he had a reward promised him, and which he claimed, when he had glorified his Father and finished his work; and which he received when he was set down at the right hand of God, crowned with glory and honour, in consequence of his obedience, sufferings, and death; (see <502007>Philippians 2:7-10); and he is rewarded in his members according to his righteousness, they being justified by it, and made heirs of eternal life on account of it, and are or will be glorified with him for evermore;

according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me; which signifies the same thing.

Ver. 21. For I have kept the ways of the Lord, etc.] Not those which the Lord himself walks in, his ways of providence, or of grace; though these are and should be taken notice of and observed by good men, as the word [f270] used will bear to be rendered; but the ways which he has prescribed and directed men to walk in, the ways of his commandments, in which they should go; these were, in some measure, kept by David, who often, in the hundred nineteenth psalm speaks of his keeping the testimonies and statutes, and commandments of the Lord; as they are by good men, with some degree of pleasure, they take delight to walk in them; and with some degree of constancy, they keep walking in them, without turning to the right hand or the left, though solicited to it; but yet not perfectly, for they have many a slip and fall in them; wherefore this cannot be a reason of their being rewarded according to their righteousness: in strict justice, the words better agree with Christ, who kept the law of God perfectly, did his will completely; he came from heaven to do it; it was his meat and drink to accomplish it; and he always did the things which pleased his father, wherefore he rewarded him;

and have not wickedly departed from my God; which was, in some sense, true of David; not as by disbelieving the power and providence, the promises, truth, and faithfulness of God, and his covenant interest in him; which to do would have been a wicked departure from God; (see <580312>Hebrews 3:12); nor by forsaking the house and worship of God; though he was driven from thence by wicked men, yet sore against his will, and which during his exile he frequently laments and complains of; nor by sinning wilfully and presumptuously, only through error, inadvertency, infirmity, and temptation: but when it is observed, how much unbelief, which is a partial departing from the living God, and how many there are that neglect private and public worship, and what a proneness there is to sin and wickedness, and how much there is of the will in sinful actions, in the best of men; it is right and best to understand this of Christ, who never was guilty of sin, nor committed any wickedness in departing from God in the least: as man, God was his God, and he always believed his interest in him, and claimed it even when he forsook him on the cross; nor did he quit his service, desert his cause, nor depart from the work and business he enjoined him, till it was finished.

Ver. 22. For all his judgments [were] before me, etc.] That is, the precepts of the law of God, which David had a respect unto, loved, took delight and pleasure in, and so had them all in his sight, and made them the rule of his actions; and the law of God is delighted in by regenerate persons, after the inward man; and though it is abolished as a covenant of works, it is a rule of walk and conversation to the saints; and as such they keep it in view, and regard it impartially, not only some of its precepts, but all. This in the highest and fullest sense was done by Christ, who was made under the law, in whose heart it was, and who came to fulfil it, and has completely fulfilled it; and I did not put away his statutes from me; in (<102223>2 Samuel 22:23); it is read, “and as for his statutes, I did not depart from them”; the sense is the same; this may have respect to the ceremonial law, and the ordinances of it, which David abode by, very strictly observed, renewed, and put in order; and which Christ, his antitype, never departed from, but conformed unto throughout the whole of his life; witness his circumcision, keeping of the passover, attendance on the synagogue and temple worship; nor did he put them away until they had their full accomplishment in him; when there was a disannulling of them because of their weakness and unprofitableness.

Ver. 23. I was also upright before him, etc.] In heart and conversation, being sincere and faithful; so David was in the sight of God; but this is much more true of Christ, in whom there was no unrighteousness nor guile, neither in his heart, nor in his lips; he was of perfect integrity, and faithful in all things to him that appointed him; and I kept myself from mine iniquity; which some interpret of original sin, in which David was born, which dwelt in him, and prompted him to sin; but rather it refers to the taking away of Saul’s life, which he might be tempted to do, as being his enemy that sought his life; and which he was put upon and urged to by some about him, and yet did it not. But it is best here also to apply these words to Christ; for though he had no iniquity of his own, yet he had the iniquities of his people on him, as their surety, and which he calls “mine”, (<194012>Psalm 40:12). But though he bore them, he did not commit any of them; though he was made sin, he knew none; and though he was tempted by Satan to the most enormous iniquities, as destroying himself and worshipping the devil, he kept himself from the evil one, that he could not touch him: the sense is, that he kept himself from committing any sin, which cannot be said of any mere man; and so far as good men are kept from sin, they are kept by the power of God, and not by themselves. All these things show, that the righteousness of Christ was a perfect, sinless one, entirely agreeable to the laws, statutes, and judgments of God; was pure in the sight of God, and rewardable in strict justice. Hence it is repeated as follows:

Ver. 24. Therefore hath the Lord recompensed me according to my righteousness, etc.] Having proved and supported this proposition by the above reasons, it is repeated, for confirmation’s sake;

according to the cleanness of my hands in his eyesight; this phrase, “in his eyesight”, is here added, to show that the righteousness of Christ was clean, pure, and spotless in the sight of God; in the eye of divine justice: hence those that are clothed with it are holy and unblamable, and irreprovable in his sight, (<510122>Colossians 1:22).

Ver. 25. With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful, etc.] The merciful man is the good, gracious, holy, and godly man, as the word [f271] here used signifies, and is sometimes rendered; one that has received grace and mercy from the Lord, and has principles of grace and goodness wrought in him, and is kind and merciful to others, both to their souls and bodies; and to such men God shows himself merciful: not that they are first merciful to others, and then he is so to them, for it is just the reverse; nor is their mercifulness the cause or condition of his, for he has mercy on whom he will have mercy; but to such he shows fresh mercy, and bestows more grace upon them; they find grace and mercy with him now, and will do hereafter; (see <400507>Matthew 5:7). This may be applied to Christ, all whose ways are mercy and truth; he saw the estate his people would come into; he pitied their case, and became their surety in eternity; he betrothed them to himself in loving kindness and tender mercies; and undertook to feed the flock of slaughter, even the poor of the flock; having, through his merciful lovingkindness, assumed human nature, he went about doing good to the souls and bodies of men; he healed the diseased and fed the hungry, and had compassion on the ignorant, and them that were out of the way; and, as a merciful high priest, he bore the sins and sorrows of his people; and in his love and pity redeemed them, and continues to sympathize with them in all their afflictions and temptations; and though no mercy was shown him while he was suffering for them, for God spared him not, but awoke the sword of justice against him, and used him with the utmost rigour and severity; yet satisfaction being made, he did not leave him in the grave, nor suffer his holy, good, and merciful One to see corruption; but raised him from the dead, prevented him with the blessings of his goodness, and set upon his head a crown of honour and glory; with an upright man thou wilt show thyself upright; an upright man, as the word [f272] used signifies, is a perfect man, not absolutely, but comparatively; not in himself, but in Christ; perfect with a perfection of parts, but not of degrees; he is one that is upright in heart, sincere and without hypocrisy; an Israelite indeed, whose faith, hope, and love, are undisguised; he is a man of integrity, a faithful man, faithful to God, his cause and interest, his word and ordinances, and is faithful with the saints; he walks, uprightly according to the rule of God's word, and by faith in Christ; and to such upright men God shows himself upright, or faithful, by keeping his covenant with them, fulfilling his promises to them, and not suffering one good thing to fail he has given them reason to expect from him. This may also be interpreted of Christ, who is in the highest and fullest sense perfect, upright, and sincere, and faithful to him that appointed him; and as he has been faithful in all his covenant engagements with his Father, so his Father has been faithful to him in making good all he promised him; both with respect to his own glory, and the happiness of his people; (see <235310>Isaiah 53:10-12 <431704>John 17:4,5 <500209>Philippians 2:9,10).

Ver. 26. With the pure thou wilt show thyself pure, etc.] None of Adam's posterity are pure by nature; they are all defiled with sin; and though some are pure in their own eyes, they are far from being cleansed from their filthiness; such only are pure who are sanctified by the Spirit of God, have clean hearts created in them, and whose hearts are purified by faith in the blood of Christ; who are justified by Christ's righteousness, and are washed from their sins in his blood; and who, in consequence of such grace, love, pureness of heart, speak a pure language, hold the mystery of faith in a pure conscience, and with a pure conversation, and live soberly, righteously, and godly: and whereas God is a pure and holy Being, his perfections, works, and word, are pure; he shows himself to be so to such persons, by providing for the honour of his purity and holiness in their redemption, sanctification, and salvation; by making all things to be pure to them; by granting them his presence, and blessing them with the vision of himself here and hereafter; (see <400508>Matthew 5:8); this may likewise be understood of Christ, who, in his human nature, is pure from all sin, both original and actual: he indeed took upon him the sins of his people, and bore them, and made satisfaction for them, and brought in everlasting righteousness; which being done, God has showed himself pure to him, by justifying, acquitting, and discharging him from all such sins; by accepting his righteousness, and imputing it to those for whom he wrought it; and with the froward thou wilt show thyself froward; or "thou wrestlest" [f273], or wilt contend with them until they are destroyed: the same word is here used which Naphtali has his name from, (<013008>Genesis 30:8). The froward are such as are of perverse dispositions, and of stubborn and obstinate tempers, and whose ways are crooked and distorted; and such were the people of the Jews in the times of Moses, and of Christ, (<053205>Deuteronomy 32:5,20 <401717>Matthew 17:17); and who seem here to be designed; even the Jews in Christ's time, who were just the reverse of the above characters, were cruel and unmerciful, faithless and hypocritical, filthy and pure, disbelieved the Messiah, rejected and crucified him, were contrary to God, and to all men; and therefore God walked contrary to them, as he threatened, (<032627>Leviticus 26:27,28); the same as showing himself froward to them; for God is not froward and perverse in himself, nor in his ways, which are all equal, just, and pure: and though there is one and the same word used in our version, yet there are two different words in the Hebrew text; the same word that is used of the froward is not used of God; that which is used of God, as before observed, signifies wrestling, and designs God's contending with the people of the Jews, in a way of wrath and fury, which came upon them to the uttermost, and issued in their entire ruin as a people and nation; the words here had their fulfilment in the destruction of Jerusalem.

Ver. 27. For thou wilt save the afflicted people, etc.] As the people of God commonly are; they are afflicted with sin, and the corruption of their own hearts, and with Satan and his temptations, and with the world, its reproaches, and persecutions; but God in his own time saves them out of them, if not here, yet hereafter. This is particularly and eminently true of the Christians who lived between the crucifixion of Christ and the destruction of Jerusalem; who were greatly afflicted and persecuted by the Jews, but were in a remarkable manner saved a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, by being directed to go out of it to a place called Pella [f274]; so that not one Christian suffered in it; but wilt bring down high looks; or proud men, whom God humbles; these he abhors, resists, sets himself against, scatters and destroys. The Jews were a very proud people, and behaved in an insolent and insulting manner towards Christ and his followers; but the high looks of the chief priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, were brought down to a purpose, when their city, temple, and nation, were destroyed; (see <230211>Isaiah 2:11).

Ver. 28. For thou wilt light my candle, etc.] Or lamp [f275]: in (<102229>2 Samuel 22:29), it is, “Thou [art] my lamp, O Lord”; which may either design outward prosperity, and the flourishing condition of David’s kingdom; or internal spiritual light, and an increase of it, by giving fresh supplies of the oil of grace, to cause the lamp to burn more clearly; or rather the prosperous estate of Christ’s kingdom; and may be the same with the lamp ordained for the Messiah, (<19D217>Psalm 132:17);

the Lord my God will enlighten my darkness; or “cause light to shine in my darkness” [f276]; that is, bring me out of darkness into light; either out of adversity to prosperity, or from walking in darkness to the enjoyment of the light of his countenance; and is true of Christ, not only of the prosperity of his kingdom and interest, but of him personally; who though, when on the cross, was in darkness of soul, being forsaken by his God; yet, when raised from the dead, he was received up to heaven, and set down at the right hand of God, and was made full of joy with his countenance, (<440228>Acts 2:28).

Ver. 29. For by thee I have run through a troop, etc.] Or, “I have run to a troop”: to meet one [f277] with courage and intrepidity, as some interpret it

[f278]; or, as others [f279], “I have run after a troop”: that is, pursued after one, as David pursued after the troops of the Amalekites who burnt Ziklag, (<093008>1 Samuel 30:8); to which Jarchi refers this passage; or rather, “I have broke a troop”, or “through one” [f280]; for the word, as some Jewish writers [f281] observe, comes from a root which signifies to “break” in pieces, and is fitly used for the destroying or cutting in pieces a troop of the enemy; and is true of Christ, when he engaged with the troops of hell, and broke the squadrons of the infernal fiends, and spoiled or disarmed principalities and powers, and triumphed over them on the cross, and made a show of them openly, when he dragged them at his chariot wheels, and led captivity captive; and by my God have I leaped over a wall; which refers to the scaling of walls, and taking of fortified places; and so the Targum, “By the word of my God I will subdue fortified towns”; so Apollinarius has it, passed over a tower, or took it; which was literally true of David, in many instances. Jarchi applies this to his taking the fortress of Zion from the Jebusites: a learned writer [f282] thinks this refers to his leaping over the city wall, and slipping through the city watch, when Michal let him down through a window: it may be applied to Christ, who broke down the middle wail of partition, the ceremonial law, which stood between Jew and Gentile; or rather it may design the many difficulties which were in the way of the salvation of his people, which he surmounted and got over with great strength and swiftness; such as fulfilling the law, satisfying justice, bearing sin, and making atonement for it, undergoing a shameful and an accursed death, and grappling with numerous enemies, whom he conquered; and he is said to do all this by his God; because, as man and Mediator, he was strengthened and assisted by him.

Ver. 30. [As for] God, his way [is] perfect, etc.] Or “without spot” [f283], as the Septuagint render the word; without any just charge of inequality, or unrighteousness; such is God’s way of providence, though sometimes his methods of providence are cavilled at by wicked men, and murmured at by his own people: they are at a loss, at times, to reconcile promises and providences together, and to account for the justice and equity of them; these ways of his are unsearchable, and not to be traced out by them; but when his judgments will be made manifest, the wisdom, goodness, and righteousness of them will be clearly discerned, and they will be admired; for they are all of a piece, and perfectly consistent with the attributes of God: and such also is his way of grace, and method of salvation; it is agreeable to all his perfections, and according to his purposes, counsel, and covenant; this being resolved on in his breast, contrived by his wisdom, and concluded on in the covenant, has been effected and finished by his son; and his inward way of working upon the heart, though at present imperfect, will be completed; he is a rock, and his work is perfect, and all his ways are judgment: whatever way or method he contrives and enters upon, whether in providence or grace, he pursues and brings to an issue; for he is an omnipotent, omniscient, and unchangeable Being, and neither frustrates, nor is he frustrated; nor is there any insincerity, unrighteousness, and unfaithfulness in him; nor can he act contrary to himself, and the perfections of his nature: the way also which he prescribes to others is perfect and plain, whether the path of doctrine or of duty; the path of truth is plain to the enlightened understanding, and the way of holiness is such, in which men, though fools, shall not err; (see <200808>Proverbs 8:8,9 <233508>Isaiah 35:8);

the word of the Lord is tried; as silver in a furnace, and is clear of all dross, of error, and falsehood; is free from human mixtures, and without any impurity and unholiness; nor is God's word of promise chargeable with unfaithfulness; all his promises being yea and amen in Christ, and have been tried and proved by the saints in all ages; and have been found true, faithful, constant, and invariable;

he [is] a buckler to all those that trust in him; not in man, nor in themselves; in their own righteousness, or in any creature or creature enjoyment or performance; but in the providence and power of God, in his grace and mercy, in his word, and especially in his Son; in his person, blood, and righteousness; to such he is a buckler or shield: his power is all around them, his favour encompasses them, and his truth, or faithfulness in his word, is their shield and buckler: and so is his Son, who is both a sun and shield to them; and such are his precious blood, his spotless righteousness, and stoning sacrifice; which, being held up by faith, repel the fiery darts of Satan.

Ver. 31. For who [is] God save the Lord? etc.] Or Jehovah: there is but one God, and Jehovah is he; there is none besides him, nor any like him: there are many that are called gods, nominal deities, who are not by nature gods; fictitious ones, the idols of the Gentiles, made of gold, silver, brass, wood, and stone; but there is but one true God: there are gods, in an improper sense, as civil magistrates; but there is none really and truly so but the Lord; which is to be understood, not of Jehovah the Father, to the exclusion of the Son and Spirit; for the Son is Jehovah, and the Spirit is Jehovah; both are so called, as well as the Father, and all three one God; or who [is] a rock save our God? to have recourse to for shelter and protection; or to trust to, and build upon, for eternal life and salvation. False gods are rocks; but not like ours, our enemies themselves being judges, (<053231>Deuteronomy 32:31); so Apollo at Delphos is called the Delphian rock[f284]: the words seem to be taken from, or at least there is in them a reference to, (<090202>1 Samuel 2:2).

Ver. 32. [It is] God that girdeth me with strength, etc.] For battle, as in (<191839>Psalm 18:39); with strength of body and fortitude of mind; both which are from the Lord, and were in David; and were acknowledged by him as bestowed on him by the Lord; and which confirms what he had before said of him: or with spiritual strength, with strength in his soul, against sin, Satan, and the world; and to do the will and work of God: saints are girt by the Lord with the whole armour of God, and among the rest with the girdle of truth; and are prepared and ready to every good work; (see <090204>1 Samuel 2:4). Hannah's song is again referred to: in (<102233>2 Samuel 22:33), the words are, "God is my strength [and] power"; they are true of Christ, the man of God's right hand, whom he promised to strengthen, and whom he has made strong for himself, (<198017>Psalm 80:17 89:21); and maketh my way perfect; or safe, or prosperous. God removed every impediment and obstacle out of his way, and made it plain and easy, as Jarchi observes; and succeeded him, and gave him victory over his enemies; this has been verified in Christ, who has conquered sin, Satan, the world, death, and the grave: for this is not to be understood of the way and course of David's life and conversation, which was not perfect and unspotted, but had many blemishes and imperfections in it, which he often owns, confesses, and bewails.

Ver. 33. He maketh my feet like hind's [feet], etc.] As light and swift as theirs, as the Targum; that is, either to flee, when there was a necessity for it, as Kimchi observes; or rather to pursue after the enemy, to run through a troop, and leap over a wall, as before; (see <131208>1 Chronicles 12:8 <100318>2 Samuel 3:18,19); the same phrase is used in (<350319>Habakkuk 3:19); and may be understood in a spiritual sense of that readiness and cheerfulness with which the saints run the ways of God's commandments, when their hearts are enlarged with his love and grace; and may very well be applied to

Christ, who is often compared to a roe, or a young hart, for swiftness; who readily and at once engaged to come and do the will of God, and whose coming in the flesh, at the appointed time, was swift; and who made haste to do the work of God, in which he took the utmost pleasure; and who is a speedy and present help to his people in time of trouble; (see <220208>Song of Solomon 2:8,9,17 8:14);

and setteth me upon my high places; the towers and fortresses, and strong and fortified places, where he was safe from his enemies; and: in a spiritual sense, may design the everlasting love of God, the covenant of grace, its blessings and promises; and Christ himself, with the fulness of grace in him, on which believers may be said to be set, when their faith is directed to them, and they live and dwell upon them; (see <350319>Habakkuk 3:19 <233316>Isaiah 33:16); and, the words were fulfilled in Christ, when God highly exalted him at his right hand, and set him above all principalities and powers, and made him higher than the heavens.

Ver. 34. He teacheth my hands to war, etc.] From whence it appears, that war, in some cases, is lawful; and that all the skilfulness and art in training men for war, in the use of armour, in marshalling of armies, in forming sieges, etc. is all from God; (see <19E401>Psalm 144:1); and so is all that spiritual skill, in making use of the whole armour of God against every enemy, sin, Satan, and the world; and even the wisdom and skill, counsel and instruction, which Christ as man and Mediator had, when it was the hour and power of darkness; when he was engaged with principalities and powers, and got the victory over them, were from the Lord: (see <191607>Psalm 16:7);

so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms; that is, the bow of an enemy falling into his hands, which might be literally true of David. It is in the Hebrew text, “a bow of brass”; and so Apollinarius renders it; which Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret strong iron, that is, steel; and so the Targum; (see <182024>Job 20:24); Satan is an archer; his temptations are darts, and fiery ones; and his strong bow may be said to be broken by the arms of faith, when his temptations, under the influence of divine grace, are repelled and rendered ineffectual; and especially his bow was broken by Christ, not only in the wilderness, when he was vanquished by him; but in the garden, and on the cross, when Satan could find nothing in him, and get no other advantage over him, but to bruise his heel; when he himself had his head broke, his works ruined, and he himself destroyed. Some render the words, “mine arms have bent a bow of steel”: that is, such skill and strength were given him that he was able to bend, draw, and shoot a bow or steel: the Targum is, “and hath strengthened mine arm as a bow of brass”, or “steel”; and so the Syriac and Arabic versions; and to the same purpose the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic versions; or it may be rendered, “my arms have bent”, or “made to descend[f285], a bow of brass”; for when a bow is bent, the horns or corners of it are made to descend towards a man.

Ver. 35. Thou hast given me the shield of thy salvation, etc.] Meaning either temporal salvation, which was a shield to him when he had no outward one, as when he fought with Goliath; and was what preserved him in all his battles at other times: or spiritual salvation, which is of the Lord, of his contriving, effecting:, and applying, and in which his glory is concerned; interest in which is a free gift of his, as are the knowledge, application, and possession of it; and this is as a shield, which saves from sin, from all sin, and the damning power of it; keeps off the curses of the law, secures from wrath to come, and repels Satan’s temptations; the words may be applied to Christ, who, though he was not saved from dying, yet was preserved in the day of salvation, and was not suffered to see corruption in the grave, and was quickly delivered from the power and dominion of it; and thy right hand hath holden me up; Christ may be said to be the right hand of God, being as dear to him as his right hand; and being exalted at it; and because by him he communicates all good things to his people, and with him upholds and sustains them; or else it designs the mighty power of God, which is often signified by it, (<192006>Psalm 20:6 44:3 118:15,16); and may be understood of the sustentation of David, both in a providential way, with respect to his being, the preservation of it, the supplies of life, and support in times of trouble and distress; and in a spiritual sense, maintaining the principle of grace in him, furnishing him with fresh supplies of grace, and bearing him up under and through every temptation and exercise; so upholding him that he stood firm in the true grace of God, in the exercise of it implanted, and in the doctrine of grace, so as to go forward in the ways of God, and follow hard after him, and so as not to fall and utterly perish; and which is true of all the saints; (see <196308>Psalm 63:8 37:24). The words may be interpreted of Christ, who, as man and Mediator, as God’s righteous servant, was upheld by him, so that he failed not, nor was he discouraged; the hand of the Lord was established with him, and his arm also strengthened him, (<234201>Isaiah 42:1,4) (<198921>Psalm 89:21); this clause is not in (<102236>2 Samuel 22:36);

and thy gentleness hath made me great; David was very mean and low by his birth and occupation, and while persecuted by Saul; but God of his grace and goodness, of his sovereign good will and pleasure, raised him to an high estate, set him on the throne of Israel, and gave him honour among and above the kings of the earth; so Kimchi interprets the word for “gentleness” by “goodness” or “merciful” kindness; R. Jonah by “providence”; and R. Isaac explains it “thy help [and] good will”; and all shows that his greatness was not owing to his merits, but to the providential goodness of God; and his special grace and mercy in Christ Jesus made him still greater, even a child of God, an heir of God, a joint heir with Christ, a King and a Priest unto God; gave him a right unto and a meetness for a crown of glory, an everlasting kingdom, an eternal inheritance, as it does all the saints. The words may be rendered, “thy humility hath made me great” [f286]; which may be understood either of God’s humbling himself to look upon him in his low estate, and to raise him to such honour and dignity as he did, both in a temporal and spiritual sense; (see <1911306>Psalm 113:6-8); or of the humility which he had in himself from God, as Aben Ezra interprets it; of which grace God is the author; it is a fruit of the Spirit; which he takes great notice of, gives more grace to them that have it, and exalts them, as he did David, who was mean and low in his own eyes. The Septuagint, and those versions which follow that, render it “thy discipline” or “correction”: and so may design the gentleness and lenity of God in chastising his people, which is always in measure and in judgment, and for their good; whereby he increases grace in them, and trains them up for, and brings them to his kingdom and glory. The Chaldee paraphrase is, “by thy word thou hast increased me”; it may not be improperly interpreted of Christ, who was very low in his estate of humiliation on earth, but is now highly exalted, and crowned with glory and honour; who first endured great sufferings, and then entered into his glory.

Ver. 36. Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, etc.] Which is opposed to those straitened circumstances in which the psalmist was, (<191804>Psalm 18:4,5); and is expressive of deliverance from his enemies, by whom he was surrounded, besieged, and shut up; (see <193108>Psalm 31:8); and of freedom of walking at large, without being straitened for room, or interrupted by others, (<200412>Proverbs 4:12); and of safety in standing; all which is true in a spiritual sense of believers in Christ, who being delivered by him out of the hands of their enemies, serve the Lord without fear in righteousness and holiness; walk at liberty by faith in Christ, and up and down in the name of the Lord their God; and have their feet established upon the Rock of ages, that sure and large foundation, Christ, from which there is no danger of slipping and falling; as follows; that my feet did not slip; so as to fall and perish; for sometimes the steps of the saints are well nigh slipped; yea, in some sense they stumble; slip, and fall, but not so as to be utterly cast down and perish eternally; the bottom on which they are is so broad, and the foundation so sure, that it is not possible they should. The words will bear to be applied to Christ, who was in very pressed and straitened circumstances, when beset with the bulls of Bashan, encompassed with dogs, and enclosed with the assembly of the wicked; and was in slippery places, when he sunk in deep mire where there is no standing, (<192212>Psalm 22:12,16 69:2); but now being delivered from all this, he is brought, as in (<191819>Psalm 18:19), into a large place, into heaven, and made higher than the heavens, and is set down at the right hand of God, from whence he can never be moved.

Ver. 37. I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them, etc.] Which may refer to David’s pursuing the Amalekites, who overtook them and recovered all they had carried away, (<093008>1 Samuel 30:8,10,18,19); so Kimchi explains it; neither did I turn again till they were consumed; for not a man escaped, save four hundred young men that rode on camels and fled, (<191817>Psalm 18:17).

Ver. 38. I have wounded them, that they were not able to rise, etc.] Which was not only true of the Amalekites, but of all with whom David engaged in war;

they are fallen under my feet; either dead, or become subject and tributaries to him; as the Philistines, Moabites, Syrians, and Edomites; (see <100801>2 Samuel 8:1,2,5,14). This, with (<191837>Psalm 18:37), may very well be accommodated to David’s antitype, and be expressive of the entire victory he has obtained over all his and his people’s enemies; he wounded the heads over many countries, (<19B006>Psalm 110:6). Satan and his principalities and powers, whose head is broke, whose works are destroyed; yea, he himself, which had the power of death, so as not to be able to rise more against Christ, who has led captivity captive: he has also finished and made an end of sin, and overcome the world; nor did he turn back from this work he engaged in until he had made a complete conquest; and moreover he has likewise made his people more than conquerors, through him, over these same enemies; so that the words are also applicable to them.

Ver. 39. For thou hast girded me with strength unto battle, etc.] (see <191832>Psalm 18:32); that natural strength, courage and valour, which David had, were from the Lord; and so is the Spirit of power, love, and of a sound mind, which believers have; and likewise that strength which Christ, as man, had and used in his combat with the powers of darkness; (see <198017>Psalm 80:17);

thou hast subdued under me those that rose up against me; as the psalmist ascribes his strength, so he attributes his success to the Lord; who likewise subdues the sins of his people, and all other enemies of theirs, and who also makes the enemies of his Son his footstool, (<19B001>Psalm 110:1).

Ver. 40. Thou hast also given me the necks of mine enemies, etc.] Either to slay them, or to trample or put a yoke upon them; or rather the sense is, thou hast made them to fly before me, to turn their necks or backs unto me, as the word is used in (<060708>Joshua 7:8); and it is expressive of an utter rout and vanquishing of them; that I might destroy them that hate me; they not being able to face him and stand against him.

Ver. 41. They cried, but [there was] none to save [them], etc.] It is in (<102242>2 Samuel 22:42); "they looked"; that is, they looked round about, here and there, to see if there were any near at hand to help and deliver them; they cried in their distress, and because of the anguish of their spirits, and for help and assistance, but in vain; they cried, as Jarchi thinks, to their idols, as Jonah's mariners cried everyone to their god; and, if so, it is no wonder there was none to save; for such are gods that cannot save: but it follows, [even] unto the Lord, but he answered them not; as Saul, for instance, (<092806>1 Samuel 28:6); so God deals with wicked men, often by way of righteous retaliation; (see <200128>Proverbs 1:28 <380713>Zechariah 7:13).

Ver. 42. Then did I beat them small, as the dust before the wind, etc.] They being given up by God, and he not answering to their cries; the phrase denotes the utter ruin and destruction of them, and represents their case as desperate and irrecoverable; being, as it were, pounded to dust, and that driven away with the wind: just as the destruction of the four monarchies is signified by the iron, clay, brass, silver, and gold, being broken to pieces, and made like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and carried away with the wind, so that no place is found for them any more, (<270235>Daniel 2:35);

I did cast them out as the dirt of the streets; expressing indignation and contempt: in (<102243>2 Samuel 22:43); it is, "I did stamp them as the mire of the street, [and] did, spread them abroad"; which also denotes the low and miserable condition to which they were reduced, and the entire conquest made of them, and triumph over them; (see <231006>Isaiah 10:6 <330710>Micah 7:10); compare with this (<101231>2 Samuel 12:31).

Ver. 43. Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people, etc.] In (<102244>2 Samuel 22:44), it is read "my people", meaning the people of Israel; either Saul and his men, who contended with David, and sought his life; or rather the tribes of Israel, who, after Saul's death, refused to acknowledge David as their king, but afterwards came and anointed him in Hebron. The words may very well be interpreted of the contentions of the Scribes and Pharisees with Christ, and of the opposition from sinners, which he for a while endured, but is now delivered from them all;

[and] thou hast made me the head of the Heathen; which, if understood of David, refers to the Philistines, Syrians, Moabites, and Edomites, being subdued by him, and becoming tributaries to him, (<100801>2 Samuel 8:1,2,5,14). But it best agrees with Christ, who is the head of his chosen ones among the Gentiles; the political head, King, and Governor of them, the Heathen being given him for his inheritance and possession; and which appeared in the first ages of Christianity, when the Gospel was first preached to the Gentiles by the apostles; and still continues, and will be more clearly seen in the latter day, when the Lord shall be King over all the earth. Christ was made the head of the Heathen, by the appointment and designation of his Father; and, in fact, was so when multitudes from among the Gentiles were converted and brought to the obedience of him. In (<102244>2 Samuel 22:44) it is, "thou hast kept me [to be] head of the Heathen"; which does not seem so much to intend the designation and constitution of him as such, but the continuation of him; and denotes the stability of his government in the Gentile world, of which there will be no end;

a people [whom] I have not known shall serve me; by whom are meant the Gentiles, who were not the people of God, were without Christ and without God, and without hope in the world: not that there are any people that can be unknown to Christ, as he is the omniscient God; nor were these unknown to him, in such sense as reprobates, nominal professors, and foolish virgins, are said not to be known by him, (<400723>Matthew 7:23 25:12). For these people among the Heathen, who are or shall be brought to serve the Lord, are such who were the objects of his love and delight from everlasting; were in his Father’s choice and in his own, and in the gift of his Father to him, and in the covenant of his grace; and therefore must be known by him; moreover, they are the purchase of his blood; and the sheep he knows, for whom he has laid down his life, and of whom he has such an exact and particular knowledge, that he can and does call them by name. But the sense is, these seemed not to be taken notice of and cared for by Christ; they were not owned and acknowledged by him as his people; the Jews were distinguished from all others; they only had the law, the word of God, and his ordinances; the Gentiles were suffered to walk in their own ways; they were neglected, and the times of their ignorance were overlooked and disregarded; so that they were treated as a people that were not known for many hundreds of years: but here it is predicted, that when the Gospel should come among them, and they be called by it, they should “serve” the Lord in righteousness and true holiness, with reverence and godly fear, from a principle of love, in his name and strength, and to his glory; (see <235504>Isaiah 55:4,5).

Ver. 44. As soon as they hear of me they shall obey me, etc.] That is, as soon as they should hear of Christ, through the preaching of the word, by which faith would come, they should readily and at once receive, embrace, and profess the Gospel, and yield a cheerful submission to the ordinances of it; and which has had its accomplishment among the Gentiles, (<442828>Acts 28:28 13:42,44,48);

the strangers shall submit themselves unto me; meaning either the same persons as before; the Gentiles, who were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenant of promise, who should submit to Christ, to his Gospel, to his righteousness, and to the sceptre of his kingdom; though some interpret it of the degenerate Jews, “the sons of the stranger”, as the words may be rendered; who, though called the children of God, and the children of the kingdom, yet were, as our Lord says, of their father the devil; and these, some of them, in a flattering and dissembling way, feigned themselves to be the followers and disciples of Christ: and, indeed, it looks as if hypocrites were intended, whether among Jews or Gentiles, or both, since the word here used, and rendered "submit", signifies to "lie"; and so it is in the metaphrase of Apollinarius; or, as in the margin of some Bibles, to "yield a feigned obedience"; (see <196603>Psalm 66:3). There seems to be an allusion to the conquest of nations, some of the inhabitants of which readily and heartily submit, but others only feignedly, and through fear, and the force of superior power they cannot withstand.

Ver. 45. The strangers shall fade away, etc.] Like the leaves of trees in autumn, when they fall and perish; to which hypocrites and nominal professors are compared, (<650112>Jude 1:12); and be afraid out of their close places; their towers and fortified places, or the rocks and mountains to which they betake themselves for shelter; but, as not thinking themselves safe enough, through fear and dread, come out of them; (see <330717>Micah 7:17). Some Jewish writers [f287] interpret the words, they shall halt or be lame; that is, because of the chains put upon their feet: and so they are expressive of the conquest made of them. The word in the Arabic language signifies to "come out"; and may be so rendered here, and "come out": in (<102246>2 Samuel 22:46); it is, "they shall gird themselves", or "come out girt".

Ver. 46. The Lord liveth, and blessed [be] my Rock, etc.] This, with what follows, is the concluding part of the psalm, which ends with a celebration of the Divine Being, and with thankfulness for mercies received from him. The psalmist praises him on account of what he is in himself, what he was to him, and had done for him: in himself he is the living God, "the Lord liveth": he has life in himself, essentially, originally, and independently; and is the fountain and author of life to all others, even to all creatures that have life, whether rational or irrational: he is the giver of natural life to all men, and the supporter of it; and of spiritual and eternal life to his chosen people; and he continues to live, and ever will; wherefore the saints may conclude that their life in every sense is safe and secure. Some render the phrase, by way of wish, "may the Lord live" [f288]; but then it must be understood only that he would show himself more abundantly to be the living God, and that he might be acknowledged so by others. The next clauses are by way of petition; "and blessed be my Rock"; on which he was built and established, to which he betook himself in times of distress, which was his place of defence, and from whence he had a supply; wherefore he desires he might be blessed, not by invoking or conferring a blessing on him, neither of which can be; there being none greater than he to call upon, and he being “Elshaddai”, God all sufficient, and in no need of any; but by declaring his blessedness, by celebrating his greatness and goodness, and by ascribing blessing and honour and glory to him; and let the God of my salvation be exalted; God was the God of his salvation in a temporal sense, saving him daily from his many enemies; and in a spiritual sense, being the contriver, author, and applier of it to him; on which account he would have him be exalted both by himself, and in the high praises of his people; ascribing the whole of salvation to him, and giving him all the glory of it. Some render the words, “the God of my salvation is high” [f289]; he is the most high God, the high and lofty One that inhabits eternity, and is above all others. In (<102247>2 Samuel 22:47) the words are read, “and exalted be the God of the Rock of my salvation”.

Ver. 47. [It is] God that avengeth me, etc.] Or “gives vengeance unto me”, or “for me” [f290]: vengeance only belongs to God, and he repays it for and in behalf of his people. Private revenge is not to be exercised by any; public vengeance on delinquents may be exercised by the civil magistrate, to whom God gives power and authority to exercise it, (<451304>Romans 13:4); as he did to David, as king of Israel; though the phrase rather seems to design the victories which he obtained over his enemies, which were punishments to them, vengeances inflicted on them; and owing to God; so the acceptable year of the Messiah’s coming, and the time of his people redeemed by him, is called the day of vengeance of our God, both on his and their enemies, (<236102>Isaiah 61:2 63:4); and subdueth the people under me; the Edomites, Moabites, and others, as in (<100801>2 Samuel 8:1,2,5,14), or the Gentiles under Christ; (see Gill on “<191839>Psalm 18:39”);

Ver. 48. He delivereth me from mine enemies, etc.] From Saul and his men, from Ishbosheth and Abner, from Absalom, and the conspirators with him; so all believers are delivered out of the hands of their enemies by Christ, as that they can serve the Lord without fear; and so Christ himself is delivered from all his enemies, being raised from the dead, and set at the right hand of God, where he must reign till all enemies are put under his feet;

yea, thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me; David was lifted up from a low and mean estate, and placed on the throne of Israel, above all those that rose up against him, and sought to destroy him; and the saints are set upon their high places in Christ, where they are out of the reach of their enemies to do them any harm; and Christ, he is highly exalted at the right hand of God, above all principality and power, might and dominion, and every name that is named in this world;

thou hast delivered me from the violent man; either from Saul, from whom David was delivered; or from Satan the enemy, the son of wickedness, who shall no more exact upon and afflict the Messiah, (<198921>Psalm 89:21,22). The Chaldee paraphrase says, from Gog; as the saints will be delivered from antichrist, the man of sin, and son of perdition, who will be destroyed with the breath of Christ's mouth.

Ver. 49. Therefore will I give thanks unto thee, O Lord, among the Heathen, etc.] These words are cited by the apostle, in (<451509>Romans 15:9); and applied to the conversion of the Gentiles, which is manifestly prophesied of in some preceding verses of this psalm: there it is rendered, "I will confess to thee among the Gentiles"; and designs not confession of sin, nor profession of the truth, but an acknowledgment of unworthiness, joined with thankfulness for mercies received; done in the most public manner, not only in the congregation of the righteous, but before the Heathen conquered by him; owning before them all, that the victories he had obtained over them were not to be ascribed to his arm and sword, but to the power of the Lord; and sing praises unto thy name; which is comely for the saints to do, and which Jesus Christ himself did, in the great congregation of his disciples, and among the Gentiles, by his apostles, and others, on the account of the conversion of them.

Ver. 50. Great deliverance giveth he to his king, etc.] Not that is king over him; for he is King of kings and Lord of lords; but that is made king by him, as David was; who did not usurp the throne, but was anointed king by the appointment of God, and was placed by him upon the throne; to whom he gave great deliverance from his enemies, or "magnified salvations" to him; which were great in kind, and many in number; and as Christ is, whom God has set as his King on his holy hill of Sion, against whom the Heathen raged, and kings and princes set themselves; but he is delivered from them all, and saved from the power of death and the grave, and ever lives to reign over, protect, and defend his people; in (<102251>2 Samuel 22:51), it is, he is “the tower of salvation for his king”, with which compare (<201810>Proverbs 18:10);

and showeth mercy to his anointed, to David, and to his seed for evermore; which may be understood either of David literally, who was the Lord’s anointed, and to whom God showed mercy in various instances; and then by his seed is meant the Messiah, who was of his seed according to the flesh; or of the Messiah, whose name signifies Anointed; and who is often called David, (<263423>Ezekiel 34:23,24 37:24,25) (<280305>Hosea 3:5); and so some of the Jewish doctors[f291] from this verse prove that the name of the Messiah is David: and by his seed are meant his spiritual seed; all the elect of God, who are given him as his children, to whom he stands in the relation of the everlasting Father: and as mercy is kept with him for evermore, (<198928>Psalm 89:28); so it is shown to them in regeneration, in the forgiveness of their sins, and in their everlasting salvation.

PSALM 19

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 19

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David

This psalm was penned by David, and inscribed to the chief musician, as others, to be used in public service, and was designed for Gospel times, as the subject of it shows; which is first, not an account of the light of nature, and then of the law of Moses, but of the Gospel of Christ; and especially as ministered in the times of the apostles, as a citation out of it in (<451018>Romans 10:18), makes clear.

Ver. 1. The heavens declare the glory of God, etc.] By which we are to understand not the heavens literally taken, though these with the firmament are the handiworks of God, and do declare the glory of his perfections, especially his wisdom and power; these show that there is a God, and that he is a glorious one: but either Gospel churches, often signified by the kingdom of heaven, in the New Testament; the members of them being heaven-born souls, and the doctrines and ordinances ministered among them being from heaven; and there being a very great resemblance between them and heaven, in the company and communion enjoyed in them; and who declare the glory of the divine perfections, which is very great in the handiwork of their redemption; and who ascribe the glory of their whole salvation to God: or rather the apostles and first preachers of the word, as appears from (<451018>Romans 10:18); who were set in the highest place in the church; had their commission, doctrine, and success from heaven; and who may be called by this name, because of the purity and solidity of their ministry, and their constancy and steadfastness in it, and because of their heavenly lives and conversations: these declared the glory of the divine perfections; such as those particularly of grace, goodness, and mercy, which are not discoverable by the light of nature or law of Moses, as, they are displayed in the salvation of men by Christ, in the forgiveness of their sins, the justification of their persons, and the gift of eternal life unto them: they taught men to ascribe the glory of salvation to God alone, Father, Son, and Spirit; they set forth in their ministry the glory of Christ, of his person, and of his offices and grace; and they showed that redemption was his handiwork, as follows:

and the firmament showeth his handiwork; for the same persons may be called the firmament, since they that are wise are said to shine as the brightness of it, (<271203>Daniel 12:3). These were like to stars in it, and were the light of the world, and declared that redemption is the work which Christ undertook, and came into this world to perform, and which he has finished; his hands have wrought it, and his own arm has brought salvation to him. The Targum interprets the heavens and the firmament, of such persons as contemplate the heavens, and look upon the firmament or air; and so do some other Jewish writers [f292].

Ver. 2. Day untoday uttereth speech, etc.] This, with the following clause, and night untonight showeth knowledge, some understand of the constant and continued succession of day and night; which declares the glory of God, and shows him to be possessed of infinite knowledge and wisdom; and which brings a new accession of knowledge to men; others, of the continual declaration of the glory of God, and of the knowledge of him made by the heavens and the firmament, the ordinances of which always continue; the sun for a light by day, and the moon and stars for a light by night; and so night and day constantly and successively proclaim the glory and wisdom of God: but rather this is to be understood of the constancy of the Gospel ministry, and the continuance of the evangelic revelation. The apostles of Christ persevered in their work, and laboured in the word and doctrine night and day: they were in it at all seasons; yea, were instant in season and out of season; and though they are dead, the Gospel continues, and will do as long as day and night remain: and these, like overflowing fountains, sent forth in great abundance, as the word [f293] rendered “uttereth” signifies, the streams of divine light and knowledge; they were full of matter, and their tongues were as the pen of a ready writer; they diffused the savour of the knowledge of Christ, in great plenty, in every place where they came. These words express the continuance of the Gospel revelation, as the next do the extent of it.

Ver. 3. [There is] no speech nor language [where] their voice is not heard, etc.] Not the voice of the day and night; as if the sense was, that there is no people, of any speech or language under the sun, but there is something said every day and night of the weather, what it is, or will be, as the face of the heavens appears morning and evening: but of the heavens and firmament; the meaning of which some take to be this; either that though they have no proper speech nor language, yet there is a voice in them which is heard, declaring the glory of God and his handiworks; and the words may very well be rendered, “they have no speech nor words, without [these] their voice is heard”; or that there is no people, nation, or language under the heavens; (see <270304>Daniel 3:4,29 6:24); though they are ever so different one from another, so as not to be able to understand each other; yet the voice of the heavens, uttering and proclaiming the glory of their Maker, is heard and understood by them all: but rather this is to be interpreted of the extent of the Gospel ministry by the apostles; who, according to their commission, went everywhere preaching the word, to men of all nations, of every speech and language; for which they were qualified, by having the gift of various tongues bestowed upon them; so that there were no nations, of ever so barbarous a speech and language, but they were capable of speaking to and of being understood by them; and though they could not understand one another, they all heard the apostles speak in their own tongues the wonderful works of God, (<440204>Acts 2:4-11). Their voice, in the ministration of the Gospel, was heard in every nation externally, and by many internally: faith came by hearing; and they received the word with gladness and readiness. This gives the Gospel revelation a superiority to the legal one; that was only made to one nation, to the nation of the Jews; the voice of that was not heard elsewhere; but the voice of the Gospel is heard in all nations; this revelation is published throughout the world: and this shows that these words belong to the times of the apostles, after they had received a commission from Christ, to go into, all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; which was done before the destruction of Jerusalem, (<402414>Matthew 24:14 <510106>Colossians 1:6,23); and which is further confirmed by what follows.

Ver. 4. Their line is gone out through all the earth, etc.] Not the line or writings in the book of the creatures, the heavens, and the earth, which lie open, and are legible, and to be seen and read of all men; nor the line and writings in the book of the Scriptures, called line upon line, and precept upon precept, (<232813>Isaiah 28:13), which, though first given to the Jews, were written for the instruction of others, and have been communicated to them; but the line of the apostles: everyone had his line or measure; or the course he was to steer was measured out and directed to him; the line of one, where he was to go and preach the Gospel, reached so far one way, and the line of another reached so far another way; and what with one and another, their line reached throughout all the earth; (see <471013>2 Corinthians 10:13-16); the apostle citing these words in (<451018>Romans 10:18); renders them, "their sound went", etc. the sound of the Gospel, as published by them; which agrees with the next clause; and their words to the end of the world; to the isles afar off, even to these northern and distant ones of England, Scotland, and Ireland, which were reached and visited with the Gospel, either by the apostles, or at least by some of the first ministers of the word; in them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun; that is, in the heavens and firmament, where the natural sun is placed; and its habitation is fitly called a tabernacle, because it is always in motion and never stops: or this may have some respect to its setting, when, according to the common appearance, and to common understandings, it seems to be hid as in a tent or tabernacle; to be as it were gone to bed, and at rest; when in the morning it rises gay and cheerful, and comes forth like a bridegroom out of his chamber, as is said in (<191905>Psalm 19:5): but this is all to be understood, spiritually and mystically, of Christ the sun of righteousness, who has his tabernacle among his people, his churches; and particularly has a place, and the chief place, in the ministry of the Gospel, being the sum and substance of it; and this is of God's putting there, who committed to his apostles the word of reconciliation, the sum of which is Christ; and this is what makes the Gospel so glorious a light, so clear a revelation as it is: the nature, continuance, and extent of this revelation, are described in the foregoing verses; the perspicuity and clearness of it is set forth in this clause, and in what follows.

Ver. 5. Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, etc.] His nuptial chamber, on which Elias writes [f294],

> "we call the garment (or canopy) spread over the head of the bridegroom and bride, supported by four pillars, in the time of their espousals, hpj."

who looks lovely and beautiful in his nuptial robes, cheerful and pleasant in his countenance, creating pleasure and delight in all his friends that see him and hear his voice: and this simile is expressive of the brightness and glory of the sun when it rises; and of the joy and pleasure which it produces in the minds of men when they behold it: all which sets forth the loveliness and beauty of Christ, as he is held forth in the ministration of the Gospel, and the joy unspeakable and full of glory which his presence yields, after a short departure from his people; (see <236110>Isaiah 61:10 <430329>John 3:29);

[and] rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race; in which he shows his readiness, velocity, and strength; and this denotes the swiftness of the sun in running its course, and its indefatigableness in its constant motion; though it has been employed therein for so many thousands of years, yet every morning rises with the same cheerfulness, pursues its course, and is never weary: all which may point at the readiness of Gospel ministers, their swiftness to run to and fro, and their strength to fulfil the course of their ministry, in which Christ, the sun of righteousness, is held forth in so glorious a manner.

Ver. 6. His going forth is from the end of the heaven, etc.] From the east, where it rises:

and his circuit to the ends of it; to the west, where it sets; which is expressive of the large compass the Gospel administration took in the times of the apostles; whereby the grace of God appeared to all men, shone out in a very illustrious manner, and Christ became, what the sun is to the earth, the light of the world;

and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof; though things may be hid from the light of it, yet not from its heat, so forcible and penetrating it is Christ, in the administration of the Gospel to all to whom it comes with power, not only enlightens their minds, but quickens their souls, warms their hearts, causes them to burn within them, arises with healing in his wings upon them, and makes his Gospel the savour of life unto life unto them. The psalmist goes on to say more and excellent things of the Gospel, its nature and usefulness.

Ver. 7. The law of the Lord [is] perfect, etc.] By which is meant, not the law of Moses, or the ten commandments, but the “doctrine” of the Lord; as the word hrwt, “torah”, signifies, even the whole word of God, as in (<230820>Isaiah 8:20). All the Scriptures of truth, which are profitable for doctrine; for setting doctrine in a clear light, and for the vindication and establishment of it, and are the rule of doctrine both to preachers and hearers; and which are “perfect”, contain the whole mind and will of God, both with respect to faith and practice; whereby the man of God is made perfect, and thoroughly furnished to all good works, (<550316>2 Timothy 3:16,17); and especially the Gospel part of the word of God may be designed, which both in the Old and New Testament is called “a law” or “doctrine”, being eminently so; the doctrine of the Messiah, and of justification by faith in his righteousness, (<230203>Isaiah 2:3 42:1) (<450327>Romans 3:27). The Gospel is a perfect plan and scheme of spiritual and saving truths: it gives an account of perfect things; as of the perfect righteousness of Christ, and complete justification by it; of the full as well as free pardon of sins by the blood of Christ; and of redemption and salvation from all sin and evils by him: and it also shows where true perfection is; namely, in Christ, in whom the saints are complete, be being made to them wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; (see <590125>James 1:25). This character, therefore, suits better with the Gospel than with the moral law; though that, as it is to be gathered out of the whole word of God, contains the good and perfect will of God, with respect to what is to be done or avoided; nor is anything to be added to it; nor did our Lord come to add unto it, or to make it more perfect, but to fulfil it, which men could not do; nor could the law make any man or anything perfect, either perfectly sanctify, or justify, or save; whereas the bringing in of the better hope in the Gospel does, (<580907>Hebrews 9:7,19 7:19). The effect, under a divine influence and blessing ascribed to it, is, converting the soul; which is a further proof that the law of Moses is not intended: for though by it is the knowledge of sin, or conviction of sin, which often falls short of conversion; yet the Spirit of God, as a spirit of regeneration, conversion, and sanctification, is not received through the doctrine or preaching of the law, but through the ministration of the Gospel; which is designed to turn men from darkness to light, and from the powers of Satan to God; and which use it has when it is attended with the demonstration of the Spirit and of power; (see <450320>Romans 3:20 <480302>Galatians 3:2 <442618>Acts 26:18), though the words may be rendered “relieving”, that is, refreshing and comforting the “soul” [f295] as in (<250111>Lamentations 1:11-16); Through want of bodily food, which is the case in the passage retorted to, the spirits faint and sink, the soul is almost gone, when, by the ministration of proper food, it is as it were brought back again, as the word [f296] here used signifies, and the animal spirits are cheered and revived: and of like use is the Gospel; it is the food of the soul, by which it is refreshed and exhilarated, when ready to sink and faint away; hereby it is restored and revived, comforted and nourished;

the testimony of the Lord [is] sure; this is another name for the word of God, or the Holy Scriptures; so called because they testify of Christ, of his person, office, and grace; of what he is, was to do, and suffer, and perform for his people, and of his glory that should follow thereon, (<430539>John 5:39); and particularly the doctrine of the Gospel is the testimony of our Lord Jesus Christ, both which he himself testified, and which is a testimony concerning him, (<550108>2 Timothy 1:8 <430311>John 3:11). And this is "sure", or "to be believed" [f297]; the whole of Scripture is true, coming from the God of truth; having for its principal subject Christ, who is truth itself, and being dictated by the Spirit of truth; and particularly the Gospel part of it, and all the truths therein contained, especially the doctrine of salvation by Christ, which is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation: the Gospel is a testimony of record which God himself has bore concerning his Son, and eternal life by him, and therefore sure and to be depended upon; for if the witness of men is received, the witness of God is greater, (<620509>1 John 5:9-11). The effect ascribed to the word of God, Or to the Gospel under this character, is, making wise the simple. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions, render it "babes" or "children"; and so Apollinarius; and the word ytp, here used in the Arabic language, is said to [f298] signify such; and here it intends babes and children not in years, but in understanding, to whom God is pleased to reveal the truths of his Gospel, when he hides them from the wise and prudent: these simple ones are such who are sensible of their simplicity and folly, and of their want of understanding; who, with Agur, think themselves more foolish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man; and these, by the word of God, are made wise to know themselves, their folly, sinfulness, imperfections, and impotence; and are made wise unto salvation, to know the right way of salvation by Christ; (see <550315>2 Timothy 3:15); where the same phrase is used as here, and seems to be borrowed from hence, and is used of the Scriptures; which also make men wise in the knowledge of Gospel doctrines, the wisdom of God in a mystery, which to know is the greatest wisdom and understanding, and much more so than to be acquainted with the law only, (<050406>Deuteronomy 4:6).

Ver. 8. The statutes of the Lord [are] right, etc.] The word of God may be called "statutes", or "visitations" [f299] because that God will visit, in a way of resentment, such persons as despise its authority, do not act according to it, or add unto it, or detract from it; or the word may be rendered "commissions" [f300], things committed to trust, as the Scriptures were to the Jews, (<450301>Romans 3:1,2); and as the Gospel is committed to the trust of the ministers of it, who faithfully dispense it, (<470519>2 Corinthians 5:19 <540111>1 Timothy 1:11). Now these may be said to be right, as the word of the Lord is, (<193304>Psalm 33:4); since they set men right in their principles, and direct them to right practices; they are the means of making them upright in heart, and in conversation: the doctrines of the word of God have nothing crooked, froward, and perverse in them; are without sophism, and the hidden things of dishonesty; they are all in righteousness, and plain and easy in everything respecting salvation, to those who have a spiritual knowledge and understanding of them, (<200808>Proverbs 8:8,9); they lead into right and straight paths of truth and holiness, in which wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err; and particularly the Gospel directs to the right way of salvation and eternal life by Jesus Christ; the effect of which is rejoicing the heart. This cannot be understood of the law, which is a voice of terror, pronounces guilty, curses and condemns, is the killing letter, and works wrath; but of the Gospel part of the word, which is a joyful sound; publishes good tidings of good things; and, when applied by the Spirit of God, is found to have this effect, (see <241516>Jeremiah 15:16);

the commandment of the Lord [is] pure; not only the Scriptures in general may bear this name, because they deliver out the commands of God to men, as those of a moral and ceremonial kind to the Jews under the former dispensation; so the ordinances of Christ, which are his commands under the Gospel dispensation; yea, the Gospel itself may be so called, though, strictly speaking, it has no command in it; because, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, it is made known to all nations for the obedience of faith, (<451625>Romans 16:25,26); besides, the commandment is no other than the word or doctrine, (see <620207>1 John 2:7); and as every commandment of the Lord, of what kind soever it is, is pure and holy, so is every word of God, (<203005>Proverbs 30:5); being without any mixture of men’s inventions, or the dross of corrupt doctrine, sincere, unadulterated, clear of all chaff and impurity, consistent, uniform, and all of a piece, and which tends to promote purity of heart, life, and conversation;

enlightening the eyes: that is, of the understanding, so as for a man to see his lost state and condition by nature; to see the glory, fulness, and grace of Christ; to behold wondrous things in the doctrine of the Gospel, and to observe the way of duty in which he should walk: this is the eyesalve in (<660318>Revelation 3:18); and so the Jewish doctors [f301] explaining this text call the law, using the same word as there.

Ver. 9. The fear of the Lord [is] clean, etc.] Still the word of God is intended, which teaches men to fear the Lord; gives a full account of the worship of God, which is often meant by the fear of God; it instructs in the matter and manner of worship; and nothing more powerfully engages to serve the Lord with reverence and godly fear than the Gospel does: and this is “clean”; and the doctrines of it direct to the blood of Christ, which cleanses from all sin, and to the righteousness of Christ, the fine linen, clean and white; the promises of it put the saints on cleansing themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit; and the whole of it is the word of truth, by which God and Christ sanctify the church and the members of it, (<431502>John 15:2 17:17 <490525>Ephesians 5:25,26). And this word is enduring for ever; the law is done away; the ceremonial law entirely, and the moral law, as a covenant of works, and as to the ministration of it by Moses; but the Gospel continues; it is an everlasting one; it endures for ever, notwithstanding all the opposition made to it by open persecution, or false teachers;

the judgments of the Lord [are] true, [and] righteous altogether; “the judgments of the Lord” are the same with “the word of God”, as appears from (<19B925>Psalm 119:25,149); and these seem to design that part of the word, which contains rules of God’s judging and governing his people; or the laws, orders, and ordinances of Christ in his house, which his people should observe, and yield a cheerful obedience to, he being their King, Judge, and Lawgiver: and these are “true”, or “truth”[f302] itself; being wisely made, according to the truth of things, and agreeable to the holiness and righteousness of God, and so righteous; not at all grievous, but easy, pleasant, and delightful, one and all of them.

Ver. 10. More to be desired [are they] than gold, etc.] This refers to all the truths in the word of God; to all the doctrines of the Gospel; which, by good men, are more desirable, and by them more prized and valued, than all worldly riches and treasure;

yea, than much fine gold: more than gold, and the best of gold, and a great deal of it, than thousands of gold and silver; (see <19B972>Psalm 119:72,127) (<200810>Proverbs 8:10,11);

sweeter also than honey, and the honeycomb; or “the dropping of the honeycombs”[f303], which is the purest and sweetest of the honey; and what honey is to the natural taste of men, that is the Gospel, and the truths of it, to the spiritual taste of believers, (<19B9103>Psalm 119:103); and when the presence of Christ is enjoyed, his love is shed abroad, and the blessings of his grace are partook of, the ordinances of the Gospel are very delightful, (<220203>Song of Solomon 2:3); eloquence, and eloquent orators, are sometimes described by mellifluous words; or by their expressions being like honey, and sweeter than that [f304].

Ver. 11. Moreover, by them is thy servant warned, etc.] By whom the psalmist means himself, who was the servant of the Lord, not only in common with other saints, but as he was a king and prophet, and as such he received advantage from the word of God; all his instructions as a prophet, and all his rules of government as a king; and the whole of that wisdom, prudence, and knowledge, with which the conducted in both offices, were from the Lord by his word: and it may be applied to any servant of the Lord, and especially in an ecclesiastical office, as an apostle of Christ, and minister of the word; who serve God in the Gospel of his Son, and, by means of the Scriptures, are furnished for every good work; and also to believers in Christ in common; who, of whatsoever rank and quality, in whatsoever state and condition of life, whether high or low, rich or poor, bond or free, are Christ’s servants; and whatsoever is written is for their instruction, and by the word of God they are “warned”; the Scriptures are a way mark to them, to direct them in a right way, and to caution them against turning to the right or left; either to immoral practices, or the errors and heresies of wicked men: it is a lamp to their feet, and a light to their path, and teaches them to walk circumspectly, and warns them of rocks, gins, and snares in the way; or, as the words may be rendered, “by them is thy servant made clear”, or “bright” [f305]; so the word is used in (<271203>Daniel 12:3); that is, in his understanding: the psalmist confirms, by his own experience, what he had said before of the word, (<191908>Psalm 19:8); that it enlightened the eyes: the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ shining into the heart gives the light of the glory of God in the person of Christ; it illuminates and irradiates the mind, and gives clear ideas of the glory and perfections of God, of his counsels and covenant, of his works of nature and of grace; and makes a bright discovery of the person, offices, and grace of Christ; and of the blessed Spirit, and his operations; and of the blessings of grace, and of eternal glory and happiness; which, if a man did keep perfectly and constantly, he should live in them; but of observing the word of God, and by diligent searching into it, reading and learning it, and meditating on it, to get and obtain knowledge of divine things; which carries its own reward with it, and is better than thousands of gold and silver; and of laying up the word of God, and the truths of the Gospel, and keeping them in mind and memory, which is very profitable and serviceable, to promote spiritual peace and comfort, and to preserve from sin, doctrinal and practical; and also of yielding a cheerful obedience to the Gospel, by cordially embracing and professing the doctrines, and submitting to the ordinances of it; from all which arise great profit, and much reward: such come at the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which is preferable to everything else, and is more precious than rubies; and all desirable things; such enjoy the presence of Christ, have much peace and comfort in their souls; they are made wise unto salvation, and are fitted for every good word and work.

[and] in keeping of them [there is] great reward; which is to be understood, not of keeping the law of Moses, and the precepts of that,

Ver. 12. Who can understand [his] errors? etc.] Sin is an error, a wandering out of the way of God, swerving from the rule of his word; and many mistakes are made by the people of God themselves; even so many that they cannot number them; they are more than the hairs of their head; they cannot understand, find out and express, neither their number, nor their evil nature, nor the many aggravating circumstances which attend them: this the psalmist said, upon a view of the large extent, glory, and excellency of the word of God; and upon comparing himself with it, in which, as in a glass, he saw how far short he came of it, and what a disagreement and want of conformity there was in him unto it; (see <19B997>Psalm 119:97 <450714>Romans 7:14); and he suggests, that though the word he had been describing was perfect, pure, and clean, he was not; nor could he expect any reward of debt, but merely of grace, for his observance of it; and that it was best, under a sense of sin, to have recourse, not to works of righteousness done by men; but to the grace and mercy of God in Christ, as follows:

cleanse thou me from secret [faults]; by which are meant not such sins as are done in secret, and are unknown to men; such as David’s sin with Bathsheba, (<101212>2 Samuel 12:12); nor the inward motions of sin in the heart, to which none are privy but God, and a man’s own soul; not but that each of these may be properly enough included in such a petition; but sins, which are unknown to a man himself are meant: there are some actions, which, though known when committed, are not known to be sinful ones; and there are some sins which are committed unadvisedly, and through carelessness, and pass unobserved; not only many vain and sinful thoughts pass to and fro uncontrolled, without being taken notice of; but many foolish and idle words are spoken, and many evil actions, through infirmity and inadvertency, are done, which, when a good man, at the close of a day, comes to reflect upon the things that have passed in it, are quite hidden from him, are unknown to him, being unobserved by him; wherefore such a petition is highly proper to be inserted in his address at the throne of grace: and which also supposes the person sensible of the defiling nature of sin, and of his own impotency to cleanse himself from it; and that God only can do it, who does it by the application of the blood of his Son, which cleanses from all sin; for this respects not regenerating and sanctifying grace, but pardoning grace; a manifestation of it, a view of acquittance from sin by Christ, and of freedom from obligation to punishment for it.

Ver. 13. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous [sins], etc.] Some understand these words of persons: the Septuagint, and the versions that follow that, render it “from strangers”: such who are strangers to God and godliness; that is, keep from all conversation with them in things sinful, or from others’ sins; from having a fellowship with them, being a partaker of them, lest their plagues and punishments should be shared in: others, as the Targum, “from proud men”, who are haughty, insolent, and conceited of themselves; lest he should be so corrupted and drawn aside by them: but rather the words are to be understood of sins wilfully, contumaciously, and presumptuously committed; and the petition supposes, that these may be committed by good men, if left to themselves; and that there is a proneness in them to them; and that they would rush into them, were they not kept back and restrained by the powerful and efficacious grace of God: and it also supposes that the saints cannot keep themselves; that God only can keep them from evil; and therefore they pray to him that he would, who does keep them by his power, at least from a final and total falling away

let them not have dominion over me: neither presumptuous sins, nor any other, (<19B9133>Psalm 119:133); as they shall not, (<450614>Romans 6:14); as sin has over wicked men; and they yield a ready obedience to the laws and lusts of it; it reigns over them as a king and tyrant, even unto death: it is something very powerful in good men; it prevails over them, and carries them captive; wherefore they pray it may not have a continued dominion, as it shall not; because they are in another kingdom, and under grace as a governing principle, which reigns through righteousness unto eternal life;

then shall I be upright; in heart, and walk uprightly in conversation; being cleansed from secret faults, and kept from notorious crimes, and gross enormities; and shall exercise a conscience void of offence, both to God and man; and be “perfect”, as the word is sometimes rendered, at least comparatively; and absolutely so, as washed in Christ’s blood, and justified by his righteousness; and I shall be innocent from the great transgression; which some understand of pride, others of apostasy; perhaps the sin against the Holy Ghost may be intended; though the words may be rendered, “from much transgression” [f306]; and the sense is, that he should be cleared and acquitted of a multitude of transgressions he had been guilty of; or be preserved from much sin, which otherwise he should have fallen into.

Ver. 14. Let the words of my mouth, etc.] Meaning either his speech in common conversation, which should not be filthy and foolish, rotten and corrupt; but such as ministers grace to the hearer: or else his address to God, both in prayer and thanksgiving; and the meditation of my heart; his inward thoughts continually revolving in his mind; or his meditation on the word of God and divine things; or mental prayer, which is not expressed, only conceived in the mind;

be acceptable in thy sight; as words and thoughts are, when they are according to the word of God; and as the sacrifices of prayer, whether vocal or mental, and of praise, are through Jesus Christ our Lord. The psalmist, in order to strengthen his faith in God, that he should be heard and answered in the petitions he put up, makes use of the following epithets:

O Lord, my strength, or “rock” [f307], and my Redeemer; who had been the strength of his life and of his salvation, the rock on which he was built and established, and the Redeemer who had redeemed his life from destruction, and out of the hands of all his enemies, and from all his iniquities.

PSALM 20

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 20

This psalm is thought, by some, to be written by David, on account of himself, and as a form to be used by the people for him, when he was about to go to war; particularly with the Ammonites and Syrians, (<101006>2 Samuel 10:6,18); mention being made of chariots in it, (<192007>Psalm 20:7); of which there was a great number in that war: Arama thinks it was made by him when he got the victory over the Philistines; others think it was written by one of the singers on David’s account, and should be rendered, “a psalm, for David”, as (<197201>Psalm 72:1 92:1): but rather it is a psalm concerning David; concerning the Messiah, whose name is David; or a psalm of David concerning the Messiah, since he is expressly mentioned, (<192006>Psalm 20:6); and Aben Ezra says, there are some that interpret it of the Messiah; and some passages in it are, by Jewish writers [f308], applied unto him, as (<192006>Psalm 20:6,9); and our countryman, Mr. Ainsworth, says, the whole psalm is a prophecy of Christ’s sufferings, and his deliverance out of them, for which the church with him triumphs. Theodoret takes it to be a prophecy of Sennacherib’s invasion of Judea, and of Rabshakeh’s blasphemy, and of Hezekiah’s distress and prayer on that account.

Ver. 1. The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble, etc.] All the days of Christ were days of trouble; he was a brother born for adversity; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with griefs; he had his own sorrows, and he bore the griefs of others; he was persecuted by Herod in his infancy; he was tempted by Satan in the wilderness; he was harassed by the Scribes and Pharisees continually; he was grieved at the hardness, impenitence, and unbelief, of that perverse and faithless generation of men, and was sometimes made uneasy by his own disciples: at some particular seasons his soul or spirit is said to be troubled, as at the grave of Lazarus, and when in a view of his own death, and when he was about to acquaint his disciples that one of them should betray him, (<431133>John 11:33 12:27 13:21); but more particularly it was a day of trouble with him, when he was in the garden, heavy, and sore amazed, and his sweat was, as it were, drops of blood falling on the ground, and his soul was exceeding sorrowful, even unto death; but more especially this was his case when he hung upon the cross, and is what seems to be principally respected here; when he was in great torture of body through the rack of the cross; when he endured the cruel mockings of men, of the common people, of the chief priests, and even of the thieves that suffered with him; when he had Satan, and all his principalities and powers, let loose upon him, and he was grappling with them; when he bore all the sins of his people, endured the wrath of his Father, and was forsaken by him: now in this day of trouble, both when in the garden and on the cross, he prayed unto his Father, as he had been used to do in other cases, and at other times; and the church here prays, that God would hear and answer him, as he did: he always heard him; he heard him at the grave of Lazarus; he heard him in the garden, and filled his human soul with courage and intrepidity, of which there were immediate instances; he heard him on the cross, and helped him as man and Mediator, (<234908>Isaiah 49:8);

the name of the God of Jacob defend thee; that is, God himself, who is named the God of Jacob, whom Jacob called upon, and trusted in as his God, and who answered him in the day of his distress: Jacob was exercised with many troubles, but the Lord delivered him out of them all; and which may be the reason why the Lord is addressed under this character here; besides, Israel is one of the names of the Messiah, (<234903>Isaiah 49:3); on whose account the petition is put to which may be added, that Jacob may design people of God, the spiritual sons of Jacob, the church of the living God, whose God the Lord is; and the phrase may be here used by the church, to encourage her faith in prayer: the petition, on account of the Messiah, is, that God would "defend" him, or "set" him on "an high place" [f309]; or "exalt" him: he was brought very low in his state of humiliation; he was in the form of a servant; he was in a very low and mean condition throughout the whole of his life; through the suffering of death he was made lower than the angels, and he was laid in the lower parts of the earth: the church, in this petition, prays for his resurrection from the dead; for his ascension into the highest heavens; for his exaltation at the right hand of God; for the more visible setting him on his throne in his kingdom; in all which she has been answered.

Ver. 2. Send thee help from the sanctuary, etc.] Meaning either from the tabernacle, the holy place, where was the ark, the symbol of the divine Presence; or rather heaven, the habitation of God's holiness unless the whence he sends the rod of his strength; and strengthen thee out of Zion; and the “help” and “strength” prayed for are not to be understood of that assistance and support, which Christ, as man, had from his Father, at the time of his sufferings, which were promised him, and he believed he should have, and had, (<198921>Psalm 89:21 <235007>Isaiah 50:7,9 49:8); since these petitions follow that which relates to his exaltation; but of the help and strength afforded to the apostles and ministers of Christ, after they had received the commission from him to preach the Gospel to every creature; when, as a full answer to these petitions, God worked with them, greatly assisted them, strengthened them with strength in their souls; confirmed the word with signs and wonders following; made it the power of God to salvation to multitudes; and so strengthened the cause, interest, and kingdom of the Redeemer.

Ver. 3. Remember all thy offerings, etc.] The spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise which Christ, as the great High Priest, offers up for his people; or which they offer by him, and are acceptable to God through him, by virtue of the incense of his mediation; or the offering up of himself, which answers to, and is the body, the sum and substance, of all the offerings of the law; they were types of this, and what they could not do this did; and therefore it is expressed in the singular number in the next clause; and accept thy burnt sacrifice. The word rendered “accept” signifies to “reduce to ashes” [f310]; and the way in which it was known that sacrifices were acceptable to God was by fire coming down from heaven upon them and consuming them, (<030924>Leviticus 9:24 <132126>1 Chronicles 21:26 <140701>2 Chronicles 7:1 <111838>1 Kings 18:38); and therefore the word is rightly rendered “accept”; and Christ’s sacrifice of himself, putting away sin, and perfecting for ever them that are sanctified, is of a sweet smelling savour to God; for hereby his justice is satisfied, his law is magnified and made honourable, the sins of his people are atoned for, their persons are accepted, and their sacrifices of prayer and praise come up also with acceptance to him through the virtue of this sacrifice; and so these petitions have their accomplishment.

Selah; on this word, see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”.

Ver. 4. Grant thee according to thine own heart, etc.] Which is to see his seed, the travail of his soul, and to have the pleasure of the Lord prosper in his hand; to have all his people called, preserved, and glorified;

and fulfil all thy counsel; whatever was agreed upon in the council and covenant of peace between him and his Father, relating to his own glory, and the salvation of his people.

Ver. 5. We will rejoice in thy salvation, etc.] That is, "so will we", etc. or "that we may"[f311], etc. or "let us"; these words, with what follow, point at the end of the church's requests, and what she resolved to do upon the accomplishment of the above things; for instance, she would rejoice in the salvation of the Messiah; meaning either the salvation and deliverance from death and the grave, and all other enemies, which he himself is possessed of, and which enters into, and is the occasion of the joy of his people; for not his sufferings and death only, but chiefly his resurrection from the dead, session at God's right hand, and intercession for them, cause the triumph of faith in him, and further the joy of it, (<450833>Romans 8:33,34); or else the salvation he is the author of, which being so great, so suitable, so complete and perfect, and an everlasting one; is matter of joy to all sensible of their need of it, and who have a comfortable hope of interest in it; and in the name of our God we will set up [our] banners; either as a preparation for war; (see <245127>Jeremiah 51:27); so when Caesar[f312] set up his banner, it was a sign to his soldiers to run to their arms and prepare to fight; and then the sense is, putting our trust in the Lord, relying on his strength, and not on our own, we will cheerfully and courageously engage with all his and our enemies, sin, Satan, and the world; as good soldiers of Christ, we will endure hardness, fight his battles under the banners of the Lord of hosts, in whose service we are enlisted; or as a sign of victory, when standards were set up, and flags hung out[f313]; (see <245002>Jeremiah 50:2 <021715>Exodus 17:15 *marg); and then the meaning is, Christ, the great Captain of our salvation, having obtained a complete victory over all enemies, and made us more than conquerors thereby, we will set up our banners, hang out the flag, and in his name triumph over sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell;

the Lord fulfil all thy petitions: the same as in (<192004>Psalm 20:4); this is put here to show that the church will be in such a frame as before described, when the Lord shall have fulfilled all the petitions of his Anointed; of which she had a full assurance, as appears from the following words.

Ver. 6. Now know I that the Lord saveth his Anointed, etc.] Not David, though he was the anointed of the God of Jacob, and was anointed with material oil to be king of Israel by Samuel, at the express order of God himself; but David is not here speaking of himself, nor the church of him, but of the Messiah; anointed by Jehovah king over his holy hill of Zion, with the oil of gladness, or the Holy Spirit. The church in prayer rises in her faith, and is strongly assured of the salvation of the Messiah; that though his troubles would be many and great, he should be delivered out of them all; should be heard and helped in the day of salvation, and be freed from the sorrows of death and hell, he should be encompassed with; that he should be raised from the dead; have all power in heaven and earth given him; ascend on high, and triumph over all his enemies; and all his people, all the members of his body, should be saved through him, which is in a sense the salvation of himself;

he will hear him from his holy heaven; where his throne and temple are, which is the habitation of his holiness, whither the prayers of the Messiah when on earth ascended, where they were received, heard, and answered. Before the church prays that he might be heard, now she believes he would; and that, with the saving strength of his right hand; that is, by the exertion of his mighty power, in strengthening him as man to bear up under his sorrows, go through his work, and finish it; by upholding him with his right hand while engaged in it, and by raising him up from the dead with it, and setting him down at it in the highest heavens.

Ver. 7. Some [trust] in chariots, and some in horses, etc.] That is, in chariots and horses prepared for war; which, besides their use for carriage, did great annoyance to the enemy in battle, and were very terrible to them, and were greatly trusted in by those that possessed them, (<052001>Deuteronomy 20:1 <233101>Isaiah 31:1); such chariots as were called “currus falcati”, that had scythes at the sides of them, which being drove with fury among the infantry, cut them down as grass is mown with scythes; such the old Canaanites used, which were very terrible, (<061716>Joshua 17:16 <070403>Judges 4:3); and horses trained up for war do much execution in a battle by pawing and trampling; (see <183921>Job 39:21-25); though these are vain things for safety, and not to be depended on, for salvation and victory are of the Lord, (<193317>Psalm 33:17 <202131>Proverbs 21:31); and such are the chariots and horses of the sun, and the idols in which the Gentiles trusted,

(<122311>2 Kings 23:11 <19B508>Psalm 115:8); and all external things in which men depend for salvation, as fleshly privileges, outward works of righteousness, morality, a profession of religion, a round of duties, etc. all which are disclaimed by those who know the way of life and salvation by Christ, (<281403>Hosea 14:3);

but we will remember the name of the Lord our God; not any of the names by which the Lord God is called, as Elohim, Elshaddai, Jehovah, and the like; though each of these are worthy of remembrance, and greatly serve to encourage faith in him; but rather the perfections of God, such as the goodness, wisdom, and power of God, which are to be remembered and confided in; and not the friendship of princes, the schemes of human policy, and the outward forces of strength; or else God himself is intended, whose name is himself, and is a strong tower to the righteous: and to remember him is to bear him in mind, and not forget him; to have the desires of the soul towards him, and to the remembrance of him; and to make mention of him, of his names, attributes, word, and works; which is both for his glory and for the encouragement of faith in him, both in ourselves and others; it is to call upon his name in times of trouble, and at all times, and also to trust in him and not in an arm of flesh; for it stands opposed to trusting in chariots and horses; and it is to call to mind past instances of his goodness, wisdom, and power, and be thankful for them, and make use of them to engage confidence in him; and which should be done from the consideration of his being God and not man, and of his being our God, our covenant God and Father.

Ver. 8. They are brought down and fallen, etc.] These are they that rode in chariots and on horses, and trusted in them; who are brought down from their places of honour and safety; and fall, not into the hands of their enemies, and into a low and mean estate, but to the ground by death; as also such who, being like Capernaum, lifted up to heaven with their own outward attainments, and think to get thither by them, are brought down to hell, and fall into the pit of corruption;

but we are risen, and stand upright; who remember the name of the Lord, and trust in him; the church is sometimes in a very low and depressed condition; it consists of a poor and an afflicted people, and who are persecuted by men; so the church has been under the Heathen Roman emperors, and under the Papacy, and will be as long as she is in the wilderness, and the witnesses prophesy in sackcloth; and especially when they will be slain, and their bodies lie on the earth unburied; but these shall rise and stand upright, and ascend to heaven; there will be a glorious state of the church; there will be a reviving of the interest of Christ, through the bringing in the fulness and forces of the Gentiles, and the conversion of the Jews; the dry bones will live again, and stand upon their feet, an exceeding great army; in those days the righteous will flourish and have abundance of peace and prosperity. This may also include the first resurrection, which the saints will have a part in; the dead in Christ will rise first, and will stand before the Lord with confidence, and not be ashamed; when the ungodly shall not stand in judgment, nor sinners in, the congregation of the righteous; for though these words are expressed in the present tense, because of the certainty of them, they belong to future times; hence the following petitions.

Ver. 9. Save, Lord, etc.] Not “the king”, as the Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic versions read the words, joining the word “king” to them, which is in the next clause; but this, as Aben Ezra observes, is not right, because of the accent “athnach”, which divides these words from the following; rather the word us may be supplied; and so the Syriac version renders it, “the Lord will deliver us”; and the Targum is, “O Lord”, ˆl qrp, “redeem us”, or “save us”; that is, with a temporal, spiritual, and eternal salvation: this petition is directed to Jehovah the Father, as the following is to the King Messiah;

let the King hear us when we call; for not God the Father is here meant, though he is an everlasting King, the King of kings; and who hears his people, when they call upon him, and while they are calling; yet he is rarely, if ever, called “the King”, without any other additional epithet; whereas the Messiah often is, as in the next psalm, (<192001>Psalm 20:1,7 45:1); and prayer is made to him, and he hears and receives the prayers of his people; and, as Mediator, presents them to his Father perfumed with his much incense; for he is a Priest as well as a King.

PSALM 21

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 21

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David

This psalm was either written by David; and therefore called a “psalm of David”; or it was written, as it may be rendered, “for David”, by some other person, on account of his victories and triumphs; or rather “concerning David”[f314]; that is, concerning the Messiah, the son of David, as Kimchi says some expound it; or concerning the Messiah, who is called David, (<263724>Ezekiel 37:24,25); and Jarchi observes, that their Rabbins interpret it of the Messiah; but, says he, it is right to explain it, moreover, of David himself, for an answer to the heretics (Christians) who err in it; and various passages in this psalm are by the Jewish writers understood of the Messiah; as “the King”, in (<192001>Psalm 20:1,7) is in the Targum called the King Messiah; (<192104>Psalm 21:4) is in the Talmud applied[f315] to him; (<192103>Psalm 21:3,5) are in Zohar[f316], and in the Midrashes[f317], interpreted of him; and many Christian writers understand the whole of him; which is right: though Theodoret thinks it was penned on the account of the health of King Hezekiah, and his restoration from his disease; which is not likely.

Ver. 1. The king shall joy in thy strength, O Lord, etc.] Either in that strength which is in Jehovah himself, in whom is everlasting strength; and which is seen in the works of creation and providence, and is the same in Christ himself, as he is the mighty God; or else in the strength which Jehovah communicated to Christ as man, whereby he was strengthened in his human nature to go through and complete the work of man’s redemption; or in the strength which the Lord puts forth, and the power which he exerts towards and upon his people, in conversion; which is the produce of the exceeding greatness of his power; and in strengthening them, from time to time, to exercise grace, discharge duty, and withstand temptations and sin; and in keeping them safe to the end; in supporting them under all their trials, and in carrying on and finishing the work of faith upon their souls; all which is matter of joy to Christ; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice? meaning either his own salvation by the Lord, from all his sorrows and troubles, and out of the hands of all enemies, being in the presence of God, where is fulness of joy, (<191609>Psalm 16:9-11); or else the salvation of his people by him, which Jehovah appointed them to, secured for them in the covenant of grace, sent Christ to work out for them, applies by his Spirit, and at last puts into the full possession of: Christ rejoices at the effectual calling and conversion of his people, when salvation is brought near unto them; and especially at their glorification, when they shall be in the full enjoyment of it; then will they be his joy, and crown of rejoicing: this is the joy that was set before him, which made him go so cheerfully through his sufferings and death for them, (<581202>Hebrews 12:2); the reasons of this joy are, because of the great love he bears to them; the interest and property he has in them; his undertakings for them, as their surety, to bring them safe to glory; his purchase of them by his blood; his intercession for them, that they might be with him to behold his glory; and, last of all, because of his Father's glory, his own glory, and the glory of the blessed Spirit, which are concerned in the salvation of these persons.

Ver. 2. Thou hast given him his heart's desire, etc.] Which the church had prayed for in (<192004>Psalm 20:4); whatever Christ's heart desired, or his lips requested, has been given him; and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Whatever he asked in the council and covenant of peace was granted; he asked for all the elect, as his spouse and bride; these were the desire of his heart and eyes, and they were given him; he asked for all the blessings of grace for them, and all grace was given to them in him; he asked for glory, for eternal life, and it was promised him; and not only the promise of it was put into his hand, but the thing itself; (see <190208>Psalm 2:8 <550101>2 Timothy 1:1,9) (<620511>1 John 5:11); and (<192004>Psalm 20:4); whatever he requested of his Father, when here on earth, was granted; he always heard him; that memorable prayer of his in (<431701>John 17:1-26) is heard and answered, both in what respects himself, his own glorification, and the conversion, sanctification, union, preservation, and glorification of his people; whatever he now desires and requests in heaven, as the advocate and intercessor for his saints, is ever fulfilled; which is an instance of the great regard Jehovah has unto him, and may be considered as a reason of his joy in him.

Selah; on this word, see Gill on "<190302>Psalm 3:2".

Ver. 3. For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness, etc.] Not temporal, but spiritual blessings, which spring from the grace and goodness of God, and consist of it; and relate to the spiritual and eternal welfare of those for whose sake he receives them, and who are blessed with them in him: his being "prevented" with them denotes the freeness of the donation of them; that before he could well ask for them, or before he had done requesting them, they were given him; and also the earliness of the gift of them, they were put into his hands before his incarnation, before he was manifest in the flesh, even from the foundation of the world, and before the world began, (<490103>Ephesians 1:3,4) (<550109>2 Timothy 1:9), and likewise the order in which they were given; first to Christ, and then to his people in him, as the passages referred to show;

thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head; which is expressive of his victory over all enemies, sin, Satan, and the world, death and hell; and of his being possessed of his throne and kingdom; and has respect to his exaltation at the right hand of God, where he is crowned with glory and honour: and this crown being of "pure gold" denotes the purity, glory, solidity, and perpetuity of his kingdom; this is a crown, not which believers put upon him by believing in him, and ascribing the glory of their salvation to him, or what the church, called his mother, has crowned him with, (<220311>Song of Solomon 3:11), but which his father put upon him, who has set him King over his holy hill of Zion, (<190206>Psalm 2:6 8:5); compare with this (<661414>Revelation 14:14). The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions read "a crown of a precious stone"; and so Apollinarius; and seem to refer to the crown set on David's head, which had precious stones in it, (<101230>2 Samuel 12:30); Josephus [f318] says it had a sardonyx. Fortunatus Scacchus [f319] fancies the topaz is meant, and that the Hebrew text should be read "a crown of topaz"; mistaking the sense of the word "phaz", which never signifies a topaz, but the best gold, pure solid gold.

Ver. 4. He asked life of thee, [and] thou gavest [it] him, etc.] Both for himself, as man, when he was about to die, that he might be raised to life again, which was granted him; and for his people, that they might live spiritually and eternally, and accordingly life is given to him for them; and he has power to give it to as many as the Father has given him, (<431702>John 17:2);

[even] length of days for ever and ever; the life he has for himself as man is what will ever continue; he will die no more, death will have no more dominion over him; he will live for evermore, and that to make intercession for his members, (<450609>Romans 6:9,16 <660118>Revelation 1:18 <580725>Hebrews 7:25); and the life which is granted them at his request is an everlasting one, both as to body and soul; for though they die as other men, they shall live again in the resurrection of the just, and never die more, but shall be like the angels in heaven; and as for the second death, that shall not harm them, nor have any power over them; they will live and reign with Christ for ever.

Ver. 5. His glory [is] great in thy salvation, etc.] That is, the glory of the King Messiah is great in the Lord's salvation of him; delivering him from all his troubles and sorrows, and out of the hands of all his enemies, when he was raised from the dead, and was set at the right hand of God, and crowned with glory and honour: or the sense is, that his glory is great in the salvation of his people by him; it was his glory as Mediator to be appointed to be the Lord's salvation to them; and it being effected by him declares the glory and greatness of his person; and the nature of it is such as cannot fast of bringing glory to him; and such is the sense his people have of it, that it obliges them to ascribe the glory of it alone to him; honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him; which is to be understood not of the honour and majesty of his divine nature, which are essential to him, and not laid upon him by any; nor of the glory which the saints attribute to him on account of their salvation by him; but of that which his Father has put upon him, and lies in the introduction of him into his glory after his sufferings and death, and resurrection from the dead; in exalting him at his right hand above all creatures and things; in giving him all power in heaven and in earth; in putting all the gifts of the Spirit into his hands, which he receiving gave to men, and in ordaining him Judge of quick and dead.

Ver. 6. For thou hast made him most blessed for ever, etc.] Not as God, for as such he is over all blessed for ever, and not made so; but as man and Mediator; the words may be rendered, "thou hast set him to be blessings for ever" [f320]; which design the blessings which are laid up in Christ for his people, and which he imparts unto, them, and they are blessed with in him; so that he is made a blessing, or rather blessings to them; such as redemption to free them from, bondage, righteousness to justify them, sanctification to make them holy, wisdom to direct and guide them, and strength to assist and support them; through whom they have the forgiveness of sins, by whom they have peace with God, and from whom they receive all their joy and comfort, and at last eternal life and happiness; and all these are for ever, they are irreversible blessings, are never repented of, nor taken away: or this blessedness may be understood of that which Christ himself enjoys as man; which lies in his human nature being exalted to union with the Son of God; in being heard and helped in the day of salvation; in being raised from the dead, and glory given him; in being set at God’s right hand, angels, authorities, and powers, being subject to him; and in seeing the travail of his soul with satisfaction: the particular instance of his blessedness follows;

thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance; the glorious presence of God in heaven; Christ having done his work on earth ascended to heaven, where he was received by his Father with a cheerful countenance, was made to sit down on the same throne with him, being well pleased with his obedience, righteousness, and sacrifice; and being now in the presence of God, in which is fulness of joy, and at his right hand, where are pleasures for evermore, the human nature of Christ is filled with an excess of joy; the words may be rendered, “thou hast made” or “wilt make him glad with joy[f321], with thy countenance”; (see <191611>Psalm 16:11 <440228>Acts 2:28).

Ver. 7. For the King trusteth in the Lord, etc.] That is, the King Messiah, as the Targum paraphrases it; he trusted in the Lord for his support and sustenance as man, for assistance and help in his time of trouble, and for deliverance out of it; he trusted in the Lord that he would hear him for himself, and for his people; and that he would glorify him with all glory, honour, majesty, and blessedness, before spoken of; (see <192208>Psalm 22:8-10 <235007>Isaiah 50:7,9 <431331>John 13:31,32); and through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved; God the Father is the most High; Christ is called the Son of the Highest, and the Spirit the power of the Highest, (<420132>Luke 1:32,35); there is mercy with him, which is a ground of hope and trust, in his people, and also in the Messiah; (see <198928>Psalm 89:28); and some versions make the mercy of the most High to be what the King Messiah trusts in, reading the words[f322], “for the King trusteth in the Lord, and in the mercy of the most High”; but the accent “athnach”, which distinguishes the propositions, will not admit of it; but the sense is, that because of the mercy, grace, goodness, and faithfulness of God in making and keeping his promises, Christ would not be and was not moved from his trust and confidence in the Lord; nor shall he even be removed from his throne of glory on which he sits; nor from the glorious and happy state in which he is: nor will it ever be in the power of his enemies to displace him; for these in time will be destroyed by him, as the following words show.

Ver. 8. Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies, etc.] The Jews, that would not have him to reign over them, who crucified him and persecuted his apostles; the Gentiles, who were also concerned in his death; the Roman emperors, who persecuted the Christians, and are signified by the red dragon that waited to devour the man child when brought forth by the woman, the church, (<661203>Revelation 12:3,4); and also the Papists, the followers of the man of sin, who oppose Christ in his offices and grace, and are the enemies of his witnesses, and of his interest; and besides these there are many professors of religion who are enemies of Christ, either doctrinally or practically; to whom may be added, the devil and his angels, and all those who are the children of him and are influenced by him: these the hand of Christ will find out sooner or later; for the words are an address to the King Messiah, who being omniscient knows where all his enemies are, and where to find them; and being omnipotent he will lay hold upon them, and hold them, and none shall escape from him; his hand of vengeance shall fall upon them, and he shall inflict righteous and deserved punishment on them; and this shall be the case of “all” of them, none will be able to hide themselves in secret places from him. This has been in part verified in the Jewish nation at the destruction of Jerusalem, when wrath came upon that people to the uttermost for their treatment of the Messiah; and in the Pagan empire, when it was demolished, and kings and great men in vain called to the rocks and mountains to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb, (<660615>Revelation 6:15-17); and will have a further accomplishment in the antichristian states and kingdoms, when the vials of God’s wrath shall be poured out upon them; and especially at the battle of Armageddon, when Christ will avenge himself, and get rid of all his enemies at once; and will have its final accomplishment in all wicked men and devils at the day of judgment, when all Christ’s enemies will be found out by him, whether open or secret, and receive their just punishment; thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee; this is the same with the former clause, and is repeated for the further certainty and greater confirmation of the thing; and “the right hand” is mentioned as expressive of the mighty power of the Lord. The Chaldee paraphrase renders it, “the vengeance of thy right hand”.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven, etc.] Some think the allusion is to David’s causing the Ammonites to pass through the brick kiln, (<101231>2 Samuel 12:31); others to the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah: it represents what a severe punishment shall be inflicted on the enemies of Christ; they shall be cast into a fiery oven, or furnace of fire, as Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, were by the order of Nebuchadnezzar; so some render the words, “thou shalt put them into a fiery oven”, k, “as”, being put for b, “into”[f323]: wicked men are as dry trees, as stubble, as thorns or briers, and are fit fuel for a fiery oven or furnace; by which is meant the wrath and fury of God, which is poured forth as fire; and this has had its fulfilment in part in the Jews at Jerusalem’s destruction; when that day of the Lord burned like an oven, and the proud and haughty Jews, and who dealt wickedly by Christ, were burned up in it, (<390401>Malachi 4:1); and will have an additional accomplishment when the whore of Babylon shall be burnt with fire, and when the beast and false prophet shall be cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone; and still more fully at the general conflagration, when will be the perdition of ungodly men, and the earth and all that is therein shall be burnt up; and especially when all wicked men and devils shall be cast into the lake and furnace of fire, where will be weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth; (see <661716>Revelation 17:16 19:20 20:10-15) (<401341>Matthew 13:41,42 25:41 <610307>2 Peter 3:7,10,12). This will be in the time of thine anger, or “of thy countenance”[f324]; not his gracious, but his angry countenance; when he shall put on a fierce look, and appear as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and stir up all his wrath;

the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath; not that they shall be annihilated; their souls remain after death, and their bodies after the resurrection; and will be tormented with the fire of God’s wrath for ever and ever; the phrase is expressive of utter ruin, of the destruction of soul and body in hell; (see <193525>Psalm 35:25); Jarchi takes it to be a prayer, “may the Lord swallow them up”, etc.

and the fire shall devour them; that is, as the Targum paraphrases it, the fire of hell; or, however, it designs the wrath of God, who is a consuming fire; or that fiery indignation of his, which shall devour the adversaries; which comes down upon them either in temporal judgments here, or in their everlasting destruction hereafter.

Ver. 10. Their fruit shall thou destroy from the earth, etc.] Meaning the offspring of wicked men; the fruit of the womb, (<19C703>Psalm 127:3); the same with their seed in the next clause:

and their seed from among the children of men; (see <193728>Psalm 37:28); which must be understood of such of their seed, and offspring as are as they were when born; are never renewed and sanctified, but are like their parents; as the Jews were, their parents were vipers, and they were serpents, the generation of them; and were the children of the devil, and did his works: now these passages had their accomplishment in the Jews, when the day of God's wrath burnt them up, and left them neither root nor branch, (<390401>Malachi 4:1); and in the Pagan empire, when every mountain and island were moved out of their places, and the Heathen perished out of the land, (<660614>Revelation 6:14 <191016>Psalm 10:16); and will be further accomplished when the Lord shall punish the wicked woman Jezebel, the antichristian harlot, and kill her children with death, (<660223>Revelation 2:23); (see <19A435>Psalm 104:35).

Ver. 11. For they intended evil against thee, etc.] All evil, whether in thought or deed, if not immediately and directly, yet is ultimately against the Lord, whose law is transgressed, and who is despised and reflected upon as a lawgiver; all sin is an hostility committed against God, or against Christ, against the Lord and his Anointed, or against his people, who are all one as himself: the intention of evil is evil, and is cognizable by the Lord, and punishable by him:

they imagined a mischievous device, [which] they are not able [to perform]; not the death of Christ; that was indeed in itself a mischievous device of theirs, but that they performed, though they had not their end in it; they expected his name would then perish, and they should hear no more of him: but rather it respects his resurrection from the dead, they could not prevent, though they took all imaginable care that them might be no show of it; and when they found he was really raised from the dead, they contrived a wicked scheme to stop the credit of it, but in vain, (<402763>Matthew 27:63-66 28:12-14); and Jews and Gentiles, and Papists, have formed schemes and done all they can to root the Gospel, cause, and interest of Christ, out of the world, but have not been able to perform it.

Ver. 12. Therefore shall thou make them turn their back, etc.] Or flee and run away to private places, to hide themselves from the wrath of God and of the Lamb, though to no purpose; or “make them turn [behind thy] back”: God will turn his back upon them, and be negligent and careless of them, and not regard them when they cry in their misery and destruction. Some Jewish interpreters[f325] understand it of their being put together on one side, in one corner, and be separate from the people of God; to which sense the Targum inclines, rendering the word for “back” the “shoulder”, which sometimes signifies unanimity and union, (<360309>Zephaniah 3:9); and thus, being all together by themselves, the wrath of God shall be poured forth upon them, and they shall be destroyed at once: so the Christians were, by the providence of God, brought out of Jerusalem before its destruction; and the saints will be called out of Babylon before its fall; and the goats, the wicked, will be separated from the righteous, and set together at Christ’s left hand; for they shall not stand in the congregation of the righteous: but the best sense of the words is, “thou shalt set them [for a] butt” or[f326] “heap”; or, as it is in the Hebrew text, a shoulder; a butt to shoot at being so called, because it is earth heaped up like a shoulder; (see <181612>Job 16:12,13); and to this agrees what follows:

[when] thou shalt make ready [thine arrows] upon thy strings against the face of them; that is, direct the arrows of his wrath and vengeance right against them; (see <190711>Psalm 7:11-13).

Ver. 13. Be thou exalted, Lord, in thine own strength, etc.] Exert thy strength, display thy power in such manner, that thou mayest be exalted and magnified on account of it. This was fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem, when the kingdom of God came with power, (<410901>Mark 9:1); and will be again when Babylon shall be utterly destroyed, because the Lord is strong who judgeth her, (<661808>Revelation 18:8); and finally at the day of judgment, when the wicked will be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power, (<530109>2 Thessalonians 1:9);

[so] will we sing and praise thy power; forms of such songs of praise may be seen, as Cocceius observes, in (<661115>Revelation 11:15-18 15:3,4 19:1-7); at the sounding of the seventh trumpet, at the victory over the beast, and his image, and at the destruction of Babylon.

PSALM 22

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 22

To the chief Musician upon Aijeleth Shahar, a Psalm of David

The only thing observable in the title of this psalm is the sense of the words “Aijeleth Shahar”, left untranslated; which, according to some of the Jewish[f327] interpreters, is the name of a musical instrument; to which our version inclines; and a learned Jew[f328] says, it is the instrument which the mourning women used on account of distress which was sudden, not known till it came, as a man does not think of the morning till he sees it. “Aijeleth” with him has the signification of mourning, as “Eli” in (<290108>Joel 1:8); and “Shahar”, as in (<234711>Isaiah 47:11) (<281015>Hosea 10:15); so tyla and tyyla are used in the Misnah[f329] for a mourning woman; and with others it is the beginning of a song to the tune of which the psalm was set[f330] but I rather think the words express the subject matter of the psalm, and that they may be rendered, concerning “Aijeleth Shahar”; which signify, either according to the Chaldee paraphrase, “the daily morning sacrifice”; or, as some Jewish writers[f331] observe, the “morning star”; or, according to the Septuagint, “the morning help”[f332]; or rather “the morning hind”; or “hind of the morning”: but who should be designed hereby is the question. The Jews would have any rather than the Messiah; some say Esther[f333], who so seasonably and readily appeared for the Jews in distress, and was the means of their deliverance; but there is not one word in the psalm that agrees with her; and there are some things which were manifestly spoken of a man, and not a woman, (<192208>Psalm 22:8,24); others say David[f334], when he fled from Saul, or, as others, from Absalom: but the disjointing the bones of this person, the piercing his hands and feet, parting his garments, and casting lots on his vesture, mentioned in (<192214>Psalm 22:14,16,18); were never fulfilled in him. Others[f335] would have the congregation of Israel in captivity intended; but it is plain that a single person is spoken of throughout; and he is manifestly distinguished from others, from his brethren, from the congregation, from the seed of Jacob and Israel, (<192222>Psalm 22:22,23); and, indeed, no other than the Messiah can be meant: and of this there ought to be no doubt with Christians, when (<192201>Psalm 22:1) is compared with (<402746>Matthew 27:46); (<192208>Psalm 22:8) with (<402743>Matthew 27:43); (<192218>Psalm 22:18) with (<402735>Matthew 27:35); (<192222>Psalm 22:22) with (<580212>Hebrews 2:12); and the Jews themselves sometimes say, that by “Aijeleth Shahar” is meant the Shechinah[f336], or the divine Majesty; and in what way soever these words are rendered, they agree with Christ: he is the antitype of “the daily morning sacrifice”, the Lamb of God, who continually takes away the sin of the world; and very fitly is he so called in the title of a psalm which speaks so much of his sufferings and death, which are a propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of his people; he is “the bright and morning star”, (<662216>Revelation 22:16); the dayspring from on high, the sun of righteousness, and light of the world: he had “morning help” in his very infancy, when his life was sought for by Herod; and had early and seasonable help and assistance in the acceptable time, and in the day of salvation, and early in the morning was he raised from the dead, and had glory given him: but as the words are better rendered “the morning hind”, this suits with Christ, who is frequently compared to a roe or a young hart, (<220209>Song of Solomon 2:9,17 8:14); and he may be compared to a “hind” for its lovingness to its mate and young, (<200519>Proverbs 5:19); the love of Christ to his church and people being very strong and affectionate, and passing knowledge; and also for its loveliness and goodliness, (<014921>Genesis 49:21); Christ being exceeding amiable and lovely, and fairer than the children of men; likewise for its gentleness and harmlessness, Christ being meek and lowly, holy and harmless; and for its antipathy to serpents, there being an enmity between Christ, the seed of the woman, and the serpent and his seed; for its being hunted by dogs, as Christ was by Herod, by the Scribes and Pharisees, by Judas, and the band of soldiers; (see <192216>Psalm 22:16); for its being fit for food, (<051405>Deuteronomy 14:5); and as it is said to be the fitter for being hunted, Christ’s flesh being meat indeed, and the more suitable to faith, as being sacrificed for us; and for its long life it is said to have, Christ, though once dead, being alive again, and living for evermore; to which may be added its great swiftness, expressive of the readiness of Christ to comply with his Father’s proposals and do his will; to come into this world in the fulness of time, and set about the work he came to do; to deliver up himself into the hands of his enemies, and lay down his life for his people; and of his haste to help them in distress, and visit them with his gracious presence, and to appear a second time to them unto salvation. He may be called the hind of “the morning”, looking lovely and beautiful as the morning, and swift and cheerful as the hind when it rises from its rest, and runs its course; or because of his being hunted in the morning of his infancy by Herod; or because it was early in the morning the chief priests consulted to take away his life; and as early also he rose from the dead, when God made his feet like hinds feet, and set him on his high places, (<191833>Psalm 18:33). The ancient Christian writers generally understood it of Christ wholly. Justin Martyr[f337] says, the whole psalm is spoken of Christ; and Tertullian observes[f338], that it contains the whole passion, or all the sufferings of Christ. The late Mons. Fourmont[f339], the elder, professor of the Oriental languages in the university of Paris, has a very singular notion, that this psalm was written by Jeremiah, when he was drawn up from the dungeon, and is a history of his life and sufferings, in which he was a type of Christ.

Ver. 1. My God, my God, etc.] God is the God of Christ as he is man; he prepared a body for him, an human nature; anointed it with the oil of gladness; supported it under all its sorrows and sufferings, and at last exalted it at his own right hand:, and Christ behaved towards him as his covenant God; prayed to him, believed in him, loved him, and was obedient to him as such; and here expresses his faith of interest in him, when he hid his face from him, on account of which he expostulates with him thus, “why hast thou forsaken me?” which is to be understood, not as if the hypostatical or personal union of the divine and human natures were dissolved, or that the one was now separated from the other: for the fulness of the Godhead still dwelt bodily in him; nor that he ceased to be the object of the Father’s love; for so he was in the midst of all his sufferings, yea, his Father loved him because he laid down his life for the sheep; nor that the principle of joy and comfort was lost in him, only the act and sense of it; he was now deprived of the gracious presence of God, of the manifestations of his love to his human soul, and had a sense of divine wrath, not for his own sins, but for the sins of his people, and was for a while destitute of help and comfort; all which were necessary in order to make satisfaction for sin: for as he had the sins of his people imputed to him, he must bear the whole punishment of them, which is twofold the punishment of loss and the punishment of sense; the former lies in a deprivation of the divine presence, and the latter in a sense of divine wrath, and both Christ sustained as the surety of his people. This expostulation is made not as ignorant of the reason of it; he knew that as he was wounded and bruised for the sins of his people, he was deserted on the same account; nor as impatient, for he was a mirror of patience in all his sufferings; and much less as in despair; for, in these very words, he strongly expresses and repeats his faith of interest in God; (see <192208>Psalm 22:8); and also (<235006>Isaiah 50:6,7,9). But this is done to set forth the greatness and bitterness of his sufferings; that not only men hid their faces from him, and the sun in the firmament withdrew its light and heat from him, but, what was most grievous of all, his God departed from him. From hence it appears that he was truly man, had an human soul, and endured sorrows and sufferings in it; and this may be of use to his members, to expect the hidings of God’s face, though on another account; and to teach them to wait patiently for him, and to trust in the Lord, and stay themselves upon their God, even while they walk in darkness and see no light;

[why art thou so] far from helping me? or from my salvation; from saving and delivering him out of his sorrows and sufferings? not that he despaired of help; he firmly believed he should have it, and accordingly had it: but he expostulates about the deferring of it. He adds,

[and from] the words of my roaring? which expresses the vehemency of his spirit in crying to God, the exceeding greatness of his sorrows, and his excruciating pains and sufferings: this is what the apostle means by his “strong crying and tears”, (<580507>Hebrews 5:7); or “the words of my roaring [are] far from my salvation”; there is a great space or interval between the one and the other, as Gussetius [f340] observes.

Ver. 2. O my God, I cry in the daytime, etc.] In the time of his suffering on the cross, which was in the daytime:

but thou hearest me not; and yet he was always heard, (<431141>John 11:41,42); though he was not saved from dying, yet he was quickly delivered from the power of death, and so was heard in that he feared, (<580507>Hebrews 5:7);

and in the night season: in the night in which he was in the garden, sorrowing and praying, the night in which he was betrayed and was apprehended; and though the natural desires of his human soul were not heard and answered, that the cup might pass from him, yet his prayer in submission to the will of God was: moreover, the daytime and night season may design the incessant and continual prayer of Christ; he prayed always, night and day:

and am not silent; but continue to pray, though as yet seemingly not heard and answered; or there is “no silence to me” [f341]; that is, no rest from sorrow and pain; or “no likeness to me” [f342], there are none like me, no sorrow like my sorrow, as in (<250112>Lamentations 1:12).

Ver. 3. But thou [art] holy, etc.] Which may be considered either as an argument with his God, why he should hear and answer him, since he is holy, just, and faithful; he has promised, when any call upon him in a day of trouble, he will hear and answer them, and will be glorified by them; this Christ did, and therefore pleads his faithfulness to his promise: or rather a reason quieting him under divine desertion, and a sense of divine wrath, that God was righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works; and that whereas he was the surety of his people, and had all their sins on him, it was perfectly agreeable to the holiness and justice of God to treat him in the manner he did; yea, it was done to declare his righteousness, that he might appear to be just, while he is the justifier of him that believes in him;

[O thou] that inhabitest the praises of Israel; either the place where Israel offered the sacrifices of praise to God, the tabernacle or temple, the house of prayer and praise in which Jehovah dwelt: or the true Israel of God praising him, who are formed for himself, and called by his grace to show forth his praises; among whom he takes up his residence: or else the praises themselves; and so the phrase denotes God’s gracious acceptance of them, and well pleasedness in them, signified by his inhabiting of them, and the frequent and constant ascription of them to him: and perhaps respect may be had chiefly to the praises of his people for providing such a Saviour for them, settling him in the fulness of time, and not sparing him, but delivering him up into the hands of justice and death for them; and for giving all things freely with him.

Ver. 4. Our fathers trusted in thee, etc.] By whom are meant Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, from whom our Lord descended; and the people of Israel when in Egypt, in the times of the judges, and in all ages before the coming of Christ, of whom, as concerning the flesh, or as to his human nature, Christ came, (<450905>Romans 9:5); these, as they were sojourners, and went from place to place, especially the patriarchs, and were often in trouble and distress, when they called upon the Lord, looked to him, and put their trust and confidence in him; not in themselves, their own wisdom, riches, and strength, nor in others, in any mere creature, nor in any outward thing, or arm of flesh, but in the Lord Jehovah, in whom is everlasting strength; they believed in the power of God, that he was able to help and deliver them, and they had faith in him that he would; they depended upon his word and promise, and were persuaded he would never suffer his faithfulness to fail; they committed themselves to the Lord, and stayed themselves upon him;

they trusted; this is repeated not only for the sake of emphasis, pointing out something remarkable and commendable, and for the greater certainty of it, more strongly confirming it; or to observe the many that put their trust in the Lord, the numerous instances of confidence in him; but also to denote the constancy and continuance of their faith, they trusted in the Lord at all times; and thou didst deliver them; out of the hands of all their enemies, and out of all their sorrows and afflictions; instances of which we have in the patriarchs, and in the people of Israel when brought out of Egypt, and through the Red sea and wilderness, and in the times of the judges, when they were distressed by their neighbours, and God sent them a deliverer time after time.

Ver. 5. They cried unto thee, and were delivered, etc.] As the Israelites did in Egyptian bondage, and as they in later times did when in distress; (see <020223>Exodus 2:23 <19A706>Psalm 107:6,13); etc. The crying is to be understood of prayer to God, and sometimes designs mental prayer, sighing, and groaning, which cannot be uttered, when no voice is heard, as in Moses, (<021415>Exodus 14:15); but oftener vocal prayer, put up in times of distress, and denotes the vehemency of trouble, and eagerness of desire to be heard and relieved; and this cry was from faith, it followed upon and was accompanied with trusting in the Lord; it was the prayer of faith, which is effectual and availeth much, and issued in deliverance;

they trusted in thee, and were not confounded: or ashamed; neither of the object of their trust, the living God, as those who trust in graven images; so Moab was ashamed of Chemosh, (<244813>Jeremiah 48:13); nor of their hope and trust in him, it being such as makes not ashamed, (<19B9116>Psalm 119:116) (<450505>Romans 5:5); nor of the consequences of it; When men trust in anything and it fails them, and they have not what they expect by it, they are filled with shame and confusion, (<233002>Isaiah 30:2); but they that trust in the Lord are never confounded, or made ashamed; their expectations do not perish: now Christ mentions this case of his ancestors as a reason of the praises of Israel, which they offered up to God for deliverances, and which he inhabited, (<192203>Psalm 22:3); as also by way of encouragement to himself in his present circumstances, that though the Lord was at a distance from him, and seemed not to regard him and his cries, yet that he would deliver him; and likewise as an argument with God that he would do so, since it had been his wonted way and method with his fathers before; moreover he may take notice of it in order to represent his own forlorn, uncomfortable, and deplorable condition, which was abundantly worse than theirs, and the reverse of it, as it seemed at present.

Ver. 6. But I [am] a worm, and no man, etc.] Christ calls himself a worm, not because of his original, for he was not of the earth earthy, but was the Lord from heaven; nor because of his human nature, man being a worm, and the Son of Man such, (<182506>Job 25:6); and because of his meanness and low estate in that nature, in his humiliation; nor to express his humility, and the mean thoughts he had of himself, as David, his type, calls himself a dead dog, and a flea, (<092414>1 Samuel 24:14); but on account of the opinion that men of the world had of him; so Jacob is called “a worm”, (<234114>Isaiah 41:14); not only because mean in his own eyes, but contemptible in the eyes of others. The Jews esteemed Christ as a worm, and treated him as such; he was loathsome to them and hated by them; everyone trampled upon him and trod him under foot as men do worms; such a phrase is used of him in (<581029>Hebrews 10:29); there is an agreement in some things between the worm and Christ in his state of humiliation; as in its uncomeliness and disagreeable appearance; so in Christ the Jews could discern no form nor comeliness wherefore he should be desired; and in its weakness, the worm being an impotent, unarmed, and defenceless creatures, hence the Chaldee paraphrase renders it here “a weak worm”; and though Christ is the mighty God, and is also the Son of Man whom God made strong for himself, yet mere was a weakness in his human nature and he was crucified through it, (<471304>2 Corinthians 13:4); and it has been observed by some, that the word t[lwt here used signifies the scarlet worm, or the worm that is in the grain or berry with which scarlet is dyed; and like, is scarlet worm did our Lord look, when by way of mockery be was clothed with a scarlet robe; and especially when he appeared in his dyed garments, and was red in his apparel, as one that treadeth in the wine fat; when his body was covered with blood when he hung upon the cross, which was shed to make crimson and scarlet sins as white as wool. When Christ says he was “no man”, his meaning is, not that he was not truly and really man, for he assumed a true body and a reasonable soul; he partook of the same flesh and blood with his children, and was in all things made like unto his brethren, excepting sin; but that he was a man of no figure, he bore no office, and had no title of honour; he was not a Rabbi, nor a member of the Jewish sanhedrim; he had no share of government, either in the civil or ecclesiastic state; he was a carpenter’s son, and a carpenter; nor was he treated as a man, but in the most inhuman manner; he was despised and rejected of men, he was called a madman, and said to have a devil;

a reproach of men; he was reproached by men, as if he had been the worst of men; the reproaches of God and of his people all fell on him, insomuch that his heart was broken with them; (see <196907>Psalm 69:7-12,19,20); and it was reckoned a reproach to men to be seen in his company, or to be thought to belong to him, and be a disciple of his; hence some, who believed he was the Messiah, yet would not confess him, because they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God, (<431242>John 12:42,43);

and despised of the people; rejected with contempt as the Messiah, refused with scorn as the stone of Israel, disallowed of men, and set at nought by them; by “the people” are meant the people of the Jews, his own people and nation; which contempt of him they signified both by gestures and words, as in the following verses.

Ver. 7. All they that see me laugh me to scorn, etc.] To the afflicted pity should be shown; but instead or pitying him in his distresses they laughed at him; this must be understood of the soldiers when they had him in Pilate’s hall, and of the Jews in general when he hung upon the cross; some particular persons must be excepted, as John the beloved disciple, the mother of our Lord, Mary Magdalene, and some other women, who stood afar off beholding him;

they shoot out the lip; or “open with the lip” [f344]; they made mouths at him, they put out their lips, or gaped upon him with their mouths, and in a way of sport and pastime made wide mouths and drew out their tongues, as in (<181610>Job 16:10 <235704>Isaiah 57:4);

they shake the head, [saying]; in a way of scorn and derision, as in (<250215>Lamentations 2:15). This was fulfilled in the Jews, (<402739>Matthew 27:39).

Ver. 8. He trusted on the Lord, [that] he would deliver him, etc.] Not that they spoke in a deriding way of the object of his trust, for, as impious as they were, this they did not do; but of his trust in the Lord, which they looked upon to be a false one, as would appear by his not being delivered, as he trusted; but his confidence was a well grounded one, though jeered at by these men, and he was delivered in the Lord’s own time and way from all his enemies, and out of all his troubles;

let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him; this is another ironical sarcastic flout, not at God, but at Christ, and at his profession of trust in God, his claim of interest in his favour, and of relation to him as being the Son of his love, in whom he was well pleased; he always was the delight of his Father; he expressed his well pleasedness in him at his baptism, and transfiguration on the mount; he took pleasure in him while he was suffering and dying in the room and stead of his people; and he delivered him, raised him from the dead, and brought him into a large place, because he delighted in him, (<191819>Psalm 18:19); These very words were said by the Jews concerning Christ, as he hung upon the cross, (<402743>Matthew 27:43).

Ver. 9. But thou [art] he that took me out of the womb, etc.] The Papists affirm, that there was something miraculous in the manner of Christ's coming into the world, as well as in his conception; that his conception of a virgin was miraculous is certain, being entirely owing to the wonderful and mysterious overshadowing of the Holy Ghost, and which was necessary to preserve his human nature from the contagion of sin, common to all that descend from Adam by ordinary generation; that so that individual of human nature might be proper to be united to the Son of God, and that it might be a fit sacrifice for the sins of men; but otherwise in all other things, sin only excepted, he was made like unto us; and it is a clear case, that his mother bore him the usual time, and went with him her full time of nine months, as women commonly do; (see <420156>Luke 1:56 <400118>Matthew 1:18,20,24 <420205>Luke 2:5,6); and it is as evident that he was born and brought forth in the same manner other infants are, seeing he was presented, to the Lord in the temple, and the offering was brought for him according to the law respecting the male that opens the womb, (<420222>Luke 2:22,23); and the phrase that is here used is expressive of the common providence of God which attends such an event, every man being as it were midwifed into the world by God himself; (see <181018>Job 10:18) (<197106>Psalm 71:6); though there was, no doubt, a peculiar providence which attended the birth of our Lord, and makes this expression more peculiarly applicable to him; since his mother Mary, when her full time was come, was at a distance from the place of her residence, was in an inn, and in a stable there, there being no room for her in the inn, and so very probably had no women about her to assist her, nor any midwife with her; and there was the more visible appearance of the hand of God in this affair, who might truly be said to take him out of the womb:

thou didst make me hope [when I was] upon my mother's breasts; which may be understood of the expectation and hope, common to infants, which have not the use of reason, with all creatures, whose eyes wait upon the Lord, and he gives them their meat in due season; and here may regard the sudden and suitable provision of milk in the mother's breast, to which there is in the infant a natural desire, and an hope and expectation of. The words may be rendered, as they are by some, "thou didst keep me in safety", or make me safe and secure[f345], when I was "upon my mother's breast": this was verified in Christ at the time Herod sought to take away his life; he was then in his mother's arms, and sucked at her breast; when the Lord in a dream acquainted Joseph with Herod's design, and directed him to flee with the young child and his mother into Egypt, where they were kept in safety till the death of Herod. This sense of the words frees them from a difficulty, how the grace of hope, or of faith and confidence, can, in a proper sense, be exercised in the infant state; for though the principle of grace may be implanted so early, yet how it should be exercised when there is not the due use of reason is not easy to conceive; if, therefore, the words are taken in this sense, the meaning must be, that he was caused to hope as soon as he was capable of it, which is sometimes the design of such a phrase; (see <183118>Job 31:18); unless we suppose something extraordinary in Christ's human nature, which some interpreters are not willing to allow, because he was in all things like unto us excepting sin; but I see not, that seeing the human nature was an extraordinary one, was perfectly holy from the first of it, the grace of God was upon it as soon as born, and it was anointed with the Holy Ghost above its fellows, why it may not be thought to exercise grace in an extraordinary manner, so early as is here expressed, literally understood.

Ver. 10. I was cast upon thee from the womb, etc.] Either by himself, trusting in God, hoping in him, and casting all the care of himself upon him; or by his parents, who knew the danger he was exposed to, and what schemes were laid to take away his life; and therefore did, in the use of all means they were directed to, commit him to the care and protection of God: the sense is, that the care of him was committed to God so early; and he took the care of him and gave full proof of it:

thou [art] my God from my mother's belly: God was his covenant God from everlasting, as he loved his human nature, chose it to the grace of union, and gave it a covenant subsistence; but he showed himself to be his God in time, and that very early, calling him from the womb, and making mention of his name from his mother's belly, and preserving him from danger in his infancy; and it was his covenant interest in God, which, though mentioned last, was the foundation of all his providential care of him and goodness to him. Now all these early appearances of the power and providence of God, on the behalf of Christ as man, are spoken of in opposition to the scoffs and flouts of his enemies about his trust in God, and deliverance by him, and to encourage his faith and confidence in him; as well as are so many reasons and arguments with God yet to be with him, help and assist him, as follows.

Ver. 11. Be not far from me, etc.] Who had been so near unto him, as to take him out of the womb, and to take the care of him ever since; this is to be understood not with respect to the omnipresence of God, who is everywhere, and is not far from any of us; but of his presence, which was now withdrawn from Christ, and he was filled with a sense of divine wrath, and with sorrow and distress; and also of his powerful and assisting presence which he had promised, and Christ expected, and believed he should have, as he had: the reasons for it follow:

for trouble [is] near; Satan was marching towards him with his principalities and powers, to attack him in the garden and on the cross; Judas, one of his own disciples, was at hand to betray him; a multitude with swords and staves were about to seize him; the sins and chastisement of his people were just going to be laid upon him; the sword of justice was awaked against him, ready to give the blow; the hour of death was near, he was brought to the dust of it, as in (<192215>Psalm 22:15). A second reason is given, for [there is] none to help; none among his disciples: one of them was to betray him, another to deny him, and all to forsake him and flee from him, as they did; nor any among the angels in heaven; for though they ministered to him in the wilderness, and strengthened him in the garden, there were none near him on the cross, that it might be manifest that salvation was wrought out alone by him, (<236305>Isaiah 63:5); and, indeed, if any of these had been willing to have helped him, it was not in their power to do it, none but God could; and therefore he applies to him, who had promised and was as good as his word, (<234908>Isaiah 49:8).

Ver. 12. Many bulls have compassed me, etc.] By whom are meant the chief priests, elders, Scribes, and Pharisees, among the Jews, and Herod and Pontius Pilate among the Gentiles, comparable to bulls for their fierceness, rage, and fury against Christ, (<190201>Psalm 2:1,2); and for their pushing at him with their horns of power and authority, and for their trampling him under their feet, his person and offices; these compassed him about at his apprehension, arraignment, trial, and condemnation; and there were many of them to one child, Jesus:

strong [bulls] of Bashan have beset me round; Bashan was a very fruitful country, in which cattle of various sorts, and bulls among the rest, were fed and fattened; (see <053214>Deuteronomy 32:14 <263918>Ezekiel 39:18); bulls are noted for their strength in other writers [f346]. Hence great men, who abounded in riches and power, and used them to the oppression of the poor, are compared to the kine of Bashan, (<300401>Amos 4:1); and a very fit name this was for the kings and princes of the earth; for Caiaphas, Annas, and the chief priests, that lived upon the fat of the land, who beset Christ around, and employed all their power and policy to take him and bring him to death; nor is it unusual with Heathen writers [f347] to compare great personages to bulls.

Ver. 13. They gaped upon me [with] their mouths, etc.] Either by way of derision and contempt, (<181610>Job 16:10); or belching out blasphemy against him, or rather, with the greatest vehemency, crying out “Crucify him, crucify him”, (<422321>Luke 23:21 <431906>John 19:6); and this they did

[as] a ravening and roaring lion, when it has got its prey and rejoices, (<300304>Amos 3:4); and being in such hands, and encompassed about with such enemies, as Christ was in the garden, in the high priest’s hall, and in Pilate’s judgment hall, is a third reason or argument used by him with God his Father, to be near to him and not far from him.

Ver. 14. I am poured out like water, etc.] This may refer to Christ’s sweat in the garden, when through his agony or conflict with Satan, and his vehemency in prayer, and the pressure on his mind, in a view of his people’s sins, and the wrath of God for, them, and the accursed death he was about to undergo on that account, sweat in great abundance came from all parts of his body, and not only stood in large drops, but fell to the ground like great drops of blood; so that his body was all covered with water, or rather seemed to be dissolving into water, or else to the quantity of tears he shed both there and elsewhere; his sorrow was great even unto death, which vented itself in floods of tears; his prayers were offered up with strong crying and tears; his head was, as Jeremiah wished his might be, as waters, and his eyes a fountain of tears, yea, his whole body seemed to be bathed with them: or else to the shedding of his blood, and the pouring out his soul unto death for his people, which was voluntarily done by himself, or by his enemies; which they shed like water, and made no account of it, (<197903>Psalm 79:3). Some have thought this respects the opinion some had of him, even some of his own disciples, when he was dead; all their hopes of his being their Redeemer and Saviour being gone, he was as water spilled on the ground, which cannot be gathered up; (see <101414>2 Samuel 14:14); but rather the phrase intends his being quite dispirited, his heart failing, his soul sorrowful unto death, his hands feeble, his knees weak like water, and he just ready to faint and die; (see <060705>Joshua 7:5) (<260717>Ezekiel 7:17);

and all my bones are out of joint; not through the stretching of his body on the cross, which seems to be designed in (<192217>Psalm 22:17); but as it is with persons in a panic, their joints seem to be loosed, and their bones parting asunder, their legs tremble, no member can perform its office, but as if everyone was dislocated and out of its place; (see <190602>Psalm 6:2);

my heart is like wax, it is melted in the midst of my bowels; as wax melts before the fire, so did the heart of Christ at the wrath and fury of God, which was poured forth like fire upon him; and which he had a sense of, when in the garden and on the cross, bearing the sins of his people, and sustaining the punishment due unto them for it was not because of his enemies, nor merely at the presence of God, and his righteous judgments, which is sometimes the case; (see <101710>2 Samuel 17:10) (<196802>Psalm 68:2 97:5); but at the apprehension of divine wrath, and feeling the same, as the surety of his people; and what an idea does this give of the wrath of God! for if the heart of Christ, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, melted at it, what heart can endure, or hands be strong, when God deals with them in his wrath? (<262214>Ezekiel 22:14).

Ver. 15. My strength is dried up like a potsherd, etc.] The radical moisture of his body was dried up through his loss of blood and spirits, and through the violent fever upon him, brought on him by his being hurried from court to court; and which generally attends persons under a panic, in consternation and fear of danger and death, and at crucifixion; or this was occasioned by the inward sorrow and distress of his mind, which affected his body and dried his bones, as a broken spirit is said to do, (<201722>Proverbs 17:22); and chiefly it was brought upon him through the sense he had the wrath of God, which like fire dried up his strength, just as a potsherd burnt in a furnace; which expresses his dolorous sufferings, which were typified by the passover lamb being roasted with fire, and the manna being baked in pans; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; so that he could not, or rather would not, speak; this phrase sometimes signifying silence, (<182910>Job 29:10) (<260326>Ezekiel 3:26). Thus Christ answered not a word to the charges of the false witnesses before the high priest, nor to the accusations of the chief priests and elders before Pilate; nor did he open his mouth, when he was led to be crucified, neither against the law and justice of God, nor against his people for whom he suffered, nor against his enemies who used him cruelly; when he was reviled he reviled not again; but rather this was occasioned by thirst, through the violent fever that was upon him; (see <250404>Lamentations 4:4); Hence, when he hung upon the cross, he said, “I thirst”, (<431928>John 19:28); and thou hast brought me into the dust of death; meaning either death itself, which brings to the dust, and which is signified in this psalm by going down to it, (<192229>Psalm 22:29); or the grave, where the body crumbles into dust, and where it is covered with dust, and therefore is said to sleep in the dust of the earth, (<271202>Daniel 12:2); and accordingly the Targum renders it here, “thou hast shut me up in the house of the grave”: now Christ both died and was laid in the grave, though he did not lie there so long as to corrupt and decompose, yet he might be truly said to be laid in the dust: and this is attributed to God, to his counsel, disposal, and Providence; and even whatever was done to Christ antecedent to his death, and which led on to it, were what God’s hand and counsel had determined to be done; and though it was with wicked hands the Jews took Christ and used him in the manner after related, and crucified and slew him, he was delivered to them by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God; and by these he was delivered into the hands of justice, and brought to death itself, (<440223>Acts 2:23 4:27,28).

Ver. 16. For dogs have compassed me, etc.] By whom are meant wicked men, as the following clause shows; and so the Chaldee paraphrase renders it, “the wicked who are like to many dogs”; and to these such are often compared in Scripture, (<400706>Matthew 7:6 <662215>Revelation 22:15); and it may be the Roman soldiers, who were Gentiles, may be chiefly intended, whom the Jews used to call dogs, (<401526>Matthew 15:26); these assembled together in Pilate’s hall and surrounded Christ, and made sport with him; to these were committed the execution of him, they crucified him, and sat around him watching him while on the cross, as they also did when in the grave: some have thought the dregs of the Jewish people are designed, the common people, such as Job says he would not set with the dogs of his flock, (<183001>Job 30:1); who encompassed Christ on the cross, wagging their heads at him; though I see not but that all of them, even the chief among them, the high priest, sanhedrim, Scribes, and Pharisees, may be intended; who are so called because of their impurity in themselves; for their avarice and covetousness, being greedy dogs that could never have enough; and for their impudence, calumnies, malice, and envy, against Christ: the allusion seems to be to hunting dogs, who, when they have got the creature they have been in pursuit of, surround it and fall upon it. Christ, in the title of this psalm, is called Aijeleth Shahar, "the morning hind", who was hunted by the Jews, and at last surrounded and taken by them;

the assembly of the wicked have enclosed me; the Jewish sanhedrim, the chief priests and elders, who assembled together to consult his death, before whom he was brought when taken; and in, the midst of whom he was set and examined, and by them unanimously condemned; and who, notwithstanding all their pretensions to religion, were a set of wicked men: and also the whole congregation of the Jews, the body of the people, who were united in their request for his crucifixion and death; and who in great numbers got together, and in a circle stood around him when on the cross, insulting him;

they pierced my hands and my feet; by nailing them to the cross, which, though not related by the evangelists, is plainly suggested in (<432025>John 20:25,27); and is referred to in other passages of Scripture, (<381210>Zechariah 12:10 <660107>Revelation 1:7); and clearly points at the kind of death Christ should die; the death, of the cross, a shameful and painful one. In this clause there is a various reading; in some copies in the margin it is, "as a lion my hands and my feet", but in the text, "they have dug" or "pierced my hands and my feet"; both are joined together in the Targum, "biting as a lion my hands and my feet"; as it is by other interpreters [f348]; and Schultens [f349] retains the latter, rendering the preceding clause in connection with it thus,

> "the assembly of the wicked have broken me to pieces, as a lion, > my hands and my feet."

In the Targum, in the king of Spain's Bible, the phrase, "as a lion", is left out. The modern Jews are for retaining the marginal reading, though without any good sense, and are therefore sometimes charged with a wilful and malicious corruption of the text; but without sufficient proof, since the different reading in some copies might be originally occasioned by the similarity of the letters y and w; and therefore finding it in their copies, or margin, sometimes wrak, and sometimes yrak, have chose that which best suits their purpose, and is not to be wondered at; however, their "masoretic" notes, continued by them, sufficiently clear them from such an imputation, and direct to the true reading of the words; in the small Masorah on the text it is observed that the word is twice used as here pointed, but in two different senses; this is one of the places; the other is (<233813>Isaiah 38:13); where the sense requires it should be read "as a lion": wherefore, according to the authors of that note, it must have a different sense here, and not to be understood of a lion; the larger Masorah, in (<042409>Numbers 24:9); observes the word is to be found in two places, in that place and in (<192216>Psalm 22:16); and adds to that, it is written wrak, "they pierced"; and Ben Chayim confirms [f350] this reading, and says he found it so written it, some correct copies, and in the margin yrak; and so it is written in several manuscripts; and which is confirmed by the Arabic, Syriac, Ethiopic, Greek, and Vulgate Latin versions; in which it is rendered, "they dug my hands and my feet"; and so took it to be a verb and not a noun: so Apollinarius in his metaphrase; and which is also confirmed by the points; though taking yrak for a participle, as the Targum, that reading may be admitted, as it is by some learned men [f351], who render it "digging" or "piercing", and so has the same sense, deriving the word either from rak or rwk, which signify to dig, pierce, or make hollow; and there are many instances of plural words which end in y, the m omitted, being cut off by an apocope; (see <102308>2 Samuel 23:8) (<121104>2 Kings 11:4,19 <250314>Lamentations 3:14 <263230>Ezekiel 32:30); and either way the words are expressive of the same thing, and manifestly point to the sufferings of Christ, and that kind of death he should die, the death of the cross, and the nailing of his hands and feet to it, whereby they were pierced. This passage is sometimes applied by the Jews [f352] themselves to their Messiah.

Ver. 17. I may tell all my bones, etc.] For what with the stretching out of his body on the cross, when it was fastened to it as it lay on the ground, and with the jolt of the cross when, being reared up, it was fixed in the ground, and with the weight of the body hanging upon it, all his bones were disjointed and started out; so that, could he have seen them, he might have told them, as they might be told by the spectators who were around him; and so the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions render it, “they have numbered all my bones”; that is, they might have done if: the Targum is, “I will number all the scars of my members”, made by the blows, scourges, and wounds he received;

they look [and] stare upon me; meaning not his bones, but his enemies; which may be understood either by way of contempt, as many Jewish interpreters explain it: so the Scribes and elders of the people, and the people themselves, looked and stared at him on the cross, and mocked at him, and insulted him; or by way of rejoicing, saying, “Aha, aha, our eye hath seen”, namely, what they desired and wished for, (<193521>Psalm 35:21); a sight as was enough to have moved an heart of stone made no impression on them; they had no sympathy with him, no compassion on him, but rejoiced at his misery: this staring agrees with their character as dogs.

Ver. 18. They part my garments among them, etc.] Such as died the death of the cross were crucified naked[f353], and their clothes were the perquisites of the executioners; there were four soldiers concerned in the crucifixion of Christ, and these parted his garments into four parts, and everyone took his part; and cast lots on my vesture; which was a seamless coat, wove from the top to the bottom; and therefore, not willing to rend it, they cast lots upon it who should have it; all this was exactly fulfilled in Christ, (<431923>John 19:23,24).

Ver. 19. But be not thou far from me, O Lord, etc.] (See Gill on “<192211>Psalm 22:11”);

O my strength; Christ as God is the mighty God, the Almighty; as Mediator, he is the strength of his people; but, as man, God is his strength; he is the man of his right hand, whom he has made strong for himself, and whom he has promised his arm shall strengthen, (<198017>Psalm 80:17 89:21); and therefore he addresses him in this manner here, saying, haste thee to help me; his help was alone in God his strength; there were none that could help him but he, and he seemed to stand afar off from helping him, (<192201>Psalm 22:1,11); and his case being so distressed, as is represented in the preceding verses, it required haste.

Ver. 20. Deliver my soul from the sword, etc.] Wicked men, whose tongues were as a sharp sword, reproaching and blaspheming him, and bearing false witness against him; and crying out, “Crucify him, crucify him”, (<422321>Luke 23:21 <431906>John 19:6); (see <191712>Psalm 17:12 57:4 <202518>Proverbs 25:18); or any instrument of violence, as the iron bar with which the legs of the malefactors crucified with him were broken, which he escaped; and the spear which pierced his side, after he had commended his soul or spirit into the hands of his Father; or a violent death; for though his death had the appearance of one, he was taken in a violent manner, and condemned to be put to death, and was crucified, yet his life was not taken away by men; he laid it down, and gave up his breath himself;

my darling from the power of the dog, or “my only one”[f354]; meaning his life or soul, as before; so called, not because there is but one soul in the body, but because it was dear and valuable to him; and hence we render it “darling”, an only one being usually the darling of its parents; so a man’s life is dear to him, all that he has will he give for it, (<180204>Job 2:4). Christ’s life was a more precious life than any man’s, and peculiarly his own, in such sense as another man’s, is not his own; and his soul also was an only one, it was not polluted with original sin, as the souls of other men are; it was pure and holy: the word here used is sometimes rendered “desolate” and “solitary”; (see <192516>Psalm 25:16 68:6); and it may have this sense here, and be translated “my lonely” or “solitary one”[f355]; he being forsaken by God, and deserted by his disciples; his soul was in darkness, sorrow, and distress, wherefore he prays it might be delivered “from the power of the dog”; either Satan is so called for his malice and envy, who had put it into the heart of Judas to betray him, and had filled the Pharisees with envy at him, and who through it delivered him to Pilate; or the impure, cruel, and wicked Roman soldiers, and in short all his crucifiers; called in the plural number “dogs”, (see Gill on “<192216>Psalm 22:16”).

Ver. 21. Save me from the lion’s mouth, etc.] Either the devil, who is as a roaring lion, whom Christ overcame both in the garden and on the cross, and destroyed him and his works; or all his wicked enemies, especially the most powerful of them, who were in greatest authority, as the chief priests and elders; so rulers and civil magistrates, who are cruel and unmerciful, are compared to lions, (<202815>Proverbs 28:15 <550417>2 Timothy 4:17); for thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns; some read this as a prayer like the former, “hear thou me”[f356], etc. that is, deliver me; but according to our version it expresses what God had done, that he had heard him and saved him; and is used as a reason or argument with him that he would regard also his other petitions: or it may have respect to what follows, that since God had heard him, and delivered him out of the hands of his most powerful enemies, therefore he would declare his name and praise him; for the unicorn being a very strong creature, and its strength lying much in its horn, with which it pushes and does mischief; (see <042322>Numbers 23:22 <183909>Job 39:9-12 <053317>Deuteronomy 33:17). Christ’s strong and potent enemies are intended here; such as Satan and his principalities and powers, the sanhedrim of the Jews, Herod, Pontius Pilate, and others, from whose power he was freed when raised from the dead. According to Pliny[f357], the monoceros, or unicorn, is the fiercest of wild beasts; in its body like a horse, it has the head of an hart and feet of an elephant, the tail of a bear, makes a great bellowing; has one black horn rising up in the middle of the forehead, of two cubits long; it is denied that it was ever taken alive, which agrees with (<183909>Job 39:9,10).

Ver. 22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren, etc.] Not those who were more nearly related to him according to the flesh; for though there were some who believed in him, and to whom he declared the name of God, as James and Joses, and Judas and Simon, (<401355>Matthew 13:55); yet there were others that did not believe on him, (<430703>John 7:3,5); nor those more remotely related to him, as all the Jews, who were his brethren and kinsmen also according to the flesh; to these indeed he came and preached, but they received him not; but rather his apostles, whom he called his brethren, even after his resurrection, and to whom he appeared and declared the name of God, (<402810>Matthew 28:10 <432017>John 20:17); and the five hundred brethren by whom he was seen at once may be also included; and even all true believers in him, who through his incarnation, being their “goel” and near kinsman, stands in such a relation to them, and through their adoption into his Father’s family, his Father being their Father, and his God their God; which is manifested in regeneration, and evidenced by their doing the will of God, which is believing in Christ, (<401249>Matthew 12:49,50). By the “name” of God is meant, not anyone of the names by which he is known, as God Almighty, Jehovah, etc. if any of these could be thought to be designed, the New Testament name and title of God as the Father of Christ would bid fair for it; but rather the perfections of God, which appear in Christ, and were glorified in the work of redemption; or God himself; or else his Gospel, (<440915>Acts 9:15); and which Christ declared and manifested to his disciples, both before and after his resurrection, (<431706>John 17:6,8 <440103>Acts 1:3); which latter seems here to be referred unto;

in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee; meaning not the congregation of the Jews, their synagogue, or temple, where he often attended on public worship, and preached and praised the Lord; but rather the company of his disciples, among whom he sung an hymn the night he was betrayed, and with whom he conversed by times for forty days after his resurrection: unless the general assembly and church of the firstborn in heaven is intended, in the midst of which he praised the Lord, when he ascended on high, led captivity captive, and received gifts for men; though it seems best to understand this of the church of God, particularly among the Gentiles, under the Gospel dispensation, where Christ in his members sings the praise of electing, redeeming, and calling grace; (see <191849>Psalm 18:49); compared with (<451509>Romans 15:9). This is a proof of singing of psalms and hymns in Gospel churches, and of its being a duty to be publicly performed by the members of them, who may expect the presence of Christ in the midst of his church, seeing he here promises to be there: these words are applied to Christ in (<580212>Hebrews 2:12).

Ver. 23. Ye that fear the Lord, praise him, etc.] By whom are meant, not the proselytes among the Gentiles, as distinct from the Jews, which is the sense of some Jewish interpreters[f358]; but all the people of God, whether Jews or Gentiles, who have the grace of filial and godly fear put into their hearts, with which they worship God, and walk before him in all holy conversation; which is not a fear of wrath, or a distrust of divine goodness; but is a reverential affection for God, and is consistent with the greatest degree of faith, the strongest expressions of spiritual joy and holy courage: it includes the whole worship of God, internal and external; and such who have it in their hearts, and before their eyes, are called upon by Christ to praise the Lord for him, for the unspeakable gift of his love; that he has not spared his son, but delivered him up for them, to undergo so much sorrow, and such sufferings as before related, to obtain salvation for them; and that he has delivered him out of them, raised him from the dead, and has given him glory;

all ye the seed of Jacob, glorify him; not the natural, but spiritual seed of Jacob, who walk in the steps of the faith of that man of God; these are exhorted to glorify the Lord with their bodies and spirits, which are his, being redeemed with the precious blood of Christ; by believing in him, glorying in him, and offering praise unto him; and fear him, all ye the seed of Israel; who are the same with the seed of Jacob, Jacob and Israel being two names of the same person; and design not Israel according to the flesh, but according to the Spirit; the whole Israel of God, the all spiritual seed of Israel, who are justified in Christ, and are saved in him; they are the same with them that fear the Lord, and are here stirred up to exercise the grace of fear upon him; to fear him only, and not men, though ever so mighty and powerful, as before described in (<192212>Psalm 22:12,13,16,20,21); and that not only because of his power and greatness; but because of his grace and goodness, as shown forth in Christ Jesus.

Ver. 24. For he hath not despised nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted, etc.] That is, Christ, who was afflicted by men, both by their tongues, and by their hands; by devils, by the temptations of Satan for Christ suffered being tempted, though he was not overcome; and by his attacks upon him, both in the garden and on the cross; and by the Lord himself, Jehovah his Father, who laid on him the iniquity and chastisement of his people, bruised him, and put him to grief; awoke the sword of justice against him, and spared him not: his afflictions were many, both in body and soul; in body, being scourged, buffeted, bruised, pierced, racked, and tortured on the cross; in soul, being made exceeding sorrowful, and an offering for sin; sustaining his Father’s wrath, and seeking and enduring affliction by the rod of it; (see <235304>Isaiah 53:4,7); now, though his afflictions and sufferings were despised by men, and he was despised and abhorred on account of them; yet not by his Father, he took pleasure in them, and in him as suffering for his people; not simply considered, as if he delighted in his sufferings as such, but as they were agreeable to his counsel and covenant, and brought about the salvation of his chosen ones: he accepted them in the room and stead of his people; the sacrifice of Christ was of a sweet smelling savour to him; he was well pleased with his righteousness, his law being magnified and made honourable by it; and his death was precious in his sight, being the propitiation for the sins of his people; so far was he from despising and abhorring the afflictions of his son. And this is mentioned as a reason or argument for praise and thanksgiving in them that fear the Lord; since God has looked upon the redemption price his Son has paid for them sufficient; has not despised, but accepted of it as the ransom of their souls: some render the words, “the prayer of the afflicted”; so the

Targum, and the Septuagint version, and the versions that follow that; which agrees with the next words:

neither hath he hid his face from him; when men did, as ashamed of him, (<235303>Isaiah 53:3); for though he forsook him for a while, and in a little wrath hid his face from him for a moment, that he might bear the whole curse of the law for us; yet he returned again, and did not hide his face from him for even;

but when he cried unto him, he heard; cried not only on account of his crucifiers, that God would forgive them; but on account of himself, that he would not be afar off from him; that he would take his spirit or soul into his hands, into which he committed it; that he would deliver him from the power of death and the grave, and loose their bands; in all which he was heard, (<580507>Hebrews 5:7).

Ver. 25. My praise [shall be] of thee in the great congregation, etc.] Or, “my praise is from thee”[f359]; not that he should have praise of God, as he had, when he was received up into heaven, and set down at the right hand of God; but that God should be the object of his praise, as he was the cause of it; his salvation and deliverance of him, and resurrection from the dead, and exaltation of him, were the occasion and matter of it: the place where Christ determined to praise the Lord is “the great congregation”; either his apostles, who, though a little flock, yet, on account of their extraordinary office and gifts, and peculiar privileges, were the greatest congregation that ever was in the world; or the five hundred brethren to whom Christ appeared at once after his resurrection; or else the whole church under the Gospel dispensation; in the midst of which Christ is, and who in the members of it praises the name of the Lord; and this especially will have its accomplishment at the latter day, when great multitudes will be converted, and the voice of praise and thanksgiving will be among them, (<660709>Revelation 7:9,10 11:15 14:1,2 19:1,5,6);

I will pay my vows before them that fear him; either those which he made in the council and covenant of grace, when he engaged to become a surety for his people, to assume their nature, to suffer and die for them, to redeem them from sin and misery, and bring them nigh to God, and save them with an everlasting salvation; all which he has openly done; (see <193119>Psalm 31:19); or those which he made in (<192221>Psalm 22:21); that he would declare the name of the Lord unto his brethren, and sing praise unto him in the midst of the church; compare with this (<19B612>Psalm 116:12-14).

Ver. 26. The meek shall eat and be satisfied, etc.] Such who, being made thoroughly sensible of sin, look upon themselves the chief of sinners, and the least of saints; and being truly convicted of the insufficiency of their own righteousness, wholly trust to and rely on the righteousness of Christ; and, being acquainted with their impotency and inability to do any good thing of themselves, ascribe all to the grace of God, and have no dependence on anything done by them; who are willing to be instructed and reproved by the meanest saint; are not easily provoked to wrath; patiently bear indignities and affronts, and are gentle unto all men: these shall "eat" the fat and drink the sweet of Christ the bread of lift; they shall eat of his flesh by faith, which is meat indeed; they shall find the word, and eat it; feed on the wholesome words of Christ, the words of faith and good doctrine, and shall be "satisfied", or "filled": other food is not satisfying; it proves gravel, ashes, and wind; it is not bread, and satisfies not; but such as hunger and thirst after Christ and his righteousness, and are poor in their own eyes, meek and humble; these are filled with good things to satisfaction, (<400506>Matthew 5:6 <420153>Luke 1:53); Jarchi interprets these words of the time of the redemption and the days of the Messiah;

they shall praise the Lord that seek him; in Christ, with their whole heart; who being filled by him and satisfied, bless the Lord for their spiritual food and comfortable repast, as it becomes men to do for their corporeal food, (<050810>Deuteronomy 8:10);

your heart shall live for ever; this is an address of Christ to them that fear the Lord, the seed of Jacob and Israel; the meek ones, and that seek the Lord, his face and favour, and who eat and are satisfied; signifying, that they should be revived and refreshed, should be cheerful and comfortable; should live by faith on Christ now, and have eternal life in them; and should live with him for ever hereafter, and never die the second death.

Ver. 27. All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord, etc.] That is, all the elect of God among the Gentiles, who live in the farthermost parts of the world, for whom Christ is appointed to be their salvation, and whom he calls to look to him for it; these shall remember the Lord whom they have forgotten, and against whom they have sinned, how great and how good he is; they shall be put in mind of their sins and iniquities committed against him, and call to mind their latter end; and consider, that after death will come judgment to which they must be brought; they shall be apprised of the grace and goodness of God in Christ, in providing and sending him to be the Saviour of lost sinners, by his sufferings and death, at large described in this psalm; which will encourage them to turn unto the Lord, since they may hope for full pardon of sin, through his blood and sacrifice; and to turn from their idols, and from all their evil ways, and from all dependence on themselves or on creatures, to trust in and serve the living God in faith and fear; which turning is usually brought about under and by the ministry of the word; which is appointed to turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God; and has this effect when it is attended with the Spirit and power of God; for conversion is not the work of man, neither of ministers nor of men themselves, but of God, in which men are at first passive; they are turned, and then, under the influence of grace, become active, and turn to the Lord, by believing in him, and so cleave unto him: and likewise remembrance of the above things is not owing to themselves, but to the Spirit of God, who puts them into their minds; and which is very necessary and essential to conversion, even as a remembrance of past things is necessary to a restoration after backslidings, which is a second conversion; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee; not only externally, by praying before the Lord, and attending on his word and ordinances; but internally, in spirit and in truth, which worshippers the Lord seeks; such spiritual worship being suitable to his nature, and such worshippers believers in him are; this must be understood of some of all nations, kindred and tongues, whom Christ has redeemed by his blood, and calls by his grace; (see <381416>Zechariah 14:16,17).

Ver. 28. For the kingdom [is] the Lord’s, etc.] Not the kingdom of nature and providence, though that is the Lord Christ’s; but the kingdom of grace, the mediatorial kingdom: this was Christ’s by the designation and constitution of his Father from eternity; the government of the church was always upon his shoulders during the Old Testament dispensation; when he came into this world, he came as a King; though his kingdom being not of this world, it came not with observation; but upon his ascension to heaven, whither he went to receive a kingdom and return, he was made or declared Lord and Christ, and was exalted as a Prince, as well as a Saviour; and in consequence of his being set down at the right hand of God, he sent forth the rod of his strength, his Gospel, into the Gentile world, which was succeeded to the conversion of multitudes of them, among whom he has had a visible kingdom and interest ever since; and which will more abundantly appear in the latter day, when he shall be King over all the earth; and now this is a reason why so many, in the distant parts of the world, and among all the kindreds of the nations, shall remember, turn to him, and worship him; and he [is] the Governor among the nations; he rules in the hearts of some by his Spirit and grace, and over others with a rod of iron.

Ver. 29. All [they that be] fat upon earth, etc.] Rich men, who abound in worldly substance, are in very flourishing and prosperous circumstances, of whom for the most part this is literally true; yea, by these sometimes are meant princes, rulers, the chief among the people in power and authority, as well as in riches; (see <197831>Psalm 78:31) (<231016>Isaiah 10:16); the phrase may design such who are in prosperous circumstances in their souls, in spiritual things, in faith, comfort, and spiritual joy, (<199214>Psalm 92:14); but the former sense is best: Jarchi inverts the words, “they shall eat”, that is, the meek shall eat, “all the fat of the earth, and worship”; which may be understood of the spiritual blessings of grace, which converted persons shall feed and live upon, (<196305>Psalm 63:5); the allusion may be to the fat parts of the earth, and what grows thereon, made so by ashes, which the word used has the signification of; for some lands are fattened by ashes being strewed upon them [f360]; but rather the rich and great men of the earth are intended, who yet are but dust and ashes. They shall eat, and worship; for as, in the first times of the Gospel, not many mighty and noble were called, yet some were; so more especially, in the latter day, many of this sort will be called, even kings and queens; who will not live upon their titles of honour, their grandeur and glory, but upon Christ and his Gospel, and will fall down before him, and serve and worship him; (see <197210>Psalm 72:10,11 <234907>Isaiah 49:7,23 9:3, 16);

all they that go down to the dust shall bow before him; such as are in mean circumstances of life; so that both rich and poor shall serve him; or who are mean in their own eyes, sit in the dust of self-abhorrence, and put their mouths in the dust, are in a low condition, out of which the Lord raises them, (<19B307>Psalm 113:7,8). The Targum paraphrases it, “who go down to the house of the grave”; that is, the dead; and then the sense is, that Christ is the Lord, both of the dead and living, and that those that are under the earth, and are reduced to dust, as well as they that live and are fat upon it, shall bow the knee to Christ, when raised again, who is the Judge of quick and dead; (see <451409>Romans 14:9) (<500210>Philippians 2:10,11); and none can keep alive his own soul; as no man can quicken himself when dead in trespasses and sins; so when he is made alive, he cannot preserve his life, nor nourish himself, nor make himself lively and comfortable, nor cause his heart to live, as in (<192226>Psalm 22:26); but by eating the flesh, and drinking the blood of Christ, feeding and living upon him by faith: though some take the sense to be, that such as are before described as converted persons, will not seek to save their lives, but will freely lay them down and part with them for Christ's sake; but rather the meaning is, that so universal will the kingdom of Christ be, as that high and low, rich and poor, will be bowing to him; whoever are his enemies, and will not have him to rule over them, will be brought before him and slain, and none of them will be able to save themselves; so the Targum, "he will not quicken", or "keep alive, the soul of the wicked"; or as Jarchi interprets it,

> "he will have no mercy on them, to keep their souls alive from hell."

Ver. 30. A seed shall serve him, etc.] That is, Christ shall always have a seed to serve him in every age; a remnant according to the election of grace; (see <450929>Romans 9:29); so that as the former verses speak of the amplitude of Christ's kingdom, through the calling of the Gentiles, these words and the following express the duration of it: and this "seed" either means Christ's seed; so the Septuagint version, and others that follow it, render it, "my seed"; the spiritual seed and offspring of Christ, which the Father has given him, and which shall endure for ever, (<235310>Isaiah 53:10 <198929>Psalm 89:29,36); or else the church's seed, which comes to the same thing; not the natural seed of believers, but a succession of godly men in the church, who are born in her, and nursed up at her side; (see <235921>Isaiah 59:21); such shall, and do, in every age serve Christ, willingly and cheerfully, in righteousness and true holiness, without slavish fear, and yet with reverence and godly fear. The Chaldee paraphrase is, "the seed of Abraham shall serve before him"; but this seed designs not the Jews only, but the Gentiles also, and chiefly;

it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation; of his people, his children whom he accounts of, reckons, and esteems as such; or the seed shall be reckoned to the Lord, as belonging to him, "unto generation"; that is, in every generation [f361], throughout all ages, to the end of time; so the Targum, "to an after generation"; or "a generation to come".

Ver. 31. They shall come, etc.] One generation after another; there shall always be a succession of regenerate persons, who shall come to Christ, and to his churches; and a succession of Gospel ministers among them, who shall come forth, being sent and qualified by Christ; and shall declare his righteousness, either the faithfulness of God, in fulfilling his promises; especially those which respect the mission of Christ, and salvation by him, as Zacharias did, (<420168>Luke 1:68-73); or rather the righteousness of Christ, which is revealed in the Gospel, and makes a most considerable part of the declaration of it, and is published by Gospel ministers in all ages, as the only justifying righteousness before God: and that unto a people that shall be born; in successive generations; that shall be brought upon the stage of time and life; or that shall be born again; for to such only, in a spiritual and saving way, is the righteousness of Christ declared, revealed, and applied, by the blessed Spirit, through the ministry of the word: it is added, that he hath done [this]; wrought this righteousness; so Jarchi; that is, is the author of it; is become the end of the law for it; has finished it, and brought it in; or else all the great things spoken of in this psalm, relating to the Messiah, his sufferings, death, and resurrection, and the calling of the Gentiles; all which are the Lord's doings, and are what is declared in the Gospel: the Targum is, "the miracles which he hath done"; the Septuagint version, and those that follow it, connect this clause with the preceding thus, "to a people that shall be born, whom the Lord hath made"; made them his people, created them in Christ, and formed them for himself.

PSALM 23

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 23

A Psalm of David

This psalm was written by David, either when he was in distressed circumstances, being persecuted by Saul, and was in the forest of Hareth, (<092205>1 Samuel 22:5); as some think[f362]; wherefore he comforts himself with the Lord’s being his shepherd, so that he should not want; nor would he fear, was he in worse circumstances than he at present was; or rather, when he was settled upon the throne of Israel, and in the most prosperous and flourishing state of his reign, as the latter part of the psalm shows; he speaks not in his own person only, but in the name of all believers; for Christ, who is the shepherd spoken of, is a common shepherd to all the saints, who are all the sheep of his pasture, as well as David; and the prophet here makes use of similes very familiar with him; he having been a shepherd himself, and knew what it was to do all the parts of that office, which are herein expressed; and very pertinently does this psalm follow the former; for as there Christ is prophesied of as laying down his life for the sheep, as the good shepherd does; and of his being brought again from the dead, as the great shepherd of the sheep, as Christ has been; so here of his performing his office as such, in all its parts, to the great comfort, refreshment, and safety of his people.

Ver. 1. The Lord [is] my shepherd, etc.] This is to be understood not of Jehovah the Father, and of his feeding the people of Israel in the wilderness, as the Targum paraphrases it, though the character of a shepherd is sometimes given to him, (<197720>Psalm 77:20 80:1); but of Jehovah the Son, to whom it is most frequently ascribed, (<014924>Genesis 49:24 <234011>Isaiah 40:11) (<263423>Ezekiel 34:23 37:24 <381307>Zechariah 13:7 <431011>John 10:11,14 <600225>1 Peter 2:25 5:4). This office he was called and appointed to by his Father, and which through his condescending grace he undertook to execute, and for which he is abundantly qualified; being omniscient, and so knows all his sheep and their maladies, where to find them, what is their case, and what is to be done for them; and being omnipotent, he can do everything proper for them; and having all power in heaven and in earth, can protect, defend, and save them; and all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge being in him, he can guide and direct them in the best manner; wherefore he is called the great shepherd, and the chief shepherd, and the good shepherd. David calls him "my shepherd"; Christ having a right unto him, as he has to all the sheep of God, by virtue of his Father's gift, his own purchase, and the power of his grace; and as owning him as such, and yielding subjection to him, following him as the sheep of Christ do wheresoever he goes; and also as expressing his faith of interest in him, affection for him, and joy because of him: and from thence comfortably concludes,

I shall not want; not anything, as the Targum and Aben Ezra interpret it; not any temporal good thing, as none of Christ's sheep do, that he in his wisdom sees proper and convenient for them; nor any spiritual good things, since a fulness of them is in him, out of which all their wants are supplied; they cannot want food, for by him they go in and out and find pasture; in him their bread is given them, where they have enough and to spare, and their waters are sure unto them; nor clothing, for he is the Lord their righteousness, and they are clothed with the robe of his righteousness; nor rest, for he is their resting place, in whom they find rest for their souls, and are by him led to waters of rest, as in (<192302>Psalm 23:2): the words may be rendered, "I shall not fail", or "come short"[f363]; that is, of eternal glory and happiness; for Christ's sheep are in his hands, out of which none can pluck them, and therefore shall not perish, but have everlasting life, (<431027>John 10:27-29).

Ver. 2. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, etc.] Or "pastures of tender grass"[f364]; this is one part of the shepherd's work, and which is performed by Christ, (<263414>Ezekiel 34:14 <431009>John 10:9); by these "green pastures" may be meant the covenant of grace, its blessings and promises, where there is delicious feeding; likewise the fulness of grace in Christ, from whence grace for grace is received; also the flesh and blood, righteousness and sacrifice, of Christ, which faith is led unto and lives upon, and is refreshed and invigorated by; to which may be added the doctrines of the Gospel, with which Christ's under-shepherds feed his lambs and sheep, there being in them milk for babes and meat for strong men; and likewise the ordinances of the Gospel, the goodness and fatness of the Lord's house, the feast of fat things, and breasts of consolation: here Christ's sheep are made to "lie down", denoting their satiety and fulness; they having in these green pastures what is satisfying and replenishing; as also their rest and safety, these being sure dwellings and quiet resting places, even in the noon of temptation and persecution; (see <220107>Song of Solomon 1:7);

he leadeth me beside the still waters, or "waters of rest and quietness" [f365]; not to rapid torrents, which by reason of the noise they make, and the swiftness of their motion, the sheep are frightened, and not able to drink of them; but to still waters, pure and clear, and motionless, or that go softly, like the waters of Shiloah, (<230806>Isaiah 8:6); and the "leading" to them is in a gentle way, easily, as they are able to bear it; so Jacob led his flock, (<013314>Genesis 33:14); and Christ leads his, (<234011>Isaiah 40:11); by these "still waters" may be designed the everlasting love of God, which is like a river, the streams whereof make glad the hearts of his people; these are the waters of the sanctuary, which rise to the ankles, knees, and loins, and are as a broad river to swim in; the pure river of water of life Christ leads his sheep to, and gives them to drink freely of: also communion with God, which the saints pant after, as the hart pants after the water brooks, and Christ gives access unto; moreover he himself is the fountain of gardens, and well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon; and the graces of his Spirit are also as rivers of living water, all which he makes his people partakers of; to which may be added, that the Scriptures, and the truths of the Gospel, are like still, quiet, and refreshing waters to them, and are the waters to which those that are athirst are invited to come, (<235501>Isaiah 55:1); and in the immortal state Christ will still be a shepherd, and will feed his people, and lead them to fountains of living water, where they shall solace themselves for ever, and shall know no more sorrow and sighing, (<660717>Revelation 7:17).

Ver. 3. He restoreth my soul, etc.] Either when backslidden, and brings it back again when led or driven away, and heals its backslidings; or rather, when fainting, swooning, and ready to die away, he fetches it back again, relieves, refreshes, and comforts with the discoveries of his love, with the promises of his word, and with the consolations of his Spirit, and such like reviving cordials, (see Gill on "<191907>Psalm 19:7");

he leadeth, he in the paths of righteousness; in the plain paths of truth and holiness, in which men, though fools, shall not err; in right ones, though they sometimes seem rough and rugged to Christ's sheep, yet are not crooked; there is no turning to the right hand or the left; they lead straight on to the city of habitation; and they are righteous ones, as paths of duty are, and all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord be; moreover, Christ leads his by faith, to walk on in him and in his righteousness, looking through it, and on account of it, for eternal life; (see <200820>Proverbs 8:20); and all this he does for his name’s sake; for his own glory and the praise of his grace, and not for any merits or deserts in men.

Ver. 4. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, etc.] Which designs not a state of spiritual darkness and ignorance, as sitting in the shadow of death sometimes does, since the psalmist cannot be supposed to be at this time or after in such a condition; (see <230902>Isaiah 9:2 <400413>Matthew 4:13,16 <420179>Luke 1:79); nor desertion or the hidings of God’s face, which is sometimes the case of the people of God, and was the case of the psalmist at times; but now he expressly says the Lord was with him; but rather, since the grave is called the land of the shadow of death, and the distresses persons are usually in, under apprehensions of immediate death, are called the terrors of the shadow of death; (see <181021>Job 10:21,22 38:17 24:17); the case supposed is, that should his soul draw nigh to the grave, and the sorrows of death compass him about, and he should be upon the brink and borders of eternity, he should be fearless of evil, and sing, “O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?” (<461555>1 Corinthians 15:55), though it seems best of all to interpret it of the most severe and terrible affliction or dark dispensation of Providence it could be thought he should ever come under, (<194419>Psalm 44:19 107:10,14 <241316>Jeremiah 13:16). The Targum interprets it of captivity, and Jarchi and Kimchi of the wilderness of Ziph, in which David was when pursued by Saul; and the latter also, together with Ben Melech, of the grave, and of a place of danger and of distress, which is like unto the grave, that is, a place of darkness; and Aben Ezra of some grievous calamity, which God had decreed to bring into the world. Suidas [f366] interprets this phrase of danger leading to death; afflictions attend the people of God in this life; there is a continued series of them, so that they may be said to walk in them; these are the way in which they walk heaven, and through which they enter the kingdom; for though they continue long, and one affliction comes after another, yet there will be an end at last; they will walk and wade through them, and come out of great tribulations; and in the midst of such dark dispensations, comparable to a dark and gloomy valley, covered with the shadow of death, the psalmist intimates what would be the inward disposition of his mind, and what his conduct and behaviour:

I will fear no evil; neither the evil one Satan, who is the wolf that comes to the flock to kill and to destroy, and the roaring lion that seeks whom he may devour, since the Lord was his shepherd, and on his side: nor evil men, who kill the body and can do no more, (<192701>Psalm 27:1-3); nor any evil thing, the worst calamity that could befall him, since everything of this kind is determined by God, and comes not without his knowledge and will, and works for good, and cannot separate from the love of Christ; (see <194601>Psalm 46:1-4);

for thou [art] with me; sheep are timorous creatures, and so are Christ's people; but when he the shepherd is them, to sympathize with them under all their afflictions, to revive and comfort them with the cordials of his love and promises of his grace, to bear them up and support them with his mighty arm of power, to teach and instruct them by every providence, and sanctify all unto them; their fears are driven away, and they pass through the dark valley, the deep waters, and fiery trials, with courage and cheerfulness; (see <234110>Isaiah 41:10 43:1,2);

thy rod and thy staff they comfort me; not the rod of afflictions and chastisements, which is the sense of some Jewish [f367] as well as Christian interpreters; though these are in love, and the saints have often much consolation under them; but these are designed by the valley of the shadow of death, and cannot have a place here, but rather the rod of the word, called the rod of Christ's strength, and the staff of the promises and the provisions of God's house, the whole staff and stay of bread and water, which are sure unto the saints, and refresh and comfort them. The Targum interprets the rod and staff of the word and law of God; and those interpreters who explain the rod of afflictions, yet by the staff understand the law; and Jarchi expounds it, of the mercy of God in the remission of sin, in which the psalmist trusted: the allusion is to the shepherd's crook or staff, as in other places; (see <330714>Micah 7:14 <381107>Zechariah 11:7); which was made use of for the telling and numbering of the sheep, (<032732>Leviticus 27:32 <243313>Jeremiah 33:13 <262037>Ezekiel 20:37); and it is no small comfort to the sheep of Christ that they have passed under his rod, who has told them, and that they are all numbered by him; not only their persons, but the very hairs of their head; and that they are under his care and protection: the shepherd with his rod, staff, or crook, directs the sheep where to go, pushes forward those that are behind, and fetches back those that go astray; as well as drives away dogs, wolves, bears, etc. that would make a prey of the flock; and of such use is the word of God, attended with the power of Christ and his Spirit; it points out the path of faith, truth, and holiness, the saints should walk in; it urges and stirs up those that are negligent to the discharge of their duty, and is the means of reclaiming backsliders, and of preserving the flock from the ravenous wolves of false teachers: in a word, the presence, power, and protection of Christ, in and by is Gospel and ordinances, are what are here intended, and which are the comfort and safety of his people, in the worst of times and cases.

Ver. 5. Thou preparest a table before me, etc.] In a providential way granting a sufficiency, and even an affluence of temporal good things; the providence of God lays and spreads a table for his people in the wilderness, and sets them down at it, and bids them welcome to it; (see <197819>Psalm 78:19); and in a way of grace, the Lord making large provisions in his house for them, called the goodness and fatness of his house, and a feast of fat things; and under the Gospel dispensation, the table of the Lord, on which are set his flesh and blood for faith to feed upon; (see <200902>Proverbs 9:2); and also in heaven, the joys of which are compared to a feast, and the enjoyment of them to sitting at a table, and which are prepared by the Lord for his people, from the foundation of the world; and of which they have some foresight and foretaste in this world; (see <422230>Luke 22:30); and all this in the presence of my enemies; they seeing and envying the outward prosperity of the saints, whenever they enjoy it, and their liberty of worshipping God, hearing his word, and attending on his ordinances, none making them afraid; as they will see, and envy, and be distressed at a more glorious state of the church yet to come, (<661112>Revelation 11:12); and even, as it should seem from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the glory and happiness of the saints in the other world will be seen, or by some way or other known, by wicked men; which will be an affliction to them, and an aggravation of their misery; though here it seems chiefly to regard the present life. Some have thought there is an allusion to princes, who, having conquered others, eat and feast at a well spread table in the presence of the conquered, and they being under it; (see <070107>Judges 1:7); thou anointest my head with oil; giving him an abundance of good things, not only for necessity, but for pleasure and delight; especially pouring out largely upon him the oil of gladness, the Spirit of God and his graces, the anointing which teaches all things, and filling him with spiritual joy and comfort; for this refers not to the anointing of David with material oil for the kingdom, by Samuel, while Saul was living, or by the men of Judah, and afterwards by all the tribes of Israel, when Saul was dead. The allusion is to the custom of the eastern countries, at feasts, to anoint the heads of the guests with oil; (see <210907>Ecclesiastes 9:7,8 <400617>Matthew 6:17). It was usual to anoint the head, as well as other parts of the body, on certain occasions; hence that of Propertius[f368]: and in the times before Homer[f369] it was usual both to wash and anoint before meals, and not the head only, but the feet also; which, though Pliny[f370] represents as luxurious, was in use in Christ's time, (<420738>Luke 7:38,46); and spoken of as an ancient custom by Aristophanes[f371] his Scholiast for daughters to anoint the feet of their parents after they had washed them; which may serve to illustrate the passage in the Gospel; (see <210908>Ecclesiastes 9:8);

my cup runneth over; denoting an affluence of temporal good things, and especially of spiritual ones, which was David's case. Such who are blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ, to whom the grace of the Lord has been exceeding abundant, and the Lord himself is the portion of their cup, their cup may be said to run over indeed.

Ver. 6. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me, etc.] Either the free grace, love, favour, and mercy of God in Christ, which endures continually, and is always the same from everlasting to everlasting; or the effects of it; and these either temporal good things, which flow from the goodness and mercy of God, and not the merits of men; and which are in great mercy and loving kindness bestowed on his people, and which follow them: they do not anxiously seek after them; but seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness, these are added to them, they trusting in the Lord, and he caring for them: or spiritual good things, which arise from the mere grace and mercy of God; such as the blessings of the covenant, the sure mercies of David, the discoveries and instances of the love of God, and the provisions of his house, which follow them, being undeserving of them; and even when they have backslidden from the Lord, and in times of distress, when his grace is sufficient for them; and of all this the psalmist had a comfortable assurance, depending upon the promise of God, arguing from the blessings he had already bestowed, and from the constant care he takes of his people, having in view his unchangeableness and faithfulness, the firmness of his covenant, and the irreversibleness of the blessings of it: the words may be rendered "only goodness and mercy", etc.[f372] nothing but mere mercy and kindness; for though afflictions do attend the children of God, yet these are in mercy and love; there is no fury in the Lord against them; there is nothing comes in wrath to them, throughout the whole course of their lives; wherefore it is added, all the days of my life; the mercies of God are new every morning, they continue all the day long; temporal goodness abides as long as life lasts, and ends with it; and spiritual blessings are for ever, they are the gifts of God, which are without repentance; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever; which may denote his constant attendance on the public worship of God, of which he had been deprived in time past, being driven out from it, but now he enjoyed it, and believed he ever should; or it may design his being a member of the church of God, and a pillar in the house and temple of the Lord, that should never go out; (see <660312>Revelation 3:12); or it may regard the assurance he had of dwelling in the house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens, Christ’s Father’s house, in which are many mansions, sure dwellings, and quiet resting places for his people, and that to all eternity. The Targum interprets it of the house of the sanctuary; and Kimchi expounds the whole verse in a petitionary way, “may goodness and mercy”, etc.

PSALM 24

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 24

A Psalm of David

This psalm is thought by some of the Jewish writers[f373] to have been wrote when the ark was brought from the house of Obededom to the city of David, and put into the place prepared for it by him, (<100617>2 Samuel 6:17); to which reference is supposed to be had in (<192407>Psalm 24:7-10); or after that David had built an altar in the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite, and had knowledge of the hill Moriah, as the place where the sanctuary was to be built; called the hill of the Lord, and his holy place, (<192403>Psalm 24:3); however, it was certainly written by David, under the inspiration of the spirit of God; and is a prophecy of Christ, and of the Gospel church, and describes the members of it.

Ver. 1. The earth [is] the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, etc.] The whole universe, all the terraqueous globe, both land and water, and the circumambient air, and all that is therein; the fishes of the sea, the fowls of the air, the beasts of the field, all plants and vegetables that spring out of the earth, and metals and minerals in the bowels of it; all which are the riches of the Lord the earth is full of, (<19A424>Psalm 104:24); (see <195010>Psalm 50:10-12);

the world, and they that dwell therein; the habitable world, and the dwellers on it, rational and irrational. These words may be interpreted of Christ, who is Lord of all; he made the world, and has a right and claim to all things in it; for the same person is here spoken of as in the preceding psalm, under the character of a shepherd; and this shows him to be very fit and proper for such an office, seeing he cannot fail of feeding and protecting his sheep; nor can they want any good thing, since the fulness both of nature and of grace is with him; and hence it is that all things are theirs, whether the world, or things present, or things to come; and though they seem to have nothing, yet possess all things, they possessing him whose all things are. The apostle makes use of this passage of Scripture, to prove, explain, and direct in the use of Christian liberty, with respect to the free use of creatures, they all being the Lord’s; and therefore good, and to be received with thanksgiving: and yet, inasmuch as there is a variety of them, such should be abstained from, when to use them serves to embolden evil men in their wicked ways, or offend and grieve weak Christians, (<461025>1 Corinthians 10:25,26,28).

Ver. 2. For he hath founded it upon the seas, etc.] Or “with” them, as some interpret[f374] the particle l [; he hath founded the earth and seas together, and both upon nothing; and yet are stable and firm; or “by the seas”[f375], near unto them, at the side of them; which, though higher than the earth, are wonderfully bounded by the power of God, so as not to return and cover the earth; (see <183808>Job 38:8-11 <19A405>Psalm 104:5-9); so the particle is used in (<190103>Psalm 1:3 23:2). Some have thought that the first earth, which Peter says was standing in the water, and out of the water, (<610305>2 Peter 3:5), was made in the form of an egg, and that the waters were under the earth, and the earth was as a crust or shell over them, until the deluge came; and this crust then broke in, and formed the sea; and so it was literally true, that the earth was founded upon, or over the waters; and established it upon the floods; the floods of the seas, or rivers of water running to and fro in it: this shows the ground and foundation of Christ’s right and claim to the earth, and all that is in it; which is not by reason of his father’s gift to him as Mediator, but by virtue of his concern in creation, the world, and all things in it, being made and established by him; in him do all things consist, (<510116>Colossians 1:16,17).

Ver. 3. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? etc.] Though the Lord has a claim in general to the whole world, and all its fulness; yet there is a particular part of it, or spot in it, which is his special and peculiar property, and that is his church and people; for though some reference may be had, in this passage, to Mount Moriah, and the hill of Zion, on which the temple was afterwards built, and is called the hill of the Lord, where he desired to dwell, (<196815>Psalm 68:15,16); yet the church is mystically intended, and is so called on account of its visibility, through a profession of faith in Christ, and for its immovableness, being built on him; and who shall stand in his holy place? the same with the hill of the Lord; the temple being to be built upon it, where the Lord took up his residence, and was worshipped, and holiness becomes the house of God for evermore: the import of these questions is, who is a proper person to be an inhabitant of Zion, or a member of a Gospel church? and the answer to them is in (<192404>Psalm 24:4), in which is a description much like that which is given of one hundred forty and four thousand seen with the Lamb on Mount Zion, (<661401>Revelation 14:1,4,5); compare with this verse.

Ver. 4. He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart, etc.] Though "clean hands" are mentioned first, as being more obvious to view, and better known, and more subject to the cognizance and observation of others; yet a "pure heart" is first in being and in order; from whence cleanness of hands, when right and truth springs: no man has a pure heart naturally and of himself: the heart is desperately wicked; the imagination of the thoughts of it is evil continually; the mind and conscience are defiled with sin; nor can any man make his heart clean, or say he is pure from sin; but it is God that creates a clean heart, and renews a right spirit within men, and purifies the heart by faith, which is led to the blood of sprinkling, which purges the conscience, and cleanseth it from all sin; and from this purity of heart flows purity of life and conversation, signified by "clean hands"; the hand being the instrument of action, holy actions, or good works, performed from a principle of grace, are meant; the phrase is expressive of a holy, harmless, and innocent conversation, washing the hands being used to denote innocence, (<402724>Matthew 27:24 <192606>Psalm 26:6 73:13); not a conversation entirely free from sin, nor by which a man is justified before God; for though he wash his hands ever so clean, they will not be pure in his sight, and will need washing in the blood of the Lamb; but it denotes a conversation upright in general, and declares a man righteous in the sight of men, and distinguishes him from one of a dissolute life, whose hands are full of blood, and defiled with sin;

who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity; or "set his heart upon" [f376], and desired vain things, as the phrase is sometimes used, (<052415>Deuteronomy 24:15 <242227>Jeremiah 22:27); that is, the vain things of this world; as the riches, honours, pleasures, and profits of it; or has not served other gods, the idols of the Gentiles, which are lying vanities, but has lifted up his soul to God, and served him only: or "who hath not received his soul in vain" [f377]; from the hands of God, but loves him with all his soul, believes with the heart in Christ for righteousness, being sanctified by the Spirit of God; and so the desire of his soul is to his name, and the remembrance of him. The "Keri", or marginal reading, according to the points, is, "who hath not lifted up my soul to vanity" [f378]; that is, has not taken the name of God in vain, or swore falsely by his name; his soul being put for his name or himself; and by which he is said sometimes to swear, (<245114>Jeremiah 51:14 <300608>Amos 6:8); and this sense the Jewish interpreters [f379] generally give into. The Targum seems to take in both the writing of the text and the marginal reading, as it often does, and renders the words, "who hath not sworn in vain, to the condemnation of his soul"; though sometimes to his own disadvantage, yet not to the hurt of others; (see <191504>Psalm 15:4); it follows, nor sworn deceitfully; by bearing false witness against any man; or by cheating him out of his substance through a false oath.

Ver. 5. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, etc.] Or "who receives" [f380]; the future for the present; and so is a continuation of the description of a person proper to enter and abide in the church of God, as (<192406>Psalm 24:6) seems to require; even one who has received every spiritual blessing in Christ in general, special grace out of his fulness; particularly the blessing of pardon, as also adoption, and a right to eternal life; though it may be that the following clause is explanative of this;

and righteousness from the God of his salvation; from Christ, who is God his Saviour, the author of salvation; and who has brought in an everlasting righteousness, which is in him, and is a gift of his grace, and is received from him by faith, and is a great blessing indeed; it secures from condemnation and death, and entitles to eternal life.

Ver. 6. This [is] the generation of them that seek him, etc.] The persons above described are such, who in every age are the generation of the children of God, and are accounted by him for a generation; they are such that seek him, in the first place, with their whole hearts, and in Christ, where they find him; that seek thy face, O Jacob. By the "face" of God is meant the favour of God, the discoveries of his love, the light of his countenance, than which nothing is more desirable to gracious souls, or more sought after by them; and by Jacob is meant the God of Jacob; and so Apollinarius has it in his metaphrase; (see <191001>Psalm 10:1); unless Christ should be intended, one of whose names is Israel, (<234903>Isaiah 49:3); or the words may be supplied, as they are by some Jewish writers [f381], "this is Jacob"; or the persons before described are the seed of Jacob, and who are called by his name: and it may be observed, that the church of God often bears the same name, (<234301>Isaiah 43:1 44:1,5); and then the sense is, the persons whose characters are given above are fit to ascend, and stand in the holy hill of God, are Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on "<19302>Psalm 3:2").

Ver. 7. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, etc.] By which the gates of hell are not meant; nor are the words to be understood of the descent of Christ thither, to fetch the souls of Old Testament saints from thence; who the Papists dream were detained in an apartment there, as in a prison, called by them "limbus patrum"; seeing these, immediately upon their separation from the body, were in a state of happiness and glory, as the parable of the rich man and Lazarus shows; and since Christ, at his death, went, in his human soul, immediately into heaven, or paradise, where the penitent thief was that day with him: nor do the words design the gates of heaven, and Christ's ascension thither, shut by the sins of men, and opened by the blood of Christ, by which he entered himself, and has made way for all his people; though this sense is much preferable to the former. The Jewish interpreters understand the phrase of the gates of the temple, which David prophetically speaks of as to be opened, when it should be built and dedicated by Solomon, and when the ark, the symbol of Jehovah's presence, was brought into it, and the glory of the Lord filled the house; so the Targum interprets this first clause of "the gates of the house of the sanctuary"; though the next of "the gates of the garden of Eden"; but the words are better interpreted, in a mystical and spiritual sense, of the church of God, the temple of the living God, which is said to have gates, (<236011>Isaiah 60:11); and is itself called a door, (<220809>Song of Solomon 8:9); where the open door of the Gospel is set, or an opportunity of preaching the Gospel given, and a door of utterance to the ministers of the word, and the doors of men's hearts are opened to attend to it; and indeed the hearts of particular believers, individual members of the church, may be intended, or at least included in the sense of the passage; (see <660320>Revelation 3:20); and it may be observed, that the new Jerusalem is said to have gates of pearl, through which Christ, when he makes his glorious appearance, will enter in his own glory, and in his father's, and in the glory of the holy angels; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; or "the doors of the world"[f382]; which some understand of the kingdoms and nations of the world, and of the kings and princes thereof, as called upon to open and make way for, and receive the Gospel of Christ into them, and to support and retain it; but it is best to interpret it of the church and its members, whose continuance, perpetuity, and duration, are here intimated, by being called “everlasting doors”; which may be said to be “lifted up”, as it may respect churches, when those things are removed which hinder communion with Christ; as their sins, which separate between them and their God, and the wall of unbelief, behind which Christ stands; and sleepiness, drowsiness, coldness, lukewarmness, and indifference; (see <235902>Isaiah 59:2 <220209>Song of Solomon 2:9 5:2); and when public worship is closely and strictly attended on, as the ministration of the word and ordinances, prayer to God, which is the lifting up the heart with the hands to God, and singing his praise: and as it may respect particular believers; these doors and gates may be said to be lifted up, when their hearts are enlarged with the love of God; the desires and affections of their souls are drawn out towards the Lord, and the graces of the Spirit are in a lively exercise on him; and when they lift up their heads with joy in a view of Christ coming to them. This must not be understood as if they could do all this of themselves, any more than gates and doors can be thought to open and lift up themselves;

and the King of glory shall come in; the Lord Jesus Christ, called the Lord of glory, (<460208>1 Corinthians 2:8 <590201>James 2:1); who is glorious in himself, in the perfections of his divine nature, as the Son of God; being the brightness of his Father’s glory, and the express image of his person; and in his office as Mediator, being full of grace and truth, and having a glory given him before the world was; and which became manifest upon his resurrection, ascension to heaven, and session at God’s right hand; and particularly he is glorious as a King, being made higher than the kings of the earth, and crowned with glory and honour; and so the Targum renders it aryqy Ælm, “the glorious King”; and he is moreover the author and giver, the sum and substance, of the glory and happiness of the saints: and now, as the inhabitants of Zion, and members of the church, are described in the preceding verses, an account is given of the King of Zion in this and the following; who may be said to “come into” his churches, when he grants his gracious presence, shows himself through the lattices, and in the galleries of ordinances, in his beauty and glory; takes his walks there, and his goings are seen, even in the sanctuary; and where he dwells as King in his palace, and as a Son in his own house; and he may be said to come into the hearts of particular believers, when he manifests himself, his love and grace, unto them, and grants them such communion as is expressed by supping with them, and by dwelling in their hearts by faith,

Ver. 8. Who [is] this King of glory? etc.] Which question is put by the church, or particular believers; not through ignorance, as the daughters of Jerusalem, (<220509>Song of Solomon 5:9); or the Pharisees, when Christ made his public entrance into Jerusalem, (<402110>Matthew 21:10); much less in pride and haughtiness, in scorn and derision, as Pharaoh, (<020501>Exodus 5:1); and the Capernaites, (<430642>John 6:42); but as wondering at the glories and excellencies of his person, and as desirous of knowing more of him. The answer to the question is, the Lord strong and mighty: he whose name alone is Jehovah; the most high in all the earth; the everlasting I AM; Jehovah our righteousness; the mighty God, even the Almighty; the Son of Man, whom God has made strong for himself: his strength and might have been seen in the creation of all things out of nothing, in upholding all things by his power, in the redemption of his people, in the resurrection of himself, in dispossessing the strong man armed out of the hearts of his chosen ones, in the government of his church, and the care of all his saints, and in keeping them from a final and total falling away. From the first of these words, which is only here used, Mars, because of his strength, has the name of Azizus; which name of his Julian [f383] makes mention of; and very probably Hesus, also a deity of the ancient Gauls, spoken of by the poet [f384], and by Lactantius [f385]; but to none does it belong as to our Jehovah;

the Lord mighty in battle; as he was when he was up on the cross; when he made an end of sin, spoiled principalities and powers; abolished death, and destroyed him that had the power of it; and as he will be at the last day, when the kings of the earth shall make war with him, and he shall overcome them; when the beast and false prophet shall be taken, and cast alive into the lake of fire; and the remnant shall be slain with the sword of his mouth; (see <661714>Revelation 17:14 19:11-21); and who is now the Captain of salvation to his people, their Leader and Commander; who furnishes them with weapons of warfare, which are mighty through God; who teaches their hands to war, and their fingers to fight the good fight of faith; and makes them more than conquerors, through himself, that has loved them.

Ver. 9. Lift up your heads, O ye gates even lift [them] up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. (See Gill on "<192407>Psalm 24:7"). This is repeated on account of the backwardness and negligence of churches, and particular believers, to open and let Christ in; as may be seen in the case of the church in (<220502>Song of Solomon 5:2,3); as well as the more to set forth the greatness and glory of Christ, about to make his entrance, and to command a proper awe and reverence of him: some think respect is had to the twofold coming of Christ; first into the second temple, and next at the last judgment; though rather the certainty of his coming, in a spiritual manner, to his church and people, is here designed.

Ver. 10. Who is this King of glory? etc.] This is repeated, because of the preceding words, and in order to have a further account of his glorious Person, as follows:

the Lord of hosts, he [is] the King of glory; he who is the Lord of sabaoth, the Lord of the armies, both of the heavens and the earth; at whose dispose and control all things are in both worlds, above and below: this is the great and glorious Person that condescends to dwell in his churches, and in the hearts of his people; and this honour have his saints.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

PSALM 25

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 25

[A Psalm] of David

This is the first of the psalms which is written in an alphabetical order, or in which the first word of every verse begins with the letters of the Hebrew alphabet in order, though it is not strictly and regularly observed; the reason of this manner of writing is not very obvious; the [f386] Jews confess their ignorance of it; it may be to engage the attention to what is said, or to assist the memory in laying it up, and retaining it there. The occasion of the psalm seems to be the troubles David was in on account of an unnatural rebellion raised against him by some of his subjects, at the head of which was his own son Absalom; he speaks of himself as in a net, and in great affliction, distress, and trouble, by reason of his enemies, (<192515>Psalm 25:15-18); and as being brought to a sense of his former sins, for which he desires pardon, (<192507>Psalm 25:7,11).

Ver. 1. Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul.] Either “in prayer”, as the Chaldee paraphrase adds [f387]; and denotes sincere, affectionate, hearty prayer to God, a drawing nigh to him with a true heart: for unless the heart is lifted up, the lifting up of the eyes or hands in prayer is of no avail; (see <250341>Lamentations 3:41); or by way of offering to the Lord, as some Jewish writers [f388] interpret it; David not only presented his body in public worship, but his soul also as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which was his reasonable service; or else as a “depositum”, which he committed into the hands of God, to be under his care and protection; and then the sense is the same with (<193105>Psalm 31:5) [f389]; the phrase is sometimes used to express earnest and vehement desire after anything; (see Gill on “<192404>Psalm 24:4”); and may here intend the very great desire of the psalmist after communion with God; which is elsewhere by him expressed by panting after him, and by thirsting for him in a dry and thirsty land, (<194201>Psalm 42:1 63:1); the desires of his soul were not to vain things, the vanities and idols of the Gentiles, but to God only, and to the remembrance of his name.

Ver. 2. O my God, I trust in thee, etc.] He claims his interest in God, and expresses his faith and confidence in him, in the midst of all his troubles; (see Gill on “<190701>Psalm 7:1”);

let me not be ashamed; meaning of his trust in God, by being disappointed of the help, deliverance, and salvation from him, which he trusted in him for; and the believer, as he has no reason to be ashamed of God, the object of his trust; so neither of the act of his hope or trust in him; nor shall he; for hope makes not ashamed; (see <19B9116>Psalm 119:116) (<450505>Romans 5:5);

let not mine enemies triumph over me; either his temporal enemies, his subjects that were risen up against him; or his spiritual enemies, Satan, and the men of the world, who rejoice and triumph when the saints are forsaken by God; and they are ready to say, as David’s enemies did of him, there is no help or salvation for him in God, (<190302>Psalm 3:2); and when they fall into their hands, or fall by them.

Ver. 3. Yea, let none that wait on thee be ashamed, etc.] David not only prays for himself, but for other saints, as it becomes the people of God to do; for them they waited on the Lord in public worship, attended his house and ordinances, and waited on him for the discoveries of his love, the enjoyment of his voracious presence, and were looking for his salvation, for the Messiah; for those the psalmist prays, that they might not be ashamed of their expectation and hope, by the delay of those things, or the denial them;

let them be ashamed which transgress without cause; or “act treacherously without cause” [f390]; as David’s subjects did, who were risen up in rebellion against him, and acted the perfidious part, contrary to their allegiance, and without any just reason, they not being ruled with rigour, and oppressed; but were guided and governed by him according to the laws of God, in the integrity of his heart, and by the skilfulness of his hands; he being a king that reigned in righteousness, and a prince that decreed judgment: and such are those who are now risen up against our rightful sovereign King George [f391], a parcel of perfidious treacherous wretches; some of them who were in the last rebellion, and obtained his father’s pardon; others that have partook yearly of his royal bounty, for the instruction of their children; and all have enjoyed the blessings of his mild and gentle government; and therefore are without cause his enemies: and for such we should pray, as David did for his enemies, that they might be ashamed; that they may fail in their attempts and designs, and be brought to deserved punishment; (see <190704>Psalm 7:4); or “let transgressors be ashamed”, and be empty[f392]; in a state of emptiness and want; lose their wealth, honour, and credit.

Ver. 4. Show me thy ways, O Lord, etc.] Either those which the Lord himself took and walked in; as those of creation and providence, in which he has displayed his power, wisdom, and goodness; and which are desirable to be known by his people, and require divine instruction and direction; and particularly his ways of grace, mercy, and truth, and the methods he has taken for the salvation of his people, both in eternity and in time; or those ways which he orders and directs his people to walk in; namely, the paths of duty, the ways of his worship and ordinances; a greater knowledge of which good men desire to have, as well as more grace to enable them to walk more closely and constantly in them; teach me thy paths; a petition the same with the other, in different words.

Ver. 5. Lead me in thy truth, and teach me, etc.] Meaning the word of God, the Scriptures of truth; and the Gospel, which is the word of truth, and truth itself, (<431717>John 17:17); and the sense is, either that God would lead him by his Spirit more and more into all truth, as contained in his word; or that he would lead him by it and according to it, that he might form his principles and his conduct more agreeably to it, which is the standard and rule of faith and practice: which leading is by teaching; and reasons urged for granting all the above petitions follow, for thou [art] the God of my salvation; who, in infinite wisdom, contrived scheme and method of it in his Son, and by him effected it, and by his Spirit had made application of it to him: and since the Lord had done such great things for him, he hoped the requests he had made would be granted: he adds, on thee do I wait all the day; or continually, in public and in private, attending to all the duties of religion, yet not trusting in them, but in the Lord; and therefore he entreated he might not be ashamed of his hope and expectation for deliverance and salvation.

Ver. 6. Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies and thy loving kindnesses, etc.] Not the providential mercy and kindness of God, in the care of him in his mother’s womb, at the time of his birth, in his nurture and education, and in the preservation of him to the present time; but the special mercy, grace, and love of God in Christ: the sense of the petition is the same with that of (<19A604>Psalm 106:4); which are expressed in the plural number, because of the largeness and abundance of it, and because of the various acts and instances of it; the Lord is rich and plenteous in mercy, abundant in goodness; his love is exceeding great, and numerous are the ways and methods in which it is declared, both in eternity and in time; and though he can never forget his love, nor the people whom he loves, for they are engraven on his hand, and set as a seal on his heart; yet he sometimes seems, by the conduct of his providence, as if he did not remember it, and had no tender affection for them; and their unbelief is ready to say, the Lord has forgotten to be gracious; and the design of such a petition as this is to entreat a fresh discovery and application of the grace, mercy, and loving kindness of God, and which he allows his people to put him in remembrance of;

for they [have been] ever of old: meaning not only from the time of his birth, and in after appearances of God for him, nor the favours shown to the people of Israel in former times at the Red sea, and in the wilderness and elsewhere, and to the patriarchs from the beginning of the world; but the love of God from everlasting, which appears in the choice of his people in Christ, before the foundation of the world, in the everlasting covenant of grace made with him, and in the setting of him up as the Mediator of it, and in putting his people into his hands, with all grace and spiritual blessings for them before the world began; and which love as it is from everlasting it is to everlasting, and remains invariably the same.

Ver. 7. Remember not the sins of my youth, etc.] Original sin, in which he was born, and the breakings forth of corrupt nature in infancy, he brought into the world with him, together with all the youthful lusts and vanities to which that age is addicted; and sometimes the sins of youth are in some persons remembered by God, and punished in old age; and if not, they are brought to remembrance through the dispensations of Providence: and the people of God are chastised for them then, and are ready to fear it is in a way of wrath; (see <181326>Job 13:26); which the psalmist here deprecates; for this is not said in order to extenuate his sins, they being but youthful follies, imprudencies, and inadvertencies, sins committed through ignorance, when he had not the knowledge of things he now had; nor as if he had lived so holy a life, that there were no sins of his to be taken notice of but what he had committed in his younger days; but rather this is to be considered as a confession of his having sinned from his youth upwards unto that time, as in (<240325>Jeremiah 3:25); and therefore entreat, that God would not remember his sins, so as to correct him for them in wrath and hot displeasure; neither the sins he had formerly been guilty of, nor those of a later date; which he next mentions;

nor my transgressions; his more notorious and glaring ones; such as murder and adultery, in the case of Uriah and Bathsheba, and which now stared him in the face; and on account of these, and as a chastening for them, this unnatural rebellion of his son's, which was now raised against him, was suffered to befall him, as had been foretold to him, (<101211>2 Samuel 12:11);

according to thy mercy remember thou me, for thy goodness' sake, O Lord; he pleads no merit nor goodness of his own, but casts himself upon the mercy, grace, and goodness of God; in which he was certainly right; and on that account prayed and hoped for deliverance from his present troubles, and for discoveries of the pardon of his sins unto him, which is what he means by remembering him.

Ver. 8. Good and upright [is] the Lord, etc.] He is essentially, originally, and independently good of himself in his own nature, and he is providentially good to all his creatures; and he is in a way of special grace and mercy good to his own people: and he is "upright", just in himself, righteous in all his ways and works, and faithful in all his promises; and the consideration of these excellent perfections of his encouraged the psalmist to entertain an holy confidence, that his petitions, respecting instruction and guidance in the ways of the Lord, (<192504>Psalm 25:4,5); would be heard and answered, notwithstanding his sins and transgressions;

therefore will he teach sinners in the way; such who are in sinful ways, he will teach them by his word and Spirit the evil of their ways, and bring them out of them, and to repentance for them; and he will teach them his own ways, both the ways and methods of his grace, in saving sinners by Christ, and the paths of faith and duty in which he would have them walk; (see <195113>Psalm 51:13).

Ver. 9. The meek will he guide in judgment, etc.] Or "the miserable" [f393] and afflicted; such as see themselves to be wretched and miserable, lost and undone; and cry out, What shall we do to be saved? and who are meek and lowly, are humbled under a sense of their sins, are poor in spirit, and of broken and contrite hearts; these the Lord will guide by his Spirit into the truth, as it is in Jesus; even the great truth of salvation by him; and in the way of his judgments, statutes, and ordinances; and will give them a true judgment and a right discerning of things that differ; and he will lead them on in judgment, or gently; (see <241024>Jeremiah 10:24); into every truth of the Gospel by degrees, and as they are able to bear them; and the meek will he teach his way; of justifying sinners by the righteousness of his son; for such who are humble and confess their sins and unworthiness, and throw themselves on the mercy of God in Christ, are declaratively justified by the Lord, when the proud boasting Pharisee is an abomination to him.

Ver. 10. All the paths of the Lord [are] mercy and truth, etc.] By which are meant, not the paths in which the Lord would have his people walk; though these are good and gracious, right and true; his commandments are not grievous, his yoke is easy, and burden light; his ways are ways of pleasantness, and his paths, paths of peace: but rather the paths in which the Lord himself walks; not his paths of providence, though these are mercy and truth to his own people; every step he takes is in a way of goodness and kindness to them, and in truth and faithfulness to his promises; but the ways and methods he has taken towards the spiritual and eternal salvation of his people; as in his counsels and purposes, in which there is a large display of his grace and mercy; in the choice of them in Christ, as vessels of mercy, and which is of grace, and not of works; in determining to send his Son to die for them, which springs from the tender mercy of our God; in resolving to call them by his grace, and to adopt them into his family, and at last to glorify them; all which proceed from his merciful lovingkindness; and all these, his counsels of old, are faithfulness and truth, since they can never be frustrated, but are always accomplished; as also in his covenant, which springs from grace, is built upon mercy, and contains the sure mercies of David, and is ever fulfilled; the faithfulness of God is engaged to keep it, and its promises are yea and amen in Christ: and likewise the steps he has taken in Christ, the Mediator of the covenant, who is full of grace and truth; "mercy" appears in the mission of him, and redemption by him; and "truth", in fulfilling the promise of him; and both mercy and truth meet together in him: and so they do in the various blessings of grace which come by him; as particularly justification and pardon of sin, in both which there is a display of grace and mercy; and also of the truth of holiness and justice: and the mercy and truth of God appear in these paths of his, unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies; by which are designed, not the covenant of works, and the precepts of the law, which are sometimes called the testimonies of God, because they testify what is his will that should be done: but these are broke, and not kept perfectly by any; nor is it any favour or high privilege to be shown this covenant and the duties of it, as is suggested of the covenant here meant, as appears from (<192514>Psalm 25:14); wherefore the covenant of grace must be intended, which is made with Christ, and his people in him; and the “testimonies” are the promises of it, which testify of the grace, mercy, truth, and faithfulness of Gods; and the keeping of these is done by faith: faith lays hold on the covenant, its blessings and promises, and claims an interest in them, as David did, (<102305>2 Samuel 23:5); (see <235604>Isaiah 56:4,6); and it keeps or retains its hold; it will not let go its hold of the covenant and its testimonies, but asserts its interest, even when things are at the worst with it; and it holds fast the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end; and to such all the steps the Lord takes appear to be in mercy and truth.

Ver. 11. For thy name’s sake, O Lord, pardon mine iniquity, etc.] Which to do is one of the promises and blessings of the covenant. The psalmist may have reference to his sin with Bathsheba, as Kimchi observes; since it was foretold to him, that, on account of that sin, evil should arise to him out of his own house, (<101211>2 Samuel 12:11); meaning that his son should rise up in rebellion against him; which was now the case, and which, no doubt, brought afresh this sin to his mind; and the guilt of it lay heavy upon his conscience; and therefore he prays for an application of pardoning grace and mercy; or he may have respect to original sin, the sin of his nature, which so easily beset him; the loathsome disease his loins were filled with; the law in his members warring against the law of his mind; and which a view of every actual sin led him to the consideration and acknowledgment of, as did that now mentioned, (<195104>Psalm 51:4,5); or, “iniquity” may be put for “iniquities”, and the sense be, that he desired a manifestation of the pardon of all his sins; for when God forgives sin, he forgives all iniquities: and David here prays for pardon in a way of mercy, and upon the foot of satisfaction; for he prays that God would “mercifully pardon”[f394], as the word signifies; or, according to his tender mercies, blot out his transgressions, and cleanse him from his sins; or that he would be “propitious”[f395] to him; or forgive him in a propitiatory way, or through the propitiation of Christ, whom God had set forth in his purposes and promises to be the propitiation for the remission of sins; and therefore he entreats this favour “for [his] name’s sake”; not for his own merits and good works, but for the Lord’s sake, for his mercy’s sake, or for his Son’s sake; (see <234325>Isaiah 43:25); compared with (<490532>Ephesians 5:32). The argument or reason he urges is, for it [is] great; being committed against the great God, against great light and knowledge, and attended with very aggravating circumstances; or “much”[f396], he being guilty of many sins; his sins were great, both as to quality and quantity: this seems to be rather a reason against than a reason for the pardon of sin; it denotes the sense the psalmist had of his iniquity, and his importunity for the pardon of it; just as a person, sensible of the violence and malignity of his disease, entreats the physician with the greater eagerness and importunity to do his utmost for him; (see <194104>Psalm 41:4); or the words may be rendered, “though it [is] great”[f397]; so Aben Ezra understands them;

> “though it is so very heinous and provoking, yet since forgiveness is with thee, and thou hast promised it in covenant, and hast proclaimed thy name, a God gracious and merciful, pardon it;”

unless the words are to be connected, as they are by some Jewish[f398] interpreters, with the phrase “thy name’s sake, for it [is] great”; that is, thy name is great, and that it may appear to be so, as it is proclaimed, forgive mine iniquity.

Ver. 12. What man [is] he that feareth the Lord? That is, how happy a man is he! and one that fears the Lord is one that has the fear of God put into his heart, as a blessing of the covenant of grace before spoken of; who fears the Lord, not on account of the punishment of sin, but under the influence of the pardon of it, and for his goodness’s sake; who loves the Lord, trusts in him, is careful not to offend him, hates sin, and avoids it, and has a strict regard to the worship of God in all its parts and branches, and performs it in fear; or who serves the Lord with reverence and godly fear. The description of this man’s happiness follows in this verse and (<192512>Psalm 25:12):

him shall he teach in the way [that] he shall choose; either which the man that fears God shall choose, which is the way of truth and duty, (<19B930>Psalm 119:30,173); or the way which God prescribes to him, and is well pleasing in his sight, who teaches to profit, and leads in the way his people should go; and a great happiness it is for a man to have his steps ordered by the Lord and his goings directed by him.

Ver. 13. His soul shall dwell at ease, etc.] Or in "goodness"[f399], enjoying an affluence of good things, of spiritual blessings in Christ, in whom he dwells by faith; and where he has peace and safety, amidst all the troubles, afflictions, and exercises, he meets with; and where with godliness he has contentment, which is great gain indeed; for, though he may seem to have nothing, he possesses all things; and has all things given him richly to enjoy, even all things pertaining to life and godliness; and at death, when his soul is separated from his body, it shall enter into rest, and be in perfect peace; it shall lie in Abraham's bosom, and in the arms of Jesus, during the night of the grave, until the resurrection morn, when the body will be raised and united to it, and both will dwell in perfect happiness to all eternity;

and his seed shall inherit the earth; that is, those who tread in the same steps, and fear the Lord as he does; these shall possess the good things of this world, which is theirs, in a comfortable way, as their Father's gift, as covenant mercies, and in love; though it may be but a small portion that they have of them; or rather they shall inherit the new heavens and earth, wherein will dwell only righteous persons, meek ones, and such as fear the Lord, (<400505>Matthew 5:5 <610313>2 Peter 3:13); and this they shall inherit for a thousand years, and afterwards the land afar off, the better country, the ultimate glory to all eternity.

Ver. 14. The secret of the Lord [is] with them that fear him, etc.] The secret of his purposes with them; as his purpose according to election; his resolution to redeem his chosen ones by his Son; his design to call them by his grace; his predestination of them to the adoption of children, and eternal life; which are the deep things of God the Spirit of God reveals; and all which are made manifest to them in effectual calling; and the secret of his providences is with them; some are made known to them that fear the Lord before they come to pass; as the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah to Abraham, with many other instances in the Old Testament; (see <300307>Amos 3:7); and what is the book of the Revelation but a revelation of the secrets of Providence, from the time of Christ and his apostles, to the end of the world? some they observe and take notice of while they are performing, and see the gracious designs of God in them, for their good and his glory; and though some of his ways of Providence are past finding out, and his footsteps are not known as yet; hereafter his judgments will be made manifest, and the whole scene will be opened to the saints, and be clear to their view: the secret of his love, free grace, and favour, is with them, which was in his heart from everlasting, and lay hid in his thoughts, which are as much higher than ours as the heavens are higher than the earth; and which is made manifest in regeneration, and then shed abroad in the hearts of his people: secret communion with God is enjoyed by those that fear him, which is what the world knows nothing of, and the joy that results from it is what a stranger intermeddles not with; the Lord has his chambers and secret places, into which he brings them, and where they dwell. The secret of his Gospel is with them; and the mysteries of it, which were kept secret since the world began; as the mystery of a trinity of Persons in the Godhead; the union of the two natures in Christ; the regeneration of the Spirit; the union of the saints to Christ, and their communion with him; the calling of the Gentiles; the resurrection of the dead; and the change of living saints; and he will show them his covenant: the covenant of grace, which was made with Christ for them from eternity, is made known to them in time, when they are called by the grace of God, and made partakers of the grace of the covenant, then the Lord reveals himself as their covenant God and Father; shows them that his Son is their surety, Mediator, Redeemer, and Saviour; puts his Spirit into them to implant covenant grace in them, to seal up the blessings of it to them, and bear witness to their interest in them, as pardon, justification, and adoption; and to apply the exceeding great and precious promises of it to them.

Ver. 15. Mine eyes [are] ever towards the Lord, etc.] Not only as the God of nature and providence, for his daily support and supply, in which sense the eyes of all creatures wait upon him; but as his covenant God and Father, having the eyes of his understanding opened to see and know him as such, and the eye of his faith directed to him, to believe in him, and make him his hope and trust; and his eye was single to him; it was to him, and him only, that he looked; and it was constant, it was ever to him, he set the Lord always before him; and such a look was well pleasing to God: it may also respect the lifting up of his eyes to God in prayer for all mercies temporal and spiritual, and his prayer was the prayer of faith; as follows:

for he shall pluck my feet out of the net; of the corruption of nature, and the lusts of it, as Aben Ezra interprets it; by which the saints are sometimes ensnared and taken captive, and out of which they cannot make their escape of themselves; but there is a deliverance from it by Jesus Christ their Lord: or out of the temptations of Satan, called his devices, and wiles, and the snares of the devil; and as the Lord knows how to deliver his out of temptations, he does deliver them in his own time; or rather out of the nets and snares laid for him by wicked men; as by his son Absalom, Ahithophel, and others, in which his feet were as a bird in the snare of the fowler; but he believed the net, or snare, would be broken, and he should escape, as he did.

Ver. 16. Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, etc.] Or "look unto me", or "upon me" [f400]; which suggests that the Lord had turned himself, and hid his face from him; and expresses a desire that he would look upon him with a look of love and mercy, and arise to help and deliver him out of the hands of his enemies; he pleads no merits nor works of righteousness of his, but casts himself upon the mercy of God; for I [am] desolate and afflicted; or "alone and poor" [f401]; not that he was quite alone, and had none with him; for though he was obliged to quit his palace, and the city of Jerusalem, yet he was accompanied by his servants, and a large number of his people; and could not be poor, in a literal sense, being king of Israel; yet he put no trust in men, nor in riches, but wholly depended on the Lord, as if he had none with him, nor anything to subsist with: and his case was indeed very deplorable, and called for pity and assistance; his own son was risen up against him, and the hearts of the men of Israel went after him; and he was obliged to flee from the city, and leave his house and family.

Ver. 17. The troubles of my heart are enlarged, etc.] His enemies being increased, which troubled him; the floods of ungodly men made him afraid; the waters of affliction were come into his soul, and spread themselves, and threatened to overwhelm him: or it may be rendered, as by some, "troubles have enlarged my heart" [f402]; made him wiser, increased his knowledge and experience; (see <19B967>Psalm 119:67,71); but the former seems better to agree with what follows;

[O] bring thou me out of my distresses; or "straits" [f403]; for the enlargement of his troubles was the straitening of his heart; and therefore he applies to the Lord to bring him out of his afflicted circumstances, in which he was penned up, as in a strait place, on every side, and which were such that he could not free himself from; but he knew that God could deliver him.

Ver. 18. Look upon mine affliction and my pain, etc.] The “affliction” was the rebellion of his subjects against him, at the head of which was his own son; and the “pain” was the uneasiness of mind it gave him; or the “labour” [f404], as the word may be rendered; the toil and fatigue of body he was exercised with, he flying from place to place; and he desires that God would look upon all this with an eye of pity and compassion to him, and arise to his help and deliverance; as he looked upon the affliction of the children of Israel in Egypt, and delivered them, (<020307>Exodus 3:7,8 <052607>Deuteronomy 26:7); and forgive all my sins; or “lift up”, “bear”, or “take away” [f405], as the word signifies; sins are burdens, and they lay heavy at this time on David’s conscience, being brought to mind by the affliction he laboured under, not only his sin with Bathsheba, but all others; and these were on him as a heavy burden, too heavy to bear; wherefore he entreats that the Lord would lift them off, and take them away from him, by the fresh discoveries of pardoning grace to him. The sins of God’s people are removed from them to Christ, by his Father, on whom they have been laid by his act of imputation; and he has bore them, and all the punishment due unto them, and, has taken them away, and made an end of them; and through the application of his blood, righteousness, and sacrifice, they are caused to pass from the consciences of the saints, and are removed as far from them as the east is from the west; and this is what the psalmist here desires, and this he requests with respect to all his sins, knowing well that, if one was left upon him, it would be an insupportable burden to him.

Ver. 19. Consider mine enemies, etc.] Or “look” [f406] upon them; but with another kind of look; so as he looked through the pillar of fire upon the Egyptians, and troubled them, (<021424>Exodus 14:24); with a look of wrath and vengeance. The arguments he uses are taken both from the quantity and quality of his enemies, their number and their nature; for they are many; the hearts of the people of Israel, in general, being after Absalom, (<101512>2 Samuel 15:12,13); and so the spiritual enemies of the Lord’s people are many; their sins and corruptions, Satan, and his principalities and powers, and the men of this world; and they hate me with cruel hatred; like that of Simeon and Levi, (<014907>Genesis 49:7); their hatred broke out in a cruel manner, in acts of force and cruelty; and it was the more cruel, inasmuch as it was without cause: and such is the hatred of Satan and his emissaries against the faithful followers of Christ; who breathe out cruelty, thirst after their blood, and make themselves drunk with it; even their tender mercies are cruel, and much more their hatred.

Ver. 20. O keep my soul, etc.] Or “life”[f407], which was in danger, his enemies seeking for it; wherefore he applies to God that gave it, and who had hitherto held him in it, to preserve it. God is the keeper of has people in a spiritual sense; they cannot keep themselves from sin, Satan, and the world; but he is able to keep them from falling, and therefore they pray to him that he would keep them; and they have reason to believe they shall be kept by his power, through faith, unto salvation; and deliver me; as out of the hands of his present enemies, so from all evil, from the evils of the world, from the evil one, Satan, from the evil of sin, and out of all affliction and troubles;

let me not be ashamed; for I put my trust in thee; (see Gill on “<192502>Psalm 25:2”).

Ver. 21. Let integrity and uprightness preserve me, etc.] Meaning either his own, as in (<190708>Psalm 7:8 26:1); and then the sense is, either that God would preserve him, seeing he had acted the faithful and upright part in the government of the people of Israel, and they had rebelled against him without a cause; (see <197872>Psalm 78:72); or that those might be continued with him, that he might not be led aside by the corruptions of his heart, and the temptations of Satan, and by the provocations of his rebellious subjects, to act a part disagreeable to his character, as a man of integrity and uprightness; but that these remaining with him, might be a means of keeping him in the ways of God, (<201306>Proverbs 13:6); or else the integrity and uprightness of God are designed, which are no other than his goodness and grace to his people, and his faithfulness in his covenant and promises, or his lovingkindness and his truth; (see <194011>Psalm 40:11);

for I wait on thee: in the use of means for deliverance and safety; the Targum is, “for I trust in thy word”.

Ver. 22. Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles.] David was not only concerned for himself, but for the whole nation of Israel, which was involved in trouble through this unnatural rebellion of his son, and many of his subjects; and no doubt he may have a further view to the redemption of the church of God, the spiritual Israel, by the Messiah; and his sense may be, that God would send the promised Redeemer and Saviour, to redeem his people from all their iniquities; from the law, its curses and condemnation; to ransom them out of the hands of Satan, that is stronger than they; and to deliver them from all their enemies, and from death itself, the last enemy, which will put an end to all their troubles, (<233510>Isaiah 35:10).

PSALM 26

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 26

Psalm of David

The occasion of this psalm seems to be the quarrel between Saul and David, the former listening to calumnies and reproaches cast upon the latter, and persecuting him in a violent manner. The argument of it is the same, in a great measure, with the seventh psalm, and is an appeal made to God, the Judge of the whole earth, by the psalmist, for his innocence and integrity; Theodoret thinks it was written by David when he fled from Saul.

Ver. 1. Judge me, O Lord, etc.] Meaning not that God would enter into judgment with him, in respect to the justification of his person in his sight, which he knew was not by his own righteousness and integrity, but by the righteousness of God; but his view is, to the justification of his cause before men; and particularly to the difference between Saul and him; and entreats that God would interpose, take his cause in hand, judge between them, and vindicate him;

for I have walked in mine integrity; or "perfection"[f408] not that he thought himself free from sin; this would be contrary to the complaints, confessions, and petitions frequently made by him; but that in the affair with which he was accused, of seeking Saul's harm, (<092409>1 Samuel 24:9); he was quite innocent: by his "integrity" he means the purity of his intentions and designs; the uprightness of his conduct, the simplicity and sincerity of his conduct towards all men, and especially his fidelity to his prince; but though he knew nothing by himself, and could not charge himself with any wrong action in this respect, and therefore ought to be acquitted before men; yet he did not expect hereby to be justified in the sight of God;

I have trusted also in the Lord; not in himself, in the sincerity of his heart, and the uprightness of his life; nor did he trust to the goodness of his cause; but he committed it to the Lord, who judgeth righteously; and trusted in him that he should not be ashamed and confounded: this shows from whence his integrity sprung, even from faith unfeigned; for, where that is true and genuine, there are works of righteousness, and integrity of life;

[therefore] I shall not slide; these words may be connected with the former, thus; "I have trusted also in the Lord, that I shall not slide" [f409]; that is, shall not fail in judgment, or lose the cause; but shall stand and carry it, and not be confounded or condemned. Our version supplies the word "therefore", making these words to be an inference from the former, that because he trusted in the Lord, therefore he should not slide, slip, and fall; not but that true believers may not only have their feet well nigh slipped, but altogether; yea, fall, and that sometimes into great sins, to the breaking of their bones; but then they shall not totally and finally fall; for they stand by faith, and are kept through it by the power of God. The words may be considered as a prayer, "let me not slide" [f410]; being sensible of his own weakness, and of the necessity of being upheld in his uprightness, and in the ways of the Lord by him, that his footsteps might not slip; for though he walked in his uprightness, he was not self-sufficient and self-confident, but dependent on the Lord.

Ver. 2. Examine me, O Lord, etc.] His cause, his integrity, and trust in the Lord, as silver and gold are examined by the touchstone, the word of God, which is the standard of faith and practice; and prove me; or "tempt me" [f411]; as Abraham was tempted by the Lord; and his faith in him, and fear of him, and love to him, were proved to be true and genuine;

try my reins and my heart; the thoughts, desires, and affections of it, as gold and silver are tried in the furnace; and so God sometimes tries the faith and patience of his people by afflictive providences; and this examination, probation, and trial, are made by him, not for his own sake, who knows the hearts and ways of all men; but for the sake of others, to make known either to themselves or others the truth of grace that is in them, and the uprightness of their hearts and ways; and it was on this account the psalmist desired to pass under such an examination.

Ver. 3. For thy lovingkindness [is] before mine eyes, etc.] The special lovingkindness of God, shown in the choice of him in Christ, in the provision of a Saviour for him, and in the effectual calling of him; which lovingkindness is unmerited, free, and sovereign, is from everlasting and to everlasting; it is better than life, excellent beyond expression, and marvellous: and this may be said to be “before [his] eyes”; because it was now in sight; he had a comfortable view of interest in it, and was persuaded nothing should separate him from it; it was upon his heart, shed abroad in it, and he was affected with it; it was in his mind, and in his thoughts, and they were employed about it; he had it in remembrance, and was comfortably refreshed with it: and this he mentions as the reason of his laying his cause before the Lord, as the ground of his trust in him, and why he desired to be examined, proved, and tried by him; and I have walked in thy truth; by faith in Christ, who is the truth of all promises, prophecies, types, and figures; in the word of truth, by abiding by it, and walking according to it; and in the truth of worship, in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord; and to walk herein he used himself to, and was constant in, as the word [f412] signifies: and nothing more engages to walk on in Christ, as he has been received and to walk as becomes his Gospel, and in all holy conversation and godliness, than the love of God manifested to the soul; this being set continually before our eyes encourages faith and hope, and influences a holy life and cheerful obedience to the will of God.

Ver. 4. I have not sat with vain persons, etc.] Or “men of vanity” [f413]; who are full of it; who are addicted to the vanities of the world; who pursue the riches, honours, pleasures, and profits of it; which is no other than walking in a vain show: whose thoughts, words, and actions are vain; who are vainly puffed up in their fleshly mind, and walk in the vanity of it; who take the name of God in vain, and whose common discourse is foolish, frothy, light, and empty; and who are men of a vain conversation, and are rash, imprudent, and deceitful: men of bad principles may very well go by this name, who are vain and unruly talkers, and whose doctrines are doctrines of vanity, and no other than vain babbling; and also men guilty of idolatrous practices, who observe lying vanities, and worship them, and lift up their souls unto them; with such vain men, in any of these senses, the psalmist would have nothing to do; he would not keep company with them, nor have any communion, consultation, and conversation with them; it may be, he may have some respect to the men that were about Saul, to whom such a character agreed; or he may say this, and what follows, to remove a calumny cast upon him and his friends; as if they that were with him were such men as here described, and in (<192605>Psalm 26:5); neither will I go in with dissemblers: or “hidden” or “unknown” persons [f414], who lie in private lurking places, to murder the innocent, or secretly take away the good names and characters of men, and it is not known who they are; or who commit sin secretly; go into secret places to do their works in the dark, and hide themselves to do evil; as the Targum, Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, interpret it; who love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil; or who cover themselves with lying and flattering words, that it is not known what their real intentions be; they speak one thing, and mean another; are an assembly of treacherous men: such are all deceitful workers, who lie in wait to deceive, and walk in craftiness; and hypocrites, who have the form of religion, but are strangers to the power of it; and who are to be turned away from, and avoided; the houses, assemblies, cabals, and company of such, are to be shunned; (see <014906>Genesis 49:6 <240902>Jeremiah 9:2); or such as are “signed”, or “marked”; that is, infamous persons [f415].

Ver. 5. I have hated the congregation of evildoers, etc.] That do harm to the persons, characters, or properties of men; and who meet together in bodies, to consult and form schemes to do mischief, and have their assemblies to encourage each other in it; these, their works and actions, the psalmist hated, though not their persons; and showed his displicency at them, and dislike and disapprobation of them, by absenting from them; (see <241517>Jeremiah 15:17); and will not sit with the wicked; ungodly and unrighteous men, sons of Belial; for with such what fellowship and concord can there be? (<470614>2 Corinthians 6:14,15); the word [f416] signifies restless and uneasy persons, who cannot rest unless they do mischief; are like the troubled sea, continually casting up mire and dirt, (<235720>Isaiah 57:20,21); now, by all this the psalmist means not that good men should have no manner of conversation with the men of the world: for then, as the apostle says, we must needs go out of the world, (<460509>1 Corinthians 5:9,10). Conversation in civil things, in matters of trade and business, is lawful; though all unnecessary conversation in things of civil life is to be shunned; no more should be had than what natural relation and the business of life require; but all conversation in things criminal is to be avoided; company is not to be kept with them, so as to join them in anything sinful; this is to harden them in their evil ways, and it brings into danger and into disgrace: a man is known and is judged of by the company that he keeps; and evil communications corrupt good manners.

Ver. 6. I will wash my hands in innocency, etc.] The Vulgate Latin version renders it, “among innocent persons”; men of a holy harmless life and conversation; with these he determined to converse in common, and not with such as before described; or the sense is, that he would wash his hands, in token of his innocence, integrity, and uprightness, he had before spoke of, and of his having nothing to do with such evil men as now mentioned; (see <052106>Deuteronomy 21:6,7 <402724>Matthew 27:24); “hands” are the instrument of action, and to “wash” them may design the performance of good works, (<180930>Job 9:30); and to do this “in innocency”, or “purity”, may signify the performance of them from a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unfeigned; and particularly may have some respect to the lifting up of holy hands in prayer to God, previous to public worship; there seems to be an allusion to the priests washing their hands before they offered sacrifice, (<023019>Exodus 30:19-21);

so will I compass thine altar, O Lord; frequent the house of God, where the altar was, and constantly attend the worship and ordinances of God; the work of the altar being put for the whole of divine service; the altar of burnt offering is here meant, which was a type of Christ; (see <581310>Hebrews 13:10); reference is had to the priests at the altar, who used to go round it, when they laid the sacrifice on the altar, and bound it to the horns of it, at the four corners, and there sprinkled and poured out the blood; compare (<194304>Psalm 43:4); in order to which they washed their hands, as before; and in later times it was usual with the Heathens [f417] to wash their hands before divine service.

Ver. 7. That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, etc.] Or “cause to hear with the voice of confession” [f418]: the meaning is, that the view of the psalmist, in compassing the altar of God in the manner he proposed, was not to offer upon it any slain beast; but to offer the sacrifices of praise upon that altar, which sanctifies the gift, and from whence they come with acceptance to God; even for all mercies, both temporal and spiritual, and that with a confession and acknowledgment of sin and unworthiness; all this is agreeable to the will of God; it is well pleasing in his sight, what glorifies him, and is but our reasonable service; and tell of all thy wondrous works; of creation and providence; and especially of grace and redemption; this is the business of saints in God’s house below, and will be their employment in heaven to all eternity. Jarchi on the place says, that this song of praise has in it what relates to future times, to Gog, to the days of the Messiah, and to the world to come.

Ver. 8. Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, etc.] Meaning the tabernacle, for as yet the temple was not built; which was an habitation for the saints, where they chose to dwell, and reckoned it their happiness, and was the habitation of the Lord himself: the sanctuary was built for that purpose; and between the cherubim, over the mercy seat, he took up his residence; hence it follows, and the place where thine honour dwelleth: or “glory”[f419]: when the tabernacle was set up, the glory of the Lord filled it, as it did the temple, when it was dedicated, (<024035>Exodus 40:35). The psalmist expresses his love to this place, in opposition to the, congregation of evildoers, which he hated, (<192605>Psalm 26:5); and to remove a calumny from him, that being among the Philistines, and at a distance from the house of God, his affections were alienated from it; whereas it was his greatest concern that he was debarred the privileges of it; (see <194201>Psalm 42:1,2 63:1) (<092619>1 Samuel 26:19); besides, he had showed his great regard to it by his constant attendance before his exile, as he did after it, (<194203>Psalm 42:3 55:14); and it was out of pure love to the worship of God, and with real pleasure and delight, that he did attend; and not through custom, and in mere form, (<19C201>Psalm 122:1 84:1,2,10). The Lord’s house is loved by his people, because of his word and ordinances, which are ministered there, and because of his presence in it: or else what was typified by the tabernacle in here designed; either the tabernacle of Christ’s human nature, called the true tabernacle, (<580802>Hebrews 8:2); in which the fulness of the Godhead dwells; which the Son of God, the brightness of his Father’s glory, inhabits; and in the redemption and salvation wrought out in it the glory of all the divine attributes is displayed; and Christ incarnate is the mercy seat from which God communes with his people, and is their way of access unto him, and whereby they have fellowship with him; and who is loved by the saints sincerely, above all creatures and things, and in the most ardent and affectionate manner: or heaven itself, of which the tabernacle was a figure, (<580924>Hebrews 9:24); which is the habitation of the holiness and glory of God, and in which are many mansions or dwelling places for his people; and is the continuing city they seek, the heavenly and better country they are desirous of, and where their hearts and affections are; because there their God, their Saviour, and their treasure be; which sense seems to be confirmed by what follows.

Ver. 9. Gather not my soul with sinners, etc.] Profligate and abandoned ones, such as are notoriously profane, and who live and die impenitent ones; otherwise all men are sinners: the sense is, either that he desires that he might not, by any means, be brought into the company of such persons, be joined unto them, and have a conversation with them, which would be uncomfortable, dishonourable, and dangerous; or that God would not destroy him with them; and that he might not die the death of the wicked, nor be gathered with them at death: death is often expressed by a man's being gathered to his people, and to his fathers; (see <122220>2 Kings 22:20); the body is gathered to the grave, the soul returns to God that gave it, and has its place assigned by him; the souls of the righteous are gathered into heaven, Christ's garner; the souls of the wicked into hell; the psalmist deprecates being gathered with them; nor my life with bloody men; that thirst after blood, lie in wait for it, shed it, and are drunk with it, as the antichristian party; these God abhors and detests; nor shall they live out half their days, and their end is miserable.

Ver. 10. In whose hands [is] mischief, etc.] Every abominable wickedness; as idolatry, adultery, murder, etc. the word signifies and is sometimes used for mischief conceived in the mind, artificially devised and contrived there; here mischief committed, the hand being the instrument of action, and intends whatever is prejudicial to the person, character, and properties of men; and their right hand is full of bribes; whereby the eyes of judges are blinded, the words of the righteous perverted, men's persons respected, and judgment wrested, (<051619>Deuteronomy 16:19).

Ver. 11. But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity, etc.] In which he had hitherto walked, (<192601>Psalm 26:1); or it may express his faith, that after he was gathered by death he should walk in uprightness and righteousness, in purity and perfection, with Christ in white, and behold the face of God in righteousness; (see <235701>Isaiah 57:1,2); redeem me; from the vain conversation of the wicked, from all troubles, and out of the hands of all enemies;

and be merciful unto me; who was now in distress, being persecuted by Saul, and at a distance from the house of God: this shows that mercy is the source and spring of redemption, both temporal and spiritual; and that the psalmist did not trust in and depend upon his present upright walk and conversation, but in redemption by Christ, and upon the mercy of God in Christ.

Ver. 12. My foot standeth in an even place, etc.] Or “in a plain” [f420]; in a sure place; on Christ the sure foundation, and who is the plain way and path to eternal life; (see <192711>Psalm 27:11); or in the ways and worship of God, prescribed by his word; and so denotes steadfastness and continuance in them;

in the congregations will I bless the Lord; in the assemblies of the saints, in the churches of Christ below, and in the great congregation above, in the general assembly and church of the firstborn; where it is the work of saints now, and will be hereafter, to praise the Lord, for all his mercies temporal and spiritual.

PSALM 27

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 27

[A Psalm] of David. The Septuagint interpreters add to this title, “before he was anointed”. David was anointed three times, first when a youth in his father’s house; but this psalm could not be written before that time, because he had not had then any experience of war, nor could be in any immediate apprehension of it, as here suggested; he was anointed a second time, after the death of Saul at Hebron, by the men of Judah; before that time indeed he had been harassed by Saul, and distressed by the Amalekites, and was driven from the public worship of God, to which he has a respect, (<192704>Psalm 27:4); and he was a third time anointed, by the elders of Israel, king over all Israel; and between the death of Saul and this unction there was a war between the house of David and the house of Saul; but what is referred to is not certain, nor is it of moment, since these words are neither in the Hebrew text, nor in the Chaldee paraphrase. Theodoret is of opinion this psalm was written by David when he fled from Saul, and came to Ahimelech the priest.

Ver. 1. The Lord [is] my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? etc.] The Targum in the king of Spain’s Bible explains it, “the Word of the Lord is my light”; and so Ainsworth cites it; that is, Christ the eternal Word, in whom “was life, and that life was the light of men”, (<430104>John 1:4); and the psalmist is not to be understood of the light of nature and reason, with which the Logos, or Word, enlightens every man that comes into the world; nor merely in a temporal sense, of giving him the light of prosperity, and delivering him from the darkness of adversity; but of the light of grace communicated to him by him who is the sun of righteousness, and the light of the world; and by whom such who are darkness itself, while in an unregenerate state, are made light, and see light; all the light which is given to men at first conversion is from Christ; and all the after communications and increase of it are from him; as well as all that spiritual joy, peace, and comfort they partake of, which light sometimes signifies, (<199711>Psalm 97:11); and which the psalmist now had an experience of; enjoying the light of God’s countenance, and having discoveries of his love, which made him fearless of danger and enemies: and such who are made light in the Lord have no reason to be afraid of the prince of darkness; nor of the rulers of the darkness of this world; nor of all the darkness, distress, and persecutions they are the authors of; nor of the blackness of darkness reserved for ungodly men; for their light is an everlasting one, and they are made meet to be partakers of the inheritance with the saints in light: and the more light they have, the less fear; and what made the psalmist still more fearless was, that Christ was his “salvation”; by the light which the Lord was to him, he saw his need of salvation, he knew that his own righteousness would not save him; he was made acquainted with the design and appointment of the Lord, that Christ should be salvation to the ends of the earth; he had knowledge of the covenant of grace, and faith in it, which was all his salvation, (<10235>2 Samuel 23:5). Salvation was revealed to the Old Testament saints, in the promises, sacrifices, types, and figures of that dispensation; and they looked through them to him for it, and were saved by him, as New Testament believers are; and they had faith of interest in Christ, and knew him to be their Saviour and Redeemer, as did Job, and here the psalmist David: and such who know Christ to be their salvation need not be afraid of any person or thing; not of sin, for though they fear, and should fear to commit it, they need not fear the damning power of it, for they are saved from it; nor of Satan, out of whose hands they are ransomed; nor of the world, which is overcome by Christ; nor of the last enemy, death, which is abolished by him; nor of hell, and wrath to come, for he has delivered them from it;

the Lord [is] the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? meaning not of his natural life, though he was the God of his life, who had given it to him, and had preserved it, and upheld his soul in it; but of his spiritual life: Christ is the author of spiritual life, he implants the principle of it in the hearts of his people, yea, he himself is that life; he lives in them, and is the support of their life; he is the tree of life, and the bread of life, by which it is maintained; and he is the security of it, it is bound up in the bundle of life with him, it is hid with Christ in God; and because he lives they live also; and he gives unto them eternal life, so that they have no reason to be afraid that they shall come short of heaven and happiness; nor need they fear them that kill the body and can do no more; nor any enemy whatever, who cannot reach their spiritual life, nor hurt that, nor hinder them of the enjoyment of eternal life.

Ver. 2. When the wicked, [even] mine enemies and my foes, came upon me, etc.] They are wicked men, men of malignant spirits, and evildoers, who are the enemies and foes of the people of God, and who hate them with an implacable hatred, and do everything they can to distress and afflict them; and such enemies David had, who were many and mighty; and these “came upon” him, or “approached against” him[f421], they drew near to him to make war with him, as the word signifies[f422]; they attacked him in an hostile manner; and their view was, as he says, to eat up my flesh, as they eat bread, (<191404>Psalm 14:4); to devour him at once, to make but one morsel of him, to destroy his life, to strip him of his substance, to take away his wives and children, as the Amalekites at Ziklag, (<093001>1 Samuel 30:1-6);

they stumbled and fell; the Lord put stumbling blocks in their way, and retarded their march, and hindered them from executing their designs; and they fell into the hands of David, and were subdued under him, or fell by death; and these past instances of divine goodness the psalmist calls to mind, to keep up his heart and courage, and animate and strengthen him against the fears of men, of death and hell.

Ver. 3. Though an host should encamp against me, etc.] An host of the ungodly, as the Targum; though ever so many of them, even ten thousands of them, as in (<190306>Psalm 3:6); should beset him on every side;

my heart shall not fear; for not only the angels of the Lord encamped about him, as they do about all that fear the Lord; but salvation was appointed for walls and bulwarks about him; yea, the Lord himself was a wall of fire around him, and he was kept as in a garrison by the power of God;

though war should rise against me: in all its terrible shapes:

in this [will] I [be] confident; either in this war, in the midst of it; or in this that he had expressed, (<192701>Psalm 27:1); that the Lord was his light, his salvation, and the strength of his life; so the Jewish writers[f423]: or as others[f424], in this one thing, desired in (<192704>Psalm 27:4); but either of the former senses is best, especially the latter of them. Saints need not be afraid, though there is a war within them between the flesh and spirit; and though without are fightings with Satan and his principalities and powers; since they may be confident of victory, and that they are more than conquerors, through Christ that has loved them.

Ver. 4. One [thing] have I desired of the Lord, etc.] Not to be returned to Saul’s court; nor to his own house and family; nor to have an affluence of worldly riches and honours; but to have constant abode it, the house of the Lord; an opportunity of attending continually on the public worship of God; which is excused and neglected by many, and is a weariness to others, but was by the psalmist preferred to everything else; he being now deprived of it, as it seems; that will I seek after; by incessant prayer, until obtained; importunity and perseverance in prayer are the way to succeed, as appears from the parable of the widow and unjust judge; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life: not in heaven, Christ’s Father’s house, where he dwells, and where the saints, will dwell to all eternity; though to be clothed upon with the house from heaven is very desirable; rather, in the church of the living God, which is the house of God, and pillar of truth, where true believers in Christ have a place and a name, and are pillars that will never go out; but here the place of divine worship seems to be meant, where the Lord granted his presence, and where to dwell the psalmist counted the greatest happiness on earth; he envied the very sparrows and swallows, that built their nests on the altars in it; and reckoned a day in it better than a thousand elsewhere; and to have the privilege of attending all opportunities in it, as long as he lived, is the singular request he here makes: the ends he had in view follow;

to behold the beauty of the Lord, or “the delight [and] pleasantness of the Lord” [f425]; to see the priests in their robes, and doing their office, as typical of Christ the great High Priest; and the Levites and singers performing their work in melodious strains, prefiguring the churches in Gospel times, singing to the Lord with grace in their hearts, and the four and twenty elders, and one hundred and forty four thousand, with the Lamb on Mount Zion, singing the song of redeeming love; and all the tribes and people of Israel, assembled together to worship God, representing the church of Christ as a perfection of beauty, having the beauty of the Lord upon her, and made perfectly comely through his comeliness; as it is a most delightful sight to see a company of saints attending Gospel worship, meeting together to sing, and pray, and hear the word, and wait upon the Lord in all his appointments; to see them walking in the faith and fellowship of the Gospel, and according to the order of it; this is next to the desirable sight of the bride, the Lamb’s wife, in the New Jerusalem state, having the glory of God upon her: moreover, it was a pleasant sight to a believer in those times to behold the sacrifices of slain beasts, which were figures of the better sacrifice of Christ, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; to which may be added other things that were to be seen by priests; as the ark of the Lord, which had the two tables in it, typical of Christ, the fulfilling end of the law for righteousness; and the table of shewbread, which pointed out Christ the bread of life, and his perpetual intercession for his people; and the golden candlestick, a type of the church, holding forth the word of life to others; with many other things, which, with an eye of faith, the saints of those times could look upon with delight and pleasure: also the presence of the Lord may be intended by his beauty, than which nothing is more desirable to the people of God, even to behold his smiling countenance, to see his face, and enjoy his favour, and to have fellowship with him, and with one another; and particularly the beauty and glory of the Lord Jesus Christ may be designed, represented by the Shechinah, or glory, which filled both the tabernacle and the temple; who being the brightness of his Father's glory, and fairer than the children of men, and altogether lovely and full of grace, is a very desirable object to be beheld by faith;

and to inquire in his temple; to seek the face of the Lord, to consult him in matters of difficulty and moment; to search after the knowledge of divine things, and to ask for blessings of grace, for which he will be inquired of by his people, to bestow them on them.

Ver. 5. For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion, etc.] This, with what follows, is given as a reason why the psalmist desired to dwell in the house of the Lord; because he considered it as a pavilion or booth, as the word [f426] signifies in which he should be hid by the Lord, in times of trouble and distress, either through the heat of persecution, or of inward anxiety of mind, caused by the working of a fiery law; the allusion being, as some think, to the shepherd's tent or booth, into which he sometimes takes a poor sheep, and protects it from the scorching heat of the sun at noon: and of such use is the tabernacle of the Lord; (see <230406>Isaiah 4:6);

in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; alluding either to the tents of generals of armies, who receive into them those whom they would protect from the insults and injuries of others; or rather to the most holy place in the tabernacle, called the secret place, (<260722>Ezekiel 7:22); typical of Christ, the hiding place of his, people, in whom their life is hid, and where it is safe and secure;

he shall set me up upon a rock; where he would be above and out of the reach of his enemies; meaning Christ, comparable to a rock for its height, he being higher than the kings of the earth, than the angels in heaven, than the heavens themselves, and much more than the sons of men; (see <196102>Psalm 61:2); and for shelter and safety, he being a munition of rocks, a strong tower, a place of defence, and rock of refuge; and for firmness, solidity, and strength, he being able to bear the whole weight of the building of the church, and every believer laid upon him; and for duration, he being more immovable than rocks and mountains; so that such who are set up upon him are in the most safe and secure state imaginable.

Ver. 6. And now shall mine head be lifted up, etc.] That is, when brought into the house of the Lord, hid in the secret of his tabernacle, and set upon the rock Christ; by this phrase he means, either that he should be then restored to his former happy and comfortable condition, as it is used in (<014013>Genesis 40:13); or that he should overcome all his enemies, and triumph over them, being exalted, as he adds, above mine enemies round about me; so that not only they should not be able to come at him, but should be subdued under him; therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy: attended with shouting and sounding of trumpets: in allusion to the blowing of trumpets at the time of sacrifice, (<041010>Numbers 10:10); Sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, with a joyful heart, for mercies received, offered up publicly in the house of the Lord, are here intended;

I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord; for whom praise waits in Zion, to whom it is due; he being the Father of mercies, the God of all comfort, and the author and giver of all blessings, temporal and spiritual.

Ver. 7. Hear, O Lord, [when] I cry with my voice, etc.] Which is to be understood of prayer, and that in the time of distress; and of vocal prayer, as distinguished from mental prayer; and the phrase denotes the vehemency and intenseness of it: and the request is, that the Lord would hear it; not only as he is omniscient and omnipresent, and so hears the prayers of all, good and bad; but as a God gracious and merciful, who sometimes very quickly hears, and answers in a gracious way, and sometimes seems to turn a deaf car, to shut out the prayers of his people, and cover himself with a cloud, that they should not pass through, or, however, defers an answer to it for a little while; yet, sooner or later, he always shows himself a God hearing prayer; have mercy also upon me; by delivering him out of his temporal distresses, and by forgiving his iniquities; and answer me; by speaking a word in season; commanding off the affliction he lay under, and by saying to him that his sins were forgiven him.

Ver. 8. [When thou saidst], seek ye my face, etc.] To seek the face of the Lord is to attend his house and ordinances, where he grants his presence; and with this view to enjoy his gracious presence, and the light of his countenance, not being content with bare attendance without it; it is to seek the Lord himself, and communion with him through Christ, the brightness of his glory, and the Angel of his presence; for the right way of seeking the Lord is in Christ, who is the way of access to him, and of acceptance and fellowship with him; and that by prayer and supplication for his sake, and with all the heart and soul; and this the Lord calls upon his people to do, in his word, in his providences, and by his Spirit moving upon their hearts, and inclining them to it, as follows;

my heart said unto thee, thy face, Lord, will I seek: it is an encouragement to believers to seek the Lord when he calls them to it; for it is a command with promise, that they shall find him, see his face, and enjoy his favour; and he never says to any, “seek ye my face, in vain”; and they always find it good for them to draw nigh to him: and as it is the best way of seeking God, when the heart is engaged in it, so it is a token for good; and it looks as though the Lord had a mind to manifest himself, and grant the favour sought for, when he inclines the hearts of his people to pray unto him for it; and this the psalmist makes mention of as taking encouragement from it, to hope and believe that the Lord would hear and answer him, and have mercy on him; because he had bid him seek his face, and he found his heart ready to do it.

Ver. 9. Hide not thy face [far] from me, etc.] Yea, not at all from him; for the word “far” is not in the text: this is sometimes the case of the best of men, and was of the psalmist at times, and might be now, notwithstanding his strong expressions of faith and joy in the preceding verses; for frames are very changeable things; and this case is consistent with the everlasting and unchangeable love of God to his people; though they are ready to impute it to wrath and anger, and is what is very cutting and grievous to them; and therefore deprecate it as the psalmist does here, put not thy servant away in anger; either cast him not away from thy presence, as being angry with him, though there is just reason for it; or suffer him not to go away angry, fretting and murmuring: he makes mention of his relation to God as a servant, as he was; not only by creation as a man, and by his office as a king, but by efficacious grace as a converted man; and this only as descriptive of himself, and as acknowledging his dependence on the Lord, and his obligation to him; but not as a reason why he should be regarded by him, for he knew he was but an unprofitable servant;

thou hast been my help; leave me not, neither forsake me: which request, as the rest, he might put up in faith; for God will not leave his people destitute of his presence finally and totally; nor to themselves and the corruptions of their hearts, nor to the temptations of Satan; nor will he forsake the work of his hands, the work of grace upon their hearts; or so forsake them as that they shall perish: and that the Lord would not leave nor forsake him in such sense, the psalmist had reason to conclude; since he had been his help in times past, a present help in time of trouble; and his arm was not shortened, his power was the same to help as ever, and so were his inclination and will; since he could also call unto him, and upon him, as follows:

O God of my salvation; the author both of his temporal, spiritual, and eternal salvation; and what might he not hope for from him? salvation includes all blessings, both for soul and body, for time and eternity.

Ver. 10. When my father and my mother forsake me, etc.] Which is not to be understood strictly and literally of his parents, that were in that near relation to him according to the flesh, nor of anything that had past; not of his parents leaving him to shift for himself, after having brought him up; nor of his father being unmindful of him, when Samuel came to anoint one of his sons to be king; nor of any slight and neglect of him by them when persecuted by Saul; nor of their inability to help him then; (see <09220>1 Samuel 22:3,4); but this is to be understood of something supposed yet to come; and it seems best to interpret it of his nearest and dearest friends, his closest adherents, best counsellors, and most firm allies; that when they should fail and drop him, his God would not leave him: the design of it is to set forth the love and care of God, as superior to that of the most affectionate friends; (see <234914>Isaiah 49:14-16);

then the Lord will take me up; like a foundling in the street, and such are called, in the Talmudic language, “persons gathered up”[f427]; and so the words may be rendered here, “then the Lord will gather me”[f428]; into his arms and bosom, and under the wings of his protection, and at last to himself in glory.

Ver. 11. Teach me thy way, O Lord, etc.] Of providence, grace, and duty; (see Gill on “<192504>Psalm 25:4”); and lead me in a plain path: as the path of truth is to those that understand and find knowledge; and as the way of holiness is, even to such who in other things are fools, but shall not err therein, (<200809>Proverbs 8:9) (<233508>Isaiah 35:8); or the path of righteousness, in which Christ, the wisdom of God, and shepherd of his people, leads them, (<192303>Psalm 23:3 <200820>Proverbs 8:20);

because of mine enemies, or “those that observe me”; who eyed him as Saul did, (<091809>1 Samuel 18:9); and waited for his halting, as Jeremiah’s familiars did for him; and lay in wait to deceive him, and lead him out of the way, as false teachers do; and come upon him at an unawares, and take every advantage against him, as Satan does.

Ver. 12. Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies, etc.] It is a dreadful thing for a man to be given up to his own heart’s lusts, and to be delivered up into the hands of Satan; who would fain have even the people of God themselves in his hands, that he might distress them at pleasure, if not destroy them; and also to be suffered to fall into the hands of wicked men, whose tender mercies are cruel;

for false witnesses are risen up against me; laying to his charge, that he sought to take away from Saul his crown and kingdom, and even his life, (<092409>1 Samuel 24:9); and such as breathe out cruelty; as Doeg the Edomite, whose tongue was as a sharp razor, and by whose hands four score and five priests were slain, on account of David’s being supplied with bread by Ahimelech; the word is in the singular number; (see <195201>Psalm 52:1-4 <092218>1 Samuel 22:18); compare with this clause (<440901>Acts 9:1); and Horace’s phrase, “Spirabat amores”[f429].

Ver. 13. [I had fainted], etc.] When false witnesses rose up against him, and threatened to take away his life, and the life of his friends, in the most barbarous and cruel manner: the people of God are subject to faintings, in the present state of things; by reason of afflictions; because of the nature, number, and continuance of them; and especially when they apprehend them to be in wrath and sore displeasure: and on account of their sins, and the corruptions of their hearts; fearing lest there should be no pardon for them; or that the true work of grace is not in them; or that they shall fall, to the dishonour of the name of God, and to the reproach of his, cause and interest; or that they shall perish eternally: likewise, by reason of Satan’s temptations, which are sometimes so grievous, that if Christ did not pray for them, their faith would fail; and also on account of the hidings of God’s face, which they cannot bear: they are sometimes ready to faint in the way of their duty, in the course of their profession, because of the difficulties and discouragements, reproaches and persecutions, they meet with; and sometimes in the expectation of blessings; and of the fulfilment of promises, and of answers of prayer, which have been long deferred. This clause is not in the original text, but is a supplement of our translators; and it is generally agreed there is a defect of expression, which must be supplied in some way or other: the Jewish interpreters generally refer it to the preceding words; one supplies thus [f430], “those false witnesses would have rose up against me, and consumed me”; another [f431] after this manner, “mine enemies had almost got the dominion over me”; a third [f432], “I had almost perished at their sayings”: and a fourth [f433], “and they would have destroyed me”. Perhaps it may be as well supplied from (<19B992>Psalm 119:92); “I should then have perished in mine affliction”; it follows, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living: both the providential goodness of the Lord, in supplying him with the, necessaries of life, and in delivering him out of the hands of his enemies; and his special goodness, which he has laid up in his covenant, and in his son; even all spiritual blessings in Christ, in whom he causes all his goodness to pass before his people. The psalmist believed that he should “see”; that is, enjoy all these, or whatever was needful for him; all the good things of life, all special favours; as supports under afflictions, views of pardoning grace under a sense of sin, strength against Satan’s temptations, and deliverance out of them; the discoveries of the love of God, and the light of his countenance, after desertions, and divine refreshments in his house, from his word and ordinances; and at last all the glories of the other world; and faith in these things is the best antidote against faintings. By “the land of the living” may be meant either the land of Canaan, where the living God was worshipped, and living saints dwelt, in opposition to other lands, the habitations of men dead in sins; and at a distance from which David now might be; or else the world in general, in opposition to the place and state of the dead; or, as some think, heaven, or he life of the world to come, as Kimchi expresses it; and so Apollinarius paraphrases it,

> “I shall see the blessed God with my eyes in the land of the blessed.”

The word alwl, rendered “unless”, is one of the fifteen words which are extraordinarily pointed in the Hebrew Bible.

Ver. 14. Wait on the Lord, etc.] This, with what follows, is spoken by the psalmist either to himself or to others, or it may be to both, upon the rich experience he declares in (<192713>Psalm 27:13): it becomes believers to wait on the Lord for the common blessings of life, for even the eyes of all wait upon him for their daily food; and for the light of his countenance, when it is withdrawn from them, for he will return again at the set time; and for answers of prayer, which will be given sooner or later; and for the performance of his promises, which are yea and amen in Christ: they should wait upon him in his house and ordinances constantly, with reverence and godly fear; they should wait upon him as servants on their masters, observe his orders, and diligently execute them; and, as beggars for their alms, they should knock and wait at Wisdom’s gates, tell their case and wait, take repulses and wait, and, when they succeed, give thanks. It is good to wait upon the Lord; many are the favours and blessings such receive now, and eye has not seen what God has prepared for them that wait for him;

be of good courage; the saints have need of courage, considering the enemies they have to grapple with; the corruptions of their own hearts, the enemies of a man’s own house; the worst of all, Satan, and his principalities and powers; and men of the world, and a world of them: and they have great reason, notwithstanding, be of good courage, since God is for them; Christ is the Captain of their salvation; the Holy Spirit, that is in them, is greater than he that is in the world; angels encamp around them; they are provided with the whole armour of God; they are engaged in a good cause, are sure of victory, and shall wear the crown of righteousness; and it follows, and he shall strengthen thine heart; that is, the Lord will do it, as he has promised to them that wait on him, (<234031>Isaiah 40:31 41:10); or “let thine heart be strengthened”: as the Septuagint render it; and so the Chaldee paraphrase, “strengthen thine heart”; taking it for an exhortation; as indeed it seems to be by what goes before and follows; (see <060106>Joshua 1:6,9);

wait, I say, on the Lord; this is repeated, to express the importance of this duty, and to encourage to it.

PSALM 28

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 28

[A Psalm] of David

This psalm, Aben Ezra says, David either composed himself, or one of the singers for him; the former seems most likely; and it might be made by him when he was persecuted by Saul, or when delivered from him; or at least when he had faith and hope that he should be delivered: the psalm consists of two parts, petitions and thanksgivings.

Ver. 1. Unto thee will I cry, etc.] This denotes the distress the psalmist was in, fervency and ardour in prayer, resolution to continue in it, and singularity with respect to the object of it; determining to cry to the Lord only; to which he was encouraged by what follows;

O Lord my rock; he being a strong tower and place of defence to him, in whom were all his safety, and his trust and confidence, and in whom he had an interest;

be not silent to me; or “deaf” [f434]; persons that do not hear are silent, and make no answer; as the Lord seems to be, when he returns no answer to the cries of his people; when he does not arise and help them; when he seems not to take any notice of his and their enemies, but stands at a distance from them, and as if he had forsaken them; (see <193912>Psalm 39:12 35:22,23 50:3,21 <236506>Isaiah 65:6); the words may be considered, as they are by some, as an address to Christ his rock, his advocate and intercessor; that he would not be silent, but speak for him, and present his supplications to God, with the much incense of his mediation; (see <090708>1 Samuel 7:8); lest, [if] thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit; either like such that fall into a ditch, and cannot help themselves out, and they cry, and there is none to take them out from thence; or like such that die in battle, and are cast into a pit, and there buried in common with others; which David might fear would be his case, through Saul’s violent pursuit after him; or lest he should be like the dead, who are not regarded, and are remembered no more; or lest he should really die by the hands of his enemies, and so be laid in the grave, the pit of corruption; or be in such distress and despair as even the damned in hell be, the pit out of which there is no deliverance.

Ver. 2. Hear the voice of my supplications, etc.] Which proceed from the Spirit of grace and of supplication, and are put up in an humble manner, under a sense of wants and unworthiness, and on the foot of grace and mercy, and not merit;

when I cry unto thee; as he now did, and determined he would, and continue so doing, until he was heard;

when I lift up my hands toward thy holy oracle: the holy of holies, in the tabernacle and in the temple, which was sometimes so called, (<110623>1 Kings 6:23); compared with (<140310>2 Chronicles 3:10); where were the ark, the mercy seat, and cherubim, between which the Lord dwelt, and gave responses to his people; or heaven itself, which the holy of holies was a figure of; where is the throne of God, and from whence he hears the prayers of his people directed to him; or else Christ himself, who is the most Holy, and the “Debir”, or Oracle, who speaks to the Lord for his people; and by whom the Lord speaks to them again, and communes with them. The oracle had its name, “debir”, from speaking. Lifting up of the hands is a prayer gesture, and here designs the performance of that duty to God in heaven, through Christ; (see <250341>Lamentations 3:41 <540208>1 Timothy 2:8); it was frequently used, even by the Heathens, as a prayer gesture [f435]; (see <19E102>Psalm 141:2).

Ver. 3. Draw me not away with the wicked, etc.] That is, with those who are notoriously wicked; who are inwardly and outwardly wicked; whose inward part is very wickedness, and who sell themselves and give up themselves to work wickedness: the sense is, that God would not suffer him to be drawn away, or drawn aside by wicked men, but that he would deliver him from temptation; or that he would not give him up into their hands, to be at their mercy; who he knew would not spare him, if they had him in their power; or that he might not die the death of the wicked, and perish with them; (see <192609>Psalm 26:9,10); and with the workers of iniquity; who make it the trade and business of their lives to commit sin; and which may be applied, not only to profane sinners, but to professors of religion, (<400723>Matthew 7:23); since it follows, which speak peace to their neighbours, but mischief [is] in their hearts; hypocrites, double minded men, who have a form of godliness, but deny the power of it; pretend to religion, and have none; and speak fair to the face, but design mischief and ruin; as Saul and his servants did to David, (<091817>1 Samuel 18:17,22).

Ver. 4. Give them according to their deeds, etc.] According to the demerit of them, which is death, even death eternal; and according to the wickedness of their endeavours; for though wicked men do not always succeed; yet their want of success does not excuse their wickedness; give them after the work of their hands; (see <550414>2 Timothy 4:14);

render to them their desert; what their iniquities, in thought, word, and deed, deserve: such petitions are not contrary to that Christian charity which the Gospel recommends; nor do they savour of a spirit of revenge, which is condemned by the word of God; for it should be observed, that these things are said with respect to men given up to a reprobate mind; and that the psalmist does not seek to avenge himself, nor to gratify his own mind; but he sought the glory of God, and moreover spoke by a prophetic spirit, knowing what was the will of God in this case; (see <192805>Psalm 28:5); and therefore these petitions of his are not to be drawn into an example in common and ordinary cases.

Ver. 5. Because they regard not the works of the Lord, etc.] Neither the work of creation, as if there was no first cause of all things; nor the work of Providence, taking no notice either of the judgments or of the mercies of God; as though they believed that God had forsaken the earth, and would do neither good nor evil; and still less the work of redemption, which in covenant, promise, and prophecy, was appointed for the Messiah to work out; and as for the work of the Spirit of God upon the soul, they had no notion of that, of the nature and necessity of it; the things of the Spirit of God being foolishness to them, and undiscernible by them; (see <230512>Isaiah 5:12). Perhaps the psalmist may have some regard to his being anointed by Samuel, according to the will of God, and to the victory which he obtained over Goliath, and over others, which justly gained him great esteem among some, and created envy in others; and also the wonderful protection of him from time to time; the Chaldee paraphrase is, “because they do not understand the law of the Lord”. It follows, nor the operation of his hands; in which his hand was so very apparent, that nothing less could be said than that this was the finger of God; wherefore, he shall destroy them, and not build them up; that is, they shall be irrecoverably lost; they shall be punished with everlasting destruction; there will be no help or remedy for them: some [f436] understand this as a prayer, that God would destroy them in such a manner, and render it, "let him destroy them", etc. [f437].

Ver. 6. Blessed [be] the Lord, etc.] Which must be understood, not as invoking nor as conferring a blessing on him, neither of which can be done by a creature; nor does he stand in need of any, he being Elshaddai, God all sufficient, God over all, blessed for ever; but as ascribing all blessedness to him, congratulating his greatness and happiness, and giving him praise and glory for mercies received; and particularly for the following:

because he hath heard the voice of my supplications; what he had prayed for, (<192802>Psalm 28:2); an answer was quickly returned, even while he was speaking, (<236524>Isaiah 65:24); though this may be an expression of faith, being fully persuaded and assured that he was heard, and would be answered, and may be said by a prophetic spirit; knowing that what he had humbly asked for would be granted; so Aben Ezra and Kimchi understand it in a way of prophecy.

Ver. 7. The Lord [is] my strength, etc.] That is, the author both of natural and spiritual strength; that gave him strength of body, and fortitude of mind, to bear up under all the exercises he was tried with; the strength of his life, spiritual and temporal, and of his salvation; the strength of his heart under present distresses, and who he knew would be so in the hour of death, when his heart and strength would fail;

and my shield; to protect and defend him; as were the love, power, and faithfulness of God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, his power and fulness, his blood, righteousness, and salvation;

my heart trusted in him; in the Lord as his strength and shield; not in any creature, nor in his own strength and righteousness; but in the Lord God, in whom are righteousness and strength: and it is plain he did not trust in his own heart, since his heart trusted in the Lord; and which shows that his trust was an hearty one, his faith was a faith unfeigned, he believed with the heart unto righteousness;

and I am helped: this was the fruit of his trust, even a gracious experience of divine assistance: saints are helpless in themselves, and are also as to the help of man; God is the only helper of them; he helps them out of all their troubles; in whatsoever he calls them unto, and to what they want; and the help he affords is sometimes quick, and always seasonable; and sometimes by means, and sometimes without them;

therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; that is, in the Lord, the ground of which was the help he had from him; and this joy was very great, a joy unspeakable, and full of glory; it was not carnal, but spiritual, a heart joy, joy in the Holy Ghost;

and with my song will I praise him; praise is due to God, what glorifies him, and is acceptable to him; it becomes the saints, is comely for them, and it is pleasant work to them, when grace is in exercise; (see <196930>Psalm 69:30,31); this may be understood of one of his songs, and one of the best of them, and of one better than this, as a Jewish writer [f438] observes.

Ver. 8. The Lord [is] their strength, etc.] The strength of his people, mentioned in (<192809>Psalm 28:9); not only the strength of David in particular, but of all his people in general; (see <193739>Psalm 37:39);

and he [is] the saving strength of his anointed; meaning either himself, as before, who was anointed by Samuel king of Israel, and therefore had not invaded and thrust himself into an office he had no call and right unto; or the Messiah, the Lord's Anointed, whom he heard, helped, and strengthened in the day of salvation, and delivered him from the power of death and the grave, and raised him from thence, and gave him glory; (see <192006>Psalm 20:6).

Ver. 9. Save thy people, etc.] The psalmist begins the psalm with petitions for himself, and closes it with prayers for the people of God; whom God has chosen for his people, taken into covenant to be his people, and given them to his son as such; these he has resolved to save, and has appointed Christ, and sent him into the world, to be the Saviour of them; and to them he makes known and applies the great salvation by his Spirit: so that this prayer was a prayer of faith, as are also the following petitions; and bless thine inheritance; the people whom the Lord has chosen for his inheritance, and has given to Christ as his portion, and are his peculiar possession; and these he blesses with all spiritual blessings, with grace here, and glory hereafter, as is requested;

feed them also; as the shepherd does his flock, by leading them into green pastures, by giving them the bread of life, by nourishing them with the word and ordinances, by the means or his ministering servants, who are under-shepherds appointed to feed the saints with knowledge and understanding;

and lift them up for ever; above their enemies, and out of the reach of them; bear and carry them now, as the shepherd does his lambs, in his arms and bosom; and raise them out of their graves, and give them the dominion in the morning of the resurrection, and cause them to reign as kings and priests with Christ, as they ever will.

PSALM 29

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 29

A Psalm of David

In the Vulgate Latin version is added, “at the finishing of the tabernacle”; suggesting that this psalm was composed at that time, and on that occasion; not at the finishing of the tabernacle by Moses, but at the finishing of the tent or tabernacle which David made for the ark in Zion, (<100617>2 Samuel 6:17). The title in the Arabic version is,

> “a prophecy concerning the incarnation, ark, and tabernacle.”

In the Septuagint version, from whence the Vulgate seems to have taken the clause, it is, at the “exodion”, “exit”, or “going out of the tabernacle”; that is, of the feast of tabernacles; and which was the eighth day of the feast, and was called trx[, which word the Septuagint renders εξοδιον, the word here used, (<032336>Leviticus 23:36 <042935>Numbers 29:35); though it was on the first of the common days of this feast that this psalm was sung, as Maimonides[f439] says. Some think it was composed when the psalmist was in a thunder storm, or had lately been in one, which he in a very beautiful manner describes. Kimchi thinks it refers to the times of the Messiah; and it may indeed be very well interpreted of the Gospel, and is very suitable to Gospel times.

Ver. 1. Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, etc.] The Targum refers this to the angels, > “give praise before the Lord, ye companies of angels, sons of the Mighty;”

these are mighty ones, and excel all other creatures in strength; and are the sons of the Mighty, or of God; it is their duty and their business to glorify and to worship him and his Son Jesus Christ, as they do continually; but rather the princes and great men of the earth are here meant, who are so called, (<198201>Psalm 82:1,6,7 89:6,7 <460126>1 Corinthians 1:26); and these, as they receive much honour and glory, both from God and man; and because they are apt to seek their own glory, and ascribe too much to themselves, are called upon particularly to give glory to God; and the more, inasmuch as they may be the means of engaging their subjects, by their influence and example, to do the same, and who may be included in them; for this is not to be understood of them exclusive of others, as appears from (<199607>Psalm 96:7-9); moreover, all the saints and people of God may be intended, who are all princes and kings; and may be said to be mighty, especially those who are strong in faith; and these are they who give most glory to God;

give unto the Lord glory and strength; give glory to Jehovah the Father, by celebrating the perfections of his nature; by commending the works of his hands, the works of creation; by acquiescing in his providential dispensations; by returning thanks to him for mercies received, temporal and spiritual; particularly for salvation by Christ, and, above all, for Christ himself; by exercising faith in him as a promising God; by living becoming his Gospel, and to the honour of his name: give glory to the Son of God, by ascribing all divine perfections to him, by attributing salvation to him, and by trusting in him alone for it: give glory to the Spirit of God, by asserting his deity, by referring the work of grace and conversion to him, and by depending upon him for thee performance of the good work begun: give "strength" to each person, by acknowledging that power belongs to them, which is seen in creation, redemption, and the effectual calling; or else strength may mean the same thing as praise and glory; (see <190802>Psalm 8:2), compared with (<402116>Matthew 21:16); and both may design strong praise and glory, expressed in the strongest and with the greatest vigour and vehemency of spirit.

Ver. 2. Give unto the Lord the glory due to his name, etc.] Or "the glory of his name"[f440]: which is suitable to his nature, agreeable to his perfections, and which belongs unto him on account of his works;

worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness; the Lord is only to be worshipped, and not any creature, angels or men; not Jehovah the Father only, who is to be worshipped in spirit and in truth; but the Son of God, and the Holy Ghost also, being of the same nature, and possessed of the same perfections; and that with both internal and external worship; and in true holiness, in which there is a real beauty: holiness is the beauty of God himself, he is glorious in it; it is the beauty of angels, it makes them so glorious as they are; and it is the beauty of saints, it is what makes them like unto Christ, and by which they are partakers of the divine nature; and in the exercise of holy graces, and in the discharge of holy duties, should they worship the Lord; unless this is to be understood of the place of worship, the sanctuary, or holy place in the tabernacle; or rather the church of God, which holiness becomes; but the former sense seems best.

Ver. 3. The voice of the Lord [is] upon the waters, etc.] What follows concerning thunder, the voice of the Lord, gives so many reasons why he should have glory given him and be worshipped; the Heathens [f441] paid their devotion to thunder and lightning: but this should be done to the author of them; which may be literally understood of thunder, and is the voice of the Lord; (see <191813>Psalm 18:13 <184009>Job 40:9); and which is commonly attended with large showers of rain, (<241013>Jeremiah 10:13); and is very terrible upon the waters, and has its effect there, (<19A407>Psalm 104:7); and this is the rather mentioned, because that there is a God above, who is higher than the mighty, who are called upon to give glory to him, and because that thunder has been terrible to kings and great men of the earth; or this may be figuratively interpreted of the voice of Christ in the Gospel, which reaches to many nations and people, compared to waters, (<661715>Revelation 17:15). The disciples had a commission to preach it to all nations, and the sound of their words went into all the world, (<451018>Romans 10:18);

the God of glory thundereth; this shows that thunder may be meant by the voice of the Lord, who is glorious in himself, and in all his works; and may be applied to the Gospel of Christ, who is the Lord of glory, and whose ministers, at least some of them, are sons of thunder; (see <460208>1 Corinthians 2:8 <410317>Mark 3:17);

the Lord [is] upon many waters; that is, his voice is, as before, which is thunder; and that this belongs to God, the Heathens were so sensible of, that they called their chief deity Jupiter Tonans [f442].

Ver. 4. The voice of the Lord [is] powerful, etc.] Or “with power” [f443]; as thunder, in the effect of it, shows; and so is the Gospel, when it comes, not in word only, but is attended with the power of God to the conversion and salvation of souls; it is then quick and powerful, (<580412>Hebrews 4:12); and the word of Christ personal, when here on earth, was with power, (<420432>Luke 4:32);

the voice of the Lord [is] full of majesty; Christ, in his state of humiliation, spake and taught as one having authority; and now, in the ministration of his Gospel by his servants, he goes forth with glory and majesty, (<194503>Psalm 45:3,4).

Ver. 5. The voice of the Lord breaketh the cedars, etc.] Such an effect thunder has upon the tallest, strongest, and largest trees, as to break them into shivers;

yea, the Lord breaketh the cedars of Lebanon; a mountain in the north part of the land of Judea, so called from its whiteness, both by reason of the snow with which some part of it is covered in summer, as Tacitus observes [f444]; and partly from the colour of the earth that has no snow on it, which looks as white as if it was covered with white tiles, as Maundrell [f445] says; and where the goodliest cedars grow; and to which may be compared proud, haughty, lofty, and stouthearted sinners, who are broken, brought down, and laid low, by the voice of Christ in his Gospel, his power attending it. The Targum renders it, “the Word of the Lord”.

Ver. 6. He maketh them also to skip like a calf, etc.] That is, the cedars, the branches being broken off, or they torn up by the roots, and tossed about by the wind; which motion is compared to that of a calf that leaps and skips about;

Lebanon and Sirion, like a young unicorn; that is, these mountains move and skip about through the force of thunder, and the violence of an earthquake attending it; so historians report that mountains have moved from place to place, and they have met and dashed against one another [f446]. Sirion was a mountain in Judea near to Lebanon, and is the same with Hermon; which was called by the Sidonians Sirion, and by the Amorites Shenir, (<050309>Deuteronomy 3:9). This may regard the inward motions of the mind, produced by the Gospel of Christ under a divine influence; (see <233506>Isaiah 35:6 40:4-8).

Ver. 7. The voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire.] Or “cutteth with flames of fire” [f447]; that is, the thunder breaks through the clouds with flames of fire, or lightning, as that is sometimes called, (<19A532>Psalm 105:32); and with which it cleaves asunder trees and masts of ships, cuts and hews them down, and divides them into a thousand shivers. Some refer this, in the figurative and mystical sense, to the giving of the law on Mount Sinai [f448], on which the Lord descended in fire, and from his right hand went a fiery law; but rather this may be applied to the cloven or divided tongues of fire which sat upon the disciples on the day of Pentecost, as an emblem of the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit bestowed on them; though it seems best of all, as before, to understand this of the voice of Christ in the Gospel, which cuts and hews down all the goodliness of men, and lays them to the ground, (<280605>Hosea 6:5); and is of a dividing nature, and lays open all the secrets of the heart, (<580412>Hebrews 4:12); and, through the corruption or human nature, is the occasion of dividing one friend from another, (<421251>Luke 12:51,52); and like flames of fire it has both light and heat in it; it is the means of enlightening men's eyes to see their sad estate, and their need of Christ, and salvation by him; and of warming their souls with its refreshing truths and promises, and of inflaming their love to God and Christ, and of setting their affections on things above, and of causing their hearts to burn within them.

Ver. 8. The voice of the Lord shaketh the wilderness, etc.] The ground of it, the trees in it, and the beasts that harbour there; and causes them to be in pain, and to bring forth their young, as the [f449] word signifies, and as it is rendered in (<192909>Psalm 29:9); all which effects thunder produces, and may mystically signify the preaching of the Gospel among the Gentiles, and the consequence of it. The Gentile world may be compared to a wilderness, and is called the wilderness of the people, (<262035>Ezekiel 20:35); the inhabitants of it being ignorant, barren, and unfruitful; and the conversion of them is expressed by turning a wilderness into a fruitful land, (<233501>Isaiah 35:1,2,6,7 41:18,19); and the Gospel being sent thither has been the means of shaking the minds of many with strong and saving convictions; which made them tremble and cry out, what shall we do to be saved?

the Lord shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh; which was the terrible wilderness that the children of Israel passed through to Canaan's land; the same with the wilderness of Zin, (<043336>Numbers 33:36); and was called Kadesh from the city of that name, on the borders of Edom, (<042001>Numbers 20:1,16); the Targum paraphrases it, in the Targum in the King's Bible it is,

> "The word of the Lord shaketh the wilderness of Rekam;"

> "makes the serpents in the wilderness of Rekam to tremble;"

but that thunder frightens them, I have not met with in any writer.

Ver. 9. The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve, etc.] Which being timorous creatures, the bringing forth of their young, which is naturally very painful and difficult, is lessened and facilitated by thunder; they being either so frightened with it that they feel not their pains; or their pains, being hastened by it, become more easy; and naturalists observe, that the time of bringing forth their young is at that season of the year when thunder is most frequent; (see <183901>Job 39:1-4). Thunder has a like effect on sheep, and makes them abortive[f450]: this may be applied to the Gospel, which is the means of bringing forth souls to Christ by his churches and ministers; who may very fitly be compared to hinds for their love and loveliness, their swiftness and readiness to do the will of Christ, and their eager desires after communion with him, (<200519>Proverbs 5:19 <191802>Psalm 18:2,3 42:1); and discovereth the forests; or "maketh bare"[f451]: by beating off the leaves and branches of trees, and them to the ground; or by causing the wild beasts that frequent them to retire to their holes and dens; which effects are produced by thunder; and this aptly agrees with the Gospel, which is a revelation of secrets, of the thickets and deep things of God; of his council, covenant, mind, and will; and of the mysteries of his grace to the sons of men, and generally to babes, or men of their capacities; and of its stripping them of all their own righteousness, and dependence on it;

and in his temple doth everyone speak of [his] glory; either in heaven, where angels and glorified saints are continually employed in speaking of his glorious name, nature, and works; or in the temple, or tabernacle at Jerusalem, where the Levites stood to praise the Lord morning and evening, and where the tribes went up to worship, and to give thanks unto the Lord, (<132330>1 Chronicles 23:30 <19C204>Psalm 122:4); or the church of God, which is the temple of the living God, whither saints resort, and where they dwell, and speak of the glory of God, of his divine perfections, and of his works of creation and providence; and of the glory of the person of Christ, and salvation by him; and of the glorious work of grace begun in their souls by the blessed Spirit; for hither such as have heard the voice of Christ, and have felt the power of it, and have found it to be a soul-shaking, an heart-breaking, and an illuminating voice, come, and declare it to the glory of the grace of God.

Ver. 10. The Lord sitteth upon the flood, etc.] Noah's flood; which is always designed by the word here used, the Lord sat and judged the old world for its wickedness, and brought a flood upon them, and destroyed them; and then he abated it, sent a wind to assuage the waters, stopped up the windows of heaven, and the fountains of the great deep, and restrained rain from heaven; and he now sits upon the confidence of waters in the heavens, at the time of a thunder storm, which threatens with an overflowing flood; and he remembers his covenant, and restrains them from destroying the earth any more: and he sits upon the floods of ungodly men, and stops their rage and fury, and suffers them not to proceed to overwhelm his people and interest; and so the floods of afflictions of every kind, and the floods of Satan’s temptations, and of errors and heresies, are at his control, and he permits them to go so far, and no farther;

yea, the Lord sitteth King for ever: he is King of the whole world, over angels and men, and even the kings of the earth; and he is also King of saints, in whose hearts he reigns by his Spirit and grace; and the Gospel dispensation is more eminently his kingdom, in which his spiritual government is most visible; and this will more appear in the latter day glory, when the Lord shall be King over all the earth; and after which the Lord Christ will reign with his saints here a thousand years, and then with them to all eternity, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Ver. 11. The Lord will give strength unto his people, etc.] His special people, his covenant people, whom he has chosen for himself; these are encompassed with infirmities, and are weak in themselves; but there is strength for them in Christ: the Lord promises it unto them, and bestows it on them, and which is a pure gift of his grace unto them; this may more especially regard that strength, power, and dominion, which will be given to the people of the most High in the latter day; since it follows, upon the account of the everlasting kingdom of Christ; the Lord will bless his people with peace: with internal peace, which is peculiar to them, and to which wicked men are strangers; and which arises from a comfortable apprehension of justification by the righteousness of Christ, of pardon by his blood, and atonement by his sacrifice; and is enjoyed in a way of believing; and with external peace in the latter day, when there shall be no more war with them, nor persecution of them; but there shall be abundance of peace, and that without end; and at last with eternal peace, which is the end of the perfect and upright man; and the whole is a great blessing.

PSALM 30

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 30

A Psalm [and] Song [at] the dedication of the house of David

This is the first time that a psalm is called a song; some psalms are called by one name, some by another, and some by both, as here; and some are called hymns: to which distinction of them the apostle refers in (<490519>Ephesians 5:19). A psalm was sung upon musical instruments, a song with the voice; it may be this psalm was sung both ways: the occasion of it was the dedication of David's house: the Targum interprets it of the house of the sanctuary, the temple; and so most of the Jewish commentators[f452]; which might be called his house, because it was his intention to build it; his heart was set upon it, he provided materials for it, and gave his son Solomon the form of it, and a charge to build it; and, as is thought, composed this psalm to be sung, and which was sung by the Levites at the dedication of it: others, as Aben Ezra, are of opinion it was his own dwelling house, made of cedar, which he dedicated according to the law of Moses, with sacrifices and offerings, prayer and thanksgiving, (<100511>2 Samuel 5:11 7:2 <052005>Deuteronomy 20:5); so Apollinarius calls it a new house David built; but since there is nothing in the whole psalm that agrees with the dedication, either of the temple, or of David's own private house, it seems better, with other interpreters, to understand it of the purging of David's house from the wickedness and incest of his son Absalom, upon his return to it, when the rebellion raised by him was extinguished; which might be reckoned a new dedication of it; (see <102003>2 Samuel 20:3); and to a deliverance from such troubles this psalm well agrees. Theodoret interprets it of the restoration of the human nature by Christ, through his resurrection from the dead.

Ver. 1. I will extol thee, O Lord, etc.] Or "lift thee up on high"[f453]. The Lord is high in his name, he is the most High; and in his nature, there is none besides him, nor like unto him; and in place, he dwells in the high and holy place; he is above all, angels and men; he is above all gods; he is the King of kings, and Lord of lords; he cannot be higher than he is: to extol him, therefore, is to declare him to be what he is; to exalt him in high praises of him, which the psalmist determined to do, for the following reasons; for thou hast lifted me up; or “drawn me up”, or “out”[f454]; from the pit of nature; the low estate of unregeneracy; the pit wherein is no water: the horrible pit, the mire and clay of sin and misery, in which all men, while unconverted, are; and out of which they cannot lift themselves, being without strength, yea, dead in sin: this is God’s work; he takes out of this pit, he draws out of it by his efficacious grace; he raises up the poor out of the dust, and lifts up the beggar from the dunghill; and this is an instance of his grace and mercy, and requires a new song of praise: or this may regard some great fall by sin, from which he was restored, through the grace and power of God; or deliverance from great troubles, compared to waters, out of which he was drawn, (<191816>Psalm 18:16); and was lifted up above his enemies; and agrees very well with his being brought to his palace and throne again, upon the defeat of Absalom;

and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me; as Satan does over unregenerate sinners, when he possesses their hearts, and keeps the house and goods in peace; and as the men of the world do over fallen saints, when forsaken by the Lord, and afflicted by him, and are under the frowns of his providence; but the conspirators against David were not suffered to succeed and rejoice over him, which they otherwise would have done; and for this he praises the Lord.

Ver. 2. O Lord my God, I cried unto thee, etc.] In the time of his distress and trouble; and whither should he go but unto his covenant God and Father?

and thou hast healed me: either of some bodily disease that attended him; for the Lord is the physician of the body, as well as of the soul; and that either immediately, or by giving a blessing to means used; and the glory of such a mercy should be given to him: or else of soul diseases, which are natural and hereditary, epidemical, nauseous, mortal, and incurable, but by the grace of God and blood of Christ; and the healing: of them either respects the pardon of them at first conversion; for healing diseases, and forgiving iniquities, signify one and the same thing; or else fresh discoveries and applications of pardoning grace, after falls into sin, which are an healing backslidings, and restoring comforts; and this is God’s work; none can heal but himself, and he does it effectually, universally, and freely, and which calls for thankfulness, (<19A301>Psalm 103:1-3); or this may be understood in a civil sense, of restoring him to his house, his throne and kingdom, and the peace of it.

Ver. 3. O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave, etc.] When his life being in danger, was near unto it, (◁183322▷Job 33:22,28); otherwise the soul dies not, nor does it lie and sleep in the grave; or "thou hast brought up my soul from hell"[f455]; that is, delivered him from those horrors of conscience and terrors of mind, by reason of sin, which were as hell itself unto him; (see ◁191603▷Psalm 116:3 Jon 2:4); thou hast kept me alive: preserved his corporeal life when in danger, and maintained his spiritual life; and quickened him by his word, under all his afflictions, and kept him from utter and black despair;

that I should not go down to the pit; either of the grave or hell. There is in this clause a "Keri" and a "Cetib"; a marginal reading, and a textual writing: according to the latter it is, "from them that go down to the pit"; which some versions[f456] follow; that is, thou hast preserved me from going along with them, and being where and as they are: our version follows the former; the sense is the same.

Ver. 4. Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of his, etc.] Such to whom he has been gracious and merciful, and has blessed with pardoning grace, and justifying righteousness, adoption, and a right to eternal life; and who are holy godly persons; in whose hearts principles of grace and holiness are formed; and who are kind and bountiful to others: all which the word[f457] here used signifies: and these are the Lord's; they are set apart for him, and they are sanctified by him; and therefore should sing his praises, both vocally, and with melody in their hearts; and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness; which is essential to him, and in which he is glorious; and which appears in all his ways and works of providence and grace, and both in the redemption and sanctification of his people; and besides this, there is the holiness of Christ, which is imputed to his saints, and the sanctification of the Spirit, which is wrought in them; and at the remembrance of each of these it highly becomes them to give thanks to the Lord, since hereby they are made meet to be partakers of his kingdom and glory.

Ver. 5. For his anger [endureth but] a moment, etc.] Anger is not properly in God, he being a simple, uncompounded, immovable, and unchangeable being; nor is it ever towards his people in reality, unless anger is distinguished from wrath, and is considered as consistent with his everlasting and invariable love to them; but only in their apprehension, he doing those things which in some respects are similar to those which men do when they are angry; he turns away from them and hides his face, he chides, chastises, and afflicts, and then they conclude he is angry; and when he returns again and takes off his hand, manifests his pardoning love, and comforts them, then they understand it that his anger is turned away from them; for in this improper sense of it, and as his children conceive of it, it is but for a moment, or a very short time: he forsakes them but for a moment, and their light afflictions endure no longer, (<235407>Isaiah 54:7,8 <470417>2 Corinthians 4:17);

in his favour [is] life; by which is meant his free love and favour in Christ towards his people; and designs either the duration of it, that it lives and always is, even when he seems to be angry, and that it lasts as long as life does, yea, to all eternity; neither death nor life can separate from it; or the object of it, God delighting not in the death but the life of a sinner; or rather the effects of it, it is what makes the present life to be properly life, and really comfortable; without it men may be said rather to be dead than to live, notwithstanding all enjoyments; and therefore it is better than life, abstracted from it, (<196303>Psalm 63:3); it quickens the soul in a spiritual sense, and makes grace lively; it invigorates faith, encourages hope, and makes love to abound, and it issues in eternal life;

weeping may endure for a night; the allusion is to the time when afflictions are usually most heavy and pressing upon persons, when they most feel them, or, however, are free from diversion, and at leisure to bemoan themselves; and may point at the season of weeping, and cause of it, the night of affliction, or of darkness and desertion, and denotes the short continuance of it; weeping is here represented as a person, and as a lodger, for the word may be rendered “lodge”[f458]; but then it is as a wayfaring man, who continues but for a night; (see <231714>Isaiah 17:14);

but joy [cometh] in the morning; alluding to the time when all nature is fresh and gay, when man rises cheerful from his rest, darkness removes, light breaks forth, and the sun rises and sheds its beams, and everything looks pleasant and delightful; moreover, the mercies of God are new every morning, which cause joy, and call for thankfulness; and especially it is a time of joy after weeping and darkness, when the sun of righteousness arises with healing in his wings; as it will be to perfection in the resurrection morn, when the dead in Christ will rise first, and be like to him, and reign with him for evermore.

Ver. 6. And in my prosperity, etc.] Either outward prosperity, when he was settled in his kingdom, and as acknowledged king by all the tribes of Israel, and had gotten the victory over all his enemies, and was at rest from them round about; or inward and spiritual prosperity, having a spiritual appetite for the word, being in the lively exercise of grace, growing in it, and in the knowledge of Christ; favoured with communion with God, having flesh discoveries of pardoning grace and mercy, corruptions being subdued, the inward man renewed with spiritual strength, and more fruitful in every good word and work. This being the case,

I said, I shall never be moved; so in outward prosperity men are apt to sing a requiem to themselves, and fancy it will always be thus with them, be in health of body, and enjoying the affluence of temporal things, and so put away the evil day in one sense and another from them; and even good men themselves are subject to this infirmity, (<182918>Job 29:18-20); and who also, when in comfortable frames of soul, and in prosperous circumstances in spiritual things, are ready to conclude if will always be thus with them, or better. Indeed they can never be moved as to their state and condition with respect to God; not from his heart, where they are set as a seal; nor out of the arms of Christ, and covenant of grace; nor out of the family of God; nor from a state of justification and grace; but they may be moved as to the exercise of grace and discharge of duty, in which they vary; and especially when they are self-confident, and depend upon their own strength for the performance of these things, and for a continuance in such frames, which seems to have been David’s case; and therefore he corrects himself, and his sense of things, in (<193007>Psalm 30:7).

Ver. 7. Lord, by thy favour thou hast made my mountain to stand strong, etc.] The psalmist found himself mistaken, and acknowledges it; that as it was not owing to his own merit that he enjoyed the prosperity that he did, so neither was the continuance of it owing to his goodness, power, and strength, but to the free grace and favour of God; as the church of God is compared to a mountain, and the several individuals of believers are like to Mount Zion, so the soul of a child of God may be called his mountain, which is made strong by the Lord as to its state in Christ, being set on him, the Rock of ages, and sure foundation, where it is safe and secure; and as to its grace, whenever it is in any strong exercise, which is altogether owing to the favour of God, and continues as long as he pleases; thou didst hide thy face, [and] I was troubled; the Lord may hide his face from his people, and yet their state be safe; their mountain stands strong in that respect; yet this generally produces a change of frames; it gives trouble, and faith and hope become feeble and languid in their acts and exercises; this shows the changeableness of frames, that they are not to be depended upon; that they are entirely owing to the pleasure of God, and that rejoicing only should be in him: very likely some regard is had to the affair of Absalom's rebellion, which came unawares, unthought of, when David was in the greatest prosperity and security.

Ver. 8. I cried to thee, O Lord, etc.] In his trouble, when the Lord had hid his face from him, and he was sensible that he had departed from him: he was not stupid and unaffected with it; nor did he turn his back upon God, and seek to others; but he cried after a departing God, which showed love to him, and some degree of faith in him, by looking again towards his holy temple, and waiting upon him until he returned; and unto the Lord I made supplication; in the most humble manner; entreating his grace and mercy, and that he would again show him his face and favour.

Ver. 9. What profit [is there] in my blood? etc.] Should that be shed, and he die by the hands of his enemies, through divine permission: death is not profitable to a man's self by way of merit; it does not atone for sin, satisfy justice, and merit heaven; even the death of martyrs, and of such who shed their blood, died in the cause of Christ, and for his sake, is not meritorious; it does not profit in such sense: there is profit in no blood but in the blood of Christ, by which peace is made, pardon procured, and redemption obtained. Indeed death is consequentially profitable to good men; it is an outlet of all sorrows and afflictions, and the inlet of joy and happiness; it is the saints' passage to heaven, and upon it they are immediately with Christ, and rest from their labours: nor is there profit in the blood of the saints to them that shed it; for when inquisition is made for it, vengeance will be taken on them who have shed it, and blood will be given them to drink, as will be particularly to antichrist: nor is there any profit in it to the Lord himself; which seems to be what is chiefly designed, since it is used by the psalmist as an argument with him in prayer, that he might not be left by him, and to his enemies, so as to perish, since no glory could accrue to God by it from them; they would not give him thanks for it, but ascribe it to themselves, and say their own hand had done it; so far, the psalmist suggests, would his death be from being profitable to God, that it would rather be a loss to the interest of religion; since he had not as yet fully restored religion, and settled the pure worship of God in order, and made the preparations for the building the house of God he intended. God may be glorified in the death of his people; either by their dying in the faith of interest in him; or by suffering death for his name’s sake; but, in a strict sense, there is nothing either in life or death in which man can be profitable unto God; (see <182202>Job 22:2,3 35:7,8); some understand this of life; because the life is in the blood: as if the sense was, of what advantage is life to me? it would have been better for the if I had never been born, had had no life and being at all, if I must for ever be banished from thy presence, and go down to the pit of hell, which they suppose is designed in the following phrase;

when I go down to the pit; though the grave seems rather to be meant, and the former sense is best;

shall the dust praise thee? that is, men, whose original is dust, being reduced to dust again, as the body at death, when laid in the grave, and corrupted there, is; this lifeless dust cannot praise the Lord: the soul indeed dies not with the body; nor does it sleep in the grave with it; nor is it unemployed in heaven; but is continually engaged in the high praises of God: but the sense of the psalmist is, that should he die, and be buried, and be reduced to dust, he should no more praise the Lord in the land of the living, among men, to the glory of divine grace and goodness; so that this revenue of his glory would be lost. Shall it declare thy truth? either the truth of the Gospel, which lies in the word of God; or rather the faithfulness of God in the performance of his promises; (see <194010>Psalm 40:10 <233818>Isaiah 38:18,19).

Ver. 10. Hear, O Lord, and have mercy upon me, etc.] By lifting up the light of his countenance again upon him; by manifesting and applying his pardoning grace to him, and by delivering him out of all his afflictions;

Lord, be thou my helper; in this time of trouble; for he knew that vain was the help of man; and he was entirely in the right to betake himself to the Lord, who was able to help him, when none else could.

Ver. 11. Those hast turned for me my mourning into dancing, etc.] This, with what follows, expresses the success he had in seeking the Lord by prayer and supplication; there was a sudden change of things, as it often is with the people of God; sometimes they are mourning by reason of sin, their own and others; or on account of afflictions; or because of spiritual decays; or through the temptations of Satan; or, as it was the case of the psalmist now, because of the hidings of God's face; but this mourning is exchanged for joy and gladness when the Lord discovers his pardoning love, revives his work in their souls, takes off his afflicting hand from them, rebukes the tempter, and delivers out of his temptations, and shows himself, his grace and favour;

thou hast put off my sackcloth; which was used in mourning for relations, and in times of calamity and distress, and as a token of humiliation and repentance, (<013734>Genesis 37:34 <170401>Esther 4:1 Jon 3:8); and girded me with gladness; by these phrases the same thing is signified as before; (see <236103>Isaiah 61:3).

Ver. 12. To the end that [my] glory may sing praise to thee, and not be silent, etc.] Meaning either his soul, the more noble and glorious part of him; or the members of his body, his tongue, which is the glory of it, and with which he glorified God; (see <191609>Psalm 16:9); compared with (<440226>Acts 2:26), this was the end that was to be answered by changing the scene of things; and which was answered;

O Lord my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever; to the end of life, as long as he had a being, and to all eternity, (<19A433>Psalm 104:33). Jerom interprets the whole psalm of the resurrection of Christ.

PSALM 31

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 31

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David

This psalm, according to Arama, was composed by David when in Keilah; but, according to Kimchi and others, when the Ziphites proposed to deliver him up into the hands of Saul; and who, upon their solicitations, came down and surrounded him with his army, from whom in haste he made his escape, and to which he is thought to refer in (<193122>Psalm 31:22). Theodoret supposes it was written by David when he fled from Absalom, and that it has some respect in it to his sin against Uriah, in that verse.

Ver. 1. In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust, etc.] Not in any creature, but in the Lord Jehovah; the Targum, "in thy Word"; the essential Logos, or Word, which was in the beginning with God, and was God, and so an equal object of faith, trust, and confidence, as Jehovah the Father: this act includes a trusting all with God, body and soul, and the welfare of them, in time, and to eternity; and a trusting him for all things, both of providence and grace, and for both grace and glory, and is a continued act; for the psalmist does not say, "I have trusted", or "I will trust", but "I do"; and this was a very consider able thing to do in this time of his distress: the Lord is to be trusted in at all times;

let me never be ashamed; neither in this world, nor in that to come. The believer has no reason to be ashamed of anything in this life but sin, and the imperfection of his own righteousness, and his trust in it; not of the Lord, in whom he trusts; nor of his Word, or Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom he believes as his Saviour and Redeemer; nor of the Spirit, and his work of grace upon him; nor of his faith, hope, trust, and confidence in them; nor of the Gospel, the means of faith, and of the support of it; nor of, the reproaches, afflictions, and sufferings, he endures for the sake of Christ and his Gospel; nor of his ordinances and his people; nor will he be ashamed hereafter at the coming of Christ, when he will appear in his righteousness, be clothed with white robes, have palms in his hands, and shall stand at his right hand, and be received into glory; deliver me in thy righteousness; not in his own, by which he knew there was no acceptance with God, no justification before him, nor any deliverance and salvation from sin and death; but by the righteousness of God, which the Son of God has wrought out, God the Father accepts of and imputes, and the Spirit of God reveals and applies; by this there is deliverance from sin, its guilt, and damning power, and from the curses and condemnation of the law, and from wrath to come, and from the second death.

Ver. 2. Bow down thine ear to me, etc.] Which is said after the manner of men, who, when they give attention, and listen to anything, stoop, and incline the ear; and this for God to do, as he sometimes does, is wonderful condescending grace!

deliver me speedily; which shows that he was in great danger, and his case required haste: the Lord does help right early, and is sometimes a present help in time of need, and delivers at once, as soon as the mercy is asked for;

be thou my strong rock: for shelter and security from enemies, as well as to build his everlasting salvation on, and to stand firmly upon, and out of danger;

for an house of defence to save me; both for an house to dwell in, Lord being the dwelling place of his people in all generations, and a strong habitation to which they may continually resort; and for protection and safety, their place of defence in him being the munition of rocks, a strong hold, and a strong tower from the enemy.

Ver. 3. For thou [art] my rock and my fortress, etc.] What he prayed for he knew him to be, and to have been in times past, and could claim his interest in him; and therefore entreats that he would appear to be to him what he was in himself, and what he had been to him; therefore for thy name’s sake lead me, and guide me; either as a shepherd does his flock, gently, as they are able to bear it; into the green pastures of the word and ordinances, and beside the still waters of divine love, and to the overflowing fountain, and fulness of grace in himself; or as a general leads and guides his army; Christ being a Leader and Commander of the people, and the great Captain of their salvation, and who being at the head of them, they fear no enemy; or as a guide leads and directs such as are ignorant, and out of the way. The psalmist desires the Lord would lead him in the way of truth and paths of righteousness, according to his word; and guide him with his counsel, and by his Spirit, that so he might walk in the way in which he should go; and this he entreats he would do “for [his] name’s sake”; not for any merit or worthiness in him; but for the glory of his own name, and for the honour of his free grace and mercy, for which the Lord often does many things; he defers his anger, he purges away the sins of his people, he forgives their transgressions, and remembers their sins no more, for his name’s sake.

Ver. 4. Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me, etc.] The Ziphites, and Saul, and his men; the former intending treacherously to betray him, and the latter encompassing him about in order to take him; and such was his danger and difficulty, that he saw none but God could deliver him; and he it is that breaks the nets of men, and the snares of the devil, which they secretly lay for the people of God, that they may stumble, and fall, and be taken, and delivers them out of them; for thou [art] my strength; the author, giver, and maintainer, both of his natural and spiritual strength; and who was able, and was only able, to pull him out of the net, and extricate him out of the difficulties in which he was.

Ver. 5. Into thine hand I commit my spirit, etc.] Either his life, as to a faithful Creator and Preserver, who was the God of his life, gave him it, and upheld his soul in it; or his soul, and the eternal salvation of it, which he committed into the hand of the Lord his Redeemer, where he knew it would be safe, and out of whose hands none can pluck; or this he might say, as apprehensive of immediate death, through the danger he was in; and therefore commits his spirit into the hands of God, to whom he knew it belonged, and to whom it returns at death, and dies not with the body, but exists in a separate state, and would be immediately with him. Our Lord Jesus Christ used the same words when he was expiring on the cross, and seems to have taken them from hence, or to refer to these, (<422346>Luke 23:46);

thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth; which may be understood, either of the temporal redemption of his life from destruction in times past, which encouraged him to commit his life into the hands of God now, who was the same, and changed not; or of spiritual and eternal redemption from sin by the blood of Christ, and which the psalmist speaks of as if it was past, though it was to come, because of the certainty of it; just as Isaiah speaks of the incarnation and sufferings of Christ, (<230906>Isaiah 9:6 53:4-6); and of which he was assured, because the Lord, who had provided, appointed, and promised the Redeemer, was the God of truth, and was faithful to every word of promise; and Christ, who had engaged to be the Redeemer, was faithful to him that appointed him; and having an interest therefore in this plenteous redemption, by virtue of which he was the Lord’s, he committed himself into his hands.

Ver. 6. I have hated them that regard lying vanities, etc.] Soothsaying and divination, as Aben Ezra and others think; made use of by kings, and generals of armies, to know when it was proper to go out to war, and what success they should have; (see <262121>Ezekiel 21:21-23 <280410>Hosea 4:10); but such men and their practices David abhorred; he took no such methods when in distress, but applied to the Lord, and trusted in him; or rather idol gods, as Jarchi, and others, who are vanity, and the work of errors, and are nothing in the world; (see Jon 2:8); all will worship and superstition may be included in this phrase, which being not according to the will and word of God, is worshipping in vain, and carries off from true spiritual worship; and so is a lying vanity, and to be detested, and the abettors of it: as also all errors and heresies; these are great swelling words of vanity, and are lies in hypocrisy; and likewise all immorality and wickedness, which spring from the vanity of the mind, and promise much liberty and pleasure, but deceive, and therefore lying; yea, all worldly enjoyments are vanity and vexation of spirit, and are fallacious and deceitful when trusted in; and indeed every false trust and confidence may come under this name; such as trust in riches, in wisdom and knowledge, in carnal descent, and privileges, in a moral and legal righteousness, and even in a bare profession of true religion, and a subjection to Gospel ordinances; for there is no true object of trust, no Redeemer and Saviour, but the Lord: now such as regard those lying vanities are they that look to them, love them, embrace them, and put their confidence in them; and such are to be “hated”; not their persons, but their principles and practices, and they themselves are to be shunned and abstained from;

but I trust in the Lord; the God of truth, that cannot lie, deny himself, nor deceive; who is unchangeable, and without any variableness, or shadow of turning.

Ver. 7. I will be glad, and rejoice in thy mercy, etc.] Both because of the nature of it, which is large and abundant, free and sovereign, from everlasting to everlasting, and is communicated in and through Christ, and is a good ground of hope and trust; and because of the effects of it, or what it has produced; for to it are owing the covenant of grace, and all the sure mercies of it; the mission of Christ, and redemption by him; regeneration, and the forgiveness of sins, and even eternal life and glory; besides a multitude of blessings, deliverances, and salvations in Providence; on account of all which there is great reason for joy and gladness; of which the following are particulars;

for thou hast considered my trouble; inward, arising from indwelling sin, doubts and fears, desertions and darkness, and Satan’s temptations; and outward, from the world, and the men of it, and by reason of bodily afflictions: now the Lord looks upon the troubles of his people, and upon them in them, with an eye of pity and compassion; he sympathizes with them; he considers the nature of their trouble, their weakness to bear it, and the best way, in tans, and time to deliver out of it; he working all things after the counsel of his own will; (see <020307>Exodus 3:7);

thou hast known my soul in adversities; that is, the Lord had took notice of him, approved of him, loved him, had visited him, and made known his love to him, and owned him for his own, and had chosen him in the furnace of affliction; a time and season when oftentimes friends and acquaintance are shy, and will not look upon men, know them, and own them; but the Lord does otherwise, and which is another reason of joy and gladness in his mercy.

Ver. 8. And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy, etc.] When in Keilah, in the wilderness of Ziph, and Maon, and encompassed about by Saul and his army, (<092307>1 Samuel 23:7,13,14,24-26); nor does the Lord suffer his people to be shut up under the power of sin and Satan, so that they cannot come forth in the exercise of grace, and the discharge of duty: but he brings their souls out of prison, that they may praise his name; thou hast set my feet in a large room; at full liberty from his enemies; Saul and his army being called off from pursuing him, by tidings of an invasion by the Philistines, (<092327>1 Samuel 23:27-29); and this is the case of the saints when they are brought to Christ, to walk by faith at large on him; when grace is drawn forth into exercise, and spiritual knowledge is increased, and they are delivered from their enemies; or, however, can look upon them as conquered ones, and are sure of victory over them, and at last of an entire deliverance from them; (see <190401>Psalm 4:1 18:19 118:5).

Ver. 9. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am in trouble, etc.] A sudden change of case and frame this! and so it is with the people of God; as soon as, out of one trouble, they are in another; these are what are appointed for them, and lie in their pathway to heaven, and are necessary; and under them it is quite right to betake themselves to the Lord, who is a merciful God; and it is best to cast themselves upon his mercy, having no merit of their own to plead with him; and they may freely tell him all their distresses, as the psalmist here does, and hope for grace and mercy to help them in time of need;

mine eye, is consumed with grief; expressed by tears; through the multitude of which, by reason of trouble, his sight was greatly harmed; according to Jarchi, the word signifies, that his sight was so dim as is a man’s when he puts a glass before his eyes, to see what is beyond the glass: this shows that the invention of spectacles was before the year 1105; for in that year Jarchi died; and proves it more early than any other writer has pretended to[f459]; for the commonly received opinion is, that they were invented at the latter end of the thirteenth or beginning of the fourteenth century; but the apostle, as A-Lapide thinks, respects them, in (<461312>1 Corinthians 13:12); and they are mentioned by Plautus[f460], who lived almost two hundred years before the birth of Christ: the same Jarchi observes on (<190607>Psalm 6:7);

[yea], my soul and my belly; perhaps he could not eat his food, or digest it, which brought upon him internal disorders, and even brought his soul or life into danger.

Ver. 10. For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing, etc.] Which shows the continuance of his troubles, and that his whole life had been, as it were, an uninterrupted series of sorrows;

my strength faileth because of mine iniquity; this opens the source and spring of all his grief and trouble; his sin, and the sin of his nature, in which he was conceived and born; indwelling sin, which remained and worked in him; and it may be also the sin of unbelief, which beset him, and prevailed in him, notwithstanding the instances of divine goodness, the declarations of grace, the discoveries of love, and the exceeding great and precious promises he had made to him; as also his daily sins and infirmities, and very likely some great backslidings, which had brought grief of soul upon aim, and which grief affected the several parts of his body. Sin was the cause of the failure of natural strength in Adam and his posterity; of diseases and death, by which their strength is weakened in the way; and was the cause of impairing moral strength in men to do that which is good, and has a very great influence on the spiritual strength of the Lord’s people, in the exercise of grace; and my bones are consumed; which are the firmest and strongest parts of the human body, and the support of it.

Ver. 11. I was a reproach among all mine enemies, etc.] This is a common case of the people of God; and though it may be the least of their afflictions, yet it is not grateful to the flesh; and it is as it is made: under divine supports saints rejoice, and take pleasure in reproaches, that they are counted worthy to bear them, and esteem them as great riches; at other times they seize and feed upon their spirits, and are ready to break their hearts;

but especially among my neighbours; who knew him, and knew he did not deserve to be so treated; and who ought, as neighbours, to have loved him, and done all good offices to him; so that this is an aggravation both of their sin and his distress; and a fear to mine acquaintance; not that they were afraid that he should do them any mischief; but they were afraid to own him, and to do him any service; unless the sense is, that they were afraid that evil would befall him, that he should not escape with his life; which, though it may express the affectionate concern of his friends, yet shows the danger he was exposed to;

they that did see me without fled from me; as if he had something very pestilential and infectious about him.

Ver. 12. I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind, etc.] Either by his friends, being out of sight, out of mind; as even the nearest relations and acquaintance are, in process of time, when dead, (<210905>Ecclesiastes 9:5); or by the Lord; which shows the weakness of his faith, the uncomfortable frame he was in, through darkness and desertion; (see <198805>Psalm 88:5 <234914>Isaiah 49:14-16);

I am like a broken vessel; or a “perishing vessel” [f461]; or “a vessel of perdition” [f462]: the Septuagint version renders it “a lost vessel” [f463]; one entirely useless, wholly lost, and irrecoverably so; like a broken vessel, which can never be put together again, (<233014>Isaiah 30:14 <241911>Jeremiah 19:11); a most sad apprehension he had of himself, as if his case was desperate, and he a vessel of wrath; compare with this, (<450922>Romans 9:22).

Ver. 13. For I have heard the slander of many, etc.] Both enemies and neighbours; fear [was] on every side; his enemies were a “Magormissabib” to him, (<242003>Jeremiah 20:3); encompassed him around, so that he was in fear from every quarter;

while they took counsel together against me; how to apprehend him, and what to do with him;

they devised to take away my life; nothing short of that would satisfy; but life is in the hand of God; men may devise, but God disappoints, and his counsel stands; hence the psalmist was encouraged, after all, to trust in him, in this time of imminent danger, as follows.

Ver. 14. But I trusted in thee, O Lord, etc.] His faith revived again under all the discouraging views he had of things, and was exercised upon the Lord; he committed himself to him, believing he was able to help him in his time of trouble, and deliver him;

I said, thou [art] my God; he claimed his covenant interest in him, and used it as an argument with him to have regard unto him, and as a support to his faith in his present distress; (see Gill on “<190701>Psalm 7:1”).

Ver. 15. My times [are] in thy hand, etc.] And not in the hand of his enemies; as his time of life and death, which was only by the direction and appointment of God, was in his power, and fixed by him; nor could his enemies take away his life before his time, and without the will of his covenant God: the time of his coming to the throne, and what was gone over him during his reign hitherto, (<132930>1 Chronicles 29:30); and all his times of trouble in it; times of prosperity and of adversity; of darkness, desertion, and temptation; and of joy, peace, and comfort; these were all in the hands of the Lord, at his disposal, and ordered by him for the good of his servant, and for the glory of his own name; and this was a quieting consideration to the psalmist under his present trials and exercises; the Targum is, “the times of my redemption” deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me; a good man has many enemies, and even his very goodness creates him such; for wicked men are enemies to all that is good; and those are persecuting ones, in one way or other; either by words or deeds; and deliverance out of their hands is by the Lord, who sometimes gives his people rest from adversity, and suffers not the rod of the wicked to continue on them; and therefore it is best to apply to him for it.

Ver. 16. Make thy face to shine upon thy servant, etc.] In which he prays for the gracious presence of God, the manifestations of himself unto him, the discoveries of his love, the enjoyment of him in Christ, communion with him, the comforts of his Spirit, and joys of his salvation; (see <040625>Numbers 6:25,26);

save me for thy mercies' sake; not for any merit and righteousness of his own, but for the sake of the grace and goodness of the Lord; which is putting salvation, whether temporal or spiritual, upon its right foot and foundation; which is never wrought out by, or is for works of righteousness done by men, but according to the grace and mercy of God.

Ver. 17. Let me not be ashamed, O Lord, etc.] The same petition as in (<193101>Psalm 31:1);

for I have called upon thee; who is nigh unto all that call upon him in truth, and is rich unto them, and has promised to help and save them; which should he not do, not only he would be made ashamed, but the promise of God would seem to fail: for the psalmist does not plead any duty of his, nor make a merit of his prayers; but has respect to the promise and faithfulness of God;

let the wicked be ashamed; as they will be, sooner or later, of their wickedness, and of their false trust and confidence; of their being incensed against Christ, and their rage against his people, and persecution of them;

[and] let them be silent in the grave; as all are that are there; and the sense is, let them be brought to the grave, where they will be silent, or cease [f464]; that is, from their evil words and works, and particularly from troubling the saints, (<180317>Job 3:17).

Ver. 18. Let the lying lips be put to silence, etc.] Being convicted of the lies told by them, and so silenced and confounded; or being cut off and destroyed, as all such will be in the Lord's own time, (<191203>Psalm 12:3). It is very likely the psalmist may have respect either to Doeg the Edomite, who loved lying rather than righteousness; or to others that were about Saul, who lying said to him that David sought his harm, even to take away his kingdom and his life, (<195203>Psalm 52:3 <092409>1 Samuel 24:9); which speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous; meaning himself; not that he thought himself righteous in the sight of God by any righteousness of his own, but by the righteousness of Christ imputed to him; (see <19E302>Psalm 143:2 <450406>Romans 4:6). Though he may have regard here to the righteousness of his cause before men, and assert himself righteous, as he might with respect to the “grievous things”, the hard and lying speeches, which were spoken against him, in a proud, haughty, and contemptuous manner. And it is no unusual thing for such false charges to be brought against righteous men; nay, such hard speeches were spoken by ungodly men against Jesus Christ the righteous himself, (<650115>Jude 1:15). The Targum interprets it of “reproaches”.

Ver. 19. [O] how great [is] thy goodness, etc.] Not the natural and essential goodness of God; for though that is large and abundant, yea, infinite, as every perfection of his is, yet it cannot with propriety be said to be laid up and wrought out; but rather the effects of his goodness, and not those which appear in Providence, for they, though very large and plenteous, are common to all, and are not restrained to them that fear the Lord, and trust in him; but such as are displayed in a way of special grace and favour to his own people, and which the psalmist saw his interest in and was affected with; and which supported his faith under his present troubles, and appeared to be so great, both for quality and quantity, that he could not well say how great the blessings of his goodness were;

which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; both grace and glory; the blessings of grace were laid up in God’s heart, in his thoughts and purposes, from everlasting; and in Christ, in whom the fulness of all grace dwells; he was loaded with the blessings of goodness, and his people were blessed in him with all spiritual blessings, and had all grace given them in him before the world was; and these were likewise laid up in the covenant of grace, ordered in all things, and sure; eternal glory is the hope and crown of righteousness laid up in heaven, where it is reserved for the saints, who are heirs of it: and the laying up of all this goodness shows it to be a treasure, riches of grace, and riches of glory; and that it is an hidden treasure, and riches of secret places, which are out of the view of carnal men, and not perfectly seen and enjoyed by the people of God themselves as yet; and also that it is safe and secure for them, and can never be lost;

and it expresses the paternal care of God, his great love and affection for them, to lay up so early so much goodness for them: and this is said to be “for them that fear [him]”; not naturally, but by his grace; for the fear of God is not in man naturally, but is put there by the grace of God; and such who have it are those who are brought to a true sight and sense of sin, so as to loathe it and forsake it; for the fear of the Lord is to hate evil, and by it men depart from it, and because of it cannot sin as others do; such have an humble sense of themselves, their own insufficiency and weakness, and trust in the grace of God and righteousness of Christ; they have a filial reverence of God, and worship him in spirit and in truth: but now this fear of the Lord is not the cause of goodness being laid up for them, for that only is the will of God; and besides the fear of God is a part of the goodness which is laid up in promise in the covenant of grace, (<243239>Jeremiah 32:39,40); and it is the goodness of God displayed in the blessings of it, such as pardon of sin, etc. which influences, promotes, and increases the fear of God, (<280305>Hosea 3:5 <19D004>Psalm 130:4); but, goodness being manifested to and bestowed upon them that fear the Lord, it appears eventually to be laid up for them;

[which] thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men! by which may be meant the work of redemption, in which the goodness of God greatly appears; in calling and appointing Christ unto it, in sending him to effect it, in strengthening him as man and Mediator to do it; and in the work itself, in which many things are wrought, the law is fulfilled, justice satisfied, a righteousness brought in, peace made, pardon procured, and everlasting salvation obtained. And whereas this is said to be “wrought for them that trust in” the Lord, it is not to be understood as if trusting in the Lord was the cause of this work being wrought out, which is the love of God and grace of Christ; but inasmuch as those that trust in the Lord have openly an interest in redemption, and they that believe in Christ shall be saved; therefore it clearly appears in the issue of things to be wrought out for them. The phrase “before the sons of men”, may be connected either with the goodness wrought, and so signifies that the work of redemption was done in a most public manner, openly before men, even the enemies of God’s people; nor was it in the power of men and devils to hinder it; or else with trusting in the Lord, and so is expressive of a public profession of faith and confidence in the Lord before men, which ought to be done: moreover this goodness wrought may include the good work of grace upon the soul; and the Lord’s fulfilling the good pleasure of his goodness in the hearts of his people, and the work of faith with power on them; and also the many deliverances of them out of afflictions and temptations, and the many salvations from their enemies he works for them in the earth, before the sons of men.

Ver. 20. Thou shall hide them in the secret of thy presence, etc.] That is, those that fear the Lord and trust in him; and therefore they are called his “hidden ones”, (<198303>Psalm 83:3); these the Lord preserves in times of trouble and danger, and when his indignation is out against others; and so the Targum is, “in the time of thine anger”; (see <232620>Isaiah 26:20); the presence of God is their protection, he himself is a wall of fire round about them, his favour compasses them as a shield, and they are kept as in a garrison by his power; (see <199101>Psalm 91:1); and that “from the pride of man”, which otherwise would at once oppress, bear them down, and destroy them, (<19C401>Psalm 124:1-5);

thou shall keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues; which areas a sharp sword, and from whence proceed devouring words, such contradiction of sinners as Christ endured; not that the saints are kept free from the reproaches of men, from the lash of their tongues, but from being harmed by them; and sometimes, through the strivings and contentions of men with one another, they privately escape and are preserved, as the Apostle Paul was, (<442309>Acts 23:9,10).

Ver. 21. Blessed [be] the Lord, etc.] A form of thanksgiving, in which the psalmist calls upon himself and others to bless and praise the Lord for the singular mercy granted him, expressed in the next clause; (see Gill on “<191846>Psalm 18:46”);

for he hath showed me his marvellous kindness in a strong city; either in the city Keilah, so Jarchi; a city which had gates and bars, where Saul thought he had David safe, and he could not escape his hands; but notwithstanding that, and though the inhabitants of that place intended to deliver him up, yet he was marvellously saved; as he also was from the Ziphites; and when Saul and his army had encompassed him about, by a surprising incident, a messenger coming to Saul just as he was about to seize him, informing him that the Philistines had invaded the land, (<092307>1 Samuel 23:7-29). Or the city of Jerusalem, which was fortified both by nature and art, whither he was brought and placed as king, and enjoyed rest from all his enemies round about him, (<100506>2 Samuel 5:6-9 7:1). Or this may spiritually design the church of God, which is called a strong city, being built on Christ the Rock, and having salvation for walls and bulwarks, (<232601>Isaiah 26:1): where the Lord displays his banner of love, makes discoveries of his marvellous kindness, and commands his blessing for evermore. Some render it “as in a strong city”[f465], and take the sense to be, that he was safe, through the kindness of God showed to him in the salvation of him, as if he was in a fortified city[f466], and this was marvellous in his eyes, as every instance of providential goodness is to the people of God; especially his lovingkindness showed in spiritual things, in choosing them in Christ, saving them by him, regenerating them by his Spirit, and taking them into his family; which love is free and sovereign, distinguishing, unchangeable, from everlasting to everlasting; and so wonderful and astonishing; and which was hid in God until revealed; and sometimes the manifestations of it are withdrawn, and then it is showed again, and fresh discoveries of it are made, and effects of it applied, and the blessings of it bestowed, which occasion thankfulness.

Ver. 22. For I said in my haste, etc.] When he made haste to get away for fear of Saul, (<092326>1 Samuel 23:26); and so the Targum renders it, “I said when I sought to flee away”; or else he said this hastily and rashly, in the hurry of his mind, being in the utmost confusion and distress, as in (<19B611>Psalm 116:11);

I am cut off from before thine eyes; his case was very bad, he was reduced to the utmost extremity, and his faith was as low; he thought it was all over with him, and there was no way of escape, nor hope of it; and that he was like a branch cut off, ready to be cast into the fire; that he was cut off from the house of God, and from communion with him; that he would never look upon him more, and he should never enjoy his presence: this instance of weakness and unbelief is mentioned to illustrate the goodness of God, and to make his kindness appear to be the more marvellous in the salvation of him; so sometimes the Lord suffers his people to be in the utmost distress, and their faith to be at the lowest ebb, when he appears to their help, and makes it manifest that their salvation is by his own arm, and of his own good will, and not by them, or for any goodness of theirs;

nevertheless, thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee; for though faith was very low, and unbelief strongly prevailed, yet he was not so far gone as to stop praying; for though he saw no rational way of escape, and feared the Lord would take no notice of him; yet he knew that nothing was impossible with him, and therefore he still looked up to him, as Jonah did when he thought himself in a like condition, (Jon 2:4); and such was the grace and goodness of God, that he did not despise but regard his prayer, though attended with so much weakness and unbelief.

Ver. 23. O love the Lord, all ye his saints, etc.] To whom his goodness extends; who are favoured with the blessings of his grace, as pardon, peace, and righteousness; and who particularly are sanctified by his Spirit, and have principles of grace and holiness wrought in their hearts: these, even all of them, are called upon to love the Lord, having that grace implanted in their souls; that is, to express it, not by words, but by deeds, under a sense of the love and kindness of God to them; and to join with the psalmist in an affectionate reverence of him, trust in him, and thankfulness to him, on account of his marvellous kindness showed him;

[for] the Lord preserveth the faithful; such as trust in him, believe in Christ, and are faithful to his word and ordinances, abide by them, and stays near his people; these he not only preserves in a providential way, but he preserves them in a way of special grace; he keeps them "from evil", as the Targum; from the evil of sin; from a total and final falling away by it; from the evil of the world, so as not to be drawn off from Christ and his ways, either by its frowns or flatteries; and from the evil one, Satan, from being destroyed by him and his temptations; and these are preserved safe to the kingdom and glory of Christ, by the mighty power of God: some render the words, "the Lord keepeth faithfulness" [f467]; he will never suffer his own faithfulness to fail; he is a covenant keeping God, and is always true to his word and promise; and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer; such as all self-righteous persons are, and all that speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the truly righteous, (<193118>Psalm 31:18); who bear hard upon them, and oppress them; and such as antichrist and his party, who exalts himself above all that is called God; but in what those deal proudly, God is above them, an more than a match for them, and he sets himself against them; he resists them, and will reward them according to their works.

Ver. 24. Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart, etc.] (See Gill on "<192714>Psalm 27:14"); by this instance of God's wonderful kindness to the psalmist, he would have the saints take heart, and be of good cheer, even in the greatest distresses, since their case cannot be worse than his was; and yet he had deliverance out of it; all ye that hope in the Lord; for the eye of the Lord is on such, and he takes delight in them, ([◁193318▷]Psalm 33:18 147:11). The Targum is, “who hope for”, or “trust in the word of the Lord”; the essential Word, the promised Messiah.

PSALM 32

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 32

[A Psalm], of David, Maschil

This is the first of the psalms that bears this title: some think it is the name of a musical instrument, on which this psalm was sung; others the first word of a song, to the tune of which it was sung, as Aben Ezra; some say it is so called, because it was explained by an interpreter, as Jarchi; and the Rabbins[f468] say, that every psalm that is called “Maschil” was dictated by an interpreter: the Targum renders it “a good understanding”; and the word properly signifies “instruction”, or “causing to understand”[f469]; and it may be the apostle has some reference to this title in (<461415>1 Corinthians 14:15); It is an instructive psalm; a didascalic ode, as Junius renders it: it gives an account how the psalmist was instructed under a dispensation of Providence; and was brought to a sense of sin, and acknowledgment of it; and was favoured with a discovery of pardoning grace; and in it he takes upon him to instruct others, (<193208>Psalm 32:8,9), and does instruct in the doctrine of the pardon of sin by the grace of God.

Ver. 1. Blessed [is he whose] transgression [is] forgiven, etc.] Or “lifted up”[f470]; bore and carried away: sin is a transgression of the law; the guilt of it charged upon the conscience of a sinner is a heavy burden, too heavy for him to bear, and the punishment of it is intolerable: forgiveness is a removal of sin, guilt, and punishment. Sin was first taken off, and transferred from the sinner to Christ, the surety; and who laid upon him really and judicially, as the sins of the people of Israel were put upon the scapegoat typically; and was bore by him, both guilt and punishment, and taken away, finished, and made an end of; and by the application of his blood and sacrifice it is taken away from the sinner’s conscience; it is caused to pass from him, and is removed afar off, as far as the east is from the west; it is so lifted off from him as to give him ease and peace, and so as never to return to the destruction of him; wherefore such a man is a happy man; he has much peace, comfort, calmness, and serenity of mind now can appear before God with intrepidity, and serve him without fear; no bill of indictment can hereafter be found against him; no charge will be exhibited, and so no condemnation to him. The same is expressed, though in different words, in the next clause;

[whose] sin [is] covered; not by himself, by any works of righteousness done by him; for these are a covering too narrow; nor by excuses and extenuations; for prosperity and happiness do not attend such a conduct, (<202813>Proverbs 28:13); but by Christ; he is the mercy seat, the covering of the law; who is the covert of his people from the curses of it, and from the storm of divine wrath and vengeance, due to the transgressions of it; his blood is the purple covering of the chariot, under which the saints ride safe to heaven; the lines of his blood are drawn over crimson and scarlet sins, by which they are blotted out, and are not legible; and being clothed with the robe of Christ's righteousness, all their sins are covered from the eye of divine Justice; not from the eye of God's omniscience, which sees the sins of all men, and beholds those of his own people; and which he takes notice of, and corrects for, in a fatherly way; but from vindictive justice, they are so hid as not to be imputed and charged, nor the saints to be condemned for them; such are unblamable and unreproveable in the sight of God, and are all fair in the eyes of Christ; and their sins are caused to pass away from themselves, and they have no more sight and conscience of them; and though sought for at the last day, they will not be found and brought to light, nor be seen by men or angels. There is something unseemly, impure, nauseous, abominable, and provoking in sin; which will not bear to be seen by the Lord, and therefore must be covered, or the sinner can never stand in his presence and be happy.

Ver. 2. Blessed [is] the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, etc.] Or "does not think of it" [f471]; with respect unto men, at least to the harm of them; his thoughts are thoughts of peace, and not of evil; their sins and iniquities he remembers no more; he does not charge them with them, he does not reckon them, or place them to their account, having imputed them to his Son; (see <470519>2 Corinthians 5:19). The Apostle Paul interprets this as inclusive of the imputation of righteousness without works; even of the righteousness of Christ, in which the blessedness of a man lies, (<450406>Romans 4:6-8); for such an one is accepted with God, is justified in his sight, and is secure from condemnation and wrath; it is well with him at all times, in life, at death, and at judgment; he is an heir of eternal life, will enter into it, and be for ever glorified; and in whose spirit [there is] no guile: for being thoroughly convinced of sin, he is sincere in his repentance for it, without deceit and hypocrisy in his confession of it; as David, the Apostle Paul, and the publican were, when they acknowledged themselves sinners; his faith, in looking to Christ for pardon and righteousness, is from the heart, and is unfeigned, and so is his profession of it before God, angels, and men; and whatever hypocrisy and guile are remaining in the old man, there is none in the new spirit put into him; in the new man, which is created in him, and which sinneth not: as the other phrases are expressive of pardon and justification, this points at internal sanctification, and which serves to complete the description of the happy man; such an one as David himself was; and this happiness he illustrates from his own experience in the following verses.

Ver. 3. When I kept silence, etc.] Was unthoughtful of sin, unconcerned about it, and made no acknowledgment and confession of it to God, being quite senseless and stupid; the Targum adds, “from the words of the law”; which seems to point at sin as the cause of what follows;

my bones waxed old; through my roaring all the day long; not under a sense of sin, but under some severe affliction, and through impatience in it; not considering that sin lay at the bottom, and was the occasion of it; and such was the violence of the disorder, and his uneasiness under it, that his strength was dried up by it, and his bones stuck out as they do in aged persons, whose flesh is wasted away from them; (see <19A203>Psalm 102:3,5).

Ver. 4. For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me, etc.] Meaning the afflicting hand of God, which is not joyous, but grievous, and heavy to be borne; especially without his gracious presence, and the discoveries of his love: this continued night and day, without any intermission; and may design some violent distemper; perhaps a fever; since it follows, my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. That is, the radical moisture in him was almost dried up, as brooks in the summer season; his body was parched, as it were, with the burning heat of the disease; or with an apprehension of the wrath of God under it, or both: and so he continued until be was brought to a true sense of sin, and an acknowledgment of it, when he had the discoveries of pardoning love, as is expressed in (<193205>Psalm 32:5). The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions read, “I am turned into distress, through a thorn being fixed”; and so Apollinarius paraphrases the words, “I am become miserable, because thorns are fixed in my skin;”

reading twq for ywq; and which Suidas [f472] interprets “sin”, that being like the thorn, unfruitful and pricking; (see <471207>2 Corinthians 12:7).

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

Ver. 5. I acknowledged my sin unto thee, etc.] The sin of Adam, in which he was concerned; original sin, the corruption of his nature, the sin that dwelt in him, his private and secret sins, which none knew but God and himself; even all his sins, which were many, with all their aggravated circumstances; wherefore he uses various words to express them by, in this and the following clauses; as “sin”, “iniquity”, and “transgressions”; the same that are used in the doctrine of pardon in the preceding verses; his confession being of the same extent with pardon, and all these he calls his own; as nothing is more a man’s own than his sins are; and these the psalmist acknowledged to the Lord; or “made”, or “will make known” [f473] to him: not that any sin is unknown to God, even the most secret ones; but they may be said to be made known to God, when a sinner makes a sincere and hearty acknowledgment of them before him, and expresses his own sense of them; how that they are with him, and ever before him, what knowledge rather he has of them, how much he is affected with them, and concerned for the commission of them; and such an acknowledgment the Lord expects and requires of his people, (<240312>Jeremiah 3:12,13);

and mine iniquity have I not hid; by retaining it as a sweet morsel under his tongue; for he not only acknowledged it, but forsook it; or by not confessing it, as Achan; for not confessing sin is the of hiding it; or by denying it, as Gehazi, Ananias and Sapphira; or by palliating and extenuating it; or by casting the blame on others, as did Adam and his wife; (see <183133>Job 31:33); or by covering it with a guise of sanctify and religion;

I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; not unto men, though in some cases confession of sin is to be made to men; a confession of it in general is to be made to the churches, and administrators of ordinances, in order to admission into a church state, and to the ordinances of Christ, (<400306>Matthew 3:6 <440237>Acts 2:37,41); and in case of private offences, faults are to be confessed one to another, and forgiveness granted; and in case of public offences, a confession should be made to a church publicly; partly for the satisfaction of the church, and partly for the glory of divine grace; but confession is not to be made to a priest, or to a person in a ministerial character, in order for absolution; but to the Lord only, against whom sin is committed, and who only can pardon it: and this the psalmist saith in his heart he would do, and did do it; he not only confessed facts, but the fault of them, with their evil circumstances, and that he justly deserved punishment for them; and this he did from his heart, with abhorrence of the sins committed by him, and in faith, with a view to the pardoning mercy of God in Christ; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. That is, either the guilt of his sin, which he took away from him; or the punishment of it, which he delivered him from: moreover, this phrase may denote the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and so may both express the sense which the psalmist had of it, and exalt the grace of God in the forgiveness of it; by which must be meant a fresh manifestation and application of pardon to his soul: now, when confession of sin, and remission of it, are thus put together, the sense is not that confession of sin is the cause of pardon; it is not the moving cause of it, that is the grace and mercy of God; nor the procuring and meritorious cause of it, that is the blood of Christ: it is not for the sake of a sinner's confession of sin, but for Christ's sake, that sin is forgiven; but this is the way in which it is enjoyed; and such as truly repent of sin, and sincerely confess it, are the persons to whom the Lord manifests his forgiving love; such may expect it, (<202813>Proverbs 28:13 <620109>1 John 1:9).

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on "<190302>Psalm 3:2").

Ver. 6. For this shall everyone that is godly pray unto thee, etc.] Meaning either that the success he had met with, in acknowledging his sin, would encourage others also to take a like step, and make their supplications to the Lord also; or that every godly person should pray to God for the same blessing of pardoning grace likewise. Pardon of sin is to be prayed for; not only Moses, David, Daniel, and other Old Testament saints, prayed for it; but Christ has directed his disciples and followers, under the Gospel dispensation, to do the same, (<421104>Luke 11:4); and which must be understood of praying for the manifestation of it to their consciences; for God has by one eternal act forgiven all trespasses at once, for Christ's sake; nor can any new act of pardon arise in the mind of God, or a fresh one pass in the court of heaven, nor the blood of Christ be shed again for the remission of it. Moreover, godly men will, in this sense, pray for it, as they have daily occasion to do: a godly man is a man that is created after the image of God, is born of him, and is possessed of internal powerful godliness, and has all things pertaining to it; and particularly has a godly sorrow for sin, and the fear of God in his heart, and before his eyes: and such a man is a praying one; having the spirit of grace, he has the spirit of supplication, and prays with the Spirit and with the understanding; and his praying for the pardon of sin shows that he is not without it, but daily commits it, and so needs fresh discoveries of forgiving love: and which he prays for in a time when thou mayest be found; which is to be understood, not of any particular stated times of prayer, as morning, noon, and night; for the throne of grace is always open, and God is to be found, and grace and mercy with him at all times; and much less does this respect a day of grace for particular persons, which, if improved, and the opportunity taken, they may have pardon; but if neglected till it is over, then there is no pardon for them; for there is no such day of grace: the whole Gospel dispensation is a day of grace; and that will not be over until all the elect of God are gathered in; and until then it is, and will be; now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation; but it designs a time of need, of soul distress, in which, when persons call upon God in truth, and seek him with their whole heart, he is found by them, and they find grace and mercy with him to relieve them in their distress; the Targum is, surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him; that is, unto the godly man; not but that afflictions, which are comparable to great floods of waters, do reach godly persons; but not so as to overwhelm them and destroy them; they are delivered out of them. The phrase seems to denote safety in the greatest calamities; that though even a deluge of vengeance and awful judgments should come upon the world, yet the godly man is safe; his place is the munition of rocks; he is in the hands of Christ, and is enclosed in the arms of everlasting love, from whence he can never be taken by men or devils: the Targum interprets these “waters of many people”; and adds, so as “to do any evil”, or “hurt”.

> “in an acceptable time;”

Ver. 7. Thou [art] my hiding place, etc.] In time of trouble; (see <192705>Psalm 27:5); so Christ is said to be, (<233202>Isaiah 32:2). “Thou shall preserve me from trouble”; not from having it; for in this world the saints must have tribulation, and through it enter the kingdom, but from being swallowed up with it; the Lord will bring them safe out of it, and of them it shall be said, “these are they that came out of great tribulation”, (<660714>Revelation 7:14);

thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance; or gird with gladness, as in (<193011>Psalm 30:11); the meaning is, that God would give him abundant reason for praise and thankfulness; and an opportunity of attending him with songs of praise for deliverance out of the hands of his enemies, and from trouble; and that both in his house below, where the saints, his loving people and faithful subjects, would join with him, in the midst of whom he should stand encompassed with their songs of praise; or in heaven above, where he should sing the song of Moses, and of the Lamb, and be surrounded with the hallelujahs of angels and glorified saints; Aben Ebra interprets these songs of the voices of angels.

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

Ver. 8. I will instruct thee, etc.] Or “cause thee to understand”[f474]. These are by many thought to be the words of the Lord, who gives to a man an understanding of spiritual things; he instructs by his providence, and even by afflictive dispensations of providence; and by his word, which is written for the learning of men, and is profitable for doctrine and instruction in righteousness, and by the ministers of it, who are therefore called instructors in Christ; and by his Spirit, when he instructs effectually and to purpose; by him he instructs men in the knowledge of themselves, and of himself in Christ, and of peace, pardon, righteousness, and salvation by Christ; and leads into all truth as it is in Jesus; and opens the understanding to understand the Scriptures, and the doctrines contained in them; and teach thee in the way which shall go; the path of duty, from whence men are apt to wander; when the Lord hedges up the way they would go with thorny providences, and by his ministers, word, and Spirit, directs them in the right way; saying, this is the way, walk in it; and the way of truth, which is clearly pointed to in the Scriptures of truth, and by the Spirit of truth; and also the way of life and salvation by Christ, revealed in the Gospel and which the preachers of it show to the sons of men;

I will guide thee with mine eye; as a master guides his scholar; or as “mine eye”[f475]: with as much care and tenderness as if thou wert the apple of mine eye; (see <053210>Deuteronomy 32:10 <380208>Zechariah 2:8); or the words may be rendered, “I will counsel”, or “give counsel”; as he does, who is wonderful in counsel, and that by his Son, who is the wonderful Counsellor; and by his word and testimonies, which are the delight of his people, and the men of their counsel: “mine eye [is] upon thee”[f476]; as the eye of the Lord is upon the righteous, to watch over them for good, to provide for them, guide and direct them. These words may very well be considered as the words of David, in which he determines to act a part, agreeable to the title of the psalm, “Maschil”; which signifies instructing, or causing to understand; and as he thought himself bound in duty to do, under the influence of the grace and mercy he had received from the Lord, in the forgiveness of his sins; and which he elsewhere resolved to do in a like case, and which is an instance parallel to this, (<195113>Psalm 51:13); he here promises to “instruct” men in the way of attaining to the blessedness he had been speaking of, by directing them to take the steps he did; namely, to go to the, Lord, and acknowledge and confess their sins before him, when they might expect to find pardoning mercy and grace, as he did; and to “teach” them the way of their duty upon this, to fear the Lord and his goodness, and to serve him in righteousness and holiness all the days of their lives; and to “guide [them] with his eye”; by declaring to them the gracious experiences he had been favoured with, by telling them what he himself had seen and known.

Ver. 9. Be ye not as the horse, [or] as the mule, [which] have no understanding, etc.] The design of this exhortation is to direct men how to behave under the instructions given; not as brutes, which have no rational faculties, but as men; that they should not show themselves thoughtless, stupid, and unteachable, as these animals, or worse than they; nor stubborn and obstinate, refractory and untractable, resolving not to be taught, stopping the ear, and pulling away the shoulder; nor ill natured and mischievous; not only hating instruction, casting away the law of the Lord, but kicking and spurning at, and persecuting such who undertake to instruct them; as these creatures sometimes attempt to throw their riders, and, when down, kick at them; whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee; to do mischief, bite or kick; or “because they do not come near to thee” [f477]; and that they may come near, and be brought into subjection, and become obedient; therefore such methods are used; (see <590303>James 3:3); there is in the words a tacit intimation, that men are commonly, and for the most part, like these creatures, stupid, stubborn, and mischievous; and therefore severe methods are used by the Lord, sore chastenings, to humble and instruct them; (see <243118>Jeremiah 31:18,19); the mule, more especially, is remarkable for its stupidity [f478]; and though the horse is docile, yet he is sometimes stubborn and refractory.

Ver. 10. Many sorrows [shall be] to the wicked, etc.] Who will not be instructed and reformed, but are like the horse and mule, without understanding; many outward sorrows or afflictions attend them; loathsome and consuming diseases come upon their bodies by intemperance and debauchery; and they and their families are brought to a piece of bread, through their vicious courses; and inward sorrows, horror and terror of mind, seize them when their consciences are at any time awakened, and are open to conviction; when a load of guilt lies on them, what remorse of conscience they feel! and what severe reflections do they make! and how are they pierced through with many sorrows! And though indeed, for the most part, wicked men have their good things in this life, and are in prosperous circumstances, and are not in trouble, as other men; yet what they have is with a curse; and they have no true peace, pleasure, and satisfaction in what they enjoy; and the curses of a righteous law; and everlasting destruction is prepared for them in the other world, when they will have many sorrows indeed; their worm will not die, and the fire of divine fury will not be quenched; there will be for ever indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that does evil;

but he that trusteth in the Lord; not in his wealth and riches, in his wisdom and strength, in himself, and his own righteousness; for such are wicked persons; but in the Lord; in his righteousness to justify him, in his blood to pardon him, in his strength to support him, and in his grace to supply him with everything necessary for him;

mercy shall compass him about; not only follow him and overtake him, but surround him; he shall be crowned with lovingkindness and tender mercies: the phrase denotes the abundance of mercies that shall be bestowed upon him here and hereafter, as both grace and glory.

Ver. 11. Be glad in the Lord, etc.] The Targum renders it, "in the Word of the Lord"; in Christ the essential Word; in him as the Lord their righteousness, and because of his righteousness imputed to them, by which they become righteous; and in him as their Saviour and Redeemer, and because of the salvation which he has wrought out for them; (see <236110>Isaiah 61:10);

and rejoice, ye righteous; in the Lord, as before; for this is not a carnal, but spiritual joy, which is here exhorted to, the same as in (<500404>Philippians 4:4); and "righteous" ones, who are excited to it, are such who are not righteous in appearance only, or in their own conceit, or by the deeds of the law, or in and of themselves; for there is none righteous this way: but who are made righteous by the obedience of Christ, and are righteousness itself in him; under a sense of which grace they live soberly, righteously, and godly; and these have great reason to rejoice and be glad;

and shout for joy all [ye that are] upright in heart: who have the truth of grace, and the root of the matter in them, oil in the vessels of their hearts, with their lamps; whose faith is unfeigned, whose hope is without hypocrisy, and whose love is without dissimulation; and who worship the Lord in spirit and in truth, and draw nigh to him with true hearts, and call upon him in the simplicity of them; these ought to rejoice, and even shout for joy, because of the grace that is wrought in them, and bestowed upon them, and the glory they shall be partakers of; for both grace and glory are given to these, and no good thing is withheld from them; the end of these upright souls is peace; and when they have done their work, they shall lie down and rest in their beds, and each one shall walk in his uprightness, (<198411>Psalm 84:11 37:37 <235702>Isaiah 57:2).

PSALM 33

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 33

Though this psalm has no title to it, it seems to be a psalm of David, from the style and matter of it; and indeed begins with the same words with which the preceding psalm is ended. Theodoret is of opinion it was written by David as a prophecy concerning Hezekiah, as a song to be sung by the people after the destruction of the Assyrian army.

Ver. 1. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, etc.] (See Gill on "<193211>Psalm 32:11");

[for] praise is comely for the upright; it becomes them; it is their duty; they are bound unto it by the mercies and favours they have received; should they not give praise to God, the stones of the wall would cry out, and rebuke them for their ingratitude: it is beautiful, and looks lovely in them; it is an ornament to them, and is, in the sight of God, of great esteem: it is very acceptable to him, and when grace is in exercise, and their hearts in tune, being sensibly touched and impressed with the goodness of God, it is desirable by them, and is pleasant and delightful to them.

Ver. 2. Praise the Lord with harp, etc.] An instrument David was well skilled in the use of, the inventor of which was Jubal, (<010421>Genesis 4:21);

sing unto, him with the psaltery; the name of this instrument is in the Hebrew language "nebel": the account which Josephus [f479] gives of this, and of the former, is,

> "the harp is extended with ten strings, and is plucked with a quill; the "nabla", or psaltery, has twelve sounds, and is played upon with the fingers;"

some make this and the next to be the same:

[and] an instrument of ten strings; and read them together thus, "with the psaltery of ten strings": and so the Targum, Septuagint, and other versions [f480]: but it seems from Josephus that it was not a stringed instrument, but had holes, and those twelve; and besides it is distinguished from the instrument of ten strings, (<199203>Psalm 92:3); it was in the form of a bottle, from whence it had its name.

Ver. 3. Sing unto him a new song, etc.] One newly composed on account of recent mercies received; and as the mercies of God are new every morning, there ought to be a daily song of praise to him; and so a new song is a continual song, as Christ is called the "new and living way", (<581020>Hebrews 10:20); because he is the everliving way; or the constant and only one, which always was, is, and will be. Or it may denote some famous and excellent song, as a new name is an excellent name, an unknown and unspeakable one; (see <660217>Revelation 2:17); compared with (<661402>Revelation 14:2,3); or respect may be had to the New Testament dispensation, in which old things are passed away, and all things become new; a new covenant is exhibited, a new and living way opened, and new ordinances instituted, and at the end of it there will be new heavens and a new earth; and so here is a new song made mention of, as suited to it;

play skilfully with a loud voice: either with the quill upon the harp, and the instrument of ten strings; or with the fingers upon the psaltery, at the same time, vocally, and aloud, expressing the new song.

Ver. 4. For the word of the Lord [is] right, etc.] The revealed word of God: the law of God is right; its precepts are holy, just, and good; its sanction or penalty is righteous; it is impartial unto all; it is just in condemning the wicked, and in acquitting believers on the account of Christ's perfect righteousness, by which it is magnified and made honourable: the Gospel part of the word is right; it publishes right and good things; it directs to the right way, to heaven and happiness; it makes men right when it works effectually in them; it engages them to walk in right ways; and its doctrines are right or plain to them that have a spiritual understanding given them; and all this is matter of joy and praise; and all his works [are done] in truth; his works of creation are done in the truth of things, with the utmost exactness and accuracy, and are a wonderful display of his power, wisdom, and goodness: his works of providence are according to the counsel of his own will, and are done in the wisest and best manner; and his work of redemption is a proof of his veracity and faithfulness to his covenant oath and promise; and his work of grace upon the hearts of his people is truth in the inward parts; and which, as he has promised to carry on and finish, he is faithful and will do it; in short, his way of acting both towards the godly and ungodly agrees with his promises to the one and his threatenings to the other, and so is in truth; and the whole of this is a reason why the saints should praise the Lord.

Ver. 5. He loveth righteousness and judgment, etc.] Or “righteous judgment” [f481]; he delights in the administration of it himself, (<240924>Jeremiah 9:24); and he is well pleased with acts of righteousness done by others, when done according to his word, from love to him, by faith in him, and with a view to his glory; especially he loves the righteousness of his son, being satisfactory to his law and justice, and his people, as clothed with it; and he delights in the condemnation of sin in the flesh of Christ, and in the righteous judgment of the world, and the prince of it, by Christ; the earth is full of the goodness of the Lord; of the providential goodness of God, of which all creatures partake; and of the special goodness or grace of God manifested in Christ Jesus; it was full of it particularly when Christ was here on earth, who is full of grace and truth; and when the Gospel of the grace of God was preached everywhere by his apostles, according to his order, and appeared to all men; and so it will be especially in the latter day, when multitudes will be called by grace and converted, and when the earth will be full of the knowledge of the Lord; and still more when it will become a new earth, wherein only righteous men will dwell.

Ver. 6. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, etc.] The aerial and starry heavens, and the heaven of heavens, the third heaven, the seat of the divine Majesty, and the habitation of angels and glorified saints; these were “made” even out of nothing, not out of any pre-existent matter, nor were they eternal; and being made are creatures, and so not to be worshipped, neither they nor their hosts after mentioned; angels, sun, moon, and stars; these were made by the Word of God, the essential Word of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, who often goes by this name, (<430101>John 1:1,14 <580412>Hebrews 4:12 <620507>1 John 5:7 <661913>Revelation 19:13); and very fitly agrees with him, who spoke for all his people in the council and covenant of grace, and undertook to be their surety; is the Word spoken of by all the holy prophets since the beginning of the world; is the interpreter of his Father’s mind and will, of which he must be capable, since he lay in his bosom; and now he speaks for his saints in heaven, whose advocate he is; and especially he may be so called because he so often spake on the six days of creation, and said, let this and the other thing be, and it was so; and to him, as the Word of God, is the creation of all things frequently ascribed, (<430101>John 1:1-3) (<581103>Hebrews 11:3 <610305>2 Peter 3:5), and particularly the heavens, (<580110>Hebrews 1:10). This is a proof of the deity of Christ, and of the dignity of his person; and shows how fit he is to be the Saviour of men; how safe the saints are in his hands; and that he ought to be trusted in, adored, and worshipped; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth: by “the host” of the heavens are meant the angels of heaven, who dwell in the third heaven, and are the militia of it; they are called the heavenly host, (<420213>Luke 2:13); these are under Jehovah, as their Lord and King, and are the army among whom he does according to his will, (<112219>1 Kings 22:19 <270435>Daniel 4:35); these attended him whenever he has made any remarkable appearance; and they have been employed by him against his enemies, and in defence of his people, about whom they encamp, (<121935>2 Kings 19:35 <402653>Matthew 26:53 <013201>Genesis 32:1,2) (<193407>Psalm 34:7). The sun, moon, and stars, are the host of the next heaven, these are ranged in their proper order by the Lord, and he keeps the muster roll of them, (<234026>Isaiah 40:26 <19E704>Psalm 147:4); and these are used by him as his militia; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera, (<070520>Judges 5:20); and the winged tribe are the host of the lower heaven; and even the lower class of these, as the locusts and grasshoppers, go forth in bands and troops, and encamp in the hedges, and at the command of God pass through and devour whole countries, (<203027>Proverbs 30:27 Na 3:17) (<19A534>Psalm 105:34,35); and all these are made by “the breath” or “spirit [f482] of [Jehovah’s] mouth”; that is, by the Spirit of God, the third Person in the Trinity; a name which is suitable to him who is breathed forth, and proceeds from the Father and the Son, and to whom creation is ascribed, (<010102>Genesis 1:2 <183304>Job 33:4 26:13); and which is no inconsiderable proof of his deity; and shows that he must be equal to the work of sanctification, which he begins and carries on. Now though the creation of the heavens is attributed to the Word, and the host of them to the Spirit, yet we are not to suppose that one Person took one part, and another Person another part of the creation; but they were all, Father, Word, and Spirit, jointly concerned in the whole.

Ver. 7. He gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap, etc.] Which was done on the third day of the creation, by means of which the dry land appeared, (<010109>Genesis 1:9,10); when the waters of the sea were piled up as an heap, and stood higher than the earth, as they now do; and which is a wonderful instance of the power and providence of God, to bound them, and preserve the earth from being overflowed by them, (<183809>Job 38:9-11);

he layeth up the depth in storehouses; that is, large quantities of water, for which he has his treasure houses, as for the wind, hail and snow, (<19D507>Psalm 135:7 <183816>Job 38:16,22); and these are the clouds of heaven above, and the fountains of the great deep below, which the Lord opens and stops at his pleasure; (see <010711>Genesis 7:11 8:2).

Ver. 8. Let all the earth fear the Lord, etc.] That is, all the men that dwell upon the face of the earth. As it follows, let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him; which fear and awe design a reverence of the divine Majesty, whose divine perfections are so manifest in the works of creation; and a carefulness not to offend him, into whose hands it must be a fearful thing to fall; and the whole worship of him, which is often in Scripture expressed by the fear of him: and this is to be understood either as what is the duty of all men; for to "fear God, and keep his commandments, is the whole duty of man", (<211213>Ecclesiastes 12:13); and which is incumbent on all men, in consideration of his being the Creator of them; and the obligation to it is yet more increased through his providential care of them and goodness to them; and still more should be found in them, seeing he will be the Judge of them, and has a despotic and uncontrollable power over them; and what is it that he cannot do, who has done all this before related? though none can fear him aright but such who have the grace of fear put into their hearts by the Spirit of God: or else this may be prophetically said, as what will be in the latter day, when not only the Jews shall fear the Lord and his goodness, (<280305>Hosea 3:5), but when the fulness of the Gentiles being brought into the church, it shall fear and be enlarged; yea, all nations shall fear the Lord and glorify his name, and come and worship before him, (<236005>Isaiah 60:5-8 <661504>Revelation 15:4).

Ver. 9. For he spake, and it was [done], etc.] Or "it was" [f483], it came into being by a word speaking, almighty power going along with it; (see <010103>Genesis 1:3,6,7,9,11,14,15,20,24);

he commanded, and it stood fast; every created thing continued in its being; not only all things were produced into being by his all commanding word and power, "nutu Jovis", as Maximus Tyrius speaks [f484]; but by the same all things are upheld and consist, (<580103>Hebrews 1:3) (<510117>Colossians 1:17). The poet [f485] uses the same word of God in the creation of things; and is the phrase in (<010103>Genesis 1:3) admired by Longinus [f486]: or this may refer to the implantation of the grace of fear in the hearts of his people; for as he speaks life into them in regeneration, commands light to shine in their dark heart, and says to them, when in their blood, Live; so by the mighty power of his word he commands the fear of him in them, and it continues.

Ver. 10. The Lord bringeth the counsel of the Heathen to nought, etc.] The psalmist having taken notice of the works of creation, in order to excite the saints to praise, proceeds to observe the providence of God, and particularly that branch of it which lies in disappointing the designs of wicked men; it is wickedness which they consult and devise, and thin is against the Lord’s people, his cause and interest, and so against himself; and though their schemes are formed and contrived with a great deal of subtlety, yet they are commonly blasted; whether laid by particular persons, as by Ahithophel against David; or by nations, whole bodies of men, as of the Egyptians and Assyrians against Israel; and of Jews and Gentiles against Christ and his cause;

he maketh the devices of the people of none effect; the same thing is expressed here as before, in different words, for the further confirmation of it, and that it might be attended to. This is the Lord’s doing, he is omniscient, and knows all the secret plots and designs of men; and he is omnipotent, and counteracts them, and confounds them in all their measures; and is faithful to his people, cause, and interest.

Ver. 11. The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, etc.] By which are meant, not the doctrines of the Gospel, nor the ordinances of it; though these will stand firm, and remain to the end of the world; but the purposes and decrees of God, which are wisely formed in himself, are eternal and unfrustrable, and relate to all things in providence and grace. The Lord does all things according to the counsel of his will in the government of the world, and in the salvation of men: the choice of persons to everlasting life is according to it; and so are their redemption, effectual calling, and glorification; the thoughts of his heart to all generations; which, with respect to his own people, are thoughts of peace, grace, and mercy; these are many, and within himself, were very early, even from all eternity, and have their sure and certain effect, (<231424>Isaiah 14:24); (see <201921>Proverbs 19:21) (<234610>Isaiah 46:10).

Ver. 12. Blessed [is] the nation whose God [is] the Lord, etc.] Who have an interest in such a wonder working God, both in creation and in providence, and especially in grace: which, though it may have a principal regard to the nation of Israel, whose God he was in a very distinguishing manner, yet must not be limited to them; for he is the God of the Gentiles also: this nation is the chosen generation, the holy nation and peculiar people, both among Jews and Gentiles; and the Lord is the God of these; not only as the God of nature and providence, but as the God of all grace; who must be happy, since he is their portion and exceeding great reward; nor shall they want any good thing, nor need they fear any evil; they are on the heart of God, and cannot be separated from his love; they are engraven on the palms of his hands, and shall be helped, strengthened, and upheld with the right hand of his righteousness; all things work together for their good; and this God of theirs will be their God and guide unto death; they may expect every needful good thing now, and all glory and happiness hereafter;

[and] the people [whom] he hath chosen for his own inheritance; not Israel only, but the Gentiles also; not all mankind, but a peculiar people, whom the Lord has chosen out of the world to be his possession, and who are his jewels and peculiar treasure; these are happy, being the Lord's portion, and the lot of his inheritance; and he chooses an inheritance for them, adopts and begets them unto it, and makes them meet to be partakers of it.

Ver. 13. The Lord looketh from heaven, etc.] Where his throne and temple are, upon the earth and men, and things in it, as follows;

he beholdeth all the sons of men; the evil and the good; which is contrary to the sense of many wicked men, who imagine he takes no notice of what is done here below; but his eye is upon all, upon all the workers of iniquity, how secret soever they may be; and not only his eye of Providence is upon good men, but his eye of love, grace, and mercy; and he has a special and distinct knowledge of them: agreeably to this are some expressions of Heathen writers; says one [f487],

> "the eye of God sees all things;"

says another [f488],

> "there is a great God in heaven who sees all things, and governs."

Ver. 14. From the place of his habitation, etc.] Which is heaven, that is, the habitation of his holiness, and of his glory, (<236315>Isaiah 63:15);

he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth; good and bad; and not the nation of Israel only, but the Gentile world, whom in former times he overlooked, but under the Gospel dispensation visits in a way of mercy; by sending his son to die for them, by spreading his Gospel among them, by calling them by his grace, by planting churches in the midst of them, and by continuing his word and ordinances with them.

Ver. 15. He fashioneth their hearts alike, etc.] The Lord is the former and fashioner of the heart, spirit, or soul of man, even of all hearts and spirits; whence he is called the Father of spirits, (<581209>Hebrews 12:9); (see <381201>Zechariah 12:1); and he is the former of them alike; which seems to intimate as if all seals were alike, as they are made by the Lord; and it may be the difference there appears to be between them afterwards, nay be owing to the make and constitution of their bodies, to their education, and different situation, circumstances, and advantages in life, whereby the hearts of some may be more opened and enlarged than others. Some render it "together", or "altogether" [f489]; which must not be understood of time, as if they were all made at once, but of equality; the one was made by him as well as the other; he is the fashioner of one and all of them, every whit of them; they are wholly fashioned by him, and all that is in them, all the powers and faculties of the soul; and by him only, and not by the instrumentality of another; for souls are created, not generated; they are produced out of nothing, and not out of pre-existent matter, as bodies; parents contribute somewhat to the bodies of their children, but not anything to their souls. God only "is the God of the spirits of all flesh", (<041622>Numbers 16:22); some translate the word "singly" [f490]; one by one, one after another in the several ages of time; for he continues to fashion them, and is always doing it; (see <381201>Zechariah 12:1). And he forms the hearts of his own people anew for himself, for his own glory; he forms Christ in them, and every grace of his Spirit; he forms them into one, and knits and unites them together in love, and makes them like to one another; for as face answers to face in water, so do the hearts and experiences of the saints one to another, (<202719>Proverbs 27:19); all which he does wholly and alone; and since he fashions the hearts of all men in every sense, he must know them, which is the design of this expression; he knows the hearts of wicked men, and all the wickedness that is in them; he knows the hearts of good men, the worst that is in them, and also the best, which he himself has put there;

he considereth all their works; the works of evil men, not only their more open ones, but their more secret ones, and will bring them into judgment; and the works of good men, even their good works, which he will remember and reward in a way of grace.

Ver. 16. There is no king saved by the multitude of an host, etc.] He may be at the head of a numerous army, and yet not get the victory over a lesser one, nor escape safe, but be taken by it: there have been such instances; and if he is saved, or gets the victory, it is not owing to the multitude with him, but to the Lord, that gives salvation to kings, (<19E410>Psalm 144:10). Hence it appears that even such men need salvation themselves, and cannot save themselves, though they have ever so many at command, and therefore are not to be trusted in; salvation is only of the Lord;

a mighty man is not delivered by much strength; as Goliath, with his great strength, could not deliver himself out of the hands of David, a stripling; wherefore the mighty man should not glory in his might.

Ver. 17. A horse [is] a vain thing for safety, etc.] Though it is prepared for the day of battle, and is a very warlike creature, and of great service in war, yet safety only is of the Lord, (<202131>Proverbs 21:31); this is put for all kinds of military preparations which men are apt to trust in, but should not, for they are "a lie" [f491], as the horse is here said to be; that is, deceives and disappoints when trusted to; in like manner the olive is said "to lie", (<350317>Habakkuk 3:17); when hope of fruit from it is disappointed; so "fundus mendax" in Horace [f492]; neither shall he deliver [any] by his great strength; in the time of battle; either by fighting for him, or fleeing with him.

Ver. 18. Behold, the eye of the Lord [is] upon them that fear him, etc.] Not with dread of his wrath, or distrust of his grace, or for sinister ends and selfish views, but with a godly fear; by which men hate evil, depart from it, are careful not to offend God by it, but to serve and worship him; on such is not only his eye of Providence to protect from danger, to supply with the necessaries of life, but of love and grace; he looks upon them with delight and pleasure; his eye is upon them to watch over them for good, to guard them from every enemy, and from all evil, and to communicate to them every needful measure of grace;

upon them that hope in his mercy; not his absolute mercy, but his special mercy in Christ; which appears in the provision of him as a Saviour, in the mission of him into this world, and redemption by him; and is displayed in regeneration, the pardon of sin, and eternal life: and such that hope in it are they that see themselves miserable creatures, and in need of it; and who are encouraged to hope in it from the plenty and abundance of it in the heart of God; and from the many instances of it among men, and even some the chief of sinners; and they do hope in it for the forgiveness of their sins, and for salvation and eternal glory; and on these the eye of the Lord is, as before,

Ver. 19. To deliver their soul from death, etc.] Not a corporeal death, for the soul dies not, and is never in any danger of death; and should life, or the whole man, be intended here, yet those that fear the Lord, and hope in his mercy, are not exempted and secured from a corporeal death, but die as other men; though sometimes indeed they are remarkably preserved from death, and even in a time of general calamity; but a spiritual death is meant, which, while in a state of nature, they are under; but, being quickened at conversion, they live spiritually, and are preserved from dying any more in this sense; and also from an eternal death, which shall never harm them, nor have any power over them; and to keep them alive in famine; not corporeal, though the Lord does give meat to them that fear him, and sometimes in a miraculous way provides for them; as by sending ravens to feed them, and by increasing the cruse of oil; (see <234117>Isaiah 41:17,18); but spiritual, a famine of hearing the word of the Lord; the Lord prepares a place for his church and people in the wilderness, where they are privately nourished with the word and ordinances, and their souls kept alive, (<661206>Revelation 12:6,14).

Ver. 20. Our soul waiteth for the Lord, etc.] This, and what follows, are the words of the church, expressing her expectation, faith, and joy, by reason of what is suggested in the preceding verses. She signifies her expectation of good by waiting for the Lord; either for his coming in the flesh, and salvation by him; for which the patriarchs, prophets, and all the Old Testament saints, waited, (<014918>Genesis 49:18 <232509>Isaiah 25:9); and so the Targum paraphrases it, “our soul waiteth for the redemption of the Lord”; or for his spiritual coming, his appearance to them, and gracious presence with them, he having been for some time absent; and it is right and good so to do, and in the issue proves advantageous, (<230817>Isaiah 8:17 <25D326>Lamentations 3:26); and this being soul waiting, it denotes the heartiness, sincerity, and earnestness of it;

he [is] our help and our shield; the Lord is the help of his people in time of trouble, when none else is or can be; and he is a present one, and helps right early, and at the best season: and he is their shield, who encompasses them about with his love and favour, and keeps them by his power in the greatest safety; all which encourages their waiting upon him, and expectation of good things from him.

Ver. 21. For our heart shall rejoice in him, etc.] Not in sin, nor in themselves and in their boastings, all such rejoicing is evil; but in the Lord, "in his Word"; as the Targum is, in the essential Word of God, Christ Jesus; in his person, righteousness, and salvation; and this joy is heart joy, inward joy, real joy, joy in the Holy Ghost; and is unspeakable and full of glory. This is what the psalmist calls upon the saints to do, in the beginning of the psalm; and so his end in composing it is answered; because we have trusted in his holy name; that is, in himself, who is holy, just, and good; and so faithful to every word of promise, to every engagement of his, and therefore to be trusted in: and hence it appears that the joy before spoken of is the joy of faith.

Ver. 22. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, etc.] That is, an application of it in its effects: it is a prayer for a communication of grace and mercy to help in a time of need; and for a discovery of pardoning grace and mercy; and it is a prayer of faith; for the mercy of the Lord is upon his people in great plenty, and it continues; and they have reason to believe it ever will, (<19A317>Psalm 103:17);

according as we hope in thee; not according to any merits of theirs, but according to the measure of grace, of the grace of hope which God had bestowed on them, and encouraged them to exercise on him, in expectation of finding grace and mercy with him.

PSALM 34

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 34

[A Psalm] of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech; who drove him away, and he departed

The author of this psalm is expressed by name; and the time and occasion of it are plainly intimated: it was composed by David, “when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech”; not Ahimelech the priest, sometimes called Abimelech, (<131816>1 Chronicles 18:16); to whom David went alone for bread, pretending he was upon a private business of the king’s; to which sense the Syriac version inclines, rendering the words, “when he went to the house of the Lord, [and] gave the firstfruits to the priests”. But this Abimelech was king of Gath, the same with Achish, (<092110>1 Samuel 21:10); who either had two names; or this of Abimelech, as it should seem, was a common name to all the kings of the Philistines; (see <012002>Genesis 20:2 26:8); as Pharaoh was to the Egyptian kings, and Caesar to the Roman emperors: the name signifies a “father king”, or “my father king”, or a “royal father”; as kings should be the fathers of their country: before him “David changed his behaviour”, his taste, sense, or reason: he imitated a madman; behaved as if he was out of his senses, scrabbling on the doors of the gates, and letting his spittle fall down upon his beard; for he being known and made known by the servants of the king, he was in great fear of losing his life, being in the hands of an enemy, and who he might justly fear would revenge the death of their champion Goliath; wherefore he took this method to get himself despised and neglected by them, and escape out of their hands: and which succeeded; for Abimelech, or Achish, seeing him behave in such a manner, treated him with contempt, was displeased with his servants for bringing him into his presence, and ordered them to take him away, or dismiss him; which is here expressed by this phrase, “who drove him away”, with scorn and indignation; “and he departed” to the cave of Adullam, glad at heart he had escaped such danger: upon which, under a sense of divine goodness, and by the inspiration of the Spirit of God, he composed the following psalm; (see <092110>1 Samuel 21:10-15 22:1).

Ver. 1. I will bless the Lord at all times, etc.] That is, ascribe blessing, give honour, praise, and glory to him, both as the God of nature and providence, for every temporal mercy; and that every day, and at all times in the day; since these are renewed every morning, and continue all the day long: and as the God of grace, for all spiritual blessings; and that continually, because these last always; they are irreversible, unchangeable, and without repentance; yea, saints have reason to bless God in times of adversity as well as prosperity, since it might have been worse with them than it is; they have a mixture of mercy in all, and all things work together for their good;

his praise [shall] continually [be] in my mouth; not the "praise" of which God is the author, but of which he is the object; which is due unto him, and is given him on account of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands, and the blessings of his providence and grace; this, the psalmist says, should be in his mouth: his meaning is, that he should not only retain in his heart a grateful sense of the divine favours, but should express it with his lips; should both make melody in his heart to the Lord, and vocally sing his praise; and that "continually", as long as he lived, or had any being, (<19E602>Psalm 146:2).

Ver. 2. My soul shall make her boast in the Lord, etc.] Not in men, nor in any outward enjoyment, nor in any works of righteousness, but in the Lord; "in the Word of the Lord", as the Targum; in the Lord Jesus Christ; in his wisdom, strength, riches, righteousness, redemption, and salvation; in interest in him, and communion with him: and this is not tongue but soul boasting; and not flashy and selfish, but solid, spiritual, and hearty; and with all the powers and faculties of the soul; (see <460129>1 Corinthians 1:29-31);

the humble shall hear [thereof]; either of the deliverance the psalmist had out of the hands of his enemies; or of his blessing and praising the Lord for the same, and making his boast in him as the God of his salvation; or of both: of these humble ones, (see Gill on "<191012>Psalm 10:12");

and be glad; for such rejoice with them that rejoice, and are glad at heart that others share in the goodness and grace of God; and also because by such an instance of the divine power and kindness they are encouraged to hope that he will, in his own time, deliver them out of their afflictions and distresses also.

Ver. 3. O magnify the Lord with me, etc.] The psalmist invites the humble ones, who he knew would rejoice at the goodness of God to him, to join with him in ascribing greatness to the Lord, which is meant by magnifying him; for he cannot be made great by men, only declared how great he is, and that can only be done in an imperfect manner; and let us exalt his name together: by proclaiming him to be the most High; by making mention of his glorious perfections and works, that he be exalted; and by praising him in the highest strains; or by having the high praises of him in their mouths; and there is more pleasure as well as more glory brought to God by doing this in a social way, or by a number of saints joining together in such service.

Ver. 4. I sought the Lord, and he heard me, etc.] Not that he sought the Lord publicly in his house and ordinances, for he was now at Gath; but privately by prayer and supplication; and that not vocally, but mentally; for he was in the midst of the servants of the king of Gath; yet earnestly, diligently, and with his whole heart, being in great distress; when it was right to seek the Lord, and which showed him to be a good man; and the Lord heard and answered even his silent groans, which could not be uttered; and delivered me from all my fear; of being seized on by Achish, king of Gath, and of losing his life for killing Goliath: and many are the fears of God's people, both from within and from without, by reason of sin, Satan, and the world; but the Lord saves them out of the hands of all their enemies, grants them his presence, and shows them their interest in himself, which, scatters all their fears.

Ver. 5. They looked to him, and were lightened, etc.] That is, "the humble" ones, (<193402>Psalm 34:2); and so this is a reason why they should join in praising and magnifying the Lord; these "looked" up to God in prayer and by faith, when in distressed and uncomfortable circumstances, for help and deliverance, and a supply of every needful good thing; and they were "enlightened"; so the Targum renders it, "their faces were enlightened"; as Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it, in opposition to what follows: they must have been enlightened before they could look, but by looking to the Lord more light was gained: this chiefly designs the light of joy, peace, and comfort, which is had in a way of believing: some render the word "and flowed"[f493], as a river does, that is, to the Lord, as in (<243112>Jeremiah 31:12). So Kimchi and Ben Melech explain the word; and it denotes both the numbers of them that looked up to the Lord in their distress, and the swiftness of their motion to him, and their earnestness and fervour of mind; so faith is not only a looking to Christ, but a going forth unto him; and their faces were not ashamed; having what they prayed and looked for, and what they hoped and believed they should have; namely, deliverance and salvation, and so peace and pleasure.

Ver. 6. This poor man cried, etc.] Singling out some one person from among the humble, who was remarkably delivered; it is the common case of the people of God to be poor and afflicted, and in their afflictions they cry unto the Lord to be supported under them, and delivered out of them: or this may be understood of David himself, who was poor, not with respect to outward things, but in spirit; was much afflicted, and especially greatly distressed when in the court of Achish; at which time he cried unto the Lord, as was his usual way, and that internally, as Moses did, (<021415>Exodus 14:15). Some think Jesus Christ is intended by this poor man, who was poor in temporals, though rich, and Lord of all; and was greatly afflicted, both in body and soul; and who, in the days of his flesh, offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, (<580507>Hebrews 5:7); and the Lord heard [him], and saved him out of all his troubles; so the Lord always heard his son Jesus Christ, and especially in the day of salvation, and delivered him out of all his troubles, both of body and soul, when he raised him from the dead, and gave him glory; and he heard David his servant, as he often did; particularly when at Gath, and made way for his escape from thence; and from whence he came safe to the cave of Adullam; and the Lord hears all his poor and afflicted ones, when they cry unto him, and in the issue saves them from all their troubles, by reason of a body of sin and death, the temptations of Satan, and the persecutions of men.

Ver. 7. The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, etc.] By whom may be meant, either the uncreated Angel, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Angel of God’s presence, and of the covenant, the Captain of salvation, the Leader and Commander of the people; and whose salvation is as walls and bulwarks about them; or as an army surrounding them: or a created angel may be intended, even a single one, which is sufficient to guard a multitude of saints, since one could destroy at once such a vast number of enemies, as in (<121935>2 Kings 19:35); or one may be put for more, since they are an innumerable company that are on the side of the Lord’s people, and to whom they are joined; and these may be said to encamp about them, because they are an host or army; (see <013201>Genesis 32:1,2 <420213>Luke 2:13); and are the guardians of the saints, that stand up for them and protect them, as well as minister to them; and delivereth them; out of the hands of all their enemies. David had a guard, an army of these about him, in the court of Achish, who preserved him from being seized, and receiving any harm there; and who brought him from thence in safety: there is no doubt but he here speaks his own experience.

Ver. 8. O taste, and see that the Lord [is] good, etc.] He is essentially, infinitely, perfectly, immutably, and solely good in himself; and he is communicatively and diffusively good to others: he is the author of all good, but not of any evil, in a moral sense; this chiefly regards his special grace and goodness through Christ: all the divine Persons in the Godhead are good; the Father is good, he has good designs towards his people, has provided good things for them, made good promises to them, and bestows good gifts on them: the Son is good; the good Shepherd that has laid down his life for the sheep; he is the fountain of all grace and goodness to his churches, and to particular believers; he has wrought a good work for them, the work of redemption, and he speaks a good word on their behalf in the court of heaven: the Spirit is good; he works good things in the hearts of the sons of men, and shows good things unto them; and gracious souls, such as the psalmist here calls upon, are capable of tasting and discerning how good the Lord is in some measure; (see <19B9103>Psalm 119:103 <220203>Song of Solomon 2:3 <600202>1 Peter 2:2,3). While unregenerate, their taste is vitiated, and remains unchanged, and sin is what they feed upon with pleasure, and so detest everything that is good; but in conversion a new taste is given, so as to have a saving experimental knowledge of the grace and goodness of God in Christ, an application of it to them; and in such manner as to live upon it, and be nourished by it; and though this is not a superficial taste of things, like that of hypocrites, nor a single one only, being frequently repeated; yet it is but a taste in comparison of the enjoyment of it in the heavenly state; and every taste now influences and engages trust in the Lord, as follows; blessed [is] the man [that] trusteth in him; (see Gill on “<190212>Psalm 2:12”); the Targum renders it, “that trust in his word”.

Ver. 9. O fear the Lord, ye his saints, etc.] Who are sanctified by his Spirit, and so are openly and manifestly his; these are exhorted to fear the Lord with reverence and godly fear; and great reason there is why they should fear him, since he is King of saints, and fear is due to him from them; and seeing they have received many instances of grace and goodness from him, and therefore should fear him for his goodness's sake; and besides they, and they only, know him, and have the grace of fear in them, and so only can exercise it on him; for [there is] no want to them that fear him; not in spirituals, since so much goodness is laid up for them; the heart of God is towards them, his secret is with them, his eye is upon them, and the sun of righteousness arises on them; and both grace and glory are given to them; nor in temporals, since godliness, or the fear of God, has the promise of this life, as well as of that which is to come.

Ver. 10. The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger, etc.] According to Apollinarius,

> "the needy rich, whom famine presses;"

(see <180410>Job 4:10,11);

but they that seek the Lord; by prayer, diligently, with their whole heart, and in the sincerity of their souls; the Targum is, "that seek the doctrine of the Lord"; that seek instruction from him, and to be taught by him: these shall not want any good [thing]: which God has purposed to bestow upon them, which he has promised unto them, and provided for them; nor any thing that shall be for their good.

Ver. 11. Come, ye children, etc.] Meaning either his own children, those of his own family, judging it his duty to instruct them, and bring them up in the fear of the Lord; or his subjects, to whom he stood in the relation of a father, as every king does; or all his hearers, as those who attended the prophets are called the children or sons of the prophets; or young people in common may be designed, who should be taught early their duty to God and men: unless the children of God in general are here meant; or particularly the least among them, called babes and little children, who are little in their own eyes, are modest and humble; and who, as they need instruction, are most forward to receive it; and the word "come" does not so much design local motion, a drawing near to hear, as readiness to hear, and a close attention of mind; as follows;

hearken unto me; as unto a father, giving good doctrine and wholesome advice; (<200201>Proverbs 2:1,2 4:1,2);

I will teach you the fear of the Lord; which he had so often spoken of, and so many good things are promised to them that have it, and even in the context: this the psalmist could not give, nor can any man, only teach it, show the nature of it, in what it lies, how it shows itself, and what are the effects it produces: this is the first lesson to be taught and learnt; for it is the beginning of wisdom; it includes all grace, and every duty, and regards the whole worship of God, and the manner of it.

Ver. 12. What man [is he that] desireth life? etc.] Every man desires life, even a natural life; it is more desirable than all things in it; especially an healthful life, without which the blessings and mercies of life cannot be comfortably enjoyed; and still more a life of prosperity; life, with an affluence of good things, and even a long one: though it may be rather that a spiritual life is here meant, and a comfortable one; a life free from the remorses of a guilty conscience, from the fear of hell, damnation, and wrath; from the bondage of the law, and the dread of death; a life of faith on Christ, and communion with him; and a life of sobriety, righteousness, and holiness; and perhaps it may be best of all to understand it of eternal life, which is life eminently and emphatically; it follows, that he may see good; there is good to be seen and enjoyed in this life, which if the saints did not believe they should see and enjoy, they would often faint; and this good lies in the participation of the blessings of grace, and in fellowship with Father, Son, and Spirit: but the great and lasting good to be seen and enjoyed is in the world to come, when God shall be all in all, be seen as he is, and the saints shall inherit all things.

[and] loveth [many] days; that is, good ones; as they are interpreted in (<600310>1 Peter 3:10); not of this life, for the days of it are evil, and especially when they are lengthened out; the days of old age, (<211201>Ecclesiastes 12:1); unless the days of the son of man, the days of enjoying the presence of God in his house and ordinances, should be intended; though rather the good and many days of eternity, even length of days, for ever and ever, in which will be fulness of joy, and never ceasing and never fading pleasures;

Ver. 13. Keep thy tongue from evil, etc.] This, and what follows in this verse and (<193414>Psalm 34:14), point at the things wherein the fear of God shows itself; and suggest, that those who have it, and which is known by these fruits, shall enjoy the desirable and good days before mentioned. The tongue is an instrument of much evil, an unruly member, and needs restraint; and it is from evil, and not from good, it is to be kept; from evil speaking of God, from cursing and swearing; from evil speaking of men, reproaching and reviling them; from filthy speaking, from all obscene and unchaste words, and from all lying ones; for where such evil speaking is indulged, the fear of God cannot be in that man; and thy lips from speaking guile; hypocritical and deceitful words, speaking with flattering lips and a double heart: some speak bad words in common conversation, through an evil habit and custom; and some speak good words with an ill design; and in neither of them is the fear of God before their eyes, nor in their hearts.

Ver. 14. Depart from evil, etc.] This denotes that evil is near to men; it keeps close to them, and should be declined and shunned: and it regards all sorts of evil; evil men, and their evil company; evil things, evil words and works, and all appearance of evil; and the fear of the Lord shows itself in an hatred of it, and a departure from it, (<200813>Proverbs 8:13 16:6);

and do good; not only acts of beneficence to all in necessitous circumstances, but every good work; whatever the word of God directs, or suggests should be done; and which should be done from right principles of faith and love, and to right ends, the glory of God, and the good of his interest; and Christ should be looked and applied unto for grace and strength to perform; all which are evidences of the true fear of God;

seek peace, and pursue it; in the world, and with all men, as much as possibly can be; in neighbourhoods, cities, and states, and in the churches of Christ, and with the saints, as well as with God through Christ; and which in every sense is to be pursued after with eagerness, and to be endeavoured for with diligence; (see <451218>Romans 12:18 14:19) (<581214>Hebrews 12:14).

Ver. 15. The eyes of the Lord [are] upon the righteous, etc.] These are the same with them that fear the Lord, and do good; not that they become righteous in the sight of God, or are justified before him, by their fear of him, and by their good works; but these are the fruits and effects of grace, showing them to be righteous persons; for it is only by the righteousness of Christ that men are righteous before God: and upon these the eyes of the Lord are; not only his eye of Providence, to watch over them, protect them, and supply them with good things, but his eye of love; with complacency and delight he looks upon them, as clothed with the righteousness of his son; and it is with pleasure he looks upon them, that being well pleasing in his sight; seeing by it the law is magnified and made honourable; nor does he ever withdraw his eyes from them, (<183607>Job 36:7);

and his ears [are open] unto their cry; for though they are righteous, they are sometimes in distress; their afflictions are many; the good days they are to see are hereafter; and at those times they cry unto the Lord; which is to be understood of prayer, and of the vehemency and fervency of it, when they have the ear of God, and he shows himself to be a God hearing and answering prayer.

Ver. 16. The face of the Lord [is] against them that do evil, etc.] Not against everyone that sins; for the righteous are not without sin; they have sin in them, and they do no good without it; but against them that live in sin, whose course of life is a series of wickedness, and they are workers of iniquity; and have no sense of sin, nor sorrow for it, go on in it without shame or fear; against these the face of the Lord is, he shows his resentment, and stirs up his wrath. For the Lord to be against a man is dreadful; a fearful thing it is to fill into his hands as a God of vengeance; there is no standing before him when once he is angry: and to have the face of God against a man is intolerable, when it is to destroy, and to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth; so that they shall be no more thought of, nor spoken of, but with contempt and reproach; an everlasting mark of infamy being upon their names; (see <201007>Proverbs 10:7).

Ver. 17. [The righteous] cry, etc.] The word “righteous” is not in the original text, but is rightly supplied in our version, as it is in the Targum, and by Jarchi; and so Kimchi and Ben Melech observe, that these words are not to be connected with (<193416>Psalm 34:16), but with (<193415>Psalm 34:15); and they are indeed an amplification of the last clause of it; and the cry of the righteous is meant, to which the ears of the Lord are open; though Aben Ezra thinks that these words are to be understood of them that do evil, and of their cry to the Lord, when they turn from their evil ways; but the former sense is best;

and the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles; their inward troubles, through the workings of corruption in their hearts; through the violent assaults of Satan, the blasphemous thoughts he injects into them, and his solicitations of them to sin; and through divine desertions, and their outward troubles; through afflictions of body, losses of estate and friends, and the reproaches and persecutions of men; out of all these the Lord sooner or later delivers his people who cry unto him.

Ver. 18. The Lord [is] nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, etc.] Who are pressed and bore down with afflictions, by the sorrow of heart under which their spirits are broken, (<201513>Proverbs 15:13); or with a sense of sin, and sorrow for it, for which their hearts smite them, and they are wounded by it, and broken with it: to these the Lord is “nigh”; not in a general way only, as he is to all men, being God omnipresent, but in a special manner; he comes and manifests himself to them in a gracious way, pours in the oil and wine of his love, and binds up their broken hearts; yea, comes and dwells with them: he does not pass by them and neglect them, much less make the breach worse; he does not break the bruised reeds, but he heals their breaches; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit; not in a legal, but in an evangelical way; who are humbled under a sense of sin, and melted down in true repentance, under a view of the love and grace of God; and are poor and mean in their own eyes: to these the Lord has respect; the sacrifices of a broken and contrite spirit are not despised by him, but accepted through faith in Christ; and such he saves with an everlasting salvation in him.

Ver. 19. Many [are] the afflictions of the righteous, etc.] This may be understood of some one particular righteous person, since the singular number is here made use of; whereas the plural is always used before, when the righteous are made mention of; and the Lord Jesus Christ may be designed, who is eminently and emphatically “the righteous”; he is righteous both as God and man, and as Mediator, in the discharge of every branch of his office; and his afflictions were many, which he endured from men, from devils, and from God himself: many were the afflictions of his body, which he bore when buffeted, scourged, and crucified; and many were the afflictions of his soul, when he bore the sins of his people, endured the wrath of God for them, and was forsaken by him; though none of these were for any sins of his own, but for the sins of others; and out of them all the Lord delivered him at last, and set him at his own right hand; or this may be understood of everyone of the righteous; who, though they are justified from sin, and are saved from wrath, yet have many afflictions; which are "evils" in themselves, as the word[f494] may be rendered, and are very troublesome and distressing; and these are great and grievous for quality, and many and abundant for quantity; though no more than it is the will of God should be, and not one too many;

but the Lord delivereth him out of them all; as Christ was, and all his people will be; if not in this life, by giving respites and intervals, as he sometimes does; yet hereafter, when the righteous are completely delivered out of all their trials and exercises, so as that they shall never return more upon them. The word translated "afflictions", as it signifies "evils", may be safely interpreted of moral evils, as well as of evils of afflictions: it is the same word that is used for moral evil in (<193421>Psalm 34:21); and then the sense is, that many are the sins committed by righteous persons; for there are none without sin, in many things they all offend; yet they shall not perish by them, but they shall be delivered from them; as, from the dominion of them by the power of grace, and from the guilt of them by the blood of Christ, and from condemnation for them through his righteousness; so hereafter from the very being of them, and all molestation and disturbance by them.

Ver. 20. He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken.] This is literally true of Christ, in whom the type of the passover lamb had its accomplishment, and this passage also; (see <021246>Exodus 12:46 <431931>John 19:31-36); and seems better to agree with him than with any of his members, since the bones of many of them have been broken by one accident or another; and especially many of the martyrs of Jesus have had all their bones broken upon the rack or wheel; wherefore, to understand these words of them might tend to create uneasiness and despondency in the minds of such who by any means have their bones broken; as if they were not righteous persons, this promise not being fulfilled in them: and to interpret this of the Lord's keeping the bones of his people in the grave, and in the resurrection putting them together again; this is no other than what will be done to the wicked; it seems therefore best to understand the whole of Christ; and it looks as if this passage was had in view as fulfilled in (<431936>John 19:36); since a Scripture is referred to; but if it is interpreted of the righteous in general, it must be with a limitation; as that their bones are all kept by the Lord, and not one is broken without his knowledge and will;

and that they are not broken finally, but restored again perfect and whole in the resurrection, and so will continue to all eternity: the phrase, without entering into particulars, may in general design the care of Providence over the righteous; with this compare (<401029>Matthew 10:29,30).

Ver. 21. Evil shall slay the wicked, etc.] Meaning either the evil they designed against the righteous shall return and fall upon their heads, to their own ruin; or the evil of affliction, which to them is the evil of punishment, both here and hereafter, from which they will have no deliverance in the end; though the righteous have from their afflictions, being not properly punishments, but chastisements for sin, and are but for a time; or else the evil of sin, which is the cause of death corporeal and eternal; and they that hate the righteous shall be desolate; or “shall be guilty” [f495]; be found so; or “shall be condemned”, or “damned”, as the Targum renders it. All wicked men hate the righteous, both Jesus Christ the righteous, and his people; and that because they are righteous, and do not run into the same excess of wickedness with them, these will be arraigned at the day of judgment, and will be convicted of all their hard speeches which they have spoken against Christ and his members; and will be pronounced guilty, and will be punished with everlasting destruction.

Ver. 22. The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants, etc.] Who are made so by his grace in the day of his power, and are willing to serve him, and to serve him with their minds, readily and cheerfully; and the soul of these, which is the more noble part of them, and is of more worth than a world, the redemption of which is precious, and requires a great price, the Lord redeems; not that their bodies are neglected, and not redeemed; but this is mentioned as the principal part, and for the whole; and this redemption is by the Lord, who only is able to effect it, and which he has obtained through his precious blood; and here it seems to denote the application of it in its effects; that is, the forgiveness of sin, justification, and sanctification, since it respects something that is continually doing; and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate; or “be guilty” [f496], or “condemned”, or “damned”; because they are justified from all the sins they have been guilty of, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; and having believed in him, they shall not be damned, according to (<411616>Mark 16:16); and they shall be far from being desolate, and alone, and miserable; they shall stand at Christ’s right hand, be received into his kingdom and glory, and be for ever with him.

PSALM 35

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 35

[A Psalm] of David

This psalm seems to have been written by David, when he was persecuted by Saul; and when many false charges were brought against him by his courtiers; and when he was the scorn and derision of the people; the subject of it is pretty much of the same kind with the seventh psalm, and might be written about the same time that was, and on the same occasion; and it may be applied to the church and people of God in like cases. There is a passage in it, (<193519>Psalm 35:19), which our Lord seems to refer to and apply to himself, (<431525>John 15:25); and some interpret the whole of it concerning him. The Arabic version calls it a prophecy of the incarnation; though there does not appear any thing in it applicable to that.

Ver. 1. Plead [my cause], O Lord, with them that strive with me, etc.] Meaning Saul and his courtiers; concerning whom he elsewhere desires that the Lord would judge between them, plead his cause, and deliver him; as he accordingly did, and maintained it, and the righteousness of it, (<092412>1 Samuel 24:12-15 <190904>Psalm 9:4). So Christ pleaded not his own cause as man, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously; and his people leave their cause with him, who is their advocate, and is able to plead it thoroughly; and does plead it against wicked and ungodly men, who unrighteously charge them; against. Satan the accuser of the brethren, who stands at their right hand to resist them; and against their own hearts, and the sins of them, which lust and war against them, and condemn them; fight against them that fight against me: so the Lord is sometimes represented as a man of war, and Christ as a warrior fighting for the saints; and safe are they on whose side he is; but miserable all such who are found fighters against him and his; for none ever opposed him and prospered.

Ver. 2. Take hold of shield and buckler, etc.] Defensive weapons; not that the Lord stands in need of any of these to defend himself with: but the sense is, that he would be as these to David; as he was to him, and is to all his people; namely, their shield and buckler: he gives unto them the shield of salvation; he encompasses them about with his favour as with a shield, and keeps them by his power safe from all their enemies; and stand up for mine help; for which the Lord arises, and stands by his people, and against their enemies, delivering them out of their hands.

Ver. 3. Draw out also the spear, etc.] An offensive weapon; expressive of the vengeance which God sometimes takes of the enemies of his people, when he bends his bow, shoots his arrows, whets his glittering sword, and his hand takes hold of judgment; and stop [the way] against them that persecute me; that they might not overtake him; God can hinder, and he sometimes does hinder persecutors from overtaking his people in their straits; and as he hedges up their way with thorns, that they cannot proceed as they have begun, so he hedges up the way of their enemies; interposes himself and his power, and is a wall of fire about them; a wall for the defence and security of his saints, and a wall of fire for the consumption of those that rise up against them. The words may be rendered, “draw out the spear and sword, to meet those that persecute me”[f497]; for rygs is a noun, and signifies a sword shut up in its scabbard; from whence “sagaris” comes, which is kind of a sword;

say unto my soul, I [am] thy salvation; Christ is the salvation of his people; he is the only person appointed, provided, promised, and sent to be the Saviour; and he is the alone author of salvation it is wrought out by him, and it is in him, and in him only; and therefore he is called their salvation, and the salvation of God: and they are interested in the salvation which is in him; it was designed, prepared, and wrought out for them, and for them only; and is applied unto them by the Spirit, and they shall perfectly enjoy it to all eternity: find yet sometimes they are at a loss about their interest in it, and desire might be made known unto them, which was the case of the psalmist here; they, as he, see their necessity it, and that there is no comfort nor safety without it they are wonderfully delighted with the excellency of it, that it is so great in itself, so suitable to them, so complete and perfect, and of an everlasting duration yet, what through the hidings of God’s face, the temptations of Satan, the greatness of their sins, and the prevalence of unbelief, they cannot tell how to believe their interest in it; yet most earnestly desire the Lord would show it to them, and assure them of it; which favour, when granted, is by the witnessings of the Spirit to their spirits, that they are the children of God, and the redeemed of the Lamb:

and this is said particularly to them; it is not a discovery of salvation by Christ in general; that they have before; but it is a saying to their souls, that it is theirs; and when this is spoken bathe to the soul by the Spirit of God, it is effectual; and removes unbelief at once, and fills with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Ver. 4. Let them be confounded, and put to shame, that seek after my soul, etc.] This petition, and what follows, which seem to be by way of imprecation, are to be considered as prophecies of what would be, and as expressions of faith that so it should be; and are not to be drawn into examples, and to be imitated by private persons; nor are they contrary to those evangelical rules, which require men to love their enemies, and pray for them; to give place to wrath, and not meditate vengeance, nor take it: and so it was with David's enemies. Saul, who hunted after his soul or life, to take it away, was filled with shame and confusion, when David, having cut off the skirt of his garment, held it up to him; by which he was convinced that his life was in his hands, and he did not take it away, though he was seeking after his: and so it will fare with the enemies of Christ, the Jews; who sought to take away his life and did take it away, when they shall see him come in the clouds of heaven, whom they have pierced; and in like manner will it be with the enemies of all his people, whom nothing will content but their lives, when they shall see the lambs they have worried and butchered on Christ's right hand, and they on the left; and to the sheep said, Come, ye blessed; and to them, Go, ye cursed, (<402534>Matthew 25:34,41);

let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt; as Saul did David's, even when he made the most specious show of affection and respect unto him, as well as when he more openly persecuted him; and more than once was he turned back with shame, and departed home; (see <092422>1 Samuel 24:22 26:25). The Jews, that came to apprehend Christ, together with the Roman soldiers, and who had devised and intended his hurt, went backward, and fell to the ground with shame and confusion, when, having asked them who they sought, and they had replied, told them he was the person; and how often has it been, that when wicked men have devised, deceitful matters against the members of Christ, that their counsel has been carried headlong, they have not been able to perform their enterprises; a hook has been put into their nose, and a bridle in their jaws, and they have been turned back the way they came, with shame and disgrace.

Ver. 5. Let them be as chaff before the wind, etc.] As they are; (see <190104>Psalm 1:4); and let the angel of the Lord chase [them]; either a good angel, who is the Lord’s, his creature that ministers unto him, and is ready to obey his orders; and who, as he encamps about the saints and protects them, so he is able to destroy their enemies; as one angel in a night destroyed all the firstborn in Egypt, and another the whole army of the Assyrians, (<021229>Exodus 12:29 <121935>2 Kings 19:35); an angel of the Lord, who is swift to fly, and so to chase and overtake, and able to execute whatever is the will of the Lord; or else an evil angel, who is the Lord’s, being made by him, though not made evil by him; and who is under his restraints, and can do nothing but by his permission; and who sometimes is employed by the Lord, as the executioner of his wrath upon wicked men; is suffered to distress and torture their consciences in this life, and hereafter drag them into everlasting burnings, prepared for the devil and his angels.

Ver. 6. Let their way be dark and slippery, etc.] In which they run before the angel, chasing and pursuing them; so that they know not where they are, at what they stumble, whither to flee, nor how to stand; the ways of wicked men are as darkness, they know not in what condition they are, and whither they are going; and utter darkness, even blackness of darkness, is reserved for them: but here it means a calamitous, uncomfortable, fickle, and unstable situation in this life; (see <242311>Jeremiah 23:11,12). The allusion is to some of the valleys in the land of Palestine, which were dark, and the roads in them very smooth and slippery, as travellers in those parts have observed[f498]; and let the angel of God persecute them; (see Gill on “<193505>Psalm 35:5”).

Ver. 7. For without cause have they hid for me their net [in] a pit, etc.] This is said in allusion to the custom of digging pits, and putting nets into them, for the catching of wild beasts; and covering them with straw or dust, or such like things, as Jarchi observes, that they might not be discerned; and which intends the secret and crafty methods taken by David’s enemies to ensnare him and destroy him; though he had given them no cause to use him in such a manner; which is an aggravation of their sins, and a reason of the above imprecations, as well as of what follows: and in the same manner, and without any just cause, Christ and his members have been treated by wicked men, and therefore their damnation is just, and will be inevitable:

[which] without cause they have digged for my soul; which is added for further explanation's sake, and to aggravate their sin, and to show the justness of their punishment.

Ver. 8. Let destruction come upon him at unawares, etc.] Or a "storm" [f499], such as is caused in the eastern countries by a south wind, very sudden, violent, and destructive [f500]: the singular number being here used, some Jewish commentators, as Kimchi, have thought Saul is particularly meant; and some Christian interpreters have been of opinion that Judas is intended: the imprecations here may be compared with those which respect him, (<19A906>Psalm 109:6-8). Though this may regard every one of the enemies of David, or of Christ and his people, whose ruin and destruction will come upon them unawares; (see <520503>1 Thessalonians 5:3 <661807>Revelation 18:7,8); and let his net that he hath laid catch himself; a figurative expression, agreeable to the allusion before made, and which is explained in the next clause;

into that very destruction let him fall, which he had designed and contrived for others; so Haman was hanged on the same gallows he had prepared for Mordecai; and so it often is in the course of Providence, that the wicked fall into the same calamity they have intended and endeavoured to bring others into; (see <190715>Psalm 7:15,16 9:15,16).

Ver. 9. And my soul shall be joyful in the Lord, etc.] Not in the destruction of his enemies, but in the God of his salvation; the Targum is, "in the Word of the Lord"; the essential Word of God, the promised Messiah, Saviour, and Redeemer. Christ is the object of a believer's joy; he rejoices in his person, as he is the mighty God, able to save him, and to keep what he has committed to him, and to preserve him from falling; as he is God and man in one person, and so fit to be a Mediator between God and man; and as he is a Prophet to instruct him, a Priest to expiate his sin and make intercession for him, and as a King to rule over, protect, and defend him; and as he stands in the relations of a father, husband, brother, and friend: he rejoices in what he has done and is doing; in that this Word is made flesh, and has obtained eternal redemption, and now appears in the presence of God, as an advocate and intercessor: it follows, it shall rejoice in his salvation; that which Jehovah the Father has determined upon, provided for, and has formed the scheme of; that which Jehovah the Son undertook to accomplish, and now has finished; and that which Jehovah the Spirit had made a discovery and application of unto the psalmist, in answer to his request in (<193503>Psalm 35:3). This filled him with so much joy, as it does every believer that has a view of interest in it; seeing hereby the law is fulfilled, justice is satisfied, sin is atoned for, the pardon of it is procured, an everlasting righteousness is brought in, and a solid foundation laid for hope of eternal glory and happiness.

Ver. 10. All my bones shall say, etc.] So, in a figurative sense, vexation and disquietude are ascribed to the bones, (<190602>Psalm 6:2 38:3); and sometimes joy and gladness, (<195108>Psalm 51:8). His soul is said to rejoice in (<193509>Psalm 35:9); and here his bones are said to show forth the praises of the Lord; and both together design the whole man, as heart and flesh in (<198402>Psalm 84:2); and the bones being the strength of the body may denote his saying what follows, with all his might, and with all his strength, and with the utmost fervency of spirit:

Lord, who [is] like unto thee; on account of the perfections of his nature, which appear in the salvation and deliverance of his people: there is none like unto him for his wisdom, holiness, power, grace, and mercy; for his foreknowledge, wisdom, and counsel, in forming the scheme of salvation; for his holiness and justice, which are glorified by it; for his might and power in effecting it; and for his grace, mercy, goodness, and faithfulness shown in keeping covenant with his people, in pardoning and passing by their iniquity and transgression, and in condescending to take notice of his poor and needy, to deliver them, as follows; (see <19B305>Psalm 113:5-8);

which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him: yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him? in which words the psalmist doubtless respects himself and his own case, who was poor and afflicted, and stood in need of help when he was persecuted by Saul, who was his enemy, too strong for him, and who sought to spoil and ruin him, but the Lord delivered him out of his hands; (see <191817>Psalm 18:17). They agree with the case of all the Lord's poor and needy, who are so not only in a temporal sense, as they commonly be; and in such sense as all mankind are, though everyone is not sensible of his spiritual poverty through sin; having neither food nor raiment, nor anything to procure them with, and yet think themselves rich and increased with goods; but in the best sense, being poor in spirit and rich in faith; these have enemies stronger than they. Sin is sometimes represented as a person, their antagonist that fights against them, wars with them, prevails over them sometimes, and carries them captive: sin is too strong for a man without the grace of God; nay, it was too strong for Adam in innocence, and spoiled him of the image of God, stripped him of his righteousness, and marred all the glory and honour in which he was; and it is too strong for a man that has the grace of God, when left to himself: but the Lord delivers his people from it; they; are redeemed from it, and saved from punishment for it by the blood of Christ; and they are freed from the power and dominion of it, by the Spirit and grace of Christ at conversion, and at death they are delivered from the being of it. Satan is the strong man armed, and is more than a match for the poor and needy; but Christ the mighty God is stronger than he, and has ransomed them out of the hands of him that was stronger than they; and the prey, or they that were made a spoil by him, are taken out of the hands of the mighty, and the lawful captive is delivered: they are, indeed, assaulted by his temptations, in which he would be too many for them, but that they are strengthened against him by the Lord, and are enabled to withstand him; who, in the issue, flees from them; nor can he do as he pleases with them, nor reassume his power over them he once had, nor lead them captive at his will as he once did: God is on their side, Christ is their patron and defender, that pleads their cause against him; the Spirit that is within them is greater than he that is in the world; angels are all around them, and in a little while these poor and needy will be in heaven, and out of his reach, and so of every oppressor and persecutor; now they are the weak things of this world, and their enemies are the mighty ones, and too strong for them, who spoil them of their good name and character, and sometimes of their goods and property; but the Lord does and will deliver them out of their hands, and enter them into rest, where the wicked cease from troubling.

Ver. 11. False witnesses did rise up, etc.] Against David, saying he sought the hurt of Saul, (<092409>1 Samuel 24:9), as did against David's antitype, the Lord Jesus Christ, (<402659>Matthew 26:59-61); and against his apostles, (<442405>Acts 24:5,6); and very frequently do they rise up and bear false witness against his people, which is a very heinous crime;

they laid to my charge [things] that I knew not: such as David was not conscious of, never thought of doing, much less attempted to do; as the taking away of Saul's life, the contrary of which appeared by his cutting off his skirt only when he was in his hands, and taking away his spear from his bolster when he could have taken off his head; and such were the things laid to the charge of the Messiah, David's son, who knew no sin, nor did any; and the like are exhibited against his members, who go through good report and bad report, and whose good conversation is falsely accused by malicious men.

Ver. 12. They rewarded me evil for good, etc.] For the good David did in killing Goliath, and slaying his ten thousands of the Philistines, and thereby saving his king and country, Saul and his courtiers envied him, and sought to slay him: so our Lord Jesus Christ, for all the good he did to the Jews, by healing their bodies of diseases, and preaching the Gospel to them for the benefit of their souls, was rewarded with reproaches and persecutions, and at last with the shameful death of the cross; and in like manner are his people used; but this is an evil that shall not go unpunished; (see <201713>Proverbs 17:13). It is added,

[to] the spoiling of my soul; or "to the bereaving of it" [f501]; causing it to be fatherless; that is, to the bereaving it of its joy, peace, and comfort; so fatherless is put for comfortless, (<431418>John 14:18); or to the taking away of his soul, which being separated from the body, its companion is left alone, as one that is fatherless.

Ver. 13. But as for me, when they were sick, etc.] Or under any disorder or distress of body or mind, when any misfortune or infirmity attended them; meaning Saul and his courtiers, before David was persecuted by them;

my clothing [was] sackcloth; that is, he was grieved, and mourned for them, it being usual to put on sackcloth in time of mourning; (see <013734>Genesis 37:34);

I humbled my soul with fasting; on the account of them, giving up himself to prayer for them, as follows:

and my prayer returned into mine own bosom; that is, he prayed privately and heartily for them, as for himself; he was constant in it, his heart was in it, and he took delight in it, and he was heard and answered; unless the sense should be, that his prayer was slighted by them, and so returned back to himself, as a present despised is returned; but however it was not without its effect, the good for which he prayed for them was returned by the Lord unto him.

Ver. 14. I behaved myself as though [he had been] my friend [or] brother, etc.] Meaning either Saul or Doeg the Edomite, or some such evil man; somewhat like this he says of Ahithophel, (<194109>Psalm 41:9 55:13); and

Arama thinks he is meant here; as Christ of Judas, whom he called friend, when he came to betray him; and who not only ate with him at table of his bread, but was steward of his family, and carried the bag, (<402650>Matthew 26:50 <431329>John 13:29);

I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth [for his] mother; or as a mother that mourneth for her son, as Jarchi interprets it, whose affections are very strong; and thus Christ wept over Jerusalem, and had a tender concern for and sympathy with the Jews, his implacable enemies, and wept over them, and prayed for them, (<421941>Luke 19:41 <402337>Matthew 23:37) (<422334>Luke 23:34).

Ver. 15. But in mine adversity they rejoiced, etc.] Or "at my halting"[f502], either by means of falling into sin; good men are subject to slips and falls, and that to the dislocating or breaking of their bones, which cause them to go halting all their days; wicked men watch for their halting, as Jeremiah's familiars did for his, (<242010>Jeremiah 20:10); and rejoice at it; (see <193816>Psalm 38:16,17); or by falling into some misfortune or calamity; hence we render it "adversity", and may design some affliction or other, as in (<330406>Micah 4:6 <360319>Zephaniah 3:19), at which wicked men rejoice; (see <263515>Ezekiel 35:15); so David's enemies rejoiced at his afflictions; and the enemies of his son and antitype, the Lord Jesus Christ, were glad when Judas offered to betray him to them; more so when they had got him into their hands; and most of all when he was condemned and crucified: and so do the enemies of his people, as the Philistines sported with Samson when he was in his adversity, and as the antichristian party will rejoice and send gifts one to another when the two witnesses are slain; but the saints have a gracious God, who knows their souls in adversity; a sympathizing high priest, who is touched with a feeling of their infirmities; and fellow saints that are afflicted with them in all their afflictions, and bear a part of their burdens; and gathered themselves together; not to pity him, but to insult him; not to help him in his distress, but to add to it;

[yea], the abjects gathered themselves together against me; mean persons, the refuse and scum of the earth; such as Job describes, (<183001>Job 30:1-8); the word may be rendered "smitten"[f503], either in spirit, as in (<236602>Isaiah 66:2); they pretending sorrow of heart for his troubles; or rather smitten in body, in their feet, as Mephibosheth was; yet as lame as they were, and notwithstanding their lameness, they got together to rejoice at David's halting: or it may be best of all to understand it of their being smitten of God and afflicted; and the sense may be, that though the hand of God was upon them, this did not deter them from gathering together to insult David in his afflictions; some render the word “smiters”[f504], that is, with their tongues, and so the Targum, “the wicked who smite with their words”; (see <241818>Jeremiah 18:18); and such sort of persons were they that gathered together against Christ: it is true indeed that some of them were men of rank and figure, were the princes of this world, as Herod and Pontius Pilate, and the Jewish rulers, (<440427>Acts 4:27,28), compared with (<190201>Psalm 2:1,2); but the greater part of them were the meaner sort of people; particularly the Roman soldiers that gathered about him, and sported with him in Pilate’s hall, and that surrounded him with scoffs when upon the cross; these also were literally “smiters” of him, both with words and with their hands, and are so called, (<235006>Isaiah 50:6);

and I knew [it] not; David knew his enemies, or he could not have shown so much concern for them, as he did in the preceding verses; but either he knew not of their gathering together against him; until he saw them in great numbers about him; or he was not conscious to himself of any evil he had done them, that should be the reason of it; and this was the case of his son the Messiah, he who they were that gathered about him, even those that blindfolded him, and bid him prophesy who smote him; but he knew no sin he had done why he should be treated in the manner he was;

they did tear [me], and ceased not; not their own garments, as some supply it, pretending great grief of heart for him; nor their mouth with laughing at him, as others; (see <193521>Psalm 35:21); but either his character and reputation, with hard sayings and reproachful words, or his flesh with blows; and this they did incessantly; and which was literally true of Christ, whose enemies tore his flesh, by plucking off the hair, by buffeting and scourging him, and by piercing his hands and his feet with nails, when they crucified him; and they ceased not, even after death, to pierce his side with a spear.

Ver. 16. With hypocritical mockers in feasts, etc.] That is, the abjects gathered, themselves together with such; these may design Saul’s courtiers, his parasites and flatterers, and who were hypocrites in religion also, and made it their business at Saul’s table, and in their banquetings and revellings, to mock at David; and who were “hypocritical mockers of” or “for a piece of bread”[f505], as it may be rendered; the same word is used for a pastry, or cake, and for flatterers; and they used at their feasts to throw a pastry baked with honey to parasites[f506], for the word gw[m signifies a cake, or a piece of bread, (<111712>1 Kings 17:12); and the sense may be, that they mocked at David as wanting a piece of bread, and that he had brought himself to one; or else those, and they that gathered with them especially, mocked at David for the sake of a meal; or for a piece of bread; (see <202827>Proverbs 28:27); and such sort of men were the enemies of Christ, the Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites to God, flatterers of men, who loved feasts, and the uppermost places there, and whose god was their belly; and who were mockers of Christ, derided his doctrine, and scoffed at his person, especially when he hung upon the cross;

they gnashed upon me with their teeth; in indignation and contempt; as Stephen’s enemies did on him, (<440754>Acts 7:54).

Ver. 17. Lord, how long wilt thou look on? etc.] And behold these injuries and insults, and not arise to help and save? The psalmist firmly believed the omniscience of God, and was well assured he saw all that was done; but he was ready to consider him only as a spectator; or, however, seems impatient until he arose and showed himself strong on his behalf; (see <193522>Psalm 35:22,23);

rescue my soul from their destructions, my darling from the lions; his “soul” and his “darling” mean the same; either his life, than which nothing is dearer to a man; or his soul, his more noble part, and which was now “alone”, or solitary, as the word[f507] used signifies; being forsaken of God and men, and was desolate and afflicted, as it is rendered (<192516>Psalm 25:16); or his whole person, which was among men comparable to lions, for their strength and savageness, who breathed out nothing but cruelty and destruction; from which he desires he might be rescued, or returned to the quiet possession of his own house, and the house of God: the words are much the same with those of the Messiah, (see Gill on “<192220>Psalm 22:20, 21”).

Ver. 18. I will give thee thanks in the great congregation, etc.] This is the resolution the psalmist came unto; the promise he made, that should he be delivered from his enemies, he would give God thanks in the most public manner; that is, he would acknowledge God to be the author of the mercy, and himself unworthy of it; and would ascribe glory, honour, blessing, and thanksgiving to him, in the midst of the church and people of God; they joining with him in it, when he should be restored to an attendance with them he before prays for;

I will praise thee among much people; meaning the same as before, the people of God meeting together for solemn worship; the great congregation of all, and the much people, will be the saints in heaven, when they shall be gathered together, and sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. The words will bear to be applied to the Messiah, (see <192222>Psalm 22:22).

Ver. 19. Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully rejoice over me, etc.] The word “wrongfully” is to be joined not to the word “rejoice”, but to the word “enemies”; and the sense is, that they were his enemies wrongfully, for false reasons, unjust causes, or without any cause that was just; as follows;

[neither] let them wink with the eye that hate me without a cause; such were David’s enemies, particularly Saul, (<190704>Psalm 7:4); and such were the enemies of Christ: this last clause is thought to be referred to by him, and applied to himself, (<431525>John 15:25); and the whole of this is said him and by him, (<196904>Psalm 69:4); see also (<19A903>Psalm 109:3-5). These were the Jews, of whom he came, among whom he was, and who had no reason to be his enemies, and to hate him; since he was harmless and inoffensive in his life and conversation among them; went about doing a great deal of good to them, both for soul and body, and always expressed the most tender concern for them: they had reasons for their hatred and rejection of him, but not justifiable ones; such as the meanness of his person and state in their view, the doctrines he preached relating to his deity, divine sonship, and the distinguishing grace of God; and his inveighing against the sins and vices which prevailed among them; and such are the enemies of his people, who hate them, though they are the quiet in the land, as is said in (<193520>Psalm 35:20); and are harmless and inoffensive in their behaviour towards men: these are hated for Christ’s sake; and because he has chosen and called them out of the world; and because of their principles, which are distinguishing, and their practices, which are good: now the psalmist entreats that such might not be suffered to go on rejoicing over him, and at his calamities, but that he might be delivered out of all troubles, and out of their hands; and that they might not have any reason to wink with their eyes in a scornful and deriding way to him, and as expressing their pleasure to one an other at his distresses; (see <200112>Proverbs 1:12,13 10:10).

Ver. 20. For they speak not peace, etc.] Meaning to himself, or any good man; as Joseph’s brethren could not to him, (<013704>Genesis 37:4); such were the men David had to do with, (<19C006>Psalm 120:6,7); and such were the enemies of Christ, who could not give him a good word, nor speak one to him, (<431020>John 10:20); and such are the enemies of his people, who breathe out nothing but threatenings and slaughter, and not anything that tends to peace, to promote and maintain it. Some versions, as the Septuagint, and they that follow that, render it, “they do speak peace to me”; but then it was in an hypocritical way, as in (<192803>Psalm 28:3); and as the Jews did to Christ, (<402216>Matthew 22:16,17); for it follows:

but they devise deceitful matters against [them that are] quiet in the land; meaning not the wicked, as Kimchi thinks; the rich, who live at ease and in quietness, having as much as heart can wish, “with” whom, as he renders it, David’s enemies devised mischief in a deceitful way; but the righteous of the earth, as the Targum; such as David and his men were, who desired to live peaceable and quiet lives under Saul’s government; and had no intention to disturb his government, or wrest the crown from him; and as the Messiah, David’s son, was, “the humble one in the earth”; as the Arabic version renders it in the singular number; a character that well agrees with Christ, who showed great humility in coming into this world, and during his stay in it; it was a state of humiliation with him, and in which he behaved in the most lowly and humble manner; he was the quiet one in the land; he strove not, nor cried, nor was his voice heard in the street; he was not noisy and clamorous, quarrelsome and litigious; but all the reverse; he bore all insults, reproaches, and sufferings, patiently and quietly: and such are his people, so far as they are influenced by his grace and Spirit; they are quiet and peaceable in kingdoms, cities, and neighbourhoods, and in the churches of God; and yet the wicked are continually plotting against them, and devising things, to their hurt.

Ver. 21. Yea, they opened their mouth wide against me, etc.] In laughter, scorn, and derision; (see <192207>Psalm 22:7,8);

[and] said, Aha, aha: a word expressive of joy; and the doubling it shows the greatness of it;

our eye hath seen [it]; what their heart wished for; namely, the distress of him, whose enemies they were.

Ver. 22. [This] thou hast seen, O Lord, etc.] The insults and derisions of these men, and the injuries they did to him, whom they hated. God is omniscient, and sees all things, all the evil wicked men do to him; and he will requite them in his own time; (see <191014>Psalm 10:14);

keep not silence; meaning at his prayers; that he would not be as one deaf and dumb, turning his ears from his cries, and giving no answer to his requests; (see <192801>Psalm 28:1 22:2);

O Lord, be not far from me; meaning not as to his general presence, in which sense he is not far from any, (Acts 17:07); but with respect to his gracious presence and appearance to him for help and deliverance; (see <192201>Psalm 22:1).

Ver. 23. Stir up thyself and awake, etc.] Who seemed to be asleep in the apprehensions of the psalmist, and to take no notice of his distresses, and the insults of his enemies; (see <194423>Psalm 44:23); he adds, to my judgment, [even] to my cause; that is, to plead it and maintain it, and avenge him of his enemies, as in (<193501>Psalm 35:1); making use of his covenant interest in him as a plea for it to engage him to do it, saying, my God, and my Lord; (see <192201>Psalm 22:1).

Ver. 24. Judge me, O Lord my God, according to thy righteousness, etc.] Either that righteousness of his, by which he justifies his people, which Christ has wrought out, God has accepted of, and imputes; and which, though revealed in the Gospel, was witnessed to by the law and prophets, and was known to the saints under the Old Testament, and particularly to David; (see <450406>Romans 4:6); or the perfection of his justice, his essential righteousness displayed in all his works and actions, and in the government of the world; according to this the psalmist desired to be judged; not with respect to his person before God, but with respect to his cause before men, by delivering him from his enemies, and taking vengeance on them: thus Christ also was judged according to the strict justice or righteousness of God; for as sin was righteously condemned in his flesh, being imputed to him, and found upon him; so he was, according to the justice of God, acquitted, discharged, and justified in the Spirit, when he arose from the dead; and afterwards righteous judgment was executed on his enemies the Jews, when wrath came upon them to the uttermost: and his people are also dealt with according to the righteousness of God; who acts as a righteous God, as just and faithful in forgiving their sins, on account of the blood of Christ being shed for it; and in justifying their persons by his righteousness, and by giving them the crown of righteousness laid up for them; and at last by rendering tribulation to them that have troubled them; and let them not rejoice over me; meaning his enemies, as in (<193515>Psalm 35:15,19); that is, let them not go on to rejoice; let them have no occasion for it, but deliver me out of their hands.

Ver. 25. Let them not say in their hearts, ah, so would we have it, etc.] Or we have what our souls wished for and desired: the sense of the petition is the same with (<192712>Psalm 27:12);

let them not say, we have swallowed him up; as roaring lions swallow down their prey, to which he had compared them, (<193517>Psalm 35:17); and as wicked men eat up the Lord’s people as they eat bread, (<191404>Psalm 14:4).

Ver. 26. Let them be ashamed and brought to confusion together, etc.] In a body, as one man; as they gathered together against him, (<193515>Psalm 35:15); so he entreats they might together be brought to shame and confusion, they not being able to execute their designs; their schemes being broken, their counsels defeated, and they exposed to contempt; that rejoice at mine hurt; the same with his adversity, or halting, (<193515>Psalm 35:15);

let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify [themselves] against me; let them be covered with it, as a man is with a garment; who magnified themselves, opened their mouths in great swelling words of vanity against him, vaunted and bragged over him, as in their power, and at their will.

Ver. 27. Let them shout for joy, and be glad, that favour my righteous cause, etc.] The cause of David was a righteous cause, he having done no iniquity, or anything criminal against Saul his enemy, who persecuted him; and there were some that favoured his cause, as Jonathan, Saul’s son, and a few others of rank and figure; but the greatest part were mean and despicable, (<092202>1 Samuel 22:2); and so the cause of Christ and of his people, which is one, is a righteous cause, which no one need to be ashamed of, and is worth suffering for; though those that favour it are for the most part the poor and base and weak things of the world: but when this cause prospers they rejoice and are glad, as they do at the happiness of every particular saint; for if one member is honoured, all the rest rejoice with it;

yea, let them say continually, the Lord be magnified; let them continually ascribe greatness, give honour and glory, to him, which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant; meaning either himself, who was a servant of the Lord, not only by creation, but by grace; and who had his times both of temporal and spiritual prosperity; which were owing to the good will and pleasure of God, and to the delight and complacency he had in him, being a man after his own heart, raised up to fulfil his will; and since this prosperity did not arise from any desert of his, he would have all the glory of it given to God: or else he intends the Messiah, his antitype, who, as Mediator, is the servant of the Lord; of his choosing, calling, and sending; whose commands he diligently and faithfully obeyed; from whom he had his work, and also his reward: his prosperity lies in the work of redemption succeeding in his hands; in his exaltation at the right hand of God; and in the spread of his Gospel in the world, and the efficacy of it to the conviction of sinners; and in the establishment and increase of his kingdom and interest; on which account the Lord’s name is to be magnified and glorified, who delights in him as his servant, and in his prosperity; and the rather this is to be done, since the saints have an interest in him as a Prince and a Saviour: or anyone of the servants of the Lord may be understood; or however it is applicable to anyone of them, who, through the power of divine grace upon them, are made willing to serve the Lord with reverence and godly fear; who are his Hephzibah, in whom is all his delight and pleasure, (<236204>Isaiah 62:4); who rejoices over them to do them good: and hence flows all the spiritual prosperity they enjoy, on account of which glory is to be given to God by them and all the saints that know it, (<193401>Psalm 34:1,2).

Ver. 28. And my tongue shall speak of thy righteousness, etc.] In vindicating his cause, and bringing his enemies to shame and confusion, as well as of the glory and excellency of that righteousness of his, by which he was justified in his sight, and from whence his inward peace and prosperity flowed:

[and] of thy praise all the day long; for the many mercies, temporal and spiritual, he was every day favoured with.

PSALM 36

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 36

To the chief Musician, [a Psalm] of David, the servant of the Lord

This title, which the psalmist takes to himself, regards him not only as a creature, every man being the servant of the Lord as such, of right, though not in fact; but as a king, he being a minister of God for good to good men, and for evil to evil men; and also may respect him as a renewed man; and it is here used in opposition to and distinction from the wicked, who are the servants of sin and Satan, of whom he speaks in this psalm. The Syriac and Arabic versions in their titles suggest that this psalm was written when David was persecuted by Saul, and which is the sense of some interpreters; but R. Obadiah thinks Ahithophel is designed by the wicked man in it; and so it was penned on account of Absalom’s rebellion.

Ver. 1. The transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, etc.] Which is represented as a person speaking within him; not that the transgression of the wicked was really in him; sin was in him, and sin of the same kind and nature with the wicked man’s; but he taking notice of and considering the wicked man’s sinful course of life, and his daring impieties, conceived in his own mind, and concluded from hence,

[that there is] no fear of God before his eyes; no reverential affection for him, but enmity to him; no godly filial fear, but at most only a slavish fear, a fear of punishment; no holy and humble fear of him, but pride and wickedness; no fiducial and obediential fear, but all the reverse; true worship of him, either internally or externally: there can be no fear of God in any unregenerate man’s, heart, because it is not of nature, but of grace, and is, what is implanted at first conversion; there is in some an appearance of it, where it is not really, whose fear is taught by the precept of men; and in others there may be some awe of the divine Being, and trembling at the thought of a future judgment, arising from the dictates of nature, the light of revelation, and the enjoyment of a religious education; but in some there is no fear of God at all, and they are bold and daring enough to assert it themselves, as the unjust judge did, (<421804>Luke 18:4). Such as the atheist, the common swearer, the debauchee and epicure, who give up themselves to all manner of wickedness, contemn revelation, despise the word of God, and regard no day nor manner of worship; and this notwithstanding the majesty of God, at whose presence they tremble not, and notwithstanding the goodness of God, which should induce them to fear him, and notwithstanding the judgment of God on others, and even on themselves; (see <240308>Jeremiah 3:8 <422340>Luke 23:40); and notwithstanding the future awful judgment, which they put far away or disbelieve. The Targum is, "transgression saith to the wicked within my heart"; and Jarchi's note upon the text is this,

> "this text is to be transposed thus, it is in my heart, that transgression, which is the evil imagination, says to the wicked man, that there should be no fear of God before his eyes; and the phrase, "in the midst of my heart", is as if a man should say, so it seems to me."

The Septuagint version, and those that follow it, render the words thus, "the transgressor said, that he might sin in himself, there is no fear of God before his eyes". Gussetius [f508] interprets "before his eyes", before the eyes of God himself, who is so good a Being, that the sinner fears no punishment from him, but will pardon all his sins.

Ver. 2. For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, etc.] There are many self-flatterers; some on account of their worldly estate, that they are out of the reach of God and men, and regard neither; and that as they have much goods laid up, they shall enjoy them many years, and so never think of dying, nor of another world: others on account of their eternal state, pleasing themselves with their own purity, goodness, and righteousness: some flatter themselves either that their sins are not sins, or they are small ones; or they are no other than what multitudes commit; or they are not seen and known, and that God himself sees them not, or takes no notice of them; and that they shall go on with impunity, sentence against them being not speedily executed; and others that there is no God, will be no judgment, nor future state; until his iniquity be found to be hateful, or, "to find his iniquity and to hate" [f509] that which is good, as the word may be rendered; that is, he flatters himself, or speaks smooth things to himself, and endeavours to work himself up into the belief of the above things; that he may find, embrace, and indulge his lusts with a quiet conscience, and hate God, good men, and everything that is good; the Targum is,

> “that he may find sins and hate doctrine” or instruction. Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret the words another way, > “that the holy and blessed God may find out his iniquity to hate him;”

(see <014416>Genesis 44:16), which God may be said to do, when he charges the guilt of sin upon the conscience, and punishes for it; and exposes both the sinner and his sins to the world; thereby testifying his hatred of him and his sins; and which should have been hateful to him, as they are to all good men.

Ver. 3. The words of his mouth [are] iniquity and deceit, etc.] Not only sinful, but sin itself; his mouth is full of cursing and bitterness, of filthy and unchaste words, of corrupt communication, lying, deceit, and flattery; out of the abundance of the wickedness of his heart his mouth speaketh; and which shows the badness of it, and proves all that is said before of him;

he hath left off to be wise, [and] to do good; by which the psalmist seems to intend one that had been a professor of religion, who, besides the light of nature he had acted contrary to, had had the advantage of a divine revelation, and had been enlightened into the knowledge of divine things, and had done many things externally good, particularly acts of beneficence; but now had dropped his profession of religion, denied the truths he had been enlightened into, and ceased from doing good; otherwise a natural man understandeth not; and, though he is wise to do evil, to do good he has no knowledge.

Ver. 4. He deviseth mischief upon his bed, etc.] He casts about in his mind on his pillow, when at leisure from all employment; and consults and contrives schemes how to compass his lusts, and to do injury to others, without doing which he cannot sleep;

he setteth himself in a way [that is] not good, in an evil way, which he chooses and delights in, and determines to continue in, he leaving the paths of righteousness to walk in the ways of darkness:

he abhorreth not evil; which is to be abhorred both because of its nature and effects; (see <451209>Romans 12:9); but on the contrary he loves it, takes pleasure in doing it, and in them that commit it: thus, by his thoughts, words, and actions, he appears to be devoid of the fear of God.

Ver. 5. Thy mercy, O Lord, [is] in the heavens, etc.] Meaning either the general mercy of God the earth is full of, and extends to all creatures; to which it is owing that wicked men before described are not consumed; and which reaches “up to the heavens”[f510], as the words are by some rendered, as their sins do; (see <195710>Psalm 57:10); or the special mercy of God, and regards not the objects of it, creatures in heaven; for there at, none there proper objects of mercy; but the seat of it, the heart of God, who is in heaven; or the repository of it, the covenant of grace, which is full of the sure mercies of David; and of mercy there was a most glaring instance, when the son of God was sent down from heaven, to obtain salvation for sinful men; or it may denote the original of it, the heaven, being, as Aben Ezra observes some Jewish interpreters say, the fountain of mercy, and the spring of truth; or the greatness and abundance of it, it being as high as heaven, yea, above it; (see <19A311>Psalm 103:11 108:4);

[and] thy faithfulness [reacheth] unto the clouds; which lies in the execution of his purposes, whose counsels of old were faithfulness and truth; and in keeping his covenant and promises; he never changes his mind, nor forgets his word; he is a God of truth, and cannot lie; he knows the end from the beginning; no unforeseen event can turn up to hinder the performance of what he has purposed and promised, and he is able to perform; nor does ever any of the good things he has spoken of fail: though his faithfulness sometimes seems to be not only to the clouds, but in them, and out of sight; providences seem to clash with promises, which make unbelief to say, doth his promise fail for evermore? yet, though we believe not, he abides faithful, (<197708>Psalm 77:8) (<550213>2 Timothy 2:13).

Ver. 6. Thy righteousness [is] like the great mountains, etc.] Or, “the mountains of God”; so called for their excellency, as the cedars of God, (<198010>Psalm 80:10); or, as Gussetius[f511] observes, the greatest and highest mountains, which are here meant, reaching above the clouds and the region of the air, are the pillars of the palace of God, and a part of it; and therefore called his mountains with great propriety, to which his righteousness is compared: that is, either the righteousness of God in the government of the world, which is sometimes like the high mountains, not to be reached and accounted for in the present state of things, though always is, and is immovable as they are; or the righteousness of God, by which he justifies sinners, which may be said to be as the mountains of God, because of the dignity of his person, who has wrought it out; and because of the clear manifestation of it, the Gospel, and so visible, as high mountains; and because of the immovableness and duration of it;

thy judgments [are] a great deep; both in a way of providence, many of them being at present not to be traced, though before long they will be made manifest; and in a way of grace, such as the choice of some, and the leaving of others, the rejection of the Jews, and the call of the Gentiles; (see <451133>Romans 11:33);

O Lord, thou preservest man and beast; in a providential way, upholding each in their being, and supplying them with the necessaries of life: some understand this figuratively, of God’s saving Jews and Gentiles, wise and unwise, and particularly those who, through humility and modesty, as Jarchi says, compare themselves to beasts, because of their ignorance and stupidity, (<203002>Proverbs 30:2 <197322>Psalm 73:22).

Ver. 7. How excellent [is] thy lovingkindness, O God, etc.] Which has appeared to men and not angels, to some and not others; to the chief of sinners, who are by nature children of wrath as others; in choosing, redeeming, and calling them, taking them into his family, and making them heirs of eternal glory; and all this of his sovereign good will and pleasure, there being nothing in them that could move him to it; which lovingkindness was in his heart from everlasting, and will never change in him, nor depart from them; and hence it must be most excellent and precious:

therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings; not all men; for all have not faith, only some, to whom it is given to believe, and who know the Lord and his lovingkindness; by which they are induced and encouraged to trust in him, to betake themselves to him for mercy and protection, which they find in him: the allusion is either to the hen that gathers her chickens under her wings, and protects them in time of danger, and so it expresses both the paternal affection of God to his people, and the protection of them; or else to the wings of the cherubim over the mercy seat, between which the Lord sat and communed with his people, and showed mercy and favour to them, which encouraged them to trust in him.

Ver. 8. They shall be abundantly sallied with the fatness of thy house, etc.] By his "house" is meant the church of God, of his building, and where he dwells; by the fatness of it the provisions there, the word and ordinances, and the blessings of grace which they hold forth; and especially Christ, the fatted calf, the bread of life, whose flesh is meat indeed, and whose blood is drink indeed, and which make a feast of fat things; and these they that trust in the Lord are welcome to eat and drink of abundantly, and to abundant satisfaction; (see <400506>Matthew 5:6) (<192226>Psalm 22:26); and thou shall make them drink of the river of thy pleasure; the love of God, whose streams make glad the city of God; or the fulness of grace, which is in Christ, out of which believers draw with joy, and drink with pleasure; or eternal glory and happiness, enjoyed in the presence of God, in which is fulness of joy, and at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore; a never ceasing torrent of them.

Ver. 9. For with thee [is] the fountain of life, etc.] Or "lives" [f512]: God himself is the fountain of living waters; this is a reason proving the happiness of those that trust in the Lord, and that they shall enjoy the above things; because with God the object of their trust is the fountain of life; not only of natural life, from whom they have it, and by whom it is supported, but of spiritual life, being quickened by him when dead in sin, by virtue of which they live by faith on Christ, and also of eternal life; and the phrase denotes, that life is originally in God as in its fountain, and that both the fulness of it is with him, and the freeness of it in the communication of it to others, as well as its continuance and duration;

in thy light shall we see light; God is light itself, the Father of lights, and the former of it in every sense; in the light of his countenance, and the discoveries of his love, they that trust in him see light, or enjoy comfort; and in the light of his Son Jesus Christ, the sun of righteousness and light of the world, they see the face of God, and enjoy his favour, and behold the glory and excellency of Christ himself; and in the light of the divine Spirit, who is a spirit of wisdom and revelation, they see their sins exceeding sinful, their righteousness as nothing, and a preciousness in the blood, righteousness, and sacrifice of Christ; and in the light of the divine word they see the truths of the Gospel in their native simplicity and excellency, and the duties of religion to be performed by them; and in the light of faith, which is the gift of God, they have at least a glimpse of the unseen glories of the other world; and when the beatific vision shall take place, they shall see no more darkly through a glass, but face to face, even God himself, as he is in Christ.

Ver. 10. O continue thy lovingkindness to them that know thee, etc.] That is, spiritually and experimentally; and such are they that trust in him and love him: and these are the objects of the love of God; not that their knowledge, faith, or love, are the cause of his love to them; but these things describe and point at manifestly the objects of it; and this request regards the open discovery of it unto them: for the love of God itself always continues, though the manifestations of it are not always the same; and it is for the enlargement and continuance of them the psalmist here prays: for it may be rendered, “draw out thy lovingkindness”[f513]; that is, to a greater length; make a larger and clearer discovery of it, that the height and depth, and length and breadth of it, may be more discerned; and thy righteousness unto the upright in heart; who are sincere and without guile; who have new hearts created and right spirits renewed in them, and have truth in the inward parts; and unto and upon such is the righteousness of Christ, and where it always continues, for it is an everlasting one; but here it means a clearer and constant revelation of it from faith to faith; unless it should rather intend the righteousness of God in protecting his people from the insults of their enemies, and the continual exertion of it for that purpose.

Ver. 11. Let not the foot of pride come against me, etc.] Meaning some proud enemy, such an one as Ahithophel, of whom R. Obadiah expounds, it, who lifted up his heel against him; and is applicable to any haughty enemy of Christ and his people, and particularly to antichrist, the man of sin, that exalts himself above all that is called God; and let not the hand of the wicked remove me; either from the house of God; or from his throne, that high station and dignity in which he was placed.

Ver. 12. There are the workers, of iniquity fallen, etc.] Either in the pit they dug for others; or into hell, where they shall be turned at last; (see Gill on “<190505>Psalm 5:5”) and (see Gill on “<190608>Psalm 6:8”);

they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise; which will be the case of Babylon when fallen, (<661821>Revelation 18:21), and this distinguishes the falls of the wicked from those of the righteous; for though the righteous fall, whether into sin, or into any calamity, they rise again; not so the wicked; (see <193724>Psalm 37:24 <330708>Micah 7:8); and thus, as the psalm begins with the transgression of the wicked, it ends with their ruin.

PSALM 37

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 37

[A Psalm] of David

This psalm, it is very probable, was written at the same time, and upon the same occasion, with the former; and describes the different states of good and bad men; and is full of exhortations, instructions, and advice to the people of God; intermixed with various encouraging promises. A late learned writer [f514] thinks it was written for Mephibosheth's consolation under Ziba's calumny.

Ver. 1. Fret not thyself because of evildoers, etc.] The saints may be grieved at them and for them, because of their evil doings, and may be angry with them for them; yet are not to show any undue warmth, at least in an indecent way, by calling them opprobrious names; for the words may be rendered, "do not show thyself warm" or "angry" [f515]: in a sinful way; or fret not at their outward prosperity, as it is explained (<193707>Psalm 37:7). The Targum adds, "to be like them", which agrees with (<193708>Psalm 37:8); neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity; that is, at their present temporal happiness; (see <197303>Psalm 73:3). The Targum adds, as before, to be joined with them; which sense some parallel places seem to incline to, (<200331>Proverbs 3:31 23:17).

Ver. 2. For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.] Which in the morning looks green, pretty, and flourishing, and in the evening is cut down, and then fades away; (see <199005>Psalm 90:5,6); and so the wicked prosper and flourish for a while, and then they perish with all their honour, riches, and wealth; so that their happiness is a very short lived one, and therefore need not be envied and fretted at.

Ver. 3. Trust in the Lord, etc.] Not in men, who are fading and perishing like the green grass and tender herb; nor in riches, which are very uncertain things; but in the Lord, in whom is everlasting strength; and with whom are riches and honour, yea, durable riches and righteousness; trust in him both for things temporal and spiritual, for soul and body, for time and eternity;

the way to have peace and quietness of mind under all dispensations is to exercise faith on a promising God. The Targum is, “trust in the Word of the Lord”, in the essential Word of God, the promised Messiah; and do good; in general, all good actions, in faith, and as the fruits and effects of it, without trusting to them, but in the Lord; doing them in his strength, and with a view to his glory; or in particular, acts of beneficence to the poor, to which the encouragement follows;

[so] shalt thou dwell in the land; either in the land of Canaan, a continuance in which depended upon the obedience of the people of the Jews to the commands of God; (see <230119>Isaiah 1:19 <490601>Ephesians 6:1,2); or rather in the good land which is afar off, the heavenly and better country, which those that trust in the Lord, and have that faith in Christ which works by love, shall dwell in to all eternity;

and verily thou shalt be fed; either temporally, shall have food and raiment, even all the necessaries of life; or spiritually, with the word and ordinances, and with Christ the bread of life now; and hereafter shall be fed by him, the Lamb in the midst of the throne, and by him led to fountains of living water: some read the words as an exhortation, and render them, “feed truth” [f516], that is, teach it, as Abraham taught his household, and as faithful pastors feed with knowledge and understanding; or “feed by faith” [f517], as the just live by it; or, as the Targum renders it, “be strong in faith”, as Abraham was, (<450420>Romans 4:20); or rather, “feed upon truth” [f518], the word of truth, the Gospel of salvation, and the several truths and doctrines of it, which are food for faith, and nourish up to everlasting life.

Ver. 4. Delight thyself also in the Lord, etc.] In the persons in God, Father, Son, and Spirit; in the perfections of God, his power, goodness, faithfulness, wisdom, love, grace, and mercy; in his works of creation, providence, and redemption; in his word, his Gospel, the truths and ordinances of it; in his house, and the worship of it; and in his people, the excellent in the earth, in whom was all the delight of the psalmist; and each of these afford a field of delight and pleasure, to attend unto, contemplate, and meditate upon; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart; such as are according to the will of God, and for the good of his people; such as relate to communion with him, and to the communication of more grace from him, and to the enjoyment of eternal glory.

Ver. 5. Commit thy way unto the Lord, etc.] Or “thy works”, as in (<201603>Proverbs 16:3); that is, all the affairs and business of life, which are a man’s ways in which he walks; not that men should sit still, be inactive, and do nothing, and leave all to be done by the Lord; but should seek direction of God in everything engaged in, and for strength and assistance to perform it, and go on in it, and depend upon him for success, and give him all the glory, without trusting to any thing done by them: or, as some render the words, “reveal thy way unto the Lord”[f519]; not that God is ignorant of the ways of men, and of their affairs, and of their wants and necessities, but it is their duty to ask, and it is his delight to hear; they may come and use freedom with him, and tell him their whole case, and leave it with him, believing he will supply all their need: or, as others render it, “roll thy way on the Lord”[f520]; (see <195522>Psalm 55:22); meaning not the burden of sin, nor the weight of affliction, but any affair of moment and importance that lies heavy upon the mind;

trust also in him; it is an ease to the mind to spread it before the Lord, who sympathizes with his people, supports them under and brings them through their difficulties; and he shall bring [it] to pass; as he does whatever he has appointed and determined shall be, and whatever he has promised, and whatever will be for his own glory and his people’s good.

Ver. 6. And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, etc.] That is, the good man having committed his cause to him that judgeth righteously, he will, in his own time, clearly make it appear that it is a righteous one, both to himself and others, in whatsoever obscurity it may have lain;

and thy judgment as the noonday; the same as before, unless rather the righteousness of Christ, which is the believer’s by imputation, and is a justifying one in the judgment of God, should be meant; (see <330709>Micah 7:9); and the phrases may denote not barely the revelation of it in the Gospel, but the more clear manifestation of it to the believer himself, from faith to faith; or as it will be still more clearly revealed and declared at the day of judgment, when those who are clothed with it shall shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, and be clear of all those charges and imputations which they have lain under in this life.

Ver. 7. Rest in the Lord, etc.] Or “be silent to the Lord” [f521]; be still, and know that he is God; quietly submit to his will, and acquiesce in all the dispensations of his providence: it does not design a stupid indolence, or a stoical apathy, that we should be like sticks and stones, without any concern at the hand of God upon us; nor an entire silence under afflictions; we should own that they are of God, and that we are deserving of them; we should pray to him to sanctify them, to support under them, and deliver out of them; we should bless his name that they are no worse, and that they are any ways useful to us; and we should speak to others of the divine goodness experienced under them; but this stands opposed to an arraigning or murmuring at the providence of God, and intends a patient bearing the hand of God, and a resignation of will to his will; for it follows, and wait patiently for him: for the enjoyment of him, help from him, and deliverance by him; fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass; this explains the sense of (<193701>Psalm 37:1); it being often an additional uneasiness to the people of God under affliction, when they observe the prosperity of men that go on in a sinful way, and have all or more than heart can wish; and whatever they contrive and devise, though wicked and criminal.

Ver. 8. Cease from anger, etc.] Either at these wicked men who are so prosperous, or at God, who for the present suffers it; (see Jon 4:9) (<201903>Proverbs 19:3); and forsake wrath; which is anger wrought up to a greater degree; and the rather to be shunned and avoided, as being very disagreeable to the character of a good man;

fret not thyself in any wise to do evil; evil may be done by fretting at the prosperity of wicked men, or by imitating them, doing as they do, in hope of being prosperous as they are; from which the psalmist dissuades by reasons following.

Ver. 9. For evildoers shall be cut off, etc.] Though they flourish for a while, they shall be cut down like the grass or flower of the field, or they shall be cut off as branches from a flourishing tree; they shall be cut off from the earth, and rooted out of it by death or some desolating judgment; (see <200222>Proverbs 2:22); and therefore not to be envied and fretted at;

but those that wait upon the Lord shall inherit the earth; such who attend his word, worship, and ordinances; obey his commands, trust in his grace and mercy; or, as the Targum, “trust in the word of the Lord”; who wait upon him for the manifestations of himself, for the performance of his promises, for answer of prayer, for supplies of grace, and live in the expectation of the heavenly glory; these shall have for their inheritance, not the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey, which the obedient Jews enjoyed; but either this world and the necessaries of it, which such persons have the promise of, a right unto through Christ, are heirs of, and do enjoy what they do with a blessing; or else the new earth after this, in which only righteous ones, those that wait upon the Lord, and trust in him, will dwell; unless the heavenly country, the good land afar off, is meant, often called an inheritance.

Ver. 10. For yet a little while, and the wicked [shall] not [be], etc.] Not that they shall be annihilated or reduced to nothing, because nonentities have no place nor being any where; when they die they shall lift up their eyes in hell; their bodies will rise again at the last day; they shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ, and go into everlasting punishment; but they shall be no more in the world, and in the same flourishing and prosperous circumstances they were: and this their destruction will be in a short time, very quickly; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it [shall] not [be]; his dwelling place, called after his own name, to perpetuate the memory of him; (see ◁180710▷Job 7:10 20:9); an instance of this the psalmist gives of his own knowledge, (◁193735▷Psalm 37:35,36).

Ver. 11. But the meek shall inherit the earth, etc.] (See Gill on “◁193709▷Psalm 37:9”); of this character (see Gill on “◁192226▷Psalm 22:26”). Our Lord seems to refer to this passage in (◁400505▷Matthew 5:5); and shall delight themselves is the abundance of peace; of spiritual peace enjoyed in a way of believing, arising from a comfortable view of interest in the blood, righteousness, and sacrifice of Christ; and of all happiness and prosperity in the kingdom of Christ here on earth, at which time there will be abundance of peace, (◁197207▷Psalm 72:7); or of eternal peace in the world to come, which will be a state of uninterrupted and unspeakable peace; (see ◁193737▷Psalm 37:37); all which afford inconceivable delight and pleasure; and therefore such have no need to fret and be envious at the fading happiness of wicked men.

Ver. 12. The wicked plotteth against the just, etc.] Forms schemes to make him uneasy, uncomfortable, and unhappy:

and gnasheth upon him with his teeth: which expresses his malice and hatred, as David’s enemies did upon him, (<193516>Psalm 35:16); and Stephen’s, (<440754>Acts 7:54).

Ver. 13. The Lord shall laugh at him, etc.] Have him and his plots in derision, confound his schemes, and disappoint him of his designs, bring him into calamity, and laugh at it; (see <190204>Psalm 2:4 <200126>Proverbs 1:26);

for he seeth that his day is coming; either the day of the Lord, which he has appointed to judge the world in, and which comes suddenly, at unawares, as a thief in the night, and is known unto the Lord, though to none else; or the day of the wicked man’s ruin and destruction, to which he is appointed, and which is the same; and so the Targum is, “the day of his calamity”: which the Lord observes is hastening on, when he will be for ever miserable.

Ver. 14. The wicked have drawn out the sword, etc.] That is, out of the scabbard; they drew upon the righteous, in order to sheath it in them; or they sharpened the sword, as Aben Ezra observes some interpret the word; it may be literally rendered, “opened the sword” [f522], which before lay hid in the scabbard:

and have bent their bow; having put the arrow in it, in order to shoot. The former expression may design the more open, and this the more secret way of acting against the righteous; and their view in both is to cast down the poor and needy, who are so, both in a temporal and spiritual sense; to cause such to fall either into sin, or into some calamity or another:

[and] to slay such as be of upright conversation; who walk according to the rule of the word of God, and as becomes the Gospel of Christ: nothing less than the blood and life of these men will satisfy the wicked; and it is an aggravation of their wickedness that they should attempt to hurt men of such character who are poor and needy, holy, harmless, inoffensive, and upright; and this points at the reason why they hate them, and seek their ruin, because of the holiness and uprightness of their lives; (see <431519>John 15:19,20 <600403>1 Peter 4:3,4).

Ver. 15. Their sword shall enter into their own heart, etc.] As Saul’s did into his, (<093104>1 Samuel 31:4); and their bows shall be broken; the meaning is, that their efforts shall be fruitless, and their attempts in vain; the mischief they have contrived and designed for others shall fall upon themselves; (see <190715>Psalm 7:15); and therefore the saints should not be fretful and envious.

Ver. 16. A little that a righteous man hath, etc.] It is the portion of the righteous, for the most part, to have but little of this world’s goods; some indeed have been rich, as Abraham, Lot, David, Joseph of Arimathea, and others; but, generally speaking, the wicked have the largest share of worldly things, and the righteous but little, and are as having nothing comparatively; and yet their little

[is] better than the riches of many wicked; not that a little is better than much, or that poverty is better than riches, or a poor man better than a rich man; but the comparison is between a righteous man and a wicked man; the emphasis lies there; and the sense is, that a “righteous” man’s “little” is better than a “wicked” man’s “much”; the righteous have a right to what they have, through Christ, who is heir of all things, but not the wicked; they have what they have in love and with a blessing, not so the wicked; they are contented in their state and condition, when the wicked are never satisfied; they possess and enjoy what they have, even all they have, when God oftentimes does not give the wicked an heart to eat and drink of what they are possessed, but a stranger eats it; they have the presence of God with them, and that makes a little sweet, and to go a great way; and they live without any anxious, distressing, burdensome care; not so the wicked; and before long the tables will be turned, and they will have their good things, and the wicked their evil things; (see <201608>Proverbs 16:8 15:16,17); wherefore they have no need to fret under present circumstances, nor envy the happiness of wicked men. Arama interprets it, of a little help that a righteous man has, better than the riches of many wicked; and Gussetius [f523] understands all this not of the smallness and largeness of the substance of different persons, but of their numbers, the one small, the other large; and Jarchi, that the sense is, that a few persons with the righteous, which was the case of Abraham and Gideon, are better and succeed more than the multitude of many wicked persons; and the church should be content with a small number of believers, and not draw in a multitude of wicked men into their communion.

Ver. 17. For the arms of the wicked shall be broken, etc.] That is, their sword arm, with which they have drawn it; and so shall not be able to strike with it; and with which they have bent their bows, but shall not be able to shoot: and this proves, what is before suggested, that their efforts shall be fruitless; or their substance shall be taken away from them, in which they trusted, and wherein their strength lay; and this confirms what had been just spoken, that the righteous man's little is better than the wicked man's much; and which is further confirmed by what follows;

but the Lord upholdeth the righteous; both in a providential way, by supporting them in their being, supplying their need, preserving them from dangers, and bearing them up under all their afflictions; and in a spiritual way, by maintaining the principle of grace and life in them, by furnishing them with all spiritual blessings, by sustaining them in times of temptation, and by securing them safe from their enemies; upholding them so as that they stand in the grace of God now, and shall stand before Christ with confidence hereafter; and shall not fall here finally and totally, nor in the day of judgment. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord upholdeth the righteous".

Ver. 18. The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, etc.] Not only how long they shall live, and so fill up their days, the number of them, as Aben Ezra interprets it; but the nature of their days, whether prosperous or adverse; and causes both to work together for their good; and he knows the work of their days, as Jarchi explains it, the actions done by them in faith and love, and to his honour and glory, and which he approves and accepts of in Christ; (see <190106>Psalm 1:6); and their inheritance shall be for ever; in heaven, which is an eternal and never fading one, (<580915>Hebrews 9:15 <600104>1 Peter 1:4); and therefore they ought not to fret and be envious.

Ver. 19. They shall not be ashamed in the evil time, etc.] Of affliction and persecution, or of old age, or in the day of judgment, when it will go ill with others; (see <620228>1 John 2:28);

and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied: whether it is understood figuratively of a famine of hearing the word, or literally of a proper famine of bread and water: these God will provide for them, as he did for Elijah, and they shall be sure unto them, and therefore let them not fret nor envy.

Ver. 20. But the wicked shall perish, etc.] In a time of famine, in an evil day, and particularly at the day of judgment: for this is to be understood, not merely of being in bodily distress and want; nor of perishing by death, common to the righteous and the wicked; nor of being in a lost perishing condition, as all men by nature are, but of eternal perdition in hell; and the enemies of the Lord [shall be] as the fat of lambs, they shall consume; that is, either they shall consume away as the fat of lambs burnt upon the altar, which evaporates, or as lambs fattened on purpose to be killed, and so prepared for the day of slaughter; in like manner the wicked, who have waxed fat and kicked, will be destroyed; they being the enemies of God, yea, enmity to him, to Father, Son, and Spirit, to the Gospel and ordinances of Christ, and to his people, and will be treated as such. Some render the word, “like the excellency of pastures” [f524]; the grass of the field, which is cut down and withers presently; (see <193702>Psalm 37:2);

into smoke shall they consume away, or “with” [f525] it; that is, as it; (see <196801>Psalm 68:1,2); or “in smoke” [f526]; in the smoke of eternal torments, or hell, as the Targum.

Ver. 21. The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again, etc.] While the wicked live, they are scandalous; they live by borrowing, which was always reckoned mean; (see <052812>Deuteronomy 28:12,44 <202207>Proverbs 22:7); and what is worse, as they borrow, they do not design to repay; they take no care nor thought about that, but live upon what they borrow: for this either expresses their incapacity that they cannot pay; or the evil disposition of their mind, which rather seems to be the sense, that they will not pay;

but the righteous showeth mercy, and giveth; which not only argues capacity and ability, but a kind, merciful, and tender spirit to persons in distress, and is expressive of a generous action.

Ver. 22. For [such as be] blessed of him, etc.] Not of the righteous man; for he blesses them that curse and persecute him, and despitefully use him; but of the Lord, as the Syriac version expresses it; or by the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; both in a providential way, for it is the blessing of the Lord that makes rich, and puts into a capacity to give to others; and in a way of grace, with an interest in God as a covenant God in Christ; and with the blessings of grace in him, with a justifying righteousness, pardon of sin, and a right to eternal glory. The Septuagint version, and those that follow that, render the words actively, “such as bless him”; either such as bless the righteous, who are blessed also, (<011203>Genesis 12:3); or rather such as bless the Lord, as the righteous do, for all their blessings temporal and spiritual they receive from him; these shall inherit the earth; (see Gill on “<193709>Psalm 37:9”);

and [they that be] cursed of him; not of the righteous man, but of the Lord, according to the tenor of his righteous law, which they have broken:

shall be cut off; out of the land of the living; many of them in the midst of their days, and shall everlastingly perish.

Ver. 23. The steps of a [good] man are ordered by the Lord, etc.] Or “of a man” [f527]; such a man as is blessed of the Lord; the steps which he takes in life are ordered by the Lord, both with respect to things temporal and spiritual: his good conduct is not of himself, it is a blessing of the Lord, who directs and keeps the feet of his saints, and inclines them to take such steps, and pursue such methods, which he succeeds and prospers; and he delighteth in his way; which he knows and approves of, guides and directs him in; (see <190106>Psalm 1:6).

Ver. 24. Though he fall, etc.] Into temptation, and by it into sins, and these very great ones; from a lively and comfortable exercise of grace, and a degree of steadfastness in the doctrine of grace:

he shall not be utterly cast down; because he is in the arms of everlasting love, and in the hands of Christ Jesus; is on him as the sure foundation, and is kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, and so shall not perish, but have everlasting life; for the Lord upholdeth [him with] his hand; with the right hand of his righteousness, and keeps him from falling finally and totally; (see <234110>Isaiah 41:10); and (see Gill on “<193717>Psalm 37:17”).

Ver. 25. I have been young, and [now] am old, etc.] The psalmist makes mention of his age, which takes in the whole compass of his life, to command attention to what he was about to say; which was founded upon a long experience and observation of things, and was as follows;

yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken; though afflicted of God, and persecuted by men, yet not forsaken; though poor and needy, and often in necessitous circumstances, yet God in his providence appeared for them in one way or another; and so as Apollinarius paraphrases it, for such might be forsaken by men, and even by their dearest friends and relations, yet not by the Lord: they might indeed, at times, think themselves forsaken of him, and their enemies might conclude and say they were, and yet this was not their case, (<234914>Isaiah 49:14 <197110>Psalm 71:10,11); and though they may be forsaken by him for a while, yet not utterly; he will not leave them and forsake them for ever, (<235407>Isaiah 54:7 <581305>Hebrews 13:5);

> “I never knew a just man entirely needy;”

nor his seed begging bread; they being righteous also, which must be supposed; otherwise, as good men have wicked children, these, through their wickedness, may come to poverty, to beggary, as they sometimes do; though a distinction may be made between being poor and beggars; the seed of the righteous may be the one, and not the other: besides, there is a difference between asking bread of others, in some few instances, and constantly begging bread from door to door, in which last sense the psalmist must be understood here; for otherwise he himself in some cases, had asked bread, as of Ahimelech at Nob, and of Nabal, etc. as did also Elijah of the widow of Sarepta: and though there might have been instances of some of the posterity of the righteous who got their bread by begging at the door, as in the case of Lazarus; yet David had never observed any such instance during the time of his life, which shows that such instances are very rare; whereas among wicked men and their offspring the case is frequent and common. Again, it may be observed, that the psalmist is speaking in the context of righteous men that are liberal, and give to the poor freely and largely; and it is seldom if ever known that they or their children come to want and poverty. Once more, the word “forsaken” may be repeated in this clause, thus; “nor his seed begging bread forsaken”[f528]; or seeking it in vain, and finally destitute of it; though they have been so reduced as to beg their bread, they have not been forsaken; they have find it, bread sufficient to support life, as Apollinarius paraphrases it; their bread has been given and their water sure; (see <234117>Isaiah 41:17,18). In an ancient Midrash[f529], or exposition of the Jews, the sense is thus given:

> “although his seed and his sons are begging bread, yet I have not seen the righteous man, their father, forsaken, because of his fear of the blessed God.”

Ver. 26. [He is] ever merciful, and lendeth, etc.] He sympathizes with the poor in distress, and shows mercy to miserable objects; not only by words, but deeds: and this is his constant disposition and conduct; of which his lending, as well as giving to persons in necessity, is an instance; and which shows capacity, and is a proof of the observation of the psalmist, that such are never forsaken, nor left to beg their bread: so far from it, that they have to lend and give to others; and his seed [is] blessed; either his seed sown, his alms deeds, which are blessed to him and his, and to them to whom he ministers, as Jarchi explains it; (see <470906>2 Corinthians 9:6,10); or rather his offspring, who are blessed of God with things temporal for his sake; and are blessed by men, who say of them, these are the posterity of such and such liberal persons.

Ver. 27. Depart from evil, and do good, etc.] Depart from evildoers, and their evil ways; join not with them, nor fret and be envious at them; but do acts of beneficence, and all good works; since righteous men, and their seed, are not forsaken, but blessed of God; (see Gill on "<193414>Psalm 34:14"); and dwell for evermore; or "thou shalt dwell for evermore" [f530]; (see <193703>Psalm 37:3); that is, in everlasting habitations, in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, (<421609>Luke 16:9 <470501>2 Corinthians 5:1). The Targum is, "that thou mayest dwell in everlasting life".

Ver. 28. For the Lord loveth judgment, etc.] Righteousness, or righteous actions, when done according to his will, from love, in faith, and to his glory; (see <191107>Psalm 11:7); or to minister judgment to the people, and to render to every man according to his works;

and forsaketh not his saints; his Holy Ones, who are called with an holy calling, are created in righteousness and true holiness, and have principles of grace and holiness wrought in them; or whom he prosecutes with his favour and goodness, with his everlasting love and mercy, with spiritual blessings, with the blessings of justification, pardon, adoption, and a right to eternal life: these he never forsakes, not their persons, neither in life nor at death, nor at judgment; nor does he ever forsake the work of his own hands in them; but performs it until the day of Christ: nor will he ever so forsake them, as that they shall perish through the strength of sin, the temptations of Satan, or the snares of the world;

they are preserved for ever; from the dominion and damning power of sin, from being devoured by Satan, from a total and final falling away, and from being hurt of the second death: they are preserved in Christ, in whose hands they are; and by the power of God, safe to his kingdom and glory, into which they shall have an abundant entrance;

but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off; out of the earth, in the midst of their days, like withered branches; and be cast into everlasting burnings.

Ver. 29. The righteous shall inherit the land, etc.] (See Gill on “<193709>Psalm 37:9”) and (see Gill on “<193711>Psalm 37:11”); and dwell therein for ever; (see Gill on “<193727>Psalm 37:27”).

Ver. 30. The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, etc.] Or “meditateth wisdom” [f531]; that is, utters the wisdom he has been meditating upon; (see <196903>Psalm 69:3); he meditates and speaks of the wisdom of God, which appears in the works of creation, providence, and grace; and of Christ, who is wisdom itself, and the wisdom of God essentially; and who, as Mediator, has the spirit of wisdom resting on him, the treasures of wisdom hid in him, and is made wisdom to his people: and righteous men meditate upon and speak of the glories of his person, the fulness of his grace, and the works of his hands; as also of the Gospel, which is the wisdom of God, mysterious, hidden, ancient wisdom, ordained before the world for their glory; and likewise of that internal wisdom, and experience of divine grace, the Lord has made them to know in the hidden part; which lies in the knowledge of themselves, and in a spiritual, experimental, and saving knowledge of Christ, and the way of salvation by him; and his mouth delivers out wise sayings, and useful instructions, fetched out of the word of God, and founded on experience and observation; and his tongue talketh of judgment; of the judgment which the righteous God ordinarily ministers in a providential way; and of his extraordinary and awful judgments, which have been or are in the earth; these he takes notice of for his own use, and observes them to others for their instruction; and also of the last judgment, the judgment to come, which he speaks of as sure and certain, as universal and inevitable, and at which he must appear before God: and he talks of judgment or righteousness; that is, of the righteousness of Christ; he makes mention of this only as his justifying righteousness before God; he rejoices and glories in it, and desires to be found in it living and dying, and at judgment; and whatsoever things are honest, just, pure, and of good report, he thinks and speaks of them, and instructs his family, his children and servants, in them, that they may do them; (see <011819>Genesis 18:19).

Ver. 31. The law of his God [is] in his heart, etc.] Which may be understood of the moral law, which was written in the heart of Adam an his creation, and continued there during his state of innocence, but was greatly obliterated by sin: there are some remains of it in fallen man, even in the very Gentiles; who, though without the law, do some things contained in it, which shows the work of it to be written in them; though in some it is scarcely legible, having lost all distinction between good and evil: but in regeneration the law of God is reinscribed, according to the promise of the covenant of grace, (<243133>Jeremiah 31:33); and such have a real knowledge of the spirituality and perfection of it; of the impossibility of justification by it; and of Christ being the fulfilling end of it: and they have a strong affection for it; they love it; and delight in it after the inward man, and serve it with their minds; in which lies part of their conformity to Christ, and is a branch of their character as good men; (see <194008>Psalm 40:8 <235107>Isaiah 51:7); moreover, the word trwt, here used, signifies any doctrine or instruction, and is sometimes used for the doctrine of the Gospel, (<230203>Isaiah 2:3 42:4), and may have this sense here, and the meaning be, that that has a place in the hearts or righteous men, dwells richly there, and works effectually in them; and particularly the doctrine of grace which relates to covenant interest in God; for it is the law or doctrine of “his God” that is in his heart;

none of his steps shall slide; not that he shall never slip nor fall; for that is supposed (<193724>Psalm 37:24); but he shall never finally and totally go out of the paths of truth, holiness, and righteousness: the Lord keeps the feet of his saints, and orders their steps, and directs them in the way they should go, and preserves them in it; and enables them to walk uprightly, according to the rule of the divine word, and in all his commandments and ordinances; and to hold on and out unto the end: or the clause may be rendered, “it”, the law, “shall not cause his steps to slide” [f532]; neither the law of God, nor the Gospel of Christ, but shall guide him in the right way, and be a lamp unto his feet, and a light unto his path.

Ver. 32. The wicked watcheth the righteous, etc.] All his motions and steps, his works and actions; he watches for his halting, and to take all opportunities and advantages against him; (see <242010>Jeremiah 20:10); and seeketh to slay him; murder his reputation, destroy his substance, and take away his life: some understand it of the devil, who watches the saints, observes their failings, accuses then, before the throne, and seeks to devour them, (<600508>1 Peter 5:8).

Ver. 33. The Lord will not leave him in his hand, etc.] Or power; but will in his own time deliver him from all the reproach, affliction, and persecution endures by him; as he will also deliver him out of all the temptations of Satan;

nor condemn him when he is judged; by the wicked man: he will not join in the sentence, but reverse it, and condemn the tongue that rises up in judgment against him, and save him from him; (see <19A931>Psalm 109:31) (<235417>Isaiah 54:17); nor will the Lord condemn him when he is judged by him at the hast judgment; but will acquit him before men and angels, and introduce him into his kingdom and glory.

Ver. 34. Wait on the Lord, etc.] In the way of his appointments and ordinances; where may be learned the design of his providences, and of the prosperity of the wicked, and their end, (<197316>Psalm 73:16-18); and in a providential way, for the performance of his promises, in which he never fails; and patiently bear whatever he is pleased to lay upon them; waiting for a deliverance out of every affliction, which will be in his own time. The Chaldee paraphrase and keep his way: which he has pointed out in his word, and has directed his people to walk in; though tempted by Satan to turn aside to the right hand or the left; though wicked men reproach, persecute, and seek to pervert it; and though a narrow and rough way, yet keep constantly in it, in which there are both pleasure and profit; good comes of it, and in it peace is had, and the presence of God enjoyed;

> “trust in the word of the Lord;”

and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: that is, shall raise out of a low and uncomfortable situation of life to a more comfortable one; or however, hereafter, to dwell in the new heavens and new earth, to reign with Christ upon his throne, and to enjoy the eternal inheritance;

when the wicked are cut off; as in (<193709>Psalm 37:9,22,28);

thou shall see [it]; with joy and pleasure; not as exulting: in the destruction of the wicked, simply considered; but as the glory of divine justice is displayed therein; (see <195205>Psalm 52:5,6).

Ver. 35. I have seen the wicked in great power, etc.] Meaning some particular person invested with great power, in great authority among men, one of the spiritual wickednesses in high places; such a man as Haman in Ahasuerus's court; and though the psalmist does not choose to mention his name, he doubtless had him in his mind; as either Saul, or Doeg the Edomite, or Ahithophel, or some such man, who was in an exalted station of life; and it may be when he himself was in low and distressed circumstances: the word used [f533] signifies one formidable and terrible, striking terror to all around; of whom others are afraid, as Aben Ezra interprets it, (<232920>Isaiah 29:20 49:25); and spreading himself like a green bay tree: or like one that grows up out of the earth of itself, and is in its native soil, and very flourishing: and the metaphor denotes an increase of riches and honour, and a seemingly settled state in the enjoyment of such outward felicity; so Jarchi interprets it çyr çm, "taking root"; as well as such a man's glorying in and boasting of his affluence and fulness; (see <197312>Psalm 73:12 <241201>Jeremiah 12:1,2 <194906>Psalm 49:6). Aben Ezra explains it of a wicked man's openly committing iniquity, declaring his sin as Sodom, and glorying in his shame; but rather it denotes a man in great authority and esteem, as a man crowned with laurels, and in a very exalted and triumphant state.

Ver. 36. Yet he passed away, etc.] At once, on a sudden; either his riches and honour, which, in one hour, came to nought, by one providence or another; or he himself by death; in the midst of all his prosperity, and while blessing himself in it, his soul was required of him; and so the Targum is, "he ceased from the world"; he went out of it unawares: the laurel, or bay tree, very quickly grows old [f534];

and, lo, he [was] not; he was not reduced to nothing; he did not become a nonentity, though he might wish himself to be so; it being better for him if he had never been born; but he was not in the land of the living, in hell he lifted up his eyes;

yea, I sought him, but he could not be found; in the place where he formerly was, that knowing him no more; he could not be found on earth, from whence he was gone; nor in heaven, where no place is found for such wicked men; he was gone to his own place, as is said of Judas, and of whom Jerom interprets the whole of this passage.

Ver. 37. Mark the perfect [man], etc.] None are so in themselves, not the most holy man upon earth; for though all grace is implanted at once in regeneration, the seed of grace of every kind is cast into the heart at once; yet it opens and spreads, and gradually increases; nor is any grace in its exercise perfect; not faith, nor hope, nor love: sin is in the best of men, and all stand in need of fresh supplies of grace. None of the saints ever affirmed that they had arrived to perfection, but have disclaimed it: one saint may indeed attain to a greater degree of grace and knowledge than another, and in a comparative sense be perfect; and there is a perfection of parts, though not of degrees, in all; the new man is formed in all its parts, though these are not grown to their full perfection: and whereas perfection often denotes truth and sincerity, such may be said to be perfect, that is, sincere, who have received the grace of God in truth, have the, truth and root of the matter in them; so Noah, Job, and others, are said to be perfect men; but not simply and absolutely in themselves, but as in Christ Jesus; who has obtained complete redemption, perfectly fulfilled the law for them, fully expiated their sins, procured the entire pardon of them, and brought in an everlasting righteousness, by which they are justified from all sin, and are perfectly comely, and a perfection of beauty, through the comeliness of Christ put upon them; and behold the upright; the man that is upright in heart and conversation, who has a right spirit renewed in him, and the uprightness of Christ showed unto him; or, in other words, who has the truth of grace within him, and the righteousness of Christ upon him: such men are to be marked, observed, viewed, and considered, as rare and uncommon men; and to be imitated and followed in the exercise of grace and discharge of duty; and especially the end of such persons is to be marked and beheld, as follows;

for the end of [that] man [is] peace: such a man now enjoys a conscience peace, which passes the understanding of worldly men; and which he possesses in Christ, and from him, amidst a variety of tribulations, arising from a view of interest in his blood and righteousness; and, generally speaking, goes off the stage of life, if not triumphing, yet resigned to the will of God, and in a serene and tranquil frame of spirit, and even desiring to be gone, and to be with Christ, and to have leave, with good old Simeon, to depart in peace; and as soon as they are departed they enter into peace, into the joy of their Lord, into his presence, where is fulness of joy, and pleasures for evermore; (see <042310>Numbers 23:10).

Ver. 38. But the transgressors shall be destroyed together, etc.] This is to be understood of obstinate and continued transgressors, who live and die in their transgressions; (see <201103>Proverbs 11:3); otherwise all men are transgressors in Adam, and sinned and fell with him in his transgression; and are justly called transgressors from the womb; and are guilty of actual transgressions, nor are any clear from them; and are arraigned, convinced, and judged by the law as transgressors; and for many of these Christ died, and makes intercession; and who are converted, and turned from their transgressions; and these are pardoned, and saved, and not destroyed: but stubborn and perverse transgressors are destroyed; not only with a temporal destruction of their substance, and of their names, and they themselves are rooted out of the earth; but with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power; for this seems to refer to the day of judgment, when all the wicked will be "together"; and shall in a body stand at Christ's left hand, and be bid to go, "ye cursed into everlasting fire", (<402541>Matthew 25:41), and shall be turned into hell at once, and together;

the end of the wicked shall be cut off; meaning either their posterity, as the word is rendered in (<19A913>Psalm 109:13); or their hope and expectation of good things here and hereafter; when the righteous man receives the end of his faith, hope, and expectation, even the salvation of his soul; but these shall be disappointed and frustrated of their end; (see <202318>Proverbs 23:18); or their last end is cutting off from the presence and sight of God, utter ruin and destruction; and so it stands opposed to the end of the perfect and upright man, which is eternal peace and happiness.

Ver. 39. But the salvation of the righteous [is] of the Lord, etc.] Both their temporal, spiritual, and eternal salvation; particularly the latter, which is originally of the Lord, and springs from the thoughts, purposes, and resolutions of his heart: it is of him freely, of his rich grace and abundant mercy; and it is of him fully and completely; it is an entire salvation of soul and body; includes all blessings of grace and glory in it; it is to the uttermost, and from all sin, and every enemy; and it is of him only; there is no salvation in any other; and the glory of it is to be ascribed to him, even to Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit; for all the three divine Persons have a concern in it: the determination, contrivance, and settlement of it, is of Jehovah the Father; the impetration or effecting of it is of Jehovah the Son; and the application of it is of Jehovah the Spirit; (see Gill on “<190308>Psalm 3:8”);

[he is] their strength in the time of trouble; by reason of the hidings of God’s face, the temptations of Satan, the prevalence of corruptions, the weakness of grace, and the many afflictions that befall them from God and men; the Lord he is their strong hold and munition of rocks, whither they, betake themselves, and find help, protection, and safety; he puts underneath everlasting arms, bears them up, and upholds them with the right hand of his righteousness; and is the strength of their hearts, of their lives, and of their salvation.

Ver. 40. And the Lord shall help them, etc.] In their distress, and out of their troubles, when none else can, and they themselves cannot; and that seasonably, and sometimes with means, and sometimes without;

and deliver them; out of all their afflictions, which he does sooner or later; if not in life, yet at death;

he shall deliver them from the wicked; this is repeated both for confirmation and explanation sake, showing who they are the Lord will deliver his people from, even from wicked and unreasonable men; he will not leave them in their hands now to do with them as they shall think fit; and he will free them from them to all eternity in the other world, where they shall cease from giving them any trouble; and save them, because they trust in him; not that there is any saving virtue in faith, or in trusting in the Lord; the saving virtue is in the Lord, the object of faith and trust; but inasmuch as the Lord has appointed salvation to be through faith, or has made that the means of receiving and enjoying salvation, and the blessings of it, and has declared that he that believeth shall be saved, he does accordingly save all such persons; wherefore blessed are they that trust in him. The Chaldee paraphrase is,

> “he shall redeem them because they trust in his Word.”

PSALM 38

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 38

A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance

This psalm was composed by David under some sore affliction, and when in great distress of mind by reason of sin, perhaps his sin with Bathsheba; and was written as a memorial of his sense of sin, of his great afflictions, and deliverance from them; and therefore is said to be "to bring to remembrance", or to refresh his memory with the said things. Kimchi and Ben Melech think the psalm was made for the sake of such as are in distress, to put them in mind and teach them how to pray. The Targum calls the psalm,

> "a good remembrance concerning Israel;"

and Jarchi says it was to remember the distress of Israel before the Lord, and that it is said with respect to all Israel; though others think the word "lehazcir" is the name of a psalm tune; and Aben Ezra was of opinion that it was the first word of some pleasant poem. The Septuagint version adds, as if it was wrote to put persons in mind of that day; whereas there is nothing in the whole psalm that has any such tendency.

> "concerning the sabbath,"

Ver. 1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure, etc.] This and the following clause are the same as in (<190601>Psalm 6:1), only instead of wrath there it is anger.

Ver. 2. For thine arrows stick fast in me, etc.] Meaning either words with which as a father the Lord rebuked him; and which were sharp and cutting, entered into him and abode with him, and gave him much pain and uneasiness; and by which he concluded that his rebukes were in wrath and hot displeasure; such as those in (<101211>2 Samuel 12:11); so the words of men are compared to arrows, (<195704>Psalm 57:4 64:3) or outward afflictions, attended with inward trouble of soul; for as judgments are the arrows of God, such as famine, pestilence, etc. (<260516>Ezekiel 5:16 <199105>Psalm 91:5,6)

(<053221>Deuteronomy 32:21,42); so the chastening dispensations of Providence, under which the people of God themselves are, are so called, because they oftentimes come swiftly, suddenly, and at unawares, and are very pungent and distressing; and sometimes stick fast and continue long, by reason of which they are inwardly wounded, and conceive of God as sorely displeased with them; (see <180604>Job 6:4);

and thy hand presseth me sore; the afflicting hand of God, which lay heavy upon him; and is a mighty hand when laid on such worms as mortal sinful men are, who cannot bear up under it, unless they have divine supports; (see <181921>Job 19:21). This is by some supposed to be some bodily disease inflicted on him; some have thought of the leprosy, which was a stroke from the hand of God; but this is not likely, since he must have been deposed and shut up; the Jews indeed say[f534] that he was a leper six months, and that the divine Presence was taken from him; a late learned man[f536] thinks it was the smallpox, from the unsoundness of his flesh, the soreness of the disease, the stench of it, temporary blindness, and his friends standing aloof from him; though perhaps no other than affliction of mired for sin, comparable to the disease described, is meant.

Ver. 3. [There is] no soundness in my flesh, because of thine anger, etc.] Such was the nature of the affliction the psalmist laboured under, and which he took to be an effect of the anger of God towards him, that the whole frame of nature was affected with it, and from the crown of the head to, the soles of the feet there was no health or soundness, as in (<230106>Isaiah 1:6); where the same word is used as here; some think the word[f537] here used has the signification of man; and that the sense is, that through, the violence of the distemper he had not so much, as the form of a man, as his antitype in (<235214>Isaiah 52:14); and as this led him to a view of his sins, as the cause of his affliction, he was so far from thinking himself sound and whole, or perfect in a spiritual sense, that he saw he was all over diseased with sin, and that in his flesh dwelt no good thing; neither [is there any] rest in my bones, because of my sin; or “peace”[f538] there; sin breaks the believer’s rest, and disturbs his peace; nor can he, in a view of it, find any rest in himself, nor in any creature, nor in any service or duty, only in Jesus Christ, his blood, righteousness, and sacrifice.

Ver. 4. For mine iniquities are gone over mine head, etc.] Like an inundation of waters, as the waves and billows of the sea; for the waters to come up to the neck or chin shows great danger; but when they go over the head the case is desperate, and a person is sinking and drowning; compare with this (<196901>Psalm 69:1,2); the simile may denote both the number and weight of sins, and also signifies the overwhelming distress the psalmist was in, under a view of them;

as an heavy burden, they are too heavy for me; the guilt of sin upon the conscience, without a view of pardon, lies heavy indeed, and makes a man a burden to himself, as it did Job, (<180720>Job 7:20,21); yea, sin is not only grieving and afflicting to pardoned ones, and who know they are pardoned, but it is a burden to them under which they groan; nor is it possible for any so to bear it as to satisfy and make atonement for it; none but Christ could ever do this, and he has done it; nor is there any relief for burdened souls, but by looking to a sin bearing and sin atoning Saviour, and by casting the burden upon him, who invites them to him for rest.

Ver. 5. My wounds stink, [and] are corrupt, etc.] Meaning his sins, which had wounded him, and for which there is no healing but in a wounded Saviour, and by his stripes we are healed, (<235305>Isaiah 53:5); where the same word is used as here; Christ's black and blue stripes and wounds, as the word signifies, are the healing of ours, both of sins, and of the effects of them; which, to a sensible sinner, are as nauseous and loathsome as an old wound that is festered and corrupt; because of my foolishness: as all sin arises from foolishness, which is bound in the hearts of men, and from whence it arises, (<410722>Mark 7:22); perhaps the psalmist may have respect to his folly with Bathsheba, which had been the occasion of all the distress that is spoken of both before and afterwards.

Ver. 6. I am troubled, etc.] Discomposed and perplexed in mind; his thoughts were disturbed and irregular, and in the utmost confusion and distress: this trouble was not only on account of the affliction that was upon him, but chiefly because of his sin; and which was increased by the view he had of the displeasure of God, concluding he was come forth against him in wrath and fury;

I am bowed down greatly; not in his body, at least not in that only, as if he was bowed together by his disorder, that he could not lift himself up; for he is said to walk in the next clause: or rather he bowed down his head as a bulrush voluntarily, and through sorrow and shame could not lift it up before the Lord; though it may chiefly design the pressure of his mind, that his soul was cast down within him, and with all his spiritual reasonings he could not erect himself; it is the Lord that raiseth up those that are bowed down in this sense; (see <194205>Psalm 42:5,6,11 145:14);

I go mourning all the day long; or “I go black”, or “in black”[f539]; meaning either that his skin was black, through the disease upon him, and the trouble that was in him, (<183030>Job 30:30); or that he was clothed in black garments, as a token of mourning; as white garments were of joy and cheerfulness, (<210907>Ecclesiastes 9:7,8); and he was blacker still in his own apprehension, by reason of inward corruptions and outward transgressions, which appeared in a very black hue, attended with aggravating circumstances; (see <220105>Song of Solomon 1:5 <195107>Psalm 51:7).

Ver. 7. For my loins are filled with a loathsome [disease], etc.] The word here used has the signification of burning[f540]; and the Targum renders it, “my loins are filled with burning”; a burning fever was upon him, or there was an inflammation in those parts; a hot burning ulcer, which might be nauseous; and so was true in both senses. Aben Ezra interprets it abominable and vile; something not fit to be mentioned; and so Kimchi and Ben Melech. The word is rendered sometimes “lightly esteemed”; as in (<091823>1 Samuel 18:23); and Jarchi thinks it has this sense here; and the meaning is, that he was vile in his own eyes, and mean in his own esteem. Doubtless the psalmist has reference to something more than a bodily disease; at least not to that only, but to the disease of his soul also, sin, which has the nature of a disease; it is an hereditary one, which is derived from one to another by propagation; it is universal, and reaches to all men, and to all the parts of the body and powers of the soul; it is a complication of disorders: it is in its own nature mortal, and ever incurable but by Christ; and, as here, it is a loathsome one; it is loathsome to God, and to all sensible sinners: and when the psalmist says his loins were filled with it, it may signify that it was an internal disorder that was in him; sin that dwelt in him, a law in his members; and may denote the aboundings of sin in him, the swarms of corruptions that were in him; as also the pain it gave him, and the quick sense he had of it; and [there is] no soundness in my flesh: which is repeated, (see <193803>Psalm 38:3); partly for confirmation’s sake, and partly to show the continued sense of it, as persons under a disorder are continually making mention of it.

Ver. 8. I am feeble, etc.] Both in body, natural strength being weakened by the affliction, and dried up like a potsherd by the heat of the distemper; and in soul, being weak in the exercise of faith and other graces. The word is used of Jacob, fainting at and disbelieving the news of his son Joseph being alive, (<014526>Genesis 45:26);

and sore broken; in his constitution with the disease, and in his mind with trouble; especially for his sin, and under a sense of the divine displeasure; his bones were broken by his fall, and his heart broken with a sense of sin, (<195108>Psalm 51:8,17);

I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart: which was like the raging of the sea, as the word [f541] rendered disquietness here signifies; and to which the uneasiness and restlessness of wicked men is sometimes compared, (<230530>Isaiah 5:30 57:20); and so great was the disquietude of this good man under affliction, and sense of sin and wrath, that he had no rest night nor day; and could not forbear crying out, in a very hideous manner, like the roaring of a lion.

Ver. 9. Lord, all my desire [is] before thee, etc.] To be delivered from his afflictions, to have a discovery and application of pardoning grace, and to have communion with his God: the desire of his soul was unto these things; and it was some satisfaction to him that it was before the Lord, and known unto him, before whom all things are naked and open; and my groaning is not hid from thee; under the weight of his affliction, the burden of his sin, and which he expressed in prayer to the Lord, and which is often done with groanings which cannot be uttered: but even these are known and understood by the Lord.

Ver. 10. My heart panteth, etc.] Or “goes about” [f542]; runs here and there, and finds no rest; as Aben Ezra interprets the word from the Targum he cites; though the Targum we have renders it, “my heart shakes with fear”, or dread, as persons in a fever. Jarchi interprets the word, surrounded with grief; it denotes the panting or palpitation of the heart, through sorrow and dread, and the failing of it, even as at death;

my strength faileth me, or “forsakes me” [f543]; bodily strength and spiritual strength; the strength of faith, hope, and confidence;

as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me; which is often the case of persons under bodily disorders, their eyes grow dim, and sight fails them; and this might be true in a spiritual sense of the psalmist, who had lost sight of God as his covenant God; of his interest in his love, in the blessings of his grace, and in eternal salvation, and was walking in darkness, and saw no light.

Ver. 11. My lovers and my friends stand aloof from my sore, etc.] As if it was a plague sore, lest they should be infected with it; or because they could not bear the stench of his wounds, and the loathsomeness of his disease, or to see him in his agonies, and hear his roaring and his groans, (<193802>Psalm 38:2,3,5,7-9); or as taking his case to be desperate, as if he was just dying, and no help could be given him, (<193810>Psalm 38:10); If it was the leprosy, as some Jewish writers have affirmed, the word [gn, translated "sore", being used for the plague of the leprosy, they were obliged by the ceremonial law to keep at a distance from him: but this rather seems to be voluntary, and to proceed from neglect and contempt. These "lovers" and "friends" were such for whom David had had an affection, and had been friendly to, and therefore it was ungrateful in them to act the part they did; and such who had pretended love and friendship to him in his health and prosperity, but now had deserted him, which is a common case; (see <181913>Job 19:13,14,19 <196908>Psalm 69:8 88:18). Afflictions try men's friends; and as that is a time when friendly visits are most wanting and most useful, so it is an aggravation of the affliction, and makes it the heavier when such are denied; and my kinsmen stand afar off; that were near to him by the ties of nature or friendship.

Ver. 12. They also that seek after my life, etc.] His avowed and implacable enemies, whom nothing would satisfy but the taking away of his life: these came too near him; for these, he says, lay snares [for me], as Satan does for the souls of men, as the Jews did for Christ, and as wicked men do for the saints, (<19C407>Psalm 124:7); and they that seek my hurt speak mischievous things; to the injury of his character and reputation:

and imagine deceits all the day long; contrive artful schemes to deceive; (see <193520>Psalm 35:20).

Ver. 13. But I, as a deaf [man], heard not, etc.] He acted the part of a deaf man, and made as if he did not hear the mischievous things his enemies spoke; as Saul, when the sons of Belial spoke against him and despised him, (<091027>1 Samuel 10:27); and as our Lord when his enemies accused him, (<402712>Matthew 27:12-14); and [I was] as a dumb man, [that] openeth not his mouth; made no reply to what they said, and did not render railing for railing; in which Christ was the antitype of him, (<235307>Isaiah 53:7 <600223>1 Peter 2:23 3:9).

Ver. 14. Thus I was as a man that heareth not, etc.] Any thing that is said unto him; he took no more notice of it than if he had never heard it; but bore all the railings and calumnies of men with calmness and patience; and in whose mouth [are] no reproofs; as if he had nothing to say for himself, in vindication of his character, and to the refutation of his enemies; as if he had no arguments to make use of, for the conviction and reproof of his adversaries.

Ver. 15. For in thee, O Lord, do I hope, etc.] That he would plead his cause against his accusers and revilers, and who sought his hurt; that he should be delivered out of their hands, and out of all his afflictions; that he should be healed of his diseases, both of soul and body, under which he laboured; and should again enjoy the light of God's countenance, and have the discoveries of his pardoning grace and mercy; and this was the reason why he was so calm and quiet amidst the unkindnesses of his friends, and the cruel usage of his enemies;

thou wilt hear, or "answer",

O Lord my God; in the midst of all his distresses of body and mind, he had not given up his interest in God, as his God and Father; which is the great blessing of the covenant of grace, and which ever continues; and is the great support of believers, under whatsoever they meet with in soul and body, from friends or foes; this his God the psalmist believed would not only hear his cries in his sore distress, but hear the reproaches of his enemies, and answer them in a providential way in his own time, by terrible things in righteousness to their conviction and confusion; and therefore he himself was silent.

Ver. 16. For I said, [hear me], etc.] This he had expressed in prayer to God; he had committed his cause to him, and entreated him that he would hear and answer him; giving this as a reason, lest [otherwise] they should rejoice over me; at his misfortunes and calamities, at the continuance of his trouble and distress, both of body and mind;

when my foot slippeth; as it sometimes did through the corruptions of nature, the temptations of Satan, and the snares of the world; which is more or less the case of all the people of God, who are all subject to slips and falls, though they shall not finally and totally fall away;

they magnify [themselves] against me; that is, his enemies exulted and triumphed over him: this was what he found by experience; and therefore makes use of it as an argument with God, that he would hear and answer and deliver him out of his trouble, and preserve him from falling.

Ver. 17. For I [am] ready to halt, etc.] Meaning either that there was a proneness in him to sin; (see <242010>Jeremiah 20:10); or that he was subject to affliction and adversity, as the same word is rendered in (<193515>Psalm 35:15); and the words are either a reason and argument used with the Lord, to hear and keep his foot from slipping, that so his enemies might not rejoice over him, and magnify themselves against him; as they would do should he fall into sin or into any calamity, both which he was liable to: or they are a reason why he was so calm and quiet under the ill usage he met with from friends and enemies, because he was “ready for halting”, or “prepared” [f544] for it; he considered that he was born for trouble and adversity; that God had appointed him to it, and it was appointed for him, and therefore he was quiet under it; (see <180506>Job 5:6,7 23:14); he was prepared to meet it; he expected it, it being the common lot of God’s people; and therefore when it came upon him it was no strange thing to him. The Septuagint version, and those that follow that, render the words, “I am ready for scourges”; and Jerom applies them to Christ, who was ready to undergo scourges, sufferings, and death itself, for his people; and my sorrow [is] continually before me; that is, for his sin, which was ever before him, stared him in the face, lay heavy on his conscience, and appeared very terrible and loathsome to him; his sorrow for it was without intermission, and was a godly sorrow, a sorrow for sin, as committed against a God of love, grace, and mercy: or he may mean, that his affliction, which was grievous to him, was continually upon him night and day: our Lord himself, David’s antitype, was a man of sorrows all his days.

Ver. 18. For I will declare mine iniquity, etc.] Either to men, to ease his mind, justify God in his proceedings with him, and for their caution and admonition: or rather to God, against whom he had sinned, and who only could pardon him; with a view to which he was determined to make a free and open confession of it before him:

I will be sorry for my sin, or “careful” [f545] about it; that is, how he committed it for the future: true repentance for sin produces a carefulness to abstain from all appearance of it; (see <470710>2 Corinthians 7:10,11).

Ver. 19. But mine enemies [are] lively, etc.] Or “living” [f546] or “live”; not in a spiritual sense; for they had no lively hope, nor living faith, but were dead in trespasses and sins; nor merely in a natural sense, or corporeally, so David was living himself; but in great prosperity and worldly happiness, and so were brisk and cheerful, and lived a merry and pleasent life;

[and] they are strong; not only hale and robust in body, but abounded in riches and wealth, which are the strength of wicked men; and they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied; that is, such as hated him without a cause, and made lies and falsehoods the reasons of it: these increased in numbers, or in their outward state and circumstances; (see <197304>Psalm 73:4,5,7,12 69:4).

Ver. 20. They also that render evil for good are mine adversaries, etc.] (See Gill on “<193512>Psalm 35:12”);

because I follow [the thing that] good [is]; or “follow good”; a good God, whom his soul followed hard after, (<196308>Psalm 63:8); the good Shepherd of the sheep, who led him into green pastures, whither he followed him, (<192301>Psalm 23:1-3); the good Spirit of God his guide, whom he walked after, (<450801>Romans 8:1); good and holy men of God, whom he took for examples and copied after; and every good work, which he pursued with eagerness and pleasure; and all this drew upon him the hatred of his adversaries.

Ver. 21. Forsake me not, O Lord, etc.] Or continue not to forsake; for he seems to have been under divine desertion, and might be under apprehensions that God had utterly forsaken him; which he entreats he would not, though his friends had forsook him, and his own strength had failed and left him, (<193810>Psalm 38:10,11);

O my God, be not far from me; as to his gracious presence, and with respect to help and deliverance, otherwise God is not far from any of his creatures, being omnipresent.

Ver. 22. Make haste and help me, etc.] Or, “for my help”; his case required haste, and God does help his people when none else can, and that right early;

O Lord, my salvation; by which it appears that his prayer was a prayer of faith; he saw that his salvation was in the Lord, and in no other; and though he had been and was in such a low condition, both in soul and body, yet his faith was not lost; that is an abiding grace, and will continue under the influence of the author and finisher of it, until the end of it is received, the salvation of the soul. R. Moses [f547] thinks the phrase “make haste” is to be repeated here, and read thus, “make haste, O Lord, to my salvation”.

PSALM 39

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 39

To the chief Musician, [even] to Jeduthun, a Psalm of David

Some take Jeduthun to be the name of a musical instrument, as Jarchi, on which, and others the first word of a song, to the tune of which, this psalm was sung, as Aben Ezra; though it seems best, with Kimchi and others, to understand it as the name of the chief musician, to whom this psalm was sent to be made use of in public service; since Jeduthun was, with his sons, appointed by David to prophesy with harps and psalteries, and to give praise and thanks unto the Lord, (<131641>1 Chronicles 16:41,42 25:1,3); he is the same with Ethan[f548]. The occasion of it is thought, by some, to be the rebellion of his son Absalom; so Theodoret thinks it was written when he fled from Absalom, and was cursed by Shimei; or rather it may be some sore affliction, which lay upon David for the chastisement of him; (see <193909>Psalm 39:9,13); and the argument of the psalm seems to be much the same with that of the preceding one, as Kimchi observes.

Ver. 1. I said, etc.] That is, in his heart; he purposed and determined within himself to do as follows; and he might express it with his mouth, and so his purpose became a promise;

I will take heed to my ways; as every good man should; that is, to all his actions, conduct, and conversation: it becomes him to take heed what ways he walks in; that they are the ways of God, which he directs to; that they are the ways of Christ, which he has left an example to follow in; and that they are according to the word of God; that he walks in Christ, the way of salvation, and by faith on him; that he chooses and walks in the way of truth, and not error; and in all, the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless; and in the path of holiness, in which, though fools, they shall not err: and it is also necessary that he should take heed that he does nothing, either by embracing error, or going into immorality, by which the ways of God, and Christ, and truth, are evil spoken of, blasphemed and reproached; and that he does not depart out of these ways, nor stumble, slip, and fall in them; that I sin not with my tongue; which is a world of iniquity, and has a multitude of vices belonging to it; not only in profane men, but in professors of religion; whom it becomes to take heed that they sin not with it, by lying one to another, by angry and passionate expressions, by corrupt communication, filthiness, foolish talking, and jesting, which are not convenient; by whispering, talebearing, backbiting, and by evil speaking one of another: particularly there are vices of the tongue, which the saints are liable to under afflictive providences, and seem chiefly designed here; such as envious expressions at the prosperity of others; words of impatience under their own afflictions, and murmurings at the hand of God upon them; such as these the psalmist determined, within himself, to guard against; in order to which he proposed to take the following method;

I will keep my mouth with a bridle: that is, bridle his tongue, that being an unruly member, and to be kept in with bit and bridle, like an unruly horse; (see <590126>James 1:26 3:2-5,8);

while the wicked is before me; or "against me"[f549]; meaning either while Ahithophel and Absalom were conspiring and rebelling against him, and Shimei was cursing him, under which he behaved with great silence, calmness, and patience; (see <101525>2 Samuel 15:25,26 16:5-12); or while he had the flourishing condition of wicked men in his view, and was meditating on it; or rather, when anyone of them came to visit him in his affliction, he was determined to be wholly silent, that they might have no opportunity of rejoicing over him, nor of reproaching him, and the good ways of God: and indeed it is proper for the people of God to be always upon their guard, when they are in the presence of wicked men; and be careful what they utter with their lips, who watch their words to improve them against them, and the religion they profess.

Ver. 2. I was dumb with silence, etc.] Quite silent, as if he had been a dumb man, and could not speak; so he was before men, especially wicked men, and under the afflicting hand of God; (see <193909>Psalm 39:9); thus he put his resolution into practice;

I held my peace, [even] from good; that is, he said neither good nor bad: this expresses the greatness of his silence: he did not choose to open his lips, and say anything that was good, lest evil should come out along with it; though this may be considered as carrying the matter too far, even to a criminal silence; saying nothing of the affliction he laboured under as coming from the hand of God, and of his own desert of it; nor praying to God for the removal of it, nor giving him thanks for his divine goodness in supporting him under it, and making it useful to him; though it seems rather to have respect to his silence concerning the goodness of his cause before men; he said not one word in the vindication of himself; but committed his cause to him that judgeth righteously. The Targum and Jarchi interpret it of his silence and cessation "from the words of the law": he said nothing concerning the good word of God; which sense, could it be admitted, the words in (<242009>Jeremiah 20:9); might be compared with these and the following; and my sorrow was stirred; this was the issue and effect of his silence; his sorrow being pent up, and not let out and eased by words, swelled and increased the more; or the sorrow of his heart was stirred up at the insults and reproaches of his enemies, as Paul's spirit was stirred up by the superstition and idolatry of the city of Athens, (<441716>Acts 17:16).

Ver. 3. My heart was hot within me, etc.] Either with zeal for God; or rather with envy at the prosperity of wicked men, and with impatience at his own afflictions;

while I was musing the fire burned; not the fire of the divine word, while he was meditating upon it, which caused his heart to burn within him; nor the fire of divine love, the coals whereof give a most vehement flame, when the love of God is shed abroad in the heart, and the thoughts of it are directed by the Spirit of God to dwell in meditation on it; but the fire of passion, anger, and resentment, while meditating on his own adversity, and the prosperity of others;

[then] spake I with my tongue; and so broke the resolution he had made, (<193901>Psalm 39:1); he spoke not for God, though to him; not by way of thankfulness for his grace and goodness to him, in supporting him under his exercises; but in a way of complaint, because of his afflictions; it was in prayer he spoke to God with his tongue, and it was unadvisedly with his lips, as follows.

Ver. 4. Lord, make me to know mine end, etc.] Not Christ, the end of the law for righteousness, as Jerom interprets it; nor how long he should live, how many days, months, and years more; for though they are known of God, they are not to be known by men; but either the end of his afflictions, or his, latter end, his mortal state, that he might be more thoughtful of that, and so less concerned about worldly things, his own external happiness, or that of others; or rather his death; (see <180611>Job 6:11); and his sense is, that he might know death experimentally; or that he might die: this he said in a sinful passionate way, as impatient of his afflictions and exercises; and in the same way the following expressions are to be understood; and the measure of my days, what it [is]; being desirous to come to the end of it; otherwise he knew it was but as an hand’s breadth, as he says in (<193905>Psalm 39:5);

[that] I may know how frail I [am]; or “what time I have here”; or “when I shall cease to be”[f550]; or, as the Targum is, “when I shall cease from the world”; so common it is for the saints themselves, in an angry or impatient fit, to desire death; (see <180715>Job 7:15,16 Jon 4:8); and a very rare and difficult thing it is to wish for it from right principles, and with right views, as the Apostle Paul did, (<500123>Philippians 1:23).

Ver. 5. Behold, thou hast made my days [as] an handbreadth, etc.] These words, with the following clause, are the psalmist’s answer to his own inquiries; or rather a correction of his inquiry and impatience, showing how needless it was to ask such questions, and be impatient to die, when it was so clear and certain a case that life was so short; not a yard or ell (forty five inches), but an handbreadth, the breadth of four fingers; or at most a span of time was allowed to man, whose days are few, like the shadow that declineth, and the grass that withers; by which figurative expressions the brevity of human life is described, (<19A211>Psalm 102:11 103:15); and this is the measure made, cut out, and appointed by the Lord himself, who has determined the years, months, and days of man’s life, (<181405>Job 14:5); and mine age [is] as nothing before thee; in the sight of God, or in comparison of his eternity; not so much as an handbreadth, or to be accounted as an inch, but nothing at, all; yea, less than nothing, and vanity; (see <234017>Isaiah 40:17); that is, the age or life of man in this world, as the word[f551] used signifies; for otherwise the age or life of man, in the world to come, is of an everlasting duration; but the years of this present life are threescore and ten; ordinarily speaking; an hundred and thirty are by Jacob reckoned but few; and even a thousand years with the Lord are but as one day, (<199004>Psalm 90:4,10);

verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity. As vanity may signify sin, emptiness, folly, falsehood, fickleness, and inconstancy; for man is a very sinful creature, empty of all that is good; foolish as to the knowledge of divine things; he is deceiving and deceived, his heart is deceitful and desperately wicked; and he is unstable in all his ways: he is “all vanity”[f552], as the words may be rendered; all that he has, or is, or is in him, is vanity; his body, in the health, beauty, and strength of it, is subject to change; and so are his mind, his memory, his judgment and affections, his purposes and promises; and so are his goods and estate, his riches and honours; yea, all the vanity that is in the creatures, that is, in the vegetable and sensitive creatures, yea, that is in the whole, world, is in him; who is a microcosm, a little world himself: and this is true of every man, even in his “best settled”[f553] estate; when he stood the most firm, as the word used signifies; it is true of men of high and low degree, of the wise, knowing, and learned, as well as of the illiterate and ignorant, (<196209>Psalm 62:9 <450121>Romans 1:21,22); even of those that are in the most prosperous circumstances, in the greatest ease and affluence, (<421216>Luke 12:16-19); David himself had an experience of it, (<100701>2 Samuel 7:1 12:11); yea, this is true of Adam in his best estate, in his estate of innocence; for he was even then subject to change, as the event has shown; and being in honour, he abode not long; and, though upright, became sinful, and came short of the glory of God: indeed, the spiritual estate of believers in Christ is so well settled as that it cannot be altered; nor is it subject to any vanity.

Selah. (See Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

Ver. 6. Surely every man walketh in a vain show, etc.] Or “in an image”[f554]; not “in the image of the Lord”, as the Targum; in the image in which God created man, for that is lost; nor in that which is stamped on men in regeneration; for every man does not walk in that; rather in the image of fallen man, in which every man is born and walks: or “in a shadow”[f555]; or like one; to which the days of man’s life are often compared, (<132915>1 Chronicles 29:15 <19A211>Psalm 102:11 144:4); and who, for the most part, busies himself in shadowy and imaginary things; agreeably to all which the poet says[f556],

> “I see that we who live are nothing else but images, and a vain shadow.”

Some[f557] interpret it of “the shadow of death”; and others[f558] of “darkness” itself; and it fitly expresses the state of unregeneracy and darkness in which every man walks without the grace of God; and which will end in utter darkness, if that does not prevent it; and which is called “a walking in the vanity of the mind”, (<490417>Ephesians 4:17). Here it seems rather to intend the outward show, pomp, and grandeur of every great man; of emperors, kings, princes, nobles, and the great men of the world; which is all a vain show, a glittering appearance for a while, a glory that passeth away, and will not descend after them when laid in the grave, and oftentimes lasts not so long;

surely they are disquieted in vain; about vain things, as riches and honours, which are fickle and unstable; and sometimes in vain are all the carking cares and disquietude of the mind, and toil and labour of the body, which are here referred to, to obtain these things; some rise early, and sit up late, and yet eat the bread of sorrow; and if they gain their point, yet do not find the pleasure and satisfaction in them they promised themselves and expected;

he heapeth up [riches], and knoweth not who shall gather them: according to Jarchi, the metaphor seems to be taken from a man that has been ploughing and sowing, and reaping and laying up the increase of the field in heaps, and yet knows not who shall gather it into the barn, seeing he may die before it is gathered in; compare with this (<421216>Luke 12:16-19); or the meaning is, when a man has amassed a prodigious deal of wealth together, he knows not who shall enjoy it, whether a son or a servant, a friend or a foe, a good man or a bad man, a wise man or a fool, (<210218>Ecclesiastes 2:18,19).

Ver. 7. And now, Lord, what wait I for? etc.] Look for, or expect, in this view of things? not long life, since the days of man are so short, and his age as nothing; not help from man, since he is altogether vanity; not riches and honour, since they are such poor, fading, perishing things; but the glories of another world, and the enjoyment of the Lord himself, both in this and that;

my hope [is] in thee; the psalmist now returns to himself, and comes to his right mind, and to a right way of judging and acting; making the Lord the object of his hope and trust, expecting all good things, grace and glory, alone from him; and this is the hope which makes not ashamed.

Ver. 8. Deliver me from all my transgressions, etc.] Which were the cause and occasion of all his distresses, inward and outward; and the deliverance prayed for includes a freedom from the dominion of sin, which is by the power of efficacious grace; and from the guilt of sin, which is by the application of the blood of Christ; and from obligation to punishment for it, or deliverance from wrath to come, which is through Christ’s being made a curse, and enduring wrath in the room and stead of his people; and from the very being of sin, which, though it cannot be expected in this life, is desirable: and the psalmist prays that he might be delivered from “all” his transgressions; knowing: that if one of them was left to have dominion over him, or the guilt of it to lie upon him, and he be obliged to undergo due punishment for it, he must be for ever miserable; make me not the reproach of the foolish; of a Nabal; meaning not any particular person; as Esau, according to Jarchi; or Absalom, as others; but every foolish man, that is, a wicked man; such who deny the being and providence of God, make a mock at sin, and scoff at the saints: and the sense of the psalmist is, that the Lord would keep him from sinning, and deliver him out of all his afflictions, on account of which he was reproached by wicked men.

Ver. 9. I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, etc.] This refers either to his former silence, before he broke it, (<193901>Psalm 39:1,2), or to what he after that came into again, when he had seen the folly of his impatience, the frailty of his life, the vanity of man, and all human affairs, and had been directed to place his hope and confidence in the Lord, (<193905>Psalm 39:5-7); or to the present frame of his mind, and his future conduct, he had resolved upon; and may be rendered, “I am dumb”; or “will be dumb, and will not open my mouth” [f559]; that is, not in a complaining and murmuring way against the Lord, but be still, and know or own that he is God;

because thou didst [it]; not “because thou hast made me”, as Austin reads the, words, and as the Arabic version renders them, “because thou hast created me”; though the consideration of God being a Creator lays his creatures under obligation as to serve him, so to be silent under his afflicting hand upon them; but the sense is, that the psalmist was determined to be patient and quiet under his affliction, because God was the author of it; for though he is not the author of the evil of sin, yet of the evil of affliction; (see <300306>Amos 3:6); and it is a quieting consideration to a child of God under it, that it comes from God, who is a sovereign Being, and does what he pleases; and does all things well and wisely, in truth and faithfulness, and in mercy and loving kindness: this some refer to the rebellion of Absalom, and the cursing of Shimei, (<101211>2 Samuel 12:11 16:10,11); or it may refer to the death of his child, (<101222>2 Samuel 12:22,23); or rather to some sore affliction upon himself; since it follows,

Ver. 10. Remove thy stroke away from me, etc.] The psalmist still considers his affliction as coming from the hand of God, as his stroke upon him, and which lay as a heavy burden on him, and which God only could remove; and to him he applies for the removal of it, who is to be sought unto by his people to do such things for them; nor is such an application any ways contrary to that silence and patience before expressed;

I am consumed by the blow of thine hand; meaning either that his flesh was consumed by his affliction, which came from the hand of God, or he should be consumed if he did not remove it: he could not bear up under it, but must sink and die; if he continued to strive and contend with him, his spirit would fail before him, and the soul that he had made; and therefore he entreats he would remember he was but dust, and remove his hand from him; for this is a reason enforcing the preceding petition.

Ver. 11. When thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, etc.] The psalmist illustrates his own case, before suggested, by the common case and condition of men, when God corrects them; which he has a right to do, as the Father of spirits, and which he does with rebukes; sometimes with rebukes of wrath, with furious rebukes, rebukes in flames of fire, as the men of the world; and sometimes with rebukes of love, the chastenings of a father, as his own dear children; and always for iniquity, whether one or another; and not the iniquity of Adam is here meant, but personal iniquity: and correction for it is to be understood of some bodily affliction, as the effect of it shows;

thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth; that is, secretly, suddenly, and at once; as a moth eats a garment, and takes off the beauty of it; or as easily as a moth is crushed between a man’s fingers; so the Targum;

> “he melts away as a moth, whose body is broken:”

the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic versions, and so the metaphrase of Apollinarius, read, as a spider which destroys itself. The word rendered “beauty” takes in all that is desirable in man; as his flesh, his strength, his comeliness, his pleasantness of countenance, etc. all which are quickly destroyed by a distemper of the body seizing on it; wherefore the psalmist makes and confirms the conclusion he had made before:

surely every man [is] vanity; (see Gill on “<193905>Psalm 39:5”);

Selah; on this word, (see Gill on “<190302>Psalm 3:2”).

Ver. 12. Hear my prayer, O Lord, etc.] Which was, that he would remove the affliction from him that lay so hard and heavy upon him; and give ear unto my cry; which shows the distress he was in, and the vehemency with which he put up his petition to the Lord;

hold not thy peace at my tears; which were shed in great plenty, through the violence of the affliction, and in his fervent prayers to God; (see <580507>Hebrews 5:7);

for I [am] a stranger with thee; not to God, to Christ, to the Spirit, to the saints, to himself, and the plague of his own heart, or to the devices of Satan; but in the world, and to the men of it; being unknown to them, and behaving as a stranger among them; all which was known to God, and may be the meaning of the phrase “with thee”; or reference may be had to the land of Canaan, in which David dwelt, and which was the Lord’s, and in which the Israelites dwelt as strangers and sojourners with him, (<032523>Leviticus 25:23); as it follows here;

[and] a sojourner, as all my fathers [were]; meaning Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their posterity; (see <012304>Genesis 23:4 35:27 <19A523>Psalm 105:23); as are all the people of God in this world: this is not their native place; they belong to another and better country; their citizenship is in heaven; their Father’s house is there, and there is their inheritance, which they have a right unto, and a meetness for: they have no settlement here; nor is their rest and satisfaction in the things of this world: they reckon themselves, while here, as not at home, but in a foreign land; and this the psalmist mentions, to engage the Lord to regard his prayers, since he has so often expressed a concern for the strangers and sojourners in the land of Israel.

Ver. 13. O spare me, etc.] Or “look from me” [f560]; turn away thy fierce countenance from me; or “cease from me [f561], and let me alone”; as in (<181020>Job 10:20); from whence the words seem to be taken, by what follows:

that I may recover strength; both corporeal and spiritual:

before I go hence; out of this world by death:

and be no more; that is, among men in the land of the living; not but that he believed he should exist after death, and should be somewhere, even in heaven, though he should return no more to the place where he was; (see <181020>Job 10:20,21), when a man is born, he comes into the world; when he dies, he goes out of it; a phrase frequently used for death in Scripture; so the ancient Heathens called death “abitio”, a going away [f562].

PSALM 40

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 40

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David

Jarchi interprets this psalm of the Israelites, and of their deliverance and song at the Red sea. The title of it, in the Syriac version, is,

> “A psalm of David according to the letter, when Shemaiah brought the names of those who minister in the house of the Lord;”

(see <132406>1 Chronicles 24:6); according to Kimchi, the subject of this psalm is the same with that of the two preceding; and R. Obadiah thinks it was composed by David, when he was recovered of a leprosy; but though it might be written by David, it was not written concerning himself, or on his own account, but of another. The title of this psalm is somewhat different from others in the order of the words; whereas it is usually put “a psalm of”, or “for David”; here it is, “for David, a psalm”; and may be rendered, as Ainsworth observes, “a psalm concerning David”; not literally, but typically understood; not concerning David himself, but concerning his antitype and son, who is called by his name, (<263724>Ezekiel 37:24,25 <280305>Hosea 3:5); and that it is to be interpreted of him is evident from the application of (<193906>Psalm 39:6-8), unto him by the apostle in (<581005>Hebrews 10:5-9); and the whole of it is applicable to him; some apply it to Jeremiah in the dungeon, and others to Daniel in the den, as Theodoret observes.

Ver. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord, etc.] Or “waiting I waited” [f563]; which denotes continuance, constancy, and patience; and which Christ exercised in the garden, when he submitted himself entirely to the will of God; and on the cross, when he continued in sure hope and firm expectation of his help and assistance, though he was for a while forsaken by him; (see <235007>Isaiah 50:7-9); and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry; both in the garden, by delivering him from fear of death; and on the cross, by upholding, helping, and assisting him, by carrying him through his sufferings and death, and raising him from the dead; (see <234908>Isaiah 49:8 <580507>Hebrews 5:7).

Ver. 2. He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, etc.] Which, with the following phrase, out of the miry clay, expresses the state and condition Christ was in at the time of his bloody sweat, his crucifixion, and his lying in “sheol”, the pit or grave, sometimes rendered hell, which these figurative phrases fitly signify; when it is observed, that he was made sin, and had the sins of all his people on him; and, as the type of Joshua, was clothed with their filthy garments; he might be truly said to be in the miry clay; and also that he was made a curse for them, and bore the wrath of God in their room and stead; and was forsaken by his God and Father, and so endured both the punishment of loss and sense, and what was tantamount to the sufferings of the damned in hell; (see <196901>Psalm 69:1,2); to which may be added the noisy insults of malignant men, and the infernal fiends, who surrounded him on the cross; when he was in an horrible, or “noisy pit”, as the words may be rendered[f564], the allusion being to subterraneous caverns or pits, in which the falls of water make so horrible a noise as is intolerable; or to deep pits, into which anything cast makes a great sound: and the issue of all this was, that he was laid in the pit of the grave, and held under the power and with the cords of death; from all which he was delivered when he was raised from the dead, justified in the Spirit, and glorified in the human nature by his God and Father;

and set my feet upon a rock; on Mount Zion in heaven, whither he was carried up after his resurrection; where he will remain until his second coming, being set down at the right hand of God, in a most stable, firm, and unalterable state, as well as an honourable one; for he will die no more, and death shall no more have dominion over him;

[and] established my goings; in treading the path of life, which was shown him at his resurrection; in passing through the air, the territory of Satan, at his ascension; and in his entrance into his glory, and making his way to his Father’s right hand and throne.

Ver. 3. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, [even] praise to our God, etc.] Sung by him in the midst of the great congregation of angels and saints, upon his resurrection, ascension, and session at the right hand of God; (see <192222>Psalm 22:22,25); when he went to his God and ours, to his Father and ours; and in which song he is joined by all his people above and below, (<660509>Revelation 5:9-13);

many shall see [it], and fear, and shall trust in the Lord; even all the elect of God, as many as are ordained to eternal life; the many whose sins Christ bore, for whom he became a ransom, whom he justifies and brings to glory: these all “see” him in the horrible pit and miry clay, in his state of humiliation, as bearing their sins, and the punishment due unto them; as wounded, bruised, and crucified; as rising again for their justification; and as on Mount Zion crowned with glory and honour; and a multitude of harpers with him, singing the new song; these see the salvation he has wrought out, the glory, fulness, and suitableness of it, and their interest in it; and they “fear” not with a fear of hell and damnation, which is inconsistent with the trust after mentioned; but with a godly and filial fear, which arises from and is encouraged by the grace and goodness of God, their faith in the sufferings, death, and resurrection of Christ Jesus, and which render him a proper object of trust and confidence; for he is so both as suffering, crucified, and slain, and as risen again, and exalted at the Father’s right hand, (<480220>Galatians 2:20 <600122>1 Peter 1:22).

Ver. 4. Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust, etc.] For such are safe and secure in him, are possessed of all blessings of grace through him, have peace in their own souls now, and shall enjoy eternal happiness with him hereafter; and respecteth not the proud; such as the Pharisees, and all self-righteous persons, who trust in themselves and their own righteousness, submit not to the righteousness of Christ, and despise others; to these such who trust in Christ have no respect; they neither esteem them, nor imitate them;

nor such as turn aside to lies; to idols, the lying vanities of the Gentiles; or to any doctrines injurious to the person, office, blood, righteousness, sacrifice, and grace of Christ; which are no other than lies, and which those who believe in Christ have no respect to, but abhor both them and the abettors of them.

Ver. 5. Many, O Lord my God, [are] thy wonderful works [which] thou hast done, etc.] This is the “new song”, as Aben Ezra rightly observes, which is said in (<194003>Psalm 40:3), to be put in the mouth of the Messiah; who sometimes speaks in the plural number, being the representative of his people, and sometimes in the singular; for it is the same person that speaks here who is continued speaking in (<194006>Psalm 40:6), and following; and which are applied to Christ, (<581005>Hebrews 10:5); the “works” here said to be done, and to be “many” and “wonderful”, are not the creation of the world, the dividing of the sea, and feeding the people of Israel forty years in the wilderness, as Jarchi interprets them; but the incarnation of Christ, redemption by him, the resurrection of him from the dead; regeneration and conversion, and the preservation of the saints from the evil of the world, safe to the kingdom and glory of God; all which, as they are many and various, and display the manifold wisdom and grace of God, so they are marvellous, and will be the subject of the wonder of saints to all eternity;

and thy thoughts [which are] to us-ward; that is, the decrees of God, as Aben Ezra truly explains them; the purposes, counsels, and intentions of God; which, though mentioned last, are before his works, and are the spring of them: these were in the mind of God from everlasting, were unknown till revealed, were thoughts of peace, and not of evil, and are unfrustrable, and ever fulfilled, and are manifold, precious, and amazing, (<19D917>Psalm 139:17); and these were concerning all the elect of God as considered in Christ, and members of his; and therefore he says to us-ward; and all the works before mentioned were done to them, or for them, and on their account; and so Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret the phrase, “because of us”, or “for our sakes”; even the incarnation, sufferings, death, and resurrection of Christ, and the thoughts of them, were for them;

they cannot be reckoned up in order to thee; or “there is none can order them unto thee” [f565]; there is no power in man to do it, as Aben Ezra observes; or “there is none like unto thee”, as Jarchi and the Oriental versions; (see <021511>Exodus 15:11 <198907>Psalm 89:7 <234018>Isaiah 40:18,25); though this sense seems to break in upon the account of the wonderful works and thoughts of God, which are still designed in the following clause;

[if] I could declare and speak [of them], they are more than can be numbered; that is, by men: from this general account of, the many and wonderful works and thoughts of God, the Messiah passes on to take notice of one particular design and work of the Lord, the redemption of his people by the sacrifice of himself.

Ver. 6. Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire, etc.] These were desired, willed, and appointed by God, and that very early, even from the times of our first parents; and, when performed aright, were acceptable to God, quite down to the times of the Messiah: indeed, when offered without faith in Christ, and with a wicked mind, to merit any thing at the hand of God, they were always abominable to him; and he likewise ever preferred love to himself, and of the neighbour, obedience to the commands of the moral law, and works of mercy to men, before all the sacrifices of the ceremonial law, (<091522>1 Samuel 15:22 <280606>Hosea 6:6) (<411233>Mark 12:33); nor were these ever in such esteem with him as the sacrifices of a broken and contrite heart, or of praise and thanksgiving, (<195116>Psalm 51:16,17 69:30,31); nor were they ever regarded by him but as they respected Christ; nor were they ever designed to cleanse from sin, and take it away, but to lead to the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ: but none of these senses have place here: the meaning of the words is, that it was not the will of God, at the time this passage refers to, that legal sacrifices should continue any longer; and that they should not be offered up, even by good men, in the best manner, and to the best ends and purposes; the time being come that a better sacrifice should be offered, which was the sum and substance of them, and was prefigured by them;

mine ears hast thou opened; or "dug", or "bored"[f566]; in allusion, as is thought by many, to (<022106>Exodus 21:6); though the phrase rather signifies the formation and excavation of the ear; or the preparing and fitting it for its use; that is, to hearken to the will of his heavenly Father, to become man, offer himself a sacrifice, and suffer and die in the room of his people; to which he became obedient, taking upon him the form of a servant, when found in fashion as a man; and was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; (see <235004>Isaiah 50:4-6); in (<581005>Hebrews 10:5), the words are rendered as by the Septuagint, "but a body hast thou prepared me"; and with it the Arabic and Ethiopic versions agree; and so Apollinarius,

> "flesh of mortal generation;"

a part of the body being put for the whole; and which, indeed, is supposed: for unless a body had been prepared for him, his ears could not have been opened; and it was in the body, in human nature, that he was the obedient servant; and this is to be understood, not only of a preparation of this body, in the purposes, counsel, and covenant of God; but chiefly of the formation of it in the womb of the virgin, where it was curiously wrought and prepared by the Holy, Ghost, that he might have something to offer, and in it become, as he did, an offering and a sacrifice to God, of a sweet smelling savour;

burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required; any longer; this body being prepared for the Messiah to be offered up in.

Ver. 7. Then said I, etc.] As in the council and covenant of peace, when and where he declared his willingness to come into the world, and make satisfaction for the sins of his people; so when the fulness of time was come for his appearance in human nature he repeated the same; for of the time of his coming into the world are these words interpreted, (<581005>Hebrews 10:5); when sacrifice and offering God would not have any longer continued, and when a body was prepared him, then he said,

Lo, I come; O Father; as Apollinarius, in his metaphrase, adds; that is, freely, and without compulsion; immediately, at once, without any delay; and he himself, and not another; and this not by change of place, but by assumption of nature; taking the body, or human nature, prepared for him, and uniting it to himself; to which the word "lo" is prefixed as a note of attention and admiration; the incarnation of Christ being a wonderful affair, and of the utmost moment and importance; in the volume of the book [it is] written of me; either in the book of divine predestination, in the purposes and decrees of God, (<19D916>Psalm 139:16); or in the book of the Scriptures; either in general, (<430539>John 5:39) (<422427>Luke 24:27,44); or particularly in the book of the Psalms, (<190105>Psalm 1:50:2 2:2,6,7); or rather in the book of the law, the five books of Moses, since these were the only books or volumes that were composed at the writing of this psalm; and it has respect not to (<051815>Deuteronomy 18:15); nor (<051718>Deuteronomy 17:18); nor (<022106>Exodus 21:6); but rather (<010315>Genesis 3:15); and seeing the coming of Christ into the world was not only appointed of God, agreed unto by Christ, but was prophesied of, and penned down in the sacred writings; therefore at the appointed time he came, freely and willingly. This book is called a volume, or roll, alluding to the manner of writing formerly; when what was written was finished, it was rolled about a stick in the manner of a cylinder; and in this form is the book of the law with the Jews to this day; (see Gill on "<420417>Luke 4:17").

Ver. 8. I delight to do thy will, O my God, etc.] This he came down from heaven to do, and this he did do, by preaching the Gospel, and working miracles; and above all by obtaining eternal redemption for his people, which he effected by fulfilling the law, becoming a sacrifice, and suffering and dying in their room; all which were the will of God, and grateful to him, and in doing which Christ took the utmost delight and pleasure, (<430434>John 4:34 <421250>Luke 12:50);

yea, thy law [is] within my heart; either the whole moral law, under which he was, as man, and the surety of his people; and which was written upon his heart, and which he perfectly obeyed; or that particular law, injunction, and command laid upon him by his Father, to offer himself a sacrifice, and lay down his life for men; which he agreed to, had it in his mind, his heart was set upon it, and he cheerfully complied with it, (<431018>John 10:18 14:31).

Ver. 9. I have preached righteousness in the great congregation, etc.] Not the righteousness which the law requires men to do; but the righteousness which Christ himself wrought out, for the justification of them that believe; this he was a preacher, as well as the author of, and is part of the glad tidings he was anointed to preach, (<236101>Isaiah 61:1); and the word [f567] here used signifies, for the most part, the publishing of good tidings; and this our Lord did publicly, before all the people, in the synagogues of the Jews, and in the temple, whither the people in great numbers resorted; especially at the three great festivals in the year; the feasts of passover, pentecost, and tabernacles, when all the males were obliged to appear, and made up a great congregation indeed; (see <430223>John 2:23 5:1,14 8:2 18:20);

lo, I have not refrained my lips, O Lord, thou knowest; Christ appeals to his divine Father, the searcher of hearts, and trier of reins, for the truth of this; that he had not laid any restraint upon his lips, nor kept back anything in his ministry that was profitable; but had taught the way of God in great integrity and sincerity; had opened his mouth, and spoke freely and fully, and used great plainness of speech.

Ver. 10. I have not not hid thy righteousness within my heart, etc.] Meaning not the essential righteousness of God, though that was abundantly declared in the wounds, sufferings, and death of Christ; and which was the end indeed of his being a propitiation for sin, (<450325>Romans 3:25,26); but his own righteousness, as before, which he wrought out, and brought in; and which is called the righteousness of God his Father, because it is approved of by him, and accepted with him, and which he imputes to all his people;

I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation: trial is, the “faithfulness” of God in executing all his purposes, counsels, and decrees, which are said to be faithfulness and truth; and in fulfilling his covenant and promises, relating to the redemption and salvation of men by Christ; and in the mission of Christ into this world on that account; and in the accomplishment of all the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning him;

and in making good all the particular promises of support, help, and strength, made to the Messiah himself: and by his "salvation" is meant, that which is of God the Father's appointing, continuing, and settling, in the council and covenant of grace; which he sent his Son to be the author of, and which he has obtained; and is the great doctrine of the Gospel preached by himself, and his faithful ministers, (<421909>Luke 19:9,10 <411616>Mark 16:16);

I have not concealed thy lovingkindness and thy truth from the great congregation; or "in the great congregation", as the Targum. By the "lovingkindness" of God is designed both his love to Christ, which was before the foundation of the world, and continued in his lowest state of humiliation, and which our Lord was far from concealing, but gave openly instances of it, (<431724>John 17:24 10:17 5:20-23); and this love to his people; and which he declared to be the same with that which he is loved with, and instances in the gift of himself to them by his Father, as the great evidence of it, (<431723>John 17:23 3:16); and by "truth" is intended the Gospel in general, which came by Christ, was preached by him, which he bore witness to, to do which was one end of his coming into the world; and this was not concealed by him, who is truth itself; but was fully and plainly declared by him, as it had not been before, (<430117>John 1:17 18:37).

Ver. 11. Withhold not thou thy tender mercies from me, O Lord, etc.] this is a petition of Christ to his Father, when in the midst of his sorrows and sufferings, before related; and particularly when he hid his face from him, and withheld the discoveries of his tender and affectionate love; let thy lovingkindness and thy truth continually preserve me; as he had promised; of which promise some notice is given, (<234908>Isaiah 49:8), in the fulfilment of which the lovingkindness, truth, and faithfulness of God, would appear. Some read these words as expressive of faith in these things, "thou wilt not withhold", etc. "thy lovingkindness and thy truth shall continually preserve me"[f568].

Ver. 12. For innumerable evils have compassed me about, etc.] Like floods of water all around him; (see <191804>Psalm 18:4,5 Jon 2:5); these are the evils of punishment inflicted on him, as the surety and Saviour of his people; such as the sorrows and griefs he bore all his days; the cruel mockings and scourges he endured; his being buffeted and spit upon; his head crowned with thorns, and his hands and feet pierced with nails; insulted by men and devils; crucified between two thieves, and so died the shameful and painful death of the cross;

mine iniquities have taken hold upon me; not any committed by him; he was conceived, born, and lived without sin, knew none, nor did he any; but the sins of his people, which were imputed to him, laid upon him, and which he voluntarily took and bore; and which he reckoned as his own and was responsible for them; these, when he hung upon the cross, came upon him from all quarters, and he bore them in his own body upon the tree;

so that I am not able to look up; or “cannot see” [f569]; either the end of these iniquities, they being so numerous, as is after related; or he could not bear to look upon them, they were so filthy and nauseous, and he so pure and holy; or he could not behold his Father’s countenance, which these sins that were upon him separated him from, and caused to be hid from him; or, like one pressed down with the guilt of sin, as the poor publican was, could not so much as lift up his eyes to heaven, (<421813>Luke 18:13);

they are more than the hairs of mine head; as they must needs be, since they were the iniquities of all the elect of God, of the whole general assembly ad church of the firstborn, written in heaven, (<235306>Isaiah 53:6);

therefore my heart faileth me; as man; (see <192214>Psalm 22:14); though being supported by his divine nature, and by his divine Father and eternal Spirit, he failed not, nor was he discouraged, (<234204>Isaiah 42:4); this is said to show the truth of the human nature, the greatness of men’s sins, the strictness of divine justice, and what strength was necessary to accomplish man’s salvation.

Ver. 13. Be pleased, O Lord, to deliver me, etc.] From the innumerable evils which compassed him about; from sinful men, and from devils, signified by the sword, dog, and lion, (<192220>Psalm 22:20,21); and from the power and dominion of death and the grave; all which was done when he was raised from the dead, and as the fruit and effect of God’s well pleasedness in him, and with what he did and suffered; (see <192208>Psalm 22:8 18:19);

O Lord, make haste to help me; (see Gill on “<192219>Psalm 22:19”).

Ver. 14. Let them be ashamed and confounded together, etc.] As they will be at the last day, when they shall see him whom they have pierced come in the clouds of heaven, in his own and his Father’s glory, and in the glory of the holy angels;

that seek after my soul to destroy it; that is, his life, as did Herod in his infancy, and the Scribes and Pharisees, chief priests and elders of the people of the Jews, frequently, and at last accomplished what they sought after;

let them be driven backward; as those were who came with Judas into the garden to apprehend him, (<431806>John 18:6); and put to shame that wish me evil: as did the Jews, who sought all opportunities to ensnare him, and that they might have to accuse him to the Roman governor; and who earnestly desired his crucifixion, and vehemently wished his death; (see <194105>Psalm 41:5).

Ver. 15. Let them be desolate for a reward of their shame, etc.] Of their shameful wishes, words, and actions, as they were: their habitations in Jerusalem were desolate, and so was their house or temple there, and their whole land, and they themselves were stripped of everything, when Jerusalem was taken and destroyed; (see <402338>Matthew 23:38) (<440120>Acts 1:20);

that say unto me, Aha, aha; words expressive of joy, (<193521>Psalm 35:21,25), exulting at his miseries and sufferings on the cross, (<402739>Matthew 27:39-44); so the Targum,

> “we have rejoiced at his destruction, with joy at his affliction.”

Ver. 16. Let all those that seek thee, etc.] In the first place, with their whole hearts, earnestly and diligently, in Christ, and under the influences of his Spirit, for pardon, righteousness, communion, larger measures of grace, and for honour, glory, immortality, and eternal life;

rejoice and be glad in thee: as their covenant God, the Father of their mercies, the God of all comfort and salvation, who pardons their sins, clothes them with the robes of righteousness and garments of salvation, and accepts their persons in Christ; all which is matter of joy and gladness: Christ is concerned for the joy of his people, (<431511>John 15:11); the Targum is, “they shall”, or “let them rejoice, and be glad in thy word”: in himself, the essential Word, in whom there is always ground and reason of joy and gladness; because of his person, blood, righteousness, and sacrifice;

let such as love thy salvation; either Christ, who is God’s salvation, (<014918>Genesis 49:18 <234906>Isaiah 49:6 <420229>Luke 2:29,30); and who is loved by his people, universally, superlatively, and sincerely; or the salvation of him, his deliverance from the grave, resurrection from the dead, and exaltation; the benefits of which believers share in, and so have reason to love it: or the salvation he is the author of, which is loved by those that know it; partly because agreeable to the divine perfections, the glory of God is great in it; and partly because it is so full and complete in itself, and so suitable to them;

say continually, the Lord be magnified; let this be their constant employment in this world, as it will be for ever in the next, to ascribe greatness to God; or greatly to praise him, because of the great salvation wrought out for them.

Ver. 17. But I [am] poor and needy, etc.] As Christ was literally, (<470809>2 Corinthians 8:9); and in a spiritual sense, when deserted by his Father, forsaken by his disciples, and surrounded by his enemies; and had the sins of his people, the curse of the law, and the wrath of God upon him;

[yet] the Lord thinketh upon me; thinketh good for me, as the Targum; or thinks highly of me; has me in great esteem though despised of men, and in such a suffering state;

thou [art] my help and my deliverer; he believed he should have what he prayed for, (<194013>Psalm 40:13); (see <235007>Isaiah 50:7-9); make no tarrying, O my God; which is a repetition of the request in (<194013>Psalm 40:13).

PSALM 41

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 41

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David

In this psalm is a prophecy concerning Christ, and concerning Judas Iscariot, as runs part of the title in the Syriac version; and in the Arabic version it is called a prophecy concerning the incarnation, and the salutation of Judas; and certain it is that (<194109>Psalm 41:9) is to be understood of him, and of his betraying Christ into the hands of his enemies, since it is cited and applied to him by our Lord himself, (<431318>John 13:18); so that having such a sure rule of interpretation, we may safely venture to explain the whole psalm of Christ, which treats both of his humiliation and exaltation; for it neither agrees with David wholly, nor with Hezekiah, to whom some ascribe it, as Theodoret remarks.

Ver. 1. Blessed [is] he that considereth the poor, etc.] Not the poor of the world in common, nor poor saints in particular, but some single poor man; for the word is in the singular number, and designs our Lord Jesus Christ, who, in (<194017>Psalm 40:17), is said to be “poor and needy”: and so read the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic versions here; who became poor for our sakes, that we might be enriched by his poverty; being born of poor parents, educated in a mean manner, and in public life was ministered to by others: the word [f570] here used signifies one that is attenuated, weak, and exhausted either of his substance or strength, or both; as Christ was in his state of humiliation, when he was emptied of his riches, and, though Lord of all, had not where to lay his head; and whose strength was dried up like a potsherd, when he suffered on the cross; and indeed at best he was encompassed with weaknesses and infirmities: and in this his low estate he is to be wisely considered, or attended to with wisdom and understanding; and he may be said wisely to consider him, who considers how great a person he is, that came into such a low estate for us; not a mere man, but above angels and men, that has all the perfections of deity in him, is the eternal Son of God, truly and properly God, and the Creator of all things, and Governor of the universe; which consideration will engage to and encourage faith and hope in him, lead to adore his wonderful grace, and to admire his condescension and humility in becoming poor and weak; as also who considers that the poverty of Christ was for our sakes, and that we might be made rich with the riches of grace and glory; and considers it so as not to be offended with it; (see <401106>Matthew 11:6 13:57); and which may serve to support us under all meanness and infirmity, and in whatsoever estate saints may come into; and likewise who considers him in his offices which he exercised in that his estate as the apostle and high priest of our profession; and him in his exalted state in heaven; (see <581203>Hebrews 12:3 3:1 7:4 8:1); in a word, he wisely considers him, who believes in him as his Saviour, prizes him as the pearl of great price, cleaves close unto him, and follows him wherever he goes; who desires to know more of him, is concerned for his honour, interest, kingdom and glory, and pities his poor members, and freely and bountifully communicates to them; and so the Targum,

> “blessed is the man that wisely considers the afflictions of the poor, that he may have mercy on him;”

and such an one is an happy man, and the following things said of him prove him to be so;

the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble: or “in the evil day” [f571]; out of all his trouble, temporal and spiritual, of body and soul; in every time of affliction, private and personal; or in a time of public calamity; perhaps reference may be had to the time of Jerusalem’s destruction, which was a time of great tribulation, (<402421>Matthew 24:21); when those who did not consider Christ in his poor and low estate, but despised and rejected him, were destroyed; and such as did were saved from that calamity: and it may also include the day of judgment, which is the evil day, unto which the wicked are reserved, and when they will be punished with everlasting destruction; but then those that consider Christ, and believe in him, will be saved from wrath. Some [f572] take these words, with what follows in the two next verses, as a prayer, and as delivered by him that visits the sick, for his comfort; and so Joseph Kimchi interprets it of an honourable man visiting a sick man, and instructing and comforting him with such words as these, that “the Lord will deliver him”, etc.

Ver. 2. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive, etc.] Amidst a thousand deaths, to which he is exposed for making a profession of his faith in Christ; (see <470110>2 Corinthians 1:10 4:10,11 6:9); or this may refer to his spiritual life, which is hid and preserved in Christ, in whom he believes;

and is safe and secure; because Christ lives he shall live also, and shall never die the second death, nor be hurt by it, but shall have everlasting life;

[and] he shall be blessed upon the earth; with temporal blessings; for whatever he has, be it more or less, he has it with the blessing of God, and as a blessing of the covenant, and in love, and so is a blessing indeed: and with spiritual blessings; with peace, pardon, righteousness, and a right and title to eternal glory and happiness; and he will be blessed in the new earth, in which righteousness will dwell, and where he will dwell, live, and reign with Christ a thousand years;

and thou wilt not deliver him into the will of his enemies; not into the will of Satan, that roaring lion who would devour him if he might; nor of wicked men, and furious persecutors, whose wrath the Lord makes to praise him; and the remainder of it is restrained by him; some read these words as a prayer, "do not thou deliver him", etc. (see <192712>Psalm 27:12); so Pagninus, Montanus, Junius and Tremellius, Ainsworth, and others.

Ver. 3. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing, etc.] When on a sick bed, or a death bed, where he lies languishing, and ready to expire; when his natural strength, spirits, and heart fail him, then the Lord strengthens him with strength in his soul; and is the strength of his heart, and his portion for ever. The Targum is, thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness; or "all his bed thou hast turned" or "wilt turn in his sickness"[f573]; meaning not the recovery of him from a bed of sickness to a state of health, which is the sense given by many; much less a turning him from a state of ease and rest into trouble and distress; but making him easy and comfortable on a bed of sickness; which, in a literal sense, is done when a sick person's bed is turned or made, or he is turned upon it from side to side; so the Lord, by the comforts of his Spirit, makes a sick and death bed easy to them that believe in Christ, and often puts that triumphant song into their mouths in their dying moments, "O death! where is that sting?" etc. (<461555>1 Corinthians 15:55); and this is the peaceful end and blissful state of such who wisely consider Christ and believe in him; low estate, through the sins of his the insults of his enemies, and the treachery of one of his disciples, is described in the following verses.

> "the Word of the Lord shall help him in his life, and shall appear to him on the bed of his illness, to quicken him;"

Ver. 4. I said, Lord, be merciful unto me, etc.] (See Gill on “<194011>Psalm 40:11”);

heal my soul; not that it was diseased with sin in such sense as the souls of other men are; but it is to be understood as a petition for comfort while bearing the sins of others, and which Christ as man stood in need of when in the garden and on the cross; so healing signifies comfort in trouble, as in (<235718>Isaiah 57:18 <390402>Malachi 4:2);

for I have sinned against thee; or “unto thee”, or “before thee”, as the Targum; not that any sin was committed by him in his own person, but he having all the sins of his people on him, which he calls his own, (<194012>Psalm 40:12); he was treated as a sinner, and as guilty before God, (<235312>Isaiah 53:12); and so the words may be read, “for I am a sinner unto thee” [f574]; I am counted as one by thee, having the sins of my people imputed to me; and am bound unto thee, or under obligation to bear the punishment of sin; or thus, “for I have made an offering for sin unto thee” [f575], so the word is used, (<030626>Leviticus 6:26 9:15); and so it might be rendered in (<030507>Leviticus 5:7,11); and perhaps may be better rendered so in (<030403>Leviticus 4:3); and be understood, not of the sin of the anointed priest, but of his offering a sacrifice for the soul that sinned through ignorance, (<194102>Psalm 41:2), which offering is directed to: and then the sense here is, heal me, acquit me, discharge me, and deliver me out of this poor and low estate in which I am; for I have made my soul an offering for sin, and thereby have made atonement for all the sins of my people laid upon me; and accordingly he was acquitted and justified, (<540316>1 Timothy 3:16).

Ver. 5. Mine enemies speak evil of me, etc.] That is, the Jews, who were enemies to his person, people, doctrines and ordinances, and would not have him to reign over them; these spake evil of him, charged him with being a glutton and a winebibber; said he had a devil, and was a Samaritan; imputed his miracles to diabolical influence; branded his doctrine with blasphemy, and spoke against his religion and worship, and wished him ill, saying, when shall he die; they had a good will to assassinate him privately, but upon mature deliberation they consulted and determined to take what advantage they could against him, and deliver him up to the Roman governor; they feared, should he go on and succeed, through his doctrines and miracles, as he did, it would go ill with them; and they concluded, could he be brought to death, it would clearly appear to the common people that he was not the Messiah; though this was the very thing he came into the world for, and which he himself was very desirous of; because hereby, and hereby only, the salvation of his people could be brought about; and though this was a thing foretold in prophecy, yet it seems as if Christ's enemies the Jews, and Satan himself, were ignorant of it, and of its virtue and use to save men; however, though it was an ill wish in them, it was well for us that he did die, though the consequence is not as they wished;

and his name perish? that is, the fame of his doctrine and miracles, the memory of him and his worthy deeds, particularly his Gospel, which so fully expresses the glory of his person and grace; yea, he himself, for they hoped that upon his death he would come into general disgrace, that his name would never be mentioned but with reproach, that his Gospel would be no more preached, and that he would be accursed of God and men: in all which they were sadly disappointed; for, upon his resurrection from the dead, he had a name given him above every name; his memory became precious to thousands; an ordinance was appointed to remember him to the end of the world in all his churches; his Gospel was ordered to be preached to all the world, as it was; and he himself is blessed for evermore.

Ver. 6. And if he come to see [me], etc.] Meaning anyone of his enemies, when they came, as pretended, to pay him a friendly visit. A late learned writer [f576] interprets this of Absalom, who visited his father when he had the smallpox, which he thinks, after mentioned, of which his enemies expected he would die, when Absalom pretended great concern for his life; though he, with others, were plotting against him, should he live, to destroy him;

he speaketh vanity; lies and falsehoods, in an hypocritical manner, with a double heart; his mouth and his heart not agreeing together; (see <402216>Matthew 22:16);

his heart gathereth iniquity to itself; amasses to itself greater treasures of wickedness still, thought that itself is desperately wicked, and very wickedness: this is to be understood of the enemies of Christ observing his words and actions, and laying them up, with a wicked intention, against a proper time;

[when] he goeth abroad, he telleth [it]; as in the instances concerning giving tribute to Caesar, destroying the temple, and saying he was the son of God, (<402217>Matthew 22:17,18); compared with (<422302>Luke 23:2 <430219>John

2:19,21); compared with (<402660>Matthew 26:60,6<620517>1 John 5:17,18), compared with (<431905>John 19:5).

Ver. 7. All that hate me whisper together against me, etc.] That is, they privately conspired against him; (see <402215>Matthew 22:15 <431153>John 11:53) (<402603>Matthew 26:3,4); against me do they devise my hurt; not only to take away his name and credit, but his life.

Ver. 8. An evil disease, [say they], cleaveth fast unto him, etc.] Not any bodily one, of which they might hope he would die; much less any foul disease, the disease of sin; but, as the phrase may be rendered, "a word of Belial"[f577]; that is, a wicked charge or accusation; a charge of sin brought against him by the sons of Belial, as of blasphemy and sedition, which they concluded would be fastened upon him, and stick by him, and in which they should succeed to their wishes; or else the shameful punishment the death of the cross, inflicted on him, which they fancied would fix an indelible mark of infamy and scandal on him, since cursed is he that hangeth on a tree; and [now] that he lieth, let him rise up no more; has much as he was dead, of which they had full proof, and was laid in the grave, his tomb watched, and the stone rolled to it sealed; they thought all was safe, and it was all over with him, that he would never rise again, as he had given out, and his disciples incapable of committing a fraud they afterwards accused them with: this, according to the above learned writer, (see <194106>Psalm 41:6), was said by Absalom, as he thinks Ahithophel is the person designed in (<194109>Psalm 41:9).

Ver. 9. Yea, mine own familiar friend, etc.] Or, "the man of my peace"[f578]; who did live peaceably with him, and ought always to have done so; whom he treated as his friend, as the rest of the apostles; calling him to that high office, and ordaining him to it, and qualifying him for it; and whom he called by the name of friend, when he came to betray him; Judas is meant;

in whom I trusted; with the bag and the money in it, both for the sustenance of his own family, the apostles, and for the relief of the poor, (<431206>John 12:6 13:29);

which did eat of my bread; of his bread in common with the rest of the apostles; and who was eating with him when he gave the sign who should betray him; and who seems to have eaten of the bread in the Lord’s supper: even this same person hath lifted up his heel against me; by supplanting him, dealing hypocritically with him, and betraying him into the hands of his enemies: the metaphor is either taken from an unruly horse throwing his rider, and then ungenerously spurning at him, and trampling on him; or from wrestlers, who seek to supplant and trip up each other’s heels; which shows the ingratitude, baseness, and treachery of Judas; (see <431318>John 13:18).

Ver. 10. But thou, O Lord, be merciful unto me, and raise me up, etc.] Not from a bed of illness, nor from a state of poverty and want; but from the dead: it was by the will of his divine Father that he suffered death, and it was to him he made satisfaction and reconciliation for the sins of his people, by his sufferings and death; and therefore it was but a reasonable request, that, having done this, he should be raised from the dead: besides, his Father had promised it, and he had believed it; so that this prayer was a prayer of faith, founded upon a divine promise; and the resurrection of Christ is for the most part ascribed to God the Father as his act; though not to the exclusion of the Son, who had power, as to lay down his life, so to take it up again; and though the resurrection of Christ from the dead is not only an act of power, but also of justice, he having paid his people’s debts, atoned for their sins, and satisfied law and justice, it was but right and equitable that he should be discharged from the prison of the grave, and set free; yet here it is requested as an act of mercy, grace, and kindness; for, by doing it, it would appear that his Father’s wrath was taken away from him, and that he had turned himself from the fierceness of his anger to him, and that he was well pleased with his righteousness and sacrifice; besides, it was giving him glory, as well as rolling away the reproach he lay under; and, however, it was in mercy to his body the church, whom he represented, since it was for their justification; nay, their regeneration is influenced by it; and so is the resurrection of their bodies, of which Christ’s resurrection is the pledge and pattern. The end Christ had in view in making the request follows; that I may requite them: not “him”, Judas, last mentioned; for justice pursued and overtook him; he destroyed himself, and was gone to his own place, before Christ’s resurrection from the dead; but them, the Jews, as a body; his enemies that spoke ill of him, wished ill to him, conspired against him, to take away his life, and did bring him to the dust of death: and this his requital of them, after his resurrection, was either of good for evil, by ordering his disciples to preach his Gospel, first at Jerusalem, to those very persons who were concerned in his death, many of whom were converted, baptized, and added to the church; or of evil, for their evil to him, which had its accomplishment in part, at the destruction of Jerusalem, and will more fully at the day of judgment, when they that have pierced him shall see him come in the clouds of heaven.

Ver. 11. By this I know that thou favourest me, etc.] Or “delightest in me” [f579]; as he did, both as his Son and his servant; in his obedience, sufferings, and death, whereby his counsels were accomplished, his covenant ratified, and the salvation of his people procured; and which delight and well pleasedness in him was the ground of his deliverance from the power of death and the grave; (see <191819>Psalm 18:19 22:8); the token by which Christ knew this was, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me; Judas could not; he was too short lived, he was quickly taken away, and all the woes fall upon him imprecated on him, (<19A906>Psalm 109:6-10); nor the Jews; for though they were highly delighted when they had fastened him to the cross, and when he was dead, and laid in the grave; yet they could not sing their jubilee song over him until the third day was past; for they knew he had given out that he should rise again the third day; on which day he did rise, and his apostles preached that he was alive, and through him the resurrection of the dead, to their great grief, vexation, and mortification: nor did Satan, the enemy of Christ, personal and mystical, triumph over him; not in the wilderness, where, after he had tempted him, he was obliged to leave him; nor in the garden, and his agony there, where he was strengthened by an angel; nor even on the cross; for on that Christ himself triumphed over Satan and his principalities, whom he spoiled, and destroyed the devil and all his works; and, at his ascension to heaven, led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men, in token of triumph, and went forth, in the ministration of the Gospel, conquering, and to conquer; turning men from the power of Satan, and causing his servants to triumph in him, while they were in every place diffusing the savour of his knowledge.

Ver. 12. And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, etc.] In the innocence of his nature, being free from sin, original and actual; in the uprightness of his life and conversation before God and men; and in the perfection of his obedience and sacrifice, whereby he brought in a perfect righteousness, made complete atonement, and obtained full salvation and redemption for his people; and, because of all this, Jehovah the Father upheld him in his sufferings, as man and Mediator, that he failed not, and was not discouraged: or rather the sense is, that by several things which turned up in Providence, as the disagreement of the witnesses, declaration of his judge, and the confession of Judas his betrayer, he was cleared of the charges brought against him, and his innocence was maintained, and he upheld in it; but especially this was done by raising him from the dead, when he was openly acquitted, discharged, and justified, and declared to be the Holy One of God, (<540316>1 Timothy 3:16 <191610>Psalm 16:10); and settest me before thy face for ever; after his resurrection, he was introduced into the presence of his Father, and was made glad with his countenance; where he sits before him as the Angel of his presence, and appears in the presence of God in the behalf of his people; is the Lamb in the midst of the throne, as though he had been slain; where his person, blood, righteousness, and sacrifice, are ever in view for their acceptance, and where he ever lives to make intercession for them; for here he will continue until the time of the restitution of all things.

Ver. 13. Blessed [be] the Lord God of Israel, etc.] Which is said, either by the Messiah, on account of the delight his Father had in him; the favour he had shown him in raising him from the dead, maintaining his innocence, and exalting him at his own right hand; and for all the blessings of grace the whole Israel of God enjoyed through him: or else by the church, who is meant by Israel, the Lord is the God of in a covenant way; who, hearing such things done to her Lord and head, breaks out into an exclamation of praise, and ascribes blessing and glory to God for them, which is due to him; from everlasting, and to everlasting; that is, throughout all ages, world without end, (<490321>Ephesians 3:21).

Amen and Amen; which word, as Kimchi observes, signifies confirmation; and the doubling of it is for the greater confirmation of what is expressed. Here ends the first part of the book of Psalms, which is divided into five parts by the Jews [f580].

PSALM 42

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 42

To the chief Musician, Maschil, for the sons of Korah

Of the word “Maschil”, (see Gill on “<193201>Psalm 32:1”), title. Korah was he who was at the head of a conspiracy against Moses and Aaron, for which sin the earth opened its mouth, and swallowed alive him and his company, and fire devoured two hundred and fifty more; the history of which is recorded in (<041601>Numbers 16:1-50); yet all his posterity were not cut off, (<042611>Numbers 26:11); some were in David’s time porters, or keepers of the gates of the tabernacle, and some were singers; (see <130633>1 Chronicles 6:33 9:19 <142019>2 Chronicles 20:19); and to the chief musician was this psalm directed for them to sing, for they were not the authors of it, as some [f581] have thought; but most probably David himself composed it; and it seems to have been written by him, not as representing the captives in Babylon, as Theodoret, but on his own account, when he was persecuted by Saul, and driven out by men from abiding in the Lord’s inheritance, and was in a strange land among the Heathen, where he was reproached by them; and everything in this psalm agrees with his state and condition; or rather when he fled from his son Absalom, and was in those parts beyond Jordan, mentioned in this psalm; (see <101724>2 Samuel 17:24-27); so the Syriac inscription, the song which David sung in the time of his persecution, desiring to return to Jerusalem.

Ver. 1. As the hart panteth after the water brooks, etc.] Either through a natural thirst that creature is said to have; or through the heat of the summer season; and especially when hunted by dogs, it betakes itself to rivers of water, partly to make its escape, and partly to extinguish its thirst, and refresh itself. The word here used denotes the cry of the hart, when in distress for water, and pants after it, and is peculiar to it; and the verb being of the feminine gender, hence the Septuagint render it the “hind”; and Kimchi conjectures that the reason of it may be, because the voice of the female may be stronger than that of the male; but the contrary is asserted by the philosopher [f582], who says, that the male harts cry much stronger than the females; and that the voice of the female is short, but that of the male is long, or protracted. Schindler[f583] gives three reasons why these creatures are so desirous of water; because they were in desert places, where water was wanting; and another, that being heated by destroying and eating serpents, they coveted water to refresh themselves; and the third, when followed by dogs, they betake themselves into the water, and go into that for safety; so panteth my soul after thee, O God; being persecuted by men, and deprived of the word and worship of God, which occasioned a vehement desire after communion with him in his house and ordinances: some render the words, “as the field”, or “meadow, desires the shower”, etc.[f584]; or thirsts after it when parched with drought; (see <233507>Isaiah 35:7) (<196301>Psalm 63:1); and by these metaphors, one or the other, is expressed the psalmist’s violent and eager thirst after the enjoyment of God in public worship.

Ver. 2. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God, etc.] Who is so called, in opposition to the idols of the Gentiles, which were lifeless statues; and who is the author, giver, and maintainer of natural life; and who has promised and provided eternal life in his Son; and is himself the fountain of life, and the fountain of living waters, and a place of broad rivers and streams: particularly his lovingkindness, which is better than life, is a pure river of water of life, the streams where make glad the saints; and hence it is that the psalmist thirsted after God, and the discoveries of his love: saying, when shall I come and appear before God? meaning, not in heaven, as desiring the beatific vision; but in the tabernacle, where were the worship of God, and the ark, the symbol of the divine Presence, and where the Israelites appeared before him, even in Zion; (see <198407>Psalm 84:7).

Ver. 3. My tears have been my meat day and night, etc.] That is, he could not eat for sorrow, like Hannah, <090107>1 Samuel 1:7,8; or while he was eating tears fell in plenty, and they were as common, day and night, as his food, and mixed with it[f585]; (see <198005>Psalm 80:5);

while they continually say unto me, his enemies the Philistines, where [is] thy God? theirs were to be seen and pointed at, as the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars, and idols of gold, silver, brass, wood, and stone; wherefore they ask, where was his? but David’s God was invisible; he is in the heavens, and does what he pleases, (<19B502>Psalm 115:2,3); or the sense is, that if there was such a God he believed in and professed, and he was his servant, surely he would never have suffered him to fall into so much distress and calamity, but would have appeared for his relief and deliverance; and therefore tauntingly, and by way of reproach, ask where he was.

Ver. 4. When I remember these [things], etc.] Either the reproaches of his enemies; or rather his past enjoyments of God in his house, he after makes mention of;

I pour out my soul in me, that is, he had no life nor spirit in him, but was quite overwhelmed with distress and anguish; or he poured out his soul in prayer to God, that it might be with him as in times past;

for I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the house of God; the place of public worship, whither he had often gone, with great pleasure and delight; and, which added thereto, there were many that went along with him; or whom he had "caused to go" [f586], had brought along with him; which is the sense of the word, only used here and in (<233815>Isaiah 38:15); as Dr. Hammond from R. Tanchum and Aben Walid, has shown: a good man will not only attend divine worship himself, but will bring others with him: but now, he could neither go alone, nor in company, the remembrance of which greatly affected his mind; (see <19D701>Psalm 137:1); with the voice of joy and praise: the people singing psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs; with a multitude that kept holy day; as especially on the three great festivals in the year, the feasts of passover, pentecost, and tabernacles, when all the males of Israel appeared before God together, and which was a large multitude; and a delightful sight it was to behold them, when they were all engaged in religious worship at once.

Ver. 5. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? etc.] The psalmist corrects himself, as being too much depressed in spirit with his present circumstances, and expostulates with himself; adding, and [why] art thou disquieted in me? which suggests, that the dejections of God's people are unreasonable ones; sin itself is no just cause and reason of them; for though it is very disagreeable, loathsome, and abhorring, troublesome and burdensome, to a spiritual man, and is ingenuously confessed, and heartily mourned over, and is matter of humiliation; yet no true reason of dejection: because there is forgiveness of it with God; the blood of Christ has been shed for the remission of it; it has been bore and done away by him; nor is there any condemnation for it to them that are in him; and though it rages, and threatens to get the ascendant; yet it is promised it shall not have the dominion over the saints; neither the nature of it, being great, as committed against God himself, nor the multitude of sins, nor the aggravated circumstances of them, are just causes of dejection, since the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin; nor are Satan and his temptations; he is indeed an enemy, very powerful, subtle, and terrible; he is the strong man armed, the old serpent, and a roaring lion; and his temptations are very troublesome and grieving; and it becomes the saints to be upon their guard against him and them; but they have no reason to be cast down on account hereof; for God, who is on the side of his people, is mightier than he; Christ is stronger than the strong man armed, and the divine Spirit who is in them is greater than he that is in the world: Satan is under divine restraints, and can go no further in tempting than he is suffered, and his temptations are overruled for good; besides, good armour is provided for the Christian to fight against him with, and in a short time he will be bruised under his feet: nor are the hidings of God’s face a sufficient reason of dejection; for though such a case is very distressing, and gives great trouble to those that love the Lord; nor can they, nor does it become them to sit easy and unconcerned in such circumstances, as they are great trials of faith and patience; yet it is the experience of the people of God in all ages: some good ends are answered hereby, as to bring saints to a sense of sins, which has deprived them of the divine Presence, to make them prize it the more when they have it, and to be careful of losing it for the future. Besides, the love of God continues the same when he hides and chides; and he will return again, and will not finally and totally forsake his people; and in a little while they shall be for ever with him, and see him as he is; and though by one providence or another they may be deprived for a while of the word, worship, and ordinances of God, he that provides a place for his church, and feeds and nourishes her in the wilderness, can make up the lack of such enjoyments by his presence and Spirit. The means and methods the psalmist took to remove his dejections and disquietudes of mind are as follow;

hope thou in God; for the pardon of sin; for which there is good ground of hope, and so no reason to be cast down on account of it; for strength against Satan’s temptations, which is to be had in Christ, as well as righteousness; and for the appearance of God, and the discoveries of his love, who has his set time to favour his people, and therefore to be hoped, and quietly waited for. Hope is of great use against castings down; it is an helmet, an erector of the head, which keeps it upright, and from bowing down: it is an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, and is of great service in the troubles of life, and against the fears of death; for I shall yet praise him [for] the help of his countenance; or "the salvations of his countenance"[f587]; which implies that the psalmist believed, notwithstanding his present circumstances, that he should have salvation upon salvation; salvation of every kind; or a full and complete one, which should spring, not from any merits of his, but from the free grace and favour of God, expressed in his gracious countenance towards him; and also intimates, that the light of his countenance would be salvation to him [f588] now; and that his consummate happiness hereafter would lie in beholding his face for evermore: all which would give him occasion and opportunity of praising the Lord. Now such a faith and persuasion as this is a good antidote against dejections of soul, and disquietude of mind; (see <192713>Psalm 27:13).

Ver. 6. O my God, my soul is cast down within me, etc.] Which the psalmist repeats, partly to show the greatness of his dejection, though he had not lost his view of interest in God as his covenant God; and partly to observe another method he made use of to remove his dejection and refresh his spirits; and that was by calling to mind past experiences of divine goodness;

therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan; the country round about it, or rather beyond it; which was at the farthest parts of the land of Canaan, where David was obliged to flee, and where he had often met with God; and of the Hermonites; who inhabited the mountain of Hermon; or the Hermonian mountains, as the Targum; (see <19D303>Psalm 133:3); a mountain upon the border of the land of Israel eastward, and which was very high; Cocceius thinks the Geshurites are meant; (see <092708>1 Samuel 27:8); here also the Lord had appeared to him, and for him; and from the hill Mizar; or "the little hill"[f589]; which might be so in comparison of Hermon. The above interpreter thinks Zoar is meant, which Lot so called, (<011920>Genesis 19:20,22); which was near Sodom and Gomorrah: Kimchi thinks it might be Zior, mentioned in (<061554>Joshua 15:54); but, be it what or where it will, in this little hill David enjoyed the divine Presence; or was indulged with some remarkable favour; from all which he concludes he had no just reason to be dejected and disquieted in his mind: and right it is for the people of God to call to mind past experiences, and make mention of them; partly for the glory of divine grace, and to express their gratitude to God, and their sense of his goodness; and partly to cheer and refresh their own spirits, and prevent dejection and despondency: and delightful it is to call to mind, how, at such a time, and in such a place, the Lord was pleased to manifest his love, apply some gracious promise, or deliver from some sore temptation or distress: all which must tend to encourage faith and hope. The Jewish writers differently interpret these words; Jarchi, of David’s remembrance of the wonderful works God did for the people of Israel of old, in drying up the river Jordan, and giving them the law on Mount Sinai, a little hill, in comparison of some others: Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, understand them as a reason of his dejection, when he remembered how the Israelites came from those several parts to the solemn feasts at Jerusalem, which he was now deprived of; and the Targum paraphrases them of the inhabitants of those places, and of the people that received the law on Mount Sinai, remembering God; and so Arama thinks “beyond Jordan” is mentioned because the law was given there; and by the hill Mizar he understands Sinai: and some Christian interpreters consider them as a reason why David’s soul was cast down in him, he being in such places as here mentioned, at a distance from his own house, from Jerusalem, and the place of divine worship, and so render the words, “because that I remember thee”, etc. [f590].

Ver. 7. Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of the water spouts, etc.] By which are meant afflictions, comparable to the deep waters of the sea, for their multitude and overwhelming nature; (see <196901>Psalm 69:1,2) (<234302>Isaiah 43:2); these came pouring down, one after another, upon the psalmist: as soon as one affliction over, another came, as in the case of Job; which is signified by one calling to another, and were clamorous, troublesome, and very grievous and distressing;

all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me: with which he seemed to be covered and overwhelmed, as a ship is at sea. It may be observed, that the psalmist calls afflictions God’s water spouts, and “his” waves and “his” billows; because they are appointed, sent, ordered, and overruled by him, and made to work for the good of his people: and now, though these might seem to be a just cause of dejection, yet they were not, as appears from (<194208>Psalm 42:8).

Ver. 8. [Yet] the Lord will command his lovingkindness in the daytime, etc.] Which is a tender affection in God towards his people, springs from his sovereign will and pleasure, is from everlasting, is ever the same, never removes from them, and is better than life; the effects of which are all spiritual blessings, grace, and glory: and this the Lord “commands” when he sends it forth with power, makes a clear manifestation and home application of it to them; when he commands his covenant, or bestows covenant blessings on them; when he commands his strength, or gives them strength to bear up under afflictions; when he commands deliverances for Jacob, or works salvation for them; and when he commands blessings temporal and spiritual on them, especially life for evermore: (see <191109>Psalm 111:9 68:29) (<194404>Psalm 44:4 133:3); and this is done in “the daytime”; either, as some interpret it, in a fit and seasonable time, in God’s appointed time, who has his set time to favour his people, and show his lovingkindness to them; or openly and publicly, so as themselves and others may see the salvation of the Lord; or continually; for mercy, goodness, and lovingkindness, follow them all the days of their lives; yea, are from everlasting to everlasting: and these words may be read either in the past tense, as some do, “yet the Lord hath commanded”[f591], etc. and so respect what had been, and relate to the former experiences and manifestations of the love of God, with which the psalmist encourages himself under his present afflictions; or in the future, as in our version; and so they are an expression of faith as to what would be hereafter, that the Lord would appear again, and show him his face and favour;

and in the night his song [shall be] with me; signifying hereby, that he strongly believed he should have occasion of singing praise to God in the night season, though he was now in such mournful circumstances: he calls it “his song”; that is, the Lord’s song; because the matter of it are his lovingkindness, and the blessings springing from it; because the Lord himself is the subject of it; his perfections, his works, his salvation and glory; and because he gives songs in the night, and puts them into the mouths of his people; (see <231202>Isaiah 12:2) (<183510>Job 35:10); and the psalmist says it would be with him, in his heart, and in his mouth, and be his constant companion wherever he was, lying down, or rising up; and that “in the night”; either figuratively understood of affliction and distress, out of which he would be delivered, and so be compassed about with songs of deliverance; or literally, it being a time of leisure to call to mind the salvation and mercies of the day, and be thankful for them; (see <19706>Psalm 77:6 119:62) (<441625>Acts 16:25);

[and] my prayer unto the God of my life: natural, spiritual, and eternal; being the author, giver, and preserver of each; and this is no inconsiderable mercy, to have such a God to pray unto in a time of distress; as well as in a time of salvation, to go to, and make known requests with thanksgiving; which seems to be intended here, since it is joined with a song. Prayer and praise go together, the object of which are not lifeless idols, that cannot save; but the living God, who is a God hearing and answering prayer, and does not despise the prayer of the destitute. The prayer of the psalmist follows.

Ver. 9. I will say unto God my rock, etc.] A name frequently given to the eternal God, Father, Son, and Spirit, (<053204>Deuteronomy 32:4,31 <461004>1 Corinthians 10:4) (<102302>2 Samuel 23:2,3); (see Gill on "<191802>Psalm 18:2");

why hast thou forgotten me? (see Gill on "<191301>Psalm 13:1");

why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy? meaning perhaps Saul; though it may be applied to any spiritual enemy, sin, Satan, and the world; who are very oppressive and afflicting, and occasion continual mourning to the children of God.

Ver. 10. [As] with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me, etc.] The reproaches of his enemies were grievous and cutting to him, as if a sword pierced through the marrow in his bones, which, being very sensitive, gives exquisite pain. There is a various reading here: some copies, as Vatablus observes, read b, "in", or with, and others k, "as", which seems to be the truest; and our translators supply "as", to make the sense, though they read "with"; but some [f592] only read "as"; and the sense is, the reproaches cast upon the psalmist were as a sword cutting and killing; and these reproaches were as follow; while they say daily unto me, where [is] thy God? (see Gill on "<194203>Psalm 42:3").

Ver. 11. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? etc.] The same expostulation as in (<194205>Psalm 42:5); and so is what follows, and why art thou disquieted within me? and the same argument and means are made use of to remove dejection and disquietude; hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him; (see Gill on “<194205>Psalm 42:5”); to which is added a new argument, taken from the grace and goodness of God, and covenant interest in him;

[who is] the health of my countenance, and my God; as the bodily health of man is seen in the countenance, and for the most part to be judged of by it; so is the spiritual health of the saints, and which they have from the Lord; when he, as the sun of righteousness, arises upon them with healing in his wings, he, by his gracious presence, makes their countenances cheerful, fills them with joy unspeakable and full of glory, and causes them to lift up their heads with an holy boldness and confidence, and without shame and fear: or as it may be rendered, who “is the salvations of my countenance” [f593]; that is, who is or will be the author of full and complete salvation to me; which will be so public and open, so clear and manifest, as to be beheld by myself and others; and this the psalmist mentions, in order to remove his present dejections; and besides, this God of salvation he believed was his covenant God, and would be so even unto death; and therefore he had no just reason to be dejected and disquieted.

PSALM 43

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 43

This psalm is without a title; but may well enough be thought to be one of David’s: and the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Syriac versions, call it a psalm of David, and the latter adds, when Jonathan told him that Saul intended to kill him; and certain it is, that it was wrote by the same person, at the same time, and upon the same occasion as the preceding, seeing some of the same expressions are used in it, (see <194201>Psalm 42:1), title; and some take this and the preceding to be but one psalm, and this might be written with that on account of the rebellion of his son Absalom.

Ver. 1. Judge me, O God, etc.] The Targum adds, with the judgment of truth; (see <450202>Romans 2:2); and plead my cause; which was a righteous one; and therefore he could commit it to God to be tried and judged by him, and could put it into his hands to plead it for him; (see Gill on “<193501>Psalm 35:1”);

against an ungodly nation; meaning either the Philistines, among whom he was; or his own nation, when they joined his son Absalom in rebellion against him: some understand it of the great numbers that were with Saul, when he was persecuted by him;

O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man; either Absalom, who, under pretence of a vow he had vowed in Hebron, got leave of David to go thither, and then engaged in a conspiracy against him; or Ahithophel, who had been his friend and acquaintance, but now joined with Absalom. It is true of Saul, who, under pretence of friendship, sought his ruin, and to whom he expressed himself almost in the same words here used; (see <091817>1 Samuel 18:17,25 24:12,15).

Ver. 2. For thou [art] the God of my strength, etc.] Who being the strong and mighty God was able to deliver and save him, as well as to plead his cause; and was the author and giver of strength, natural and spiritual, to him; and was the strength of his heart, life and salvation; and is a good reason why he committed his cause unto him;

why doest thou cast me off? this is the language of unbelief: it being what was not in reality, only in appearance: the psalmist was ready to conclude he was cast off and rejected of God, because he was afflicted and left in a desolate condition by him, and he did not immediately arise to his help and deliverance, and had withdrawn the light of his countenance from him; but God does not cast off or reject any of his people; they always continue in his love, and in his covenant, and in the hands of his Son; they are always in his sight and family, and shall never perish eternally; and whoever casts them off, or casts them out, he will not;

why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy? (see Gill on "<194209>Psalm 42:9").

Ver. 3. O send out thy light and thy truth, etc.] By light is meant, not the law, as Arama; but rather, as some Jewish [f594] interpreters understand it, the Messiah, the sun of righteousness, and light of the world; who is the author of all light, natural, spiritual, and eternal; and whose coming into the world is often signified by being sent into it. The Spirit of God also is the enlightener of men, both at first conversion and afterwards, and is sent down into their hearts as a comforter of them, by being the Spirit of adoption. The Gospel of Christ is a great and glorious light, which, with the Holy Ghost, is sent down from heaven; though perhaps here rather may be meant the light of God's countenance, the discoveries of his favour and lovingkindness, which produce light, life, joy, peace, and comfort: and by "truth" may be meant, either Christ himself, who is the truth; or the Gospel the word of truth; or rather the faithfulness of God in the fulfilment of his promises; and so the words are a petition that God would show forth his lovingkindness, and make good his word, which would be of the following use:

let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles; that is, to the place of public worship, where the tabernacle was, the "hill" where it was, which seems to be Mount Zion; and is called "holy"; not that there was any real holiness in it; only relative, because of the worship of God in it; and the "tabernacle" is called "tabernacles", because of the holy place and the most holy place in it; the one being the first, the other the second tabernacle, as in (<580902>Hebrews 9:2,3); and this hill and tabernacles represented the church and ordinances of God, to which such who are possessed of light and truth are led.

Ver. 4. Then will I go unto the altar of God, etc.] Which was in the tabernacle, either of burnt offerings, or of incense, there to offer up the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving for mercies received. The altar under the Gospel dispensation is Christ, on which such sacrifices being offered, are acceptable to God, (<581310>Hebrews 13:10,15);

unto God my exceeding joy; as over the mercy seat, upon a throne of grace, and as his covenant God; or this is exegetical of the altar, which is Christ, God over all, blessed for ever; and who is the object of the unspeakable joy of his people, in his person, righteousness, and salvation;

yea, upon the harp will I praise thee, O God, my God: the harp is a musical instrument, used in that part of public worship which concerned the praise of God under the former dispensation, and was typical of that spiritual melody made in the hearts of God’s people when they sing his praise, (see <660508>Revelation 5:8 14:2).

Ver. 5. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? etc.] (See Gill on “<194205>Psalm 42:5”) and (see Gill on “<194211>Psalm 42:11”).

PSALM 44

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 44

To the chief Musician for the sons of Korah, Maschil

It is not certain who was the writer of this psalm, nor when it was written, and to what time it belongs: some have thought it was composed by one of the Babylonish captivity, and that it gives an account of the church and people of God in those times; but what is said in (<194417>Psalm 44:17,18,20) does not seem to agree with (<270905>Daniel 9:5,6,10,11,13). It is most likely it was written by David, and to him the Targum ascribes it; though it does not respect his times; since what is said in (<194409>Psalm 44:9-14) cannot agree with them; yet he being a prophet might, under a prophetic influence, speak of future times, and represent the church in them. Some are of opinion that he prophetically speaks of the times of the Maccabees and of Antiochus, when the church and people of God suffered much for the true religion, and abode steadfast in it; so Theodoret: but rather the whole may be applied to the times of the New Testament, since (<194422>Psalm 44:22) is cited by the Apostle Paul, (<450836>Romans 8:36), and is applied to his times, and as descriptive of the suffering state and condition of the church then; and which seems to be the guide and key for the opening of the whole psalm.

Ver. 1. We have heard with our ears, O God, etc.] The church being in distress calls to mind the past favours of God to his people, in order to encourage her faith and hope; and this expression, delivered in such a form, shows the clearness, evidence, and certainty of what was heard; and which was heard not only as a tradition from father to son; but being recorded in the writings of Moses and the prophets, and these things read both in private and in public, were heard with the ear;

our fathers have told us [what] works thou didst in their days, in the times of old: such as the signs and wonders in Egypt, the slaying of the firstborn there, and the bringing of the people of Israel from thence with a mighty hand and outstretched arm; which fathers were used to tell in the ears of their sons, and sons’ sons; and of which there were memorials continued in future ages, which led children to ask their parents the meaning of them; when they informed them of the wondrous works of Providence done in former times, and by which means they were handed down from age to age: (see <021002>Exodus 10:2 12:26 13:8).

Ver. 2. [How] thou didst drive out the Heathen with thy hand, etc.] Of power; that is, the Canaanites, as the Targum; the seven nations which inhabited the land of Canaan before the children of Israel came into it, (<050701>Deuteronomy 7:1); and plantedst them: not the Canaanites elsewhere; but, as the same Targum explains it the house of Israel in their land; which, like a vine, was removed from one place, and planted in another; and the settlement of the children of Israel in the land of Canaan is frequently expressed by this metaphor, (<021517>Exodus 15:17 <198008>Psalm 80:8 <230501>Isaiah 5:1,7) (<240221>Jeremiah 2:21);

[how] thou didst afflict the people; the Egyptians, according to Arama; rather the Canaanitish nations by wars and desolating judgments;

and cast them out; that is, the same nations out of their land; though some render this clause, “and didst send them out”; the captive Israelites, as Arama; or “didst propagate them” [f595]; meaning the people of Israel; who being like a vine planted in the and, sent out its boughs and branches, and became very flourishing and fruitful; (see <198009>Psalm 80:9-11); and so the Syriac version renders it, “and thou confirmedst them”; but the former sense seems best, agreeably to which is the Targum, “thou hast broken the nations, and hast consumed them”; and that all this was the Lord’s work appears by what follows.

Ver. 3. For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, etc.] There were many things which show that the possession of the land of Canaan was not of the Israelites themselves, but of the Lord; as their passing over into it through Jordan as on dry land; the manner in which Jericho, the first city of it, was taken, and the smiting of the Israelites by the men of Ai;

neither did their own arm save them; from their enemies, and deliver them into their hands: they were too apt to ascribe things to their own righteousness, merit, and power; but such methods were taken by the Lord as to prevent such attributions to themselves; (see <050816>Deuteronomy 8:16,17 9:3-6);

but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance; the mighty power of God, his outstretched arm in their favour, and which arose from his pure good will to them;

because thou hadst a favour unto them; was well pleased, and took delight in them; chose them to be a special people to himself, above all people on the face of the earth.

Ver. 4. Thou art my King, O God, etc.] Besides the favours God had done for his people in time past, the church takes notice of her interest in God as her King, who was able to protect and defend her, and to deliver her out of all her distresses, in order the more to strengthen her faith and hope in him; and, claiming her interest in him, she draws nigh to him with an holy boldness, and desires him as a King, that by a word of his (for where the word of a king is, there is power) he would command deliverances for Jacob; not literally, but mystically understood; the spiritual Jacob, and people of God; all Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile; meaning herself and members: the blessing desired is “deliverances”, or “salvations”; so called, because the, deliverance or salvation the Lord commands grants, and works out for his people, is of different kinds, both spiritual and, temporal, and is a deliverance from various things; from sin, Satan, the present evil world, wrath to come, and all enemies; and out of various temptations and afflictions, and which follow successively one upon another; and at last it is complete and perfect.

Ver. 5. Through thee will we push down our enemies, etc.] The Chaldee paraphrase renders it, “through the Word”: the essential Word of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the church’s King and God, and has wrought out complete deliverance and salvation for his people; and he is the horn of salvation, by which, though weak in themselves, they push down their enemies, which are many and mighty, and they are more than conquerors over them: the metaphor is taken from creatures pushing with their horns those that oppose them, and in defence of themselves; and there seems to be an allusion to (<053317>Deuteronomy 33:17); through thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us; in the name of the Lord the saints set up their banners, and in his name they come forth and fight with their spiritual enemies, that rise up against them, as sin, Satan, and wicked men; and in the name, and through the power of the Lord, they tread them down as mire in the streets; and before long Satan will be wholly bruised under them; and the antichristian party shall be trodden down by them, and be as ashes under the soles of their feet; (see <451620>Romans 16:20 <390403>Malachi 4:3).

Ver. 6. For I will not trust in my bow, etc.] In any carnal weapon, in any creature help and assistance, or in an arm of flesh, but in the word of the Lord, and in his name; (see <192007>Psalm 20:7);

neither shall my sword save me; that is, I will not ascribe salvation to it; the church's weapons are not carnal, but spiritual; not the sword of the civil magistrate, but the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; Christ's kingdom, being not of this world, is not supported and defended by worldly means, or carnal weapons.

Ver. 7. But thou hast saved us from our enemies, etc.] Spiritual ones, and not we ourselves; and therefore will not trust in ourselves, nor in anything of ours, but in the Lord, and give him the glory of salvation; and hast put them to shame that hated us; the men of the world, the seed of the serpent, and the serpent himself, when his works were destroyed, and his principalities and powers spoiled by Christ upon the cross; hence the following boasting of the Lord, and glorying in him.

Ver. 8. In God we boast all the day long, etc.] Or, as the Targum, "in the word of the Lord", in Christ, who is God over all, and who of God is made to his church and people wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; so that there is always matter of glorying and boasting in him; and praise thy name for ever and ever; in this world, as long as life continues; and in the other world to all eternity; both for the works of providence and of grace; for deliverances commanded, and for salvation from all enemies wrought out.

Selah; of this word (see Gill on "<190302>Psalm 3:2").

Ver. 9. But thou hast cast off, etc.] This, with what follows to (<194417>Psalm 44:17), describe the desolate and afflicted state of the church, under the Gospel dispensation, in some parts and ages of it; and in the light in which it was viewed by the church, previous to the encouragement she took from the consideration of favours and benefits formerly bestowed, and of her covenant interest in God, related in the preceding verses. She looked upon herself as cast off, because afflicted and persecuted, and the Lord did not arise to her immediate help and deliverance; this may regard the ten persecutions under Rome Pagan; (see Gill on “<194302>Psalm 43:2”); and put us to shame; before men, at the taking of the ark, as Arama; rather for their faith in God, and boasting of him, when he did not appear for them, but suffered them to continue in their afflictions and distresses; which occasioned their enemies to triumph over them, and say unto them, where is your God? and also before God, who being forsaken by him, could not come before him with that holy boldness and confidence they were wont to do; (see <220214>Song of Solomon 2:14);

and goest not forth with our armies; as the Generalissimo of them; (see <090820>1 Samuel 8:20 <070414>Judges 4:14); not leading them forth, and going before them; not teaching their hands to war and their fingers to fight; nor inspiring them with courage and valour; nor giving success and victory to them as formerly; but seeing that Christians, at least in the first ages of Christianity, had no armies in a literal sense, this may rather be understood of the lack of success of the Gospel in some period of it, and of the power and prevalence of antichrist, the man of sin. The Gospel ministry is a warfare; the preachers of it are good soldiers of Christ under him; their weapons are not carnal, but spiritual; great success attended the word in the first times of the Gospel; Christ went forth with his armies conquering and to conquer; and multitudes were subdued by him, and became subjects of him; but in some ages there has been but little success, few have believed the report of the Gospel, and been converted by it; Christ’s ministers have laboured in vain, Satan’s kingdom, though attacked, yet not weakened, nor Christ’s kingdom enlarged, but rather all the reverse; antichrist has been suffered, as to make war with the saints, so to prevail and overcome, and will do so, (<661304>Revelation 13:4,7 11:7); but it will not be always the case, Christ will go forth with his armies, and make great conquests again, (<661115>Revelation 11:15 17:14 19:11-16); this may refer to the wars of the Papists with the Waldenses and Albigenses, who were vanquished by the former.

Ver. 10. Thou makest us to turn back from the enemy, etc.] In the times of Eli, according to Arama; but may he understood of some of the visible members of the church, and professors of religion, not being valiant for the truth, and deserting the cause of God and Christ, by reason of tribulation and persecution arising because of the word; and they which hate us spoil for themselves; by seizing on the goods and substance of those they persecuted; enriching themselves by confiscating their estates and possessions to their own use; or by spoiling others of them, they deceived with their corrupt doctrines and soul destroying principles, whereby they became slaves to the antichristian party; this may respect the same wars as before.

Ver. 11. Thou hast given us like sheep [appointed] for meat, etc.] To be butchered, and then eaten as sheep are; and therefore are called “the flock of slaughter”, (<381104>Zechariah 11:4,7); as the church was, not only under the ten persecutions of Rome Pagan, but through the butcheries and massacres of Rome Papal; who have worried many of Christ’s sheep, have eaten their flesh and drank their blood, and have become drunken with it; it has been their meat and drink to persecute the saints of the most High;

and hast scattered us among the Heathen: the Pagan world, as the first Christians were, who were scattered up and down in the Gentile world everywhere; (see <600101>1 Peter 1:1); or the Papacy, who are sometimes called Gentiles, (<661102>Revelation 11:2); because much of the Gentile idolatry is introduced into the Popish religion; and among these many of the true members of Christ and of his church have been carried captive and scattered; and such will be found there a little before the destruction of Babylon, and will be called out from thence; (see <661310>Revelation 13:10 18:4).

Ver. 12. Thou sellest thy people for nought, etc.] So God, when he is said to deliver up his people into the hands of their enemies, is said to sell them to them; (see <070214>Judges 2:14 3:8 4:2); and selling them for nought suggests, that in their apprehensions he had no esteem of them and value for them; just as men, when they have any person or thing to dispose of they have no regard unto, but choose to be rid of, will part with it for nothing: and as it follows, and dost not increase [thy wealth] by their price; get nothing by the bargain. This must be understood after the manner of men, and in the opinion of the church, and not as in reality; no otherwise than as it has been true, that God has suffered some of his people to be in the bondage and slavery of mystical Babylon, called Egypt, one part of whose wares and merchandises are slaves and souls of men, (<661108>Revelation 11:8 18:13).

Ver. 13. Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, etc.] Which is the common lot of Christians: Christ and his apostles have given reason for the saints in all ages to expect it, and have fortified their minds to bear it patiently, yea, to esteem it an honour, and greater riches than the treasures of the antichristian Egypt;

a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us; being always represented as mean and despicable, and reckoned ignorant and accursed, and as the faith of the world, and the offscouring of all things.

Ver. 14. Thou makest us a byword among the Heathen, etc.] Among the Papists, as the Jews were among the Gentiles, (<052837>Deuteronomy 28:37 <242409>Jeremiah 24:9); calling them schismatics, heretics, fanatics, and what not?

a shaking of the head among the people; by way of indignation, scorn, and contempt; (see <192207>Psalm 22:7 109:25).

Ver. 15. My confusion [is] continually before me, etc.] Meaning that which is the occasion of it; and the shame of my face hath covered me; not by reason of sin, which is often the cause of confusion and shame in God’s people; (see <240325>Jeremiah 3:25 <270908>Daniel 9:8); but on account of what follows.

Ver. 16. For the voice, of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth, etc.] That is, antichrist, to whom a mouth speaking blasphemies has been given, and which he has opened in blasphemy against God, attributing that to himself which belongs to God; blaspheming his name, his tabernacle, and them that well in heaven; (see <661305>Revelation 13:5,6 <530204>2 Thessalonians 2:4);

by reason of the enemy and avenger; which are very proper characters of antichrist, who is the enemy of Christ and of his people, and breathes out vengeance against them; as the same titles are also given to the Scribes and Pharisees, the implacable enemies of Christ, (<190802>Psalm 8:2).

Ver. 17. All this is come upon us, etc.] Not by chance, but according to the purpose and counsel of God; not for sin, and as a punishment of it, but for Christ’s sake and his Gospel; for a profession of faith in him, and for the trial of it;

yet have we not forgotten thee; not the being and perfections of God, on which they often meditated, especially as displayed in the affair of salvation by Jesus Christ; nor the works of God, which were remembered to encourage faith and hope in their present circumstances, (<194401>Psalm 44:1); nor the benefits and favours bestowed upon them by him; nor his word, worship, and ordinances; their reproach, afflictions, and persecutions, did not move them from the hope of the Gospel, and the service of God;

neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant; by disbelieving their interest in God as their covenant God; by disregarding or not coming to and making use of Christ the Mediator of it; and by calling in question their interest in the blessings and promises of the covenant; for nothing can be more called dealing falsely in or with respect to the covenant of grace than unbelief about it; which remains firm and sure notwithstanding all the afflictions that may come on such who are interested in it: moreover, as this may respect the formal exhibition of the covenant under the Gospel dispensation, by the ministry of the word, and the administration of ordinances, the sense may be, that though the church and her members met with so much reproach and persecution from men, yet did not drop nor deny any of the truths of the Gospel, nor corrupt the ordinances of Christ, nor neglect an attendance on them; but were virgins, pure and incorrupt in doctrine and practice, and followed the Lamb whithersoever he went.

Ver. 18. Our heart is not turned back, etc.] To its original hardness, blindness, and bondage, to its former sin and folly, to cherish, gratify, and fulfil its lusts and desires; not from God, from love to him, faith in him, and desires after him; nor from his worship and service; their trials had no such influence upon them as to cause them to apostatize from God, neither in heart, nor in action;

neither have our steps declined from thy way; from the way of his commandments, from the paths of holiness, truth, and faith, being directed and guided therein by the counsel of the Lord, and kept and preserved by his power.

Ver. 19. Though thou hast sore broken us in the place of dragons, etc.] Where men, comparable to dragons or their poison and cruelty, dwell; particularly in Rome, and the Roman jurisdiction, both Pagan and Papal, the seat of Satan the great red dragon, and of his wretched brood and offspring, the beast, to whom he has given his power; here the saints and followers of Christ have been sorely afflicted and persecuted, and yet have held fast the name of Christ, and not denied his faith; (see <660213>Revelation 2:13 12:3); the wilderness is the habitation of dragons; and this is the name of the place where the church is said to be in the times of the Papacy, and where she is fed and preserved for a time, and times, and half a time, (<661206>Revelation 12:6,14); and covered us with the shadow of death; as the former phrase denotes the cruelty of the enemies of Christ's church and people, this their dismal afflictions and forlorn state and condition; (see <192304>Psalm 23:4) (<230902>Isaiah 9:2); and may have some respect to the darkness of Popery, when it was at the height, and the church of Christ was covered with it, there being very little appearances and breakings forth of Gospel light any where. According to Arama, the "place of dragons" denotes the captivity of Egypt, which is the great dragon; and the "shadow of death", he says, was a name of Egypt in ancient times, as say the Rabbins; and observes that (<194425>Psalm 44:25) explains this; (see <010314>Genesis 3:14).

Ver. 20. If we have forgotten the name of our God, etc.] As antichrist, and the antichristian party did in those times, (<271136>Daniel 11:36,37); or stretched out our hands to a strange god; as not to any of the Heathen deities under the Pagan persecutions, so not to any images of gold, silver, brass, and wood, under the Papal tyranny; not to the Virgin Mary, nor to angels and saints departed; nor to the breaden God in the mass, never heard of before; (see <271138>Daniel 11:38,39 <660921>Revelation 9:21).

Ver. 21. Shall not God search this out? etc.] Undoubtedly he would, was it so, and expose it, and punish for it; as he will the Balaamites and children of Jezebel, (<660218>Revelation 2:18-23); this seems to be an appeal to God for the truth of all that the church had said concerning her steadfastness and integrity under the most trying exercises; for he knoweth the secrets of the heart; whether the heart is turned back, or there is any inclination to apostatize from God, or his name is forgotten in it; as well as whether in fact the hand has been stretched out, or prayer made to a strange god, (<241709>Jeremiah 17:9,10).

Ver. 22. Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long, etc.] These words are cited by the Apostle Paul in (<450836>Romans 8:36); and are applied to his times, showing the then close attachment of the saints to Christ, and their strong love and affection for him; and they have the same sense here, being an instance and proof of the church's integrity and faithfulness in the cause of God, amidst the sorest afflictions and persecutions; for the truth of which she appeals to the searcher of hearts; and had their accomplishment in the ten persecutions under the Heathen emperors, and under the Papal tyranny; and may be understood of their being threatened with death, being in danger of it, and exposed unto it continually, (<461531>1 Corinthians 15:31 <470410>2 Corinthians 4:10-12); or of their being in such troubles and afflictions, which may be called death, (<470108>2 Corinthians 1:8-10 11:23); or of the actual slaying them: and what was done to many of the members of the church she attributes to herself, because of the union between them; and for the sake of the worship of the true God, because they would not worship the gods of the Heathens, nor the image of the beast, multitudes of them were put to death; and that all the day long, and every day, and that for a long series and course of time, or continually; and indeed, ever since the Gospel day or dispensation began, this killing work has been more or less; and it will continue during the reign of antichrist, until the measure of his iniquity is filled up, and the afflictions of the saints are accomplished;

we are counted as sheep for the slaughter; or “as sheep of slaughter” [f596]; (see <381104>Zechariah 11:4,7); that is, either as sheep to be slaughtered for food, their enemies delighting to eat their flesh and drink their blood; (see Gill on “<194411>Psalm 44:11”), or for sacrifice, they reckoning it doing God good service to take away their lives, as though they sacrificed a lamb or a sheep unto him; and which, like sheep, they have patiently endured: this is the account made of them, not by the Lord, in whose sight their death is precious; nor by the saints, with whom their memory is dear; but by their furious persecutors, among whom they are as sheep among wolves; (see <460413>1 Corinthians 4:13).

Ver. 23. Awake, why sleepest thou, O Lord? etc.] Not that sleep properly falls upon God: the Keeper of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps; his eyes are always upon his people; he never withdraws them from them, and he watches over them night and day: but sometimes he seems and is thought to be asleep; as when wicked men flourish and triumph over the righteous, and go on in sin with impunity; when their judgment seems to linger, and their damnation to slumber, though it does not; and when the saints are under sore afflictions, and the Lord seems to disregard them, and does not appear for their deliverance; and when things are as when the disciples were in a storm, and Christ was asleep, to whom they said, “carest thou not that we perish?” and the Lord may be said to awake, and it is what is here prayed for, when he stirs up himself and takes vengeance on his enemies, as he will before long on antichrist and his followers; and when he takes in hand the cause and judgment of his people, and pleads it thoroughly, and delivers them out of the hands of all their oppressors, and gives them the dominion and kingdom under the whole heaven; (see <230209>Isaiah 2:9 <197865>Psalm 78:65,66 35:23); arise; to revenge the blood of his people, and to have mercy on his Zion; cast [us] not off for ever; as he might seem to do, by suffering their enemies to triumph over them; but in reality he does not; much less with loathing and abhorrence, as the word [f597] used signifies, since his church is his Hephzibah, in whom he delights, (<236204>Isaiah 62:4); and still less for ever, since his love to them is from everlasting to everlasting, and they shall be for ever with him; (see Gill on "<194302>Psalm 43:2").

Ver. 24. Wherefore hidest thou thy face? etc.] (see <191001>Psalm 10:1 12:1);

[and] forgettest our affliction and our oppression. Not that the Lord does really forget either the persons of his people, which he cannot, since they are engraven on the palms of his hands, and a book of remembrance is written for them: nor the afflictions of his people; he knows their souls in adversity; he chooses them in the furnace of affliction; he makes all afflictions work together for good, and delivers out of them. But because deliverance is not immediately wrought, and they sometimes continue long under their afflictions and oppressions, they seem to be forgotten by him, as during the ten persecutions and the long reign of antichrist.

Ver. 25. For our soul is bowed down to the dust, etc.] Which may signify great declension in spiritual things, much dejection of mind, and little exercise of grace, (<19B925>Psalm 119:25 <250329>Lamentations 3:29); or a very low estate in temporals; subjection to their enemies; they setting their feet upon their necks, and obliging them to lick the dust of them: and even it may signify nearness to death itself; (see <061024>Joshua 10:24 <234923>Isaiah 49:23 <192216>Psalm 22:16);

our belly cleaveth to the earth; as persons that lie prostrate, being conquered and suppliants.

Ver. 26. Arise for our help, etc.] Or, "arise our help" [f598]. God is the help of his people, and he is a present help in time of trouble; and he is the only one; and he can help and does, when none else can;

and redeem us for thy mercies’ sake; not for the sake of her integrity and faithfulness; nor for her sufferings for Christ’s sake; but for his grace and mercy’s sake, which is the source and spring of redemption or deliverance, both temporal and spiritual; and to that the saints ascribe it, and not to any merit of theirs, or works of righteousness done by them.

PSALM 45

INTRODUCTION TO PSALM 45

To the chief Musician upon Shoshannim, for the sons of Korah, Maschil, A Song of loves.

There are some things in this title we have met with already in other psalms; as the direction, “to the chief Musician, for the sons of Korah”; and one of its names, “Maschil”. The word “shoshannim”, according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, is the name of a musical instrument, on which this psalm was sung; an instrument of six strings, as Junius: but Aben Ezra thinks it was the first word of a song, to the tune of which it was sunny; though others are of opinion that it points at the persons, the subjects of this psalm, and may be rendered, “concerning Shoshannim”; that is, as the Targum interprets it, “concerning those that sit in the sanhedrim of Moses”: and Jarchi’s note is, “for the glory of the disciples of the wise men”, comparable to lilies; for so this word signifies, and may be translated, “concerning the lilies”[f599]; that is, concerning Christ and his church, who are manifestly the subject of this psalm, and are compared to lilies, (<220201>Song of Solomon 2:1,2,16 5:13 6:2,3). This psalm is called “a song of loves”, an epithalamium, or marriage song, setting forth the mutual love of Christ and his church; or “a song of the beloved ones”[f600] or “friends”; of Christ, who is the beloved and friend of his church; and the church, who is the beloved and friend of Christ; (see <230501>Isaiah 5:1); and the word here used being in the feminine gender, some have supplied the word “virgins”, and render it thus, “a song of the beloved virgins”[f601]; sung by them on account of the marriage between Christ and his church, who are the companions of the bride, mentioned in (<194514>Psalm 45:14), and friends and lovers of the bridegroom; (see <220103>Song of Solomon 1:3 <430329>John 3:29). The writer of this psalm is not mentioned; it was not written by the sons of Korah, as say the Targum and Syriac version; but most probably by David, though not concerning his son Solomon, as some have thought, who, though wiser than all men, is never said to be fairer; nor was he a warrior, as the person is represented; nor was his throne and kingdom for ever and ever; nor he the object of worship; nor was his marriage with Pharaoh’s daughter so commendable a thing; nor is she ever praised, as the queen herein mentioned is: but the person who is spoken of is the Messiah, as is owned by several Jewish writers: the Targum interprets (<194502>Psalm 45:2) of the King Messiah; and Ben Melech says, he is meant by the King in (<194501>Psalm 45:1). Aben Ezra observes, that this psalm is said concerning David, or concerning the Messiah his son, for so is his name, (<263726>Ezekiel 37:26); and Kimchi expressly says, it is spoken concerning the Messiah; and Arama affirms, that all agree that it treats of him.

Ver. 1. My heart is inditing a good matter, etc.] What is valuable and excellent, concerning the excellency of Christ's person, of his kingdom, of his love to the church, and of the church itself; what is pleasant and delightful, comfortable, useful, and profitable: this his heart was inditing; which shows that it was under the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit, and denotes the fervour of it; it "boiling up", as the word [f602] signifies; being heated by the fire of the divine Spirit, whereby it was hot within him, and caused him to speak with his tongue; and also the abundance that was in it, it "bubbling up" [f603], as some choose to render it: from whence this good matter flowed like water out of a fountain;

I speak of the things which I have made touching the King; the King Messiah; the King of the whole world, and of the kings of it, and of the saints in it; over whom he reigns in a spiritual manner, and in righteousness; concerning whom this psalm or poem was composed by David under divine inspiration, and which he here delivers:

my tongue [is] the pen of a ready writer; or as [f604] one; such an one as Ezra was, (<150706>Ezra 7:6), that writes swiftly and compendiously; suggesting, that as he was; full of matter, he freely communicated it, being moved by the Holy Spirit, who spake by him, and whose word was in his tongue; which made him so ready and expert in this work. The allusion is to scribes and notaries, and such like persons, that are extremely ready and swift in the use of the pen. The word for "pen" is derived either from jw[, which signifies "to fly" [f605], and from whence is a word used for a "flying fowl"; yet we are not to imagine that here it signifies a pen made of a bird's quill, as now in common use with us: for this did not obtain until many hundred years after David's time. It seems that Isidore of Seville, who lived in the seventh century, is the first person that makes mention of "penna", a "pen", as made of the quill of a bird [f606], but rather the pen has its name in Hebrew, if from the above root, from the velocity of it, as in the hand of a ready writer; or rather it may be derived from h j [, “to sharpen”, in which sense it seems to be used, (<262115>Ezekiel 21:15); and so a pen has its name from the sharp point of it: for when the ancients wrote, or rather engraved, on stone, brass, lead, and wood, they used a style or pen of iron; (see <181924>Job 19:24) (<241701>Jeremiah 17:1); so when they wrote on tables of wood covered with wax, they used a kind of bodkin made of iron, brass, or bone; (see Gill on “<350202>Habakkuk 2:2”); and when upon the rind and leaves of trees, and on papyrus and parchment, they made use of reeds, particularly the Egyptian calamus or reed; and the word here is translated calamus or reed by the Targum, Septuagint, and all the Oriental versions. Now as the Jews had occasion frequently to copy out the book of the law, and other writings of theirs, their scribes, at least some of them, were very expert and dexterous at it; but whether the art of “shorthand” was to any degree in use among them is not certain, as it was in later times among the Romans, when they used marks, signs, and abbreviations, which seems to have laid the foundation of the above art, and had its rise, as is said, from Cicero himself, though some ascribe it to Mecaenas [f607]: and in Martial’s time it was brought to such perfection, that, according to him, the hand could write swifter than a man could speak [f608].

Ver. 2. Thou art fairer than the children of men, etc.] Here begins the psalm, and this is an address to the King Messiah, the subject of it, commending him for his beauty and comeliness; which is not to be understood of his divine beauty or his glory, as the only begotten of the Father, in which he is the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person; for this admits of no comparison, nor is the beauty of angels and men to be mentioned with it; but of the beauty of his human nature, both in body and soul, which being the immediate produce of the Holy Spirit, and without sin, and full of wisdom, grace, and holiness, must transcend that of any or all the sons of Adam. They are all deformed by sin; and whatever spiritual beauty there is in any of them, they have it from Christ; they are comely through his comeliness the outward beauty of men is vain and deceitful, and soon perishes; but Christ is ever the same, and he esteemed of by all that know him, as exceeding precious, altogether lovely, and transcendently excellent and glorious. The Hebrew word here used is doubled in its radicals, which denotes the exceeding great fairness and beauty of Christ, especially as Mediator, and as full of grace and truth. It follows, grace is poured into thy lips; by which is meant the matter of his speech, or the Gospel preached by him; these words of grace, as Kimchi on the text expresses himself; or gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth, (<420422>Luke 4:22). The Gospel of the grace of God was given him to preach; it was put into his mouth, and that in great abundance; it was given at sundry times and in divers manners, and by piecemeal, to the prophets before him; but it was poured into his lips, and he was abundantly qualified for preaching it, by having the Spirit without measure given him; and so was poured out in a graceful manner, with great authority, and as never man before him spake, in doctrines of grace, gracious invitations, precious promises, excellent prayers, and even words of eternal life; (see <220513>Song of Solomon 5:13);

therefore God hath blessed thee for ever; or, "because [f609] God hath blessed thee for ever"; in his human nature, with the grace of union to the Son of God, and with all the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God; and as Mediator, with all spiritual blessings, with grace and glory for his people. Hence all his comeliness, grace, and gracefulness.

Ver. 3. Gird thy sword upon [thy] thigh, O [most] mighty, etc.] As Christ is, the mighty God, even the Almighty, and which appears by his works of creation and providence; by the redemption of his people; by his care and government of them; by succouring them under all their temptations and afflictions; by strengthening them for every service, duty, and suffering; by pleading their cause, and supplying their wants; by preserving them to his kingdom and glory; by raising them from the dead at the last day, and by introducing them into the possession of the heavenly inheritance. This mighty One is called upon to "gird [on his] sword": by which is meant either the sword of the Spirit, the word of God; which is sharp in convincing of sin, reproving for it, and threatening on account of it, as well as in refuting error and heresy; and a twoedged one, consisting of law and Gospel, and which Christ made use of to great purpose, against Satan in the wilderness, and against the Scribes and Pharisees; and which he will make further use of in the latter day, against the man of sin, and his followers: or else the power of Christ, which, as the Leader and Commander of his people, and the Captain of their salvation, is called upon to exert, by preparing to engage with, and by destroying his and their enemies; and which he did put forth when the year of the redeemed was come, which was the day of vengeance in his heart; when he combated with and destroyed Satan, and spoiled his principalities and powers; when he abolished death itself, and took away sin the sting of it, and the law, the strength of sin; overcame the world, and delivered his people from it, and out of the hand of every enemy. It is added, with thy glory and thy majesty; which may be connected either with the phrase “and most mighty”, and so be expressive of the glory and majesty of Christ, as the mighty God; or with his sword, as an emblem of his authority and majesty as a King, and may denote the glory of his Gospel and of his power; or may point at the end of his girding his sword upon his thigh, which was to show forth the glory of his majesty, or to obtain honour and glory: though the word “gird” may be supplied and repeated, and so make a distinct proposition, “gird with thy glory and thy majesty”; which was done when he was raised from the dead, and had glory given him; was crowned with it, and had the glory put upon him he had with his Father before the world was.

Ver. 4. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, etc.] Not literally, as was prophesied of him he should, and as he did, (<380909>Zechariah 9:9 <402107>Matthew 21:7,9,16); but mystically and spiritually, either in the chariots of angels up to heaven, (<196817>Psalm 68:17,18); or on the white horse of the Gospel, with his bow and arrows after mentioned, conquering and to conquer, (<660602>Revelation 6:2); and where he rides “in [his] majesty”, showing forth his glory both as a divine Person and as Mediator; and which is very conspicuous in the Gospel, and the ministry of it; and also “prosperously”, as he did in the first preaching of the word by the apostles, when it was made the power of God to salvation to multitudes, and the Lord caused them to triumph in Christ everywhere; and as he will in the latter day, when the Jews will be converted, and the fulness of the Gentiles brought in;

because of truth, and meekness, [and] righteousness; either because he himself is “truth”, the truth of all types, promises, prophecies, and doctrines; or because of the Gospel of truth which comes by him; or on account of his truth and faithfulness in fulfilling his own engagements, and the promises of his father: and because of the “meekness” which was so apparent in him, in taking upon him the form of a servant; in his marriage to sinners, and conversation with them; in ministering: to his disciples; in his conduct towards his enemies; and in seeking not his own glory, but his Father’s: and because of “righteousness”, the holiness of his nature, the purity of his life and actions; and because of the righteousness he is the author of to his people, and of his righteous administration of his offices, especially as a King; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things; or thy power, which the right hand is a symbol of, shall perform terrible things; as it did in the work of redemption, by conquering and destroying the enemies of his people, and of himself; and as it does in the conversion of men, which makes terrible work in their consciences, as the instances of the three thousand, of Saul, and of the jailer show; and as it has in his judgments on his enemies the Jews, in the utter ruin of their nation, city, and temple; and will do on all the antichristian powers in the latter day. The Targum paraphrases it,

> "the Lord shall teach thee to do terrible things with thy right hand [f610]".

Ver. 5. Thine arrows [are] sharp in the heart of the king's enemies, etc.] Meaning either the Jews, who were the implacable enemies of Christ, and who would not have him to reign over them; in the midst of whom were sent his arrows, of the sword, famine, and pestilence, and which were very sharp, and made sad havoc among them, and caused such a time of tribulation as was not before, or has been since, (<402421>Matthew 24:21); or else the doctrines of the Gospel. The Scriptures are the quiver out of which they are taken; the Gospel is the bow into which they are put, and out of which they are shot; and ministers are the archers that draw the bow at a venture, and shoot them; and which are compared to "arrows" for their swift, sudden, and secret motion, and for their piercing and penetrating power and efficacy: and these are Christ's, which he is the author of, and which he makes use of to good purpose, by striking the hearts of his people with them, who in their state of unregeneracy are enemies to him; which appears by their wicked works, and as they were when he died for them, and reconciled them to God; by means of which arrows fixed in them, and with which their hearts are pricked and wounded, they submit unto him, signified by the next clause:

[whereby] the people fall under thee: acknowledge themselves sinners; fall down at his feet; humbly implore his grace and mercy; submit to his righteousness; depend on him alone for salvation; adore him, and give him the glory of it, as well as become subject to his laws and ordinances. This is to be understood of those who are God's covenant people, whom he has given to Christ, and he has redeemed by his blood; and particularly the Gentiles, who were not a people, but now openly are, in distinction from the Jews, the enemies of the King Messiah.

Ver. 6. Thy throne, O God, [is] for ever and ever, etc.] This verse and (<194507>Psalm 45:7) are cited in (<580108>Hebrews 1:8,9); and applied to the Son of God, the second Person in the Trinity; and therefore are not an apostrophe to the Father, as some have said; nor will they bear to be rendered, “thy throne is the throne of God”, or “thy throne is God”; or be supplied thus, “God shall establish thy throne”. But they are spoken of the Son of God, who is truly and properly God, the true God and eternal life; as appears by the names by which he is called, as Jehovah, and the like; by his having all divine perfections in him; by the works which he has wrought, and by the worship which is given unto him; and to whom dominion is ascribed, of which the throne is an emblem, (<014140>Genesis 41:40). And this his government is either general, over angels, good and bad, and over men, even wicked men, and over the greatest among men, the kings of the earth; or special, over his own church and people, and which is exercised by his Spirit and grace in them; by his word and ordinances among them; and which will be in a glorious manner in the latter day; and in heaven, though not in the same manner as now, and that to all eternity: for to this government duration for ever and ever is attributed; Christ will have no successor, he will die no more; nor can his government be subverted or taken out of his hands, or he be removed from his throne by any of his enemies, or by all of them; and though his kingdom will be delivered up to the Father, it will not cease, it is an everlasting one;

the sceptre of thy kingdom [is] a right sceptre; meaning either the Gospel, which is the golden sceptre of mercy and grace, stretched out and held forth for the encouragement of sensible sinners; and is a sceptre of righteousness, as it directs to the righteousness of Christ for justification, and encourages works of righteousness to be done by men: or rather the righteous administration of Christ’s government is meant, the sceptre being an emblem of dominion and government, (<014910>Genesis 49:10 <042417>Numbers 24:17).

Ver. 7. Thou lovest righteousness, etc.] Either righteous persons, whom his countenance beholds, on whom his eyes are, and from whom they are never withdrawn, and with whom he is exceedingly delighted: or righteous things; a righteous administration of government; faithfulness and integrity in whatsoever he is intrusted with, or appointed to by his father; all righteous actions which the law requires, as appeared in the whole course of his life; and by working out a righteousness for his people, and by encouraging them in works of righteousness; and as also will appear by judging the world in righteousness at the last day, and by giving the crown of righteousness to his righteous ones; and hatest wickedness; which was manifest not only by his inveighing against it and dehorting from it, and by his severity exercised towards delinquents; but by suffering for it, and abolishing it, and by chastising his own people on account of it;

therefore God, thy God; or “because[f611] God”, thy God; who is the God of Christ, as Christ is man; who prepared and formed his human nature, supported it in suffering, and glorified it, and to whom Christ prayed, and whom he believed in, loved, and obeyed as such:

hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows; who though he is called God, (<194506>Psalm 45:6), and is truly so, yet was not anointed as such, but as man and Mediator, to the office of Prophet, Priest, and King; and not with material oil, but with the Holy Ghost, his gifts and graces; (see <441038>Acts 10:38); called “the oil of gladness”, in allusion to the use of oil at feasts and weddings, for the delight and refreshment of guests, and particularly of the oil of lilies, “olcum susinum”, so some[f612] translate it; well known to the Hebrews, who inhabited Syria and Palestine, where red lilies grew, of which this was made, and had in great esteem; and because of its effects in the human nature of Christ, filling it with alacrity and cheerfulness to go through the work he came about. This unction rotors to the time of his conception and birth, and also to the time of his baptism; and the phrase, “above thy fellows”, denotes the abundance of the Spirit’s grace, his having it without measure, and in a transcendent manner to any of the sons of men, even his own people; for these, and not angels, nor the princes of the earth, are meant, neither of which are his fellows; but the saints, who are of the same nature with him, of the same family he is the head of, of the same dignity through him, being made kings and priests by him, partakers of the same Spirit and grace; and will be companions with him, and sit on the same throne with him to all eternity. The Targum, in the king of Spain’s Bible, begins the verse thus;

> “But thou, O King Messiah, because thou lovest, etc.”

Ver. 8. All thy garments [smell] of myrrh, and aloes, [and] cassia, etc.] Either his human nature, as anointed with the oil of gladness, and filled with the graces of the Spirit, signified by the holy anointing oil in the tabernacle, of which the things mentioned were ingredients, (<023023>Exodus 30:23,24); or the garments of salvation and robe of righteousness, wrought out by him for his people, which are well pleasing and acceptable to his Father, and of a sweet smelling savour, being agreeable to his law and justice; and also to himself, as they are put upon his people; (see <220411>Song of Solomon 4:11). And likewise to them who rejoice at being clothed with them, and desire to be found in them: or else his people themselves, who are sometimes compared to a clothing and to garments, (<234918>Isaiah 49:18); whose persons are to God as the smell of a field, whom the Lord has blessed; and whose sacrifices of prayer and praise are sweet odours to him, through the mediation of his Son;

out of the ivory palaces; (see <220704>Song of Solomon 7:4 <112239>1 Kings 22:39 <300315>Amos 3:15); meaning the places from whence these garments were taken, the wardrobe; or from whence Christ came, and where he appears; as heaven, the palace of the great King, from whence he came down, whither he is gone, and from whence he is expected again; and the human nature of Christ, in which he tabernacled on earth, and was pure and clear from sin; and his churches, which are his temples and palaces, where he grants his presence. Or it may be rendered, “more than the ivory palaces” [f613], and so be expressive of the excellency of Christ’s garments above them; and denote the purity of his human nature, the spotlessness of his righteousness, and the comeliness of his people; whereby they have made thee glad; or, “wherein” or “from whence” [f614]; in which palaces, the churches, the saints make Christ glad, by speaking of his glory; by ascribing glory to him; and by the exercise of grace upon him, with which his heart is ravished, (<220409>Song of Solomon 4:9-11). Or “for which” [f615]; garments of salvation, and robe of righteousness; they being clothed with them, and rejoicing in them, cause joy and gladness in Christ: or “more than they”, or “theirs that make thee glad” [f616]; meaning his fellows and their garments, his being more odorous than theirs.

Ver. 9. Kings’ daughters [were] among thy honourable women, etc.] Or “maids of honour” [f617]; who filled and adorned the king’s court, and made a splendid appearance there, the same with the virgins, the companions of the bride, in (<194514>Psalm 45:14); and design truly gracious souls, believers in Christ, who are his “precious ones” [f618], as the word may be rendered; the excellent in the earth, in whom is all his delight; the precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold; his portion, his jewels, his peculiar treasure, and the apple of his eye: and since they have been precious to him, they have been “honourable”, as they are, both by birth and marriage, being born of God, and espoused to Christ; by their character, kings and priests; and by their company, being among princes, and especially by their having communion with Father, Son, and Spirit: and among these are “kings’ daughters”; yea, they are all of them the sons and daughters of the King of kings; not by their first birth, by which they were mean, base, and dishonourable, wretched and miserable, and children of wrath, as others; but by their second birth, or regeneration, through being born from above, and of God, to an incorruptible inheritance; and so are clothed and fed like the daughters of kings, and have the attendance of such, angels to wait upon them and guard them; and through adopting grace, which regeneration is the evidence of, by virtue of which some of the children of men become the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty; and through their marriage to the King’s Son, the Lord Jesus Christ: the words may be rendered, “Kings’ daughters [were] in thy precious things” [f619]; that is, were arrayed with them: meaning either the graces of the Spirit, comparable to gems, pearls, jewels, and precious stones; (see <220110>Song of Solomon 1:10); or else the rich robe of Christ’s righteousness, and garments of salvation, with which believers being clothed, are as a bridegroom decked with ornaments, and as a bride adorned with jewels, (<236110>Isaiah 61:10); and this agrees with what follows;

upon thy right hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir; by whom is meant the church, whose title is a “queen”, being the bride, the Lamb’s wife: wherefore, because he is King, she is queen; for this title she has not of herself; it is founded not in her own right, but upon her relation to Christ, being married to him; and so is expressive of relation to him, union with him, and of privilege and dignity through him; she sharing with him in all he has, even in his kingdom and government, reigning with him, and on the same throne: her being “on his right hand” shows the honour she is advanced unto; yet “standing” may denote subjection to him as her Lord and head; and being so close by him may suggest her fidelity and inviolable attachment to him, and strict adherence to his person, cause and interest; as well as her protection from him, being held and upheld by his right hand; and her reception of favours from thence, and her enjoyment of his presence, at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore. Her dress is “gold of Ophir”: a place famous for gold; (see Gill on “<110928>1 Kings 9:28”); with which the clothes of great personages used to be embroidered; so Esther is said [f620] to put on her royal apparel, adorned with the good gold of “Ophir”: here it means, that the queen’s or church’s clothing was of wrought gold, as in (<194513>Psalm 45:13), and intends the righteousness of Christ, with which she is arrayed, comparable to it for its richness, purity, lustre, glory, and duration.

Ver. 10. Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear, etc.] These words are either spoken by the prophet, the author of the psalm; or by the King, the bridegroom himself; or, as others think, by Jehovah the Father, whose daughter the church is; unless it should be rather thought to be an address of the honourable women, the kings’ daughters, the virgins and companions of the bride, delivered by them to her under the character of the daughter of Zion, the King’s daughter, as she is called, (<194513>Psalm 45:13), “to hearken, incline [her] ear” and listen to her Lord and King, to his Gospel, and the doctrines of it, which are his voice and words, and to all his precepts and commands; and to “consider”, see, and behold the goodness of God unto her, the greatness, excellencies, and glories of her husband; to look to him by faith, as he is held forth in the word and ordinances, and to him only and that constantly, which is well pleasing to him; forget also thine own people and thy father’s house; Christ is to be preferred before natural relations; converted persons are not to have fellowship with carnal men, though ever so, nearly related; former superstitions, Whether Jewish or Heathenish, are to be buried in forgetfulness; sinful self, and righteous self, are to be denied for Christ’s sake; and the world, and all things in it, are to be treated with neglect and contempt by such who cleave to him. The Targum interprets this of the congregation of Israel hearing the law, beholding the wonderful works of God, and forgetting the idolatrous practices of their ancestors.

Ver. 11. So shall the King greatly desire thy beauty, etc.] Which lies in the comeliness or righteousness of Christ put upon her; in the holiness of Christ reckoned to her; in being washed from all sin in the blood of Christ; in the graces of the Spirit being implanted in her, in which the beauty of holiness lies; in the salvation she is interested in, and beautified with; in enjoying the order and ordinance of Christ’s house, and in having the presence of God and Christ with her: and this beauty is not natural, nor acquired by her, but what is given her; it is not an outward, but an inward beauty; nor is it fictitious, but real; it is perfect through the comeliness of her Lord upon her; and it is durable as the olive tree: and this is greatly desired by Christ, who delights in her, and to behold her countenance; seeks after her company, and will have her where he is, that she may behold his glory, and he may behold her beauty;

for he [is] thy Lord; not only by creation, but by redemption, and in right of marriage, as well as on account of other relations he stands in to her, as Father, Head, King, and Master; and it is her privilege that he is her Lord, as well as her duty to own the relation; since, though he is a sovereign Lord, he is no tyrannical one, but governs with gentleness, and he has all power to protect her, and all fulness to supply her wants; and on account of his being her Husband, Lord, and Head, he has a right of worship from her, as follows;

and worship thou him; both internally, by the exercise of faith, hope, and love upon him; and externally, by praying to him, praising of him, and attending on all his ordinances, and doing everything in a religious way, in his name, according to his word, and by his authority; and such worship should be in spirit and in truth, in sincerity, and without hypocrisy, in righteousness and true holiness, and with reverence and godly fear.

Ver. 12. And the daughter of Tyre [shall be there] with a gift, etc.] That is, among the honourable women in the king's court and palace: it is a prophecy of the conversion of the Tyrians, and their admission into a Gospel church, state, which had its accomplishment in the times of Christ and his apostles, (<410724>Mark 7:24 3:8 <442103>Acts 21:3,4); compare with this (<198704>Psalm 87:4); and though Tyre is only mentioned, it being, as Kimchi on this place observes, near to the land of Judea; yet all other Gentiles are meant, to whom the Gospel should come to the conversion of them, and thereby become members of churches; where they are "with a gift", of themselves to the churches; (see <470805>2 Corinthians 8:5); joining themselves to them, to walk with them, and serve the Lord with one consent; and with the gift or offering of praise and thanksgiving, for the grace and blessings of it bestowed upon them; and with a free donation out of their substance, to support a Gospel church state, its ministers, and the interest, of religion; (see <232318>Isaiah 23:18); the allusion may be to (<022315>Exodus 23:15);

[even] the rich among the people shall entreat thy favour; either such as are rich, in a literal sense, both among the inhabitants of Tyre, who were a very wealthy people, (<232308>Isaiah 23:8); and among other Gentiles, especially in the latter day, when kings shall be the church’s nursing fathers, and bow down to her, (<234923>Isaiah 49:23); or such who are so in a spiritual sense, enriched by Christ with all spiritual blessings, and who are particularly rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom; these shall “entreat [the] favour” of the queen the church; not pray unto her, or worship her in a religious way; for God is only the object of such worship; but do those things by which they would show that they valued her friendship, and would gain her good will; as also acknowledge any former injury done her by them, and entreat her forgiveness; and particularly desire to have communion with her, and share in her prayers.

